Hexapla in Genesin & Exodum:

THAT IS,

A sixfold commentary upon the two first Bookes of Moses, being GENESIS and EXODUS.

WHEREIN THESE TRANSLATIONS are compared together: 1. The Chalde. 2. The Septuagint. 3. The vulgar Latine. 4. Pagnine. 5. Montanus. 6. Iunius. 7. Vatablus. 8. The great English Bible. 9. The Geneva edition. And 10. The Hebrew originall.

Together with a sixfold Vse of every Chapter, shewing 1. The Method or Argument: 2. The divers readings: 3. The explanation of difficult questions and doubtfull places: 4. The places of doctrine: 5. Places of confutation: 6. Morall observations.

In which worke, about three thousand Theologicall questions are discussed; above forty Authors old and new abridged: and together compriſed whatsoever worthy of note, either Mercerus out of the Rabbines, Pererius out of the Fathers, or Marlorat out of the new Writers, have in their learned Commentaries collected.

Now the fourth time imprinted, with the Authors corrections before his death.

TO THE HIGH AND MIGHTIE, RIGHT VERTVOVS AND MOST CHRISTIAN PRINCE, King IAMES, our dread Soveraigne, by the grace of God, King of Great Britaine, of France, and Ireland, Defender of the Christian faith.

MOST gracious Soveraigne, as under the ſhadow of your Highneſſe great and mighty tree, I meane your Princely and peaceable government, the goodly beaſts of the field, honourable and great perſons doe ſolace themſelves, ſo the fowles of heaven, and the little birds, doe ſit and ſing in the branches thereof, and there build their neaſts, and lay their young: and I among the reſt, have brought forth my implumed and unfeathered birds, thoſe imperfect workes, which heretofore I have dedicated to your excellent Majeſtie, and now this, which wanteth but the wings of your Highneſſe favour to flie abroad. Deut. 4. v. 18.

To your pious and ſacred Majeſtie therefore, I here preſent this abſolute Tractate upon Geneſis, ſuch as hath not beene yet (in reſpect of the order, matter, and manner) ſet forth vpon this booke: wherein whatſoever queſtions of weight are diſcuſſed, and other neceſſarie matters added, as the ſhort preface following ſheweth. This my third work to your highneſſe, I here in all humility exhibite and offer, as an unfained pledge of our hearty joy, for the joyfull entrance of this third yeare of your Majeſties happy reigne. Synopſis papiſmi, ad Regiam Majeſtatem: and the Antilogie or counterplea. Eccleſia triumphans ad ſereniſſ. Reginam Antitheſis doctrinæ Evangelicæ & Pontificiæ ad Henricum Principem.

This divine booke of Geneſis (as Ambroſe adviſed Auguſtine, to read the Prophecie of Iſaias, Auguſtine ſendeth Voluſianus to the Apoſtles writings) I would commend in the firſt place, as it is in order firſt, to be read of all the Scriptures: wherein are declared and ſet forth the beginning of the world, and the progreſſe thereof: the puniſhment of the wicked, and rewards of the righteous: ſo many examples and enticements to vertue, ſuch judgements and dehortations from ſin: and the ſame ſo lively and effectuall, as if they were now preſently done before our eyes: as Auguſtine ſaith of this hiſtorie of Geneſis; I know not how, but as often as it is read, the hearer is ſo affected, as though the thing were even now effected. | neſcio quomodo, quotieſcunque legitur, quaſi nunc fiat, ita afficit mentes audientium, ſerm. 77.

This worthy hiſtory containeth the ſpace of 2368. yeares, above halfe the age of the world, from the firſt to the ſecond Adam. It inſiſteth principally in ſetting forth the life and acts of ſix honourable Fathers, as ſtarres among the reſt, Adam, Noah, Abraham, Iſaack, Iacob, Ioſeph : from all theſe your Majeſtie may receive ſomewhat : with Adam, who in Enos time, when religion decayed, taught his ſonnes apart from the wicked, to call upon the name of God, your princely care muſt bee, that you and your people, as ſeparated from the ſuperſtition of the world, ſhould worſhip the Lord more purely : with Noah God hath raiſed you up to bring reſt and comfort to his Church : as another Abram, the Lord hath made you an high Father : as Iſaack to procure joy and laughter to the Church : as Iacob, a ſupplanter of Popiſh ſuperſtition : as Ioſeph, to adde what is wanting in the Church, or Common-wealth.

Gen. 4. 26.

Noah ſignifieth reſt.
Abram, an high father.
Iſaack, laughter.
Iacob, a ſupplanter.
Ioſeph, added.

Much bound unto God, is this Church and Common-wealth, for your Highneſſe peaceable and religious government : that whereas we for our ſins had deſerved with Iſrael, neither to have King nor Church: as the Prophet Hoſhea ſaith, We have no King, becauſe we feared not the Lord : and againe in the ſame place, the thorne and thiſtle ſhall grow upon their Altars : yet the Lord in mercy hath bleſſed us with both.

Hoſh. 10. 3. 8.

We praiſe God for your princely vertues, your worthy clemencie, equity, bountie, piety, which doe ſhine in your Majeſtie, as the pretious ſtones in the King of Tyrus garment : your gracious clemencie is as a cordiall unto this land, which having remitted ſome great offences, muſt needs paſſe by ſmaller treſpaſſes. If David pardoned Shemeis rayling, he could not but forgive Mephiboſeths negligence. Your princely peace made abroad, doth give us hope of a peaceable ſtate at home: as Davids favour toward Abner, a reconciled enemie, was a ſigne of grace to Barzillai, an ancient friend : what would we have more, your Majeſtie profeſſeth to be a nouriſh-father to the Church, counting it one of your faireſt ſtiles, and had rather be loved of all, than feared : as Ambroſe ſetteth forth the good Emperour Theodoſius : When he had command over all, he had rather expoſtulate as a father, than puniſh as a judge : he deſired to winne with lenitie, not to force by extremity : an umpire of equitie, not a decreer of ſeveritie : hee would rather bind men by ſacred religion, than ſervile ſubjection.

Your Highneſſe Honourable equitie is manifeſt, in that your Majeſtie profeſſeth to love and honour the grave men, and preachers of either opinions : as David did favour both Sadok and Abiathar, prieſts of divers families : as Saint Paul did joy that Chriſt was preached, though by them that were of a contrary faction : as Iacob had a right hand for Ephraim, and a left for Manaſſes : Paul and Barnabas jarred, yet both preached the Goſpell : Cyprian and Cornelius differed in judgement, yet both pillars of the Chriſtian faith : Chriſoſtome and Epiphanius diſagreed, yet both enemies to the Arrians : Hierome and Ruffinus were divided, yet in the end were reconciled : I doubt not but all faithfull, ſound, and ſober Preachers of the truth, are acceptable to your Majeſtie, as good Theodoſius embraced Meletius, kiſſed his eyes and his lips, and made much of other faithfull Paſtors : as Valentinian reverenced Ambroſe, who ſending for him in his ſickneſſe, ſalutem ſibi quandam venturam arbitrabatur, did thinke he ſaw health it ſelfe comming to him : this love of the Emperour was not loſt :

¶ CERTAINE DIRECTIONS TO THE READER TO BE OBserved in the reading of this Booke.

CHristian Reader, seeing God hath called us the Ministers of the glorious Gospell of Iesus Christ, not to stand idlely in the market place, but to labour in his vineyard, some in one worke, some in another, I thinke no labour better bestowed, than in setting forth the word of God, both by preaching and writing: as S. Peter toucheth both: of the first he saith, I think it meet, as long as I am in this Tabernacle to stirre you up by putting you in remembrance; of the second: I will endevour therefore alwayes, that ye also may be able to have remembrance of these things after my departure. That time therefore, which others spend, some in following their pleasures, some in ambitious suit of preferment, some in attending their profit, I find most comfort to imploy after this manner: for if that heathen Orator did professe: that he did bestow as much time in humane studies, as others took in following their businesse, some in celebrating festivall dayes; some in pleasure, some in feasts and bankets, some in playes & games. Much more should we preferre the divine study of the Scriptures, before all worldly pleasures and commodities whatsoever.

2. Peter 1. 13. 15.

quis mihi jure succenseat, si quantum cæteris ad res suas obeundas, quantum ad festos dies ludorum celebrandos, quantum ad alias voluptates conceditur temporis; quantum alij tribuunt in tempestivis conviviis, quantum denique aleæ, quantum pilæ, tantum egomet mihi ad hæc studia recolenda sumpsero.

Tull. orat. pro Archi. poeta.

I know that these labours of mine shal find many hard Censors, as my other travailes before; some have not forborn in publike assemblies to tax me & my writings, some in private corners have spoken their pleasures: of such I say with the Apostle: I would know, not λόγον, the speech, of them which are puffed up, but δύναμιν, the power: as the same Apostle else-where saith, they understand not, that they measure themselves by themselves, and compare themselves with themselves. But as Hierome saith: he which carpeth other mens writings: when hee commeth to write himselfe, and setteth foot to foot, then will he sweat, and tug, and find great difference between publike writing, and private carping.

1. Cor. 4. 19.

2 Cor. 10. 12.

si ad libros venerit & pedem pedi contulerit, tunc hærebit, tunc sudabit, tunc intelliget aliam viam fori esse, aliam triclinij Hieron. ad Domin.

In this worke I have abridged the learned commentaries of Mercerus and Pererius, and of others, that have written upon Genesis, taking the best and leaving the worst: Pererius hath taken great pains in this argument, though he have many slips in history and not a few errors for doctrine: I have served him, as Hierome did Origen, I have caused that our country men should know his best things, and be ignorant in his worst. It seemeth that he spent above ten yeares in compiling that work, the first tome was set forth, 1589. the fourth and last, ann. 1598. he was as long a time about it, as Isocrates was in penning his panegyrikes: and I confesse, that I almost have have at ſpare times beene as many yeares occupied in preparing this worke, as the Elephant is in bringing forth her young: I have alſo collected divers things out of Mercerus: of whole learned expoſitions upon Geneſis, I may as Iſocrates did of his panegiricke orations: ὅτι καὶ τὸ ἀρχαῖον χαλεπὰς ἁπάντας ἀφαιροῦμαι καὶ λόγους, αἰσχυνομένους, ἂν ἅπαξ εἰρημένων, &c. that both they which had handled that argument before, being aſhamed of that they had ſaid, did raſe out all their orations, and they who ſeemed ſome body, miſtruſting their wits, gave over.

In the reading of this booke, I would premoniſh the Reader to take theſe directions, that he would firſt with his pen mend the faults, which are very many, eſcaped in my abſence, through the over-ſight of the Printer: In the divers readings S. ſtandeth for the Septuagints tranſlation. H. for the latine thought to bee Hieroms: C. for the Chalde: P. for Pagnius, A for Arias Montanus: B. for the great Engliſh Bible. G. the Geneva tranſlation. T. Tremellius: he. for the Hebrew. text: cæt. for cæteri, the reſt.

In the marginall figure: ad. ſignifieth, addeth. differ. ver. difference of words. diver. accep. divers takings. app. f. pr. appellative for proper: plu f. ſing. plurall number for the ſingular: de, detract or take away: cor corrupt: diu ſig. divers ſignifications: negat f. affir. negative for affirm. invert. inverting of the order: al. alt. altring of the text. differ. pron. difference of pronunciation: mut perſ. change of the perſon: differ temp. difference of the tenſe: ſimil. voc. likeneſſe of the words: interp. interpret, when the ſenſe is kept, and not the words: tranſp. tranſpoſing of words: mut. temp. change of the tenſe: mut. voc. change of the voice, as when the active is put for the paſſive, or contrariwiſe. r. ſtandeth for right. c. for corrupt. Theſe my labours and travels I commend to the favourable acceptance, and Chriſtian uſe of the carefull reader, thinking my ſelfe happy, if by my ſmall talent, I can any wayes profit the Church of God. Thus I end, craving the hearty and unfained prayers of all, that ſhall finde themſelves furthered by this worke, for me, and all other our fellow labourers: that as the Apoſtle ſaith, utterance may bee given us, to open our mouthes boldly, that we may publiſh the ſecrets of the Goſpel. and as the Prophet David ſaith, Pray for the peace of Hieruſalem.

THE FIRST TOME OF THIS COMMENTARIE VPON GENESIS:

CONTAINING THE NOTABLE HISTORY OF THE THREE GREAT PATRIARKES, Adam before the floud, Noah in the floud,

Abraham after the floud.

TOGETHER WITH SVCH MEMORABLE THINGS, AS FELL OVT

In their times, during the ſpace of two thouſand, one Hundred, and eight yeares, from the beginning of the World, to the birth of Iſaack:

As they are ſet forth by Moſes that great Prophet, and holy Hiſtoriographer, in the 24. firſt Chapters of Geneſis.

HEB. 11. 7, 8.

By faith Noe being warned of God of the things which were as yet not ſeene, moved with reverence, prepared the Arke, to the ſaving of his houſhold, &c.
By faith Abraham when he was called, obeyed God, &c.

AMBROS. lib. 1. officior. c. 27.

Noe quam ſapiens, qui tantum fabricavit arcam, quam juſtus qui ad ſemen omnium reſervatus, quam fortis ut diluvium vinceret, quam temperans, ut diluvium toleraret.

Noah was wiſe in making ſo great an Arke; juſt, in being reſerved to be the ſeed of the world; ſtrong in overcomming the floud; temperate in induring it.

Fuit ſapientiæ in Abraham Deo credere, fuit juſtitiæ filium acceptum reddere: fuit fortitudinis appetitum cohibere, fuit temperantiæ modum pietatis tenere.

It was wiſdome in Abraham to beleeve God; juſtice to render his ſonne, whom he had received; fortitude, to ſubdue his naturall affection: temperance, in keeping a meaſure in his devotion.

Reverendiſſimis in Chriſto Patribus ac Dominis, D. Richardo divina providentia Archiepiſcopo Cantuarienſ. totius Angliæ Primati & Metropolitano: & D. Richardo Epiſcopo Londinenſi, dioceſano ſuo ſalutem & pacem in Chriſto ſempiternam.

Reverendiſſimi Domini, ſi quos ego in hac ſcribendi exercitatione, progreſſus fecerim, quos exiguos certe agnoſco, ſi quid ego adjumenti ex privatis meis ſtudiis ad communẽ fructum & utilitatẽ attulerim: totum illud vos veſtro jure repetere & merito vendicare poſſitis, quorum unus author mihi extitit, alter adhortator ad ſuſcipiendam hanc ſcribendi provinciam, in quâ me mediocriter verſatum eſſe fateor: vt cum Hieronymo dicere poſſem: vobis & quæ poſſum debeo, & quæ non poſſum. Hieronym. Sophronio.

Cum igitur tria præcipue ſint ſtudiorum genera, quibus Theologi ut plurimum addicti, & toti dediti & devoti ſunt: ελεγκτικὰ, in refutandis erroribus, ἐξηγητικὰ, in ſcripturis interpretandis διδακτικὰ in queſtionibus explicandis: quemadmodum in alijs opuſculis, ex duobus primis generibus aliquid in lucem & conſpectum proferre cogitaverim, ita experiri volui, an in hoc tertio genere noſtris etiam prodeſſe potuerim: quod in hoc opere aggreſſus ſum. Certe non inficior, me præmaturè ingreſſum eſſe ad hoc iter, nec ſequutum Hieronymi conſilium, ne ad ſcribendum citò proſilias, & levi ducaris inſania; longo tempore diſce, quod doceas. Illud tamen me aſſecutum video, quod Auguſtino accidit: Ego (inquit) ex eorum numero me eſſe profiteor, qui proficiendo ſcribunt, & ſcribendo proficiunt: ſuperba eſt illa Tullii vox: ſe nullũ verbum, quod revocare voluit, emiſiſſe: me potius cum Auguſtino angit, & anxium reddit Horatiana illa ſententia, neſcit vox miſſa reverti: ſcribenti vt dicenti multa excidere poſſunt, quæ matura deliberatione opus habent: ſcriptionis ergo meæ temeritatem, ſi primis annis hic forte impegerim, iſtius operis maturitate compenſare ſtatuo. Hieron. ad Ruſtic. Epiſt. 7. Auguſtin. ibid.

Iſtius ergo tractatus tomum primum veſtræ gravitati conſecrare volui, quo dignitatis acceſſionem hanc vtriq; veſtrum congratuler: qua precor multos annos ad Dei gloriam, Eccleſiæ, commodum veſtrum ipſorum ſolatium perfruamini. Nunc aliud non quæram argumentum, unde incipiat, & vbi deſinat epiſtola hæc quam, vt veſtræ paternitati, & vigilantiſſimæ curæ Eccleſiæ pacem ejuſdemq; paſtores commendem. Novit prudentia veſtra, quanto Sereniſſimus Rex ſingulis Eccleſiis idoneos Miniſtros præficiendi deſiderio teneatur: quo tam pio & verè regio inſtituto, nihil ad obedientiam populo perſwadendum magis aptum & accommodatum, vel ad papaſticam ſuperſtitionem extirpandam magis efficax & ſalutare inveniri poteſt. Iſta Eccleſiis proſpiciendi cura veſtræ pietati demandata eſt: ſatagite ergo (graviſſimi patres) & huc incumbite, vt fidelium paſtorum numeros per vos indies creſcat & augeatur: obſtacula omnia & impedimenta e medio tollite, quibus ſacro iſti ordini officiatur, ut nec de numero decedat quidpiam, vel exiſtimationi detrahatur: eſtote φιλαγαθοι: bonis favete, ſuſtinete infirmos, homines frugi & Eccleſiæ utiles tolerate: non dubito, quin cum Ambroſio dicatis: Ego diligo eos vel presbiteros, vel diaconos, qui cum aliquo proceſſerint, nequaquam ſe patiuntur à ſuo diutius abeſſe munere. Tit. 1. 8. Epiſt. 57.

Quid opus eſt, ut de rebus non neceſſariis inter nos digladiemur, & domeſticis concertationibus incaleſcamus: cum cervicibus noſtris immineant, & jugulis noſtris pontificij votis ſuis gladios intentent: ſed in veſtram gravitatem fortaſſis non eſt conferenda culpa, illi in reprehenſionem cadunt qui obſtinato animo torrenti ſe opponunt: Equidem quos pertinaciter deprehenderitis obſiſtentes, comprimite: quos ſub conſcientiæ onere anhelantes & laborantes videtis, ſublevate: atq; equidem de clementia veſtra hoc audeo polliceri, quos ſententiæ illi Barnardinæ annuere & acquieſcere ſcio: quid jugum veſtrum ſuper eos aggravatis, quorum potius onera portare debetis? In Cantic. 23. ſer.

Vtinam idem ſentiremus omnes, & levi jugo colla ſubjicere non formidaremus: verum in rebus levibus dum diſſidemus, vni fundamento firmiter adhærentes, opinione hic ſejunctos, conjunctis operis in meſſe domini deſudare, quid prohibet? Æquanimitas illa paulina in τοιοῦτοι, amplexanda eſt: ſi quid aliter ſentitis hoc vobis deus revelabit. Idem Apoſtolus concionatores illos non rejecit, qui, licet ipſius æmuli, Evangelium Chriſti prædicabant: ſic dum Eccleſiæ uſibus deſeruitur quid ni eorum accepta eſſet diligentia qui pure doctrinæ ſtudent, & pacis amantes ſunt, licèt cætera diſſimiles? dixit Chriſtus; *Philip. 3. 15. ANDREAS WILLETTVS.

THE FIRST BOOKE OF MOSES, CALLED GENESIS.

CHAP. I.

The Analysis or Logicall resolution.

IN this Chapter Moses treateth of the creation of the world, first in generall, how God created heaven and earth, vers. 1. then in particular in the rest of the Chapter: where wee have the severall workes of God, and their severall approbations, that they seemed good unto the Maker.

The severall workes are distinguished into six dayes: and in every dayes worke there are foure things to bee observed; the authority whereby they are made, as v. 3. The Lord said, Let there be light, &c. the obedience of the creature in being made: and there was light: thirdly, the approbation of the Creator, v. 4. God saw that the light was good: fourthly, the distinction of the worke, vers. 5. The evening and the morning were the first day: and so of the rest of the dayes workes.

Againe, the order of the particular creation is this: God createth the workes and creatures without sense, afterward the sensitive and living creatures: the first are either the superiour and celestiall, as the light made the first day, the firmament the second, the contents of the firmament, the Sunne, Moone, and Starres, the fourth day: or the inferiour creatures, as the earth, with the trees, plants, and herbs, the third day.

The sensitive creatures, are either unreasonable, as the fishes and fowles made the fifth day, v. 20. the beasts and cattell made the sixth day: or the reasonable creatures, man and woman made the sixth day.

In the framing and bringing forth of man, there is set forth, first the consultation of the Trinity, v. 26. Let us make man, &c. then the creation, wherein is to be considered the substance and forme of mans creation, according to Gods owne image. v. 27. the endowment of man created in his preheminence and domination over all other creatures, vers. 28. his increase and procreation, bring forth fruit and multiply: his maintenance and preservation, vers. 29. I have given unto you every herb, &c. that shall be to you for meat.

3. The Exegesis, or Theologicall explication of doubtfull questions and obscure places.

Quest. I. What the heaven and earth was, created in the beginning. vers. 1.

Vers. 1. IN the beginning God made heaven and earth, &c. 1. Moses here doth not onely generally, or summarily set downe the creation of the world, which afterward is described in particular, which was the opinion of Chrysostome, remembred by Augustine, lib. 2. cont. Manich. c. 3. 2. Nor yet doe we understand a certaine first matter, whereof the heaven and earth were afterward made, as Augustine seemeth to thinke. lib. 1. Genes. cont. Manich. c. 7. and one Philastrius Bishop of Brixia, doth affirme it to be heresie to say that this was the element of the earth, afterward created, but another earth, as the matter whereof other things were made: catalog. haeres. 3. Neither yet do we approve the opinion of the Schoolemen, which by the heaven understand only Cœlum empyreum, the highest heaven above the starrie skie, the seat of the Angels and blessed Spirits: and by the earth a confused substance, whereout other things were formed afterward: of which opinion were Alcuinus, Rabanus, Lyranus, Tostatus, Catharinus, with others: for Moses specially intendeth to set downe the creation of things visible: and David expounding Moses, speaketh of these heavens here created, which should perish, Psal. 102. 25. which are not those highest heavens subject to no change. 4. Neither yet doe wee here exclude the creation of those invisible heavens with Mercerus: but in this word comprehend as well the invisible, as visible heavens, Colos. 1. 16. Iun. 5. This heaven and earth then here mentioned to bee created in the beginning, are the same heaven and earth, which are now, comprehending the generall matter and seed, whereout all other things in heaven and earth were made: first created in the matter, afterward perfected in forme, and lastly beautified with their ornaments; this then was the order of the creation. First, the same heaven and earth were created in a confused substance, and unformed matter: then the forme was added, in the first and second dayes workes. Lastly, the ornaments produced, as trees and plants, and beasts in the earth, starres in the skie, fishes in the sea, fowles in the aire.

Thus S. Paul expoundeth Moses, that God made the heaven and earth, Act. 14. 15. God made the world. Acts 17. 24. so that this heaven and earth, first made, was no other than the world, though not yet set in perfect order. Of this opinion are Basil, Ambrose, Theodoret, and most of the ancient Writers.

Quest. II. What beginning Moses speaketh of.

Vers. 1. IN the beginning, &c. 1. This is neither to be understood, as Iohn saith, in the beginning was the word: for there hee speaketh of a beginning without a beginning, that is, from everlasting: but this was the beginning of the creation or being of things. 2. Neither is it to be understood causally, in the beginning: that is, for the beginning: as for Israels cause, or for the law, as the Hebrewes: for God created all things for himselfe, Prov. 16. 4. It is also a forced exposition, by this beginning to understand Christ: although the doctrine bee most sound, that all things were created by him. 4. Nor yet, as Aben Ezra, is this clause in the beginning, used here, syntactice, in construction with the next word: as though this should be the sense, in the beginning of creating, or when God created: and so the sense should bee suspended, till the second or third verse: for then hee would have said bara, in the infinite, not bara in the præterence: as it is vsed, Chap. 5. 1. 5. Wherefore Moses saith in the beginning, in respect of the things created: that in that beginning, when God purposed to create the world, hee made first heaven and earth of nothing. Mercer. Iunius.

Quest. III. Hebrewes curious observations.

Vers. 1. GOd created heaven and earth, &c. 1. The Hebrewes have here many curious observations, which I will not stand upon: as 1. by the letters of the two first words, bereshith, bara, they note the time from the beginning of the world untill the Messiah, Aleph and beth signifie 3000. resh, shin, tau, 900. jod, 10. that is, 3910. which doth not much differ from the just time, according to the computation of some, from the creation to the Messiah. 2. They note the duration or continuance of the world, for 6000. yeeres, because aleph is six times found in the first verse. 3. By the 7. words of the first verse, they would have signified the 7. dayes of the weeke, and the 7. planets. These observations are more curious than profitable. 2. So is that question which is controversed among the Rabbins, whether the heaven or earth were made first: they thinke, that heaven being first named, was first made: but that reason is not firme: for the earth is named before the heavens. Genesis the manner of the Scripture is to mention that last, which is treated of first: as in the second [illegible] Moses beginneth againe to speake of the earth. Pagnin. Wherefore it is most like, that God made the heavens and earth together in their first matter: as the cup and the cover: as in an egge the yolke and the white, as in a circle the center and circumference. Mercer. And this first creating of the heaven and earth, was a part of the first dayes worke. Luther. For otherwise the Lord had not made all things in six dayes, contrary to the Scripture. Exod. 20. 11.

Whether were first created the heaven or the earth.

Quest. IIII. How the earth is said to be without forme and void.

Vers. 2. THe earth was without forme. 1. The earth is here so called by way of preoccupation: for it was not yet so called till the third dayes worke, vers. 10. Vatah. 2. The heaven was also without his forme, forme, though not altogether ſo confuſed as the earth: for there being no light yet created, both the heaven and earth were unformed and imperfect. 3. The earth is ſaid as yet to be, tohu and bohu, emptineſſe and vacuity: this tohu, was not that materia prima, which the Philoſophers dreamed of, and bohu to be the forme of things not yet applied to the matter: as though the heavens and earth had beene made of ſome precedent matter, whereas indeed God made the heaven and earth of nothing: which long continued not in this imperfect eſtate, the light being the ſame day created. 4. The darkneſſe here ſpoken of, was neither the element of fire, as ſome Hebrewes imagine, which if it bee, is bright and tranſparent: neither is it the ſame with tohu before mentioned, as R. Levi: neither was it any thing created, and a farre greater darkneſſe, than that which afterward was called the night, wherein there is ſome light of the ſtarres: but it was a meere privation of light afterward created. 5. The waters here mentioned which covered the deepe as a garment in the beginning, Pſal. 104. 6. were before comprehended vnder the name of earth, as all the inferiour elements beſide, as the ſuperiour parts of the world are inſinuate by the heaven. Mercer.

Quest. V. What is meant by the Spirit moved upon the waters?

The Spirit of God moved, &c. By the Spirit here 1. wee neither underſtand an Angell, which is the dreame of Cajetanus, for God needed not the miniſtery of Angels in making the world. 2. Nor yet the wind, as Tertullian. lib. cont. Hermog. 3. Nor the aire, as Theodoret. qu. 8. in Geneſ. If God had no uſe of the Angels to make the world, much leſſe of inferiour creatures. 4. But this was the Spirit of God, whereby the creatures were foſtered and formed. Iob. 26. 13. His Spirit hath garniſhed the heavens.

Quest. VI. What was the light created the firſt day?

Verſ. 3. God ſaid, let there be light, &c. Some doe thinke that this was a ſpirituall, no naturall or corporall light. Auguſt. lib. 1. in Geneſ. ad lit. c. 3. Rupert. 1. lib. de Trinitat. c. 10. but that cannot be, ſeeing this light made a viſible and apparent difference betweene the day and night. 2. Some thinke it was the perfect light of the Sunne, which was created the firſt day, but afterward rehearſed to bee made in the fourth; Catharinus: but this is contrarie to the text: for the Sunne was made the fourth day. 3. Others thinke, that it was a bright and lightſome cloud, which was carried about, and gave light to the world, as Beda, Lyranus, Magiſter Sentent. &c. 4. Others, that it was a light without a ſubject, afterward faſtened to the body of the Sunne, as Baſil. homil. in Geneſ. 6. 5. Others, that it was an exceeding bright ſhining light, ſuch as no mortall nature could behold, being whole and altogether, and therefore it was afterward diſperſed into divers bodies of the Sunne, Moone, and Starres: ſo Nazianzene, Theodoret, qu. 14. in Geneſ. 6. Some thinke it was the light of the Sunne yet imperfect, afterward perfected, inlarged, and beautified, Aquinas part. 1. qu. 67. art. 4. Thus we ſee how variable and inconſtant mens opinions are, when they ſearch into curious matters, and enquire after hid things: but it ſufficeth us to know that God made the light, before the Sunne, that we ſhould not attribute that to the creature, which was the worke only of the Creator: what manner of light it was, where placed, how it moved, how long it continued, becauſe in Scripture there is no certainty, buſily to ſearch it were curioſity: it is moſt like, that it was a certaine light, which was not extinguiſhed, when the Sunne was created, but rather increaſed, Vatab. Mercer.

And it is not unlike, but that this light proceeded from the element of fire, (as thinketh Damaſcene, lib. 2. de fid. c. 7. and Iunius,) as an effect thereof: and whereas it may be objected, that this light was moveable from one hemiſpheare to another, as cauſing day and night, whereas the elements, as the aire, are univerſally diſperſed and ſpread: it is alſo probable, that this light might be gathered to that ſide of the earth where it was day, and ſo to continue for a time, as wee ſee the water was afterward brought to one place, and ſo continueth: which light after the creation of the celeſtial bodies, might be drawne upward, and have his reflection upon the beame of the Sunne and of other Starres.

Quest. VII. How the evening and morning were the firſt day.

Verſ. 4. The evening and morning were the firſt day. 1. Some thinke that the evening is here taken for the day, becauſe it is the end thereof, and the morning for the night, being likewiſe the end thereof, and that the artificiall day was before the night. So Ambroſe, Chryſoſt. hom. 3. in Geneſ. 2. Others affirme the contrarie, that the evening and morning, are taken for the night and day, being the beginning thereof, the part for the whole, and doe gather thereof that the night belongeth to the day following: of this iudgement is Hierome, in cap. 2. Iona: which I hold to be the ſounder, for theſe two reaſons: 1. becauſe this is the uſe of the Scripture, to account the naturall day from evening to evening, Leuit. 23. 32. From evening to evening ſhall you celebrate the Sabbath. 2. The morning is part of the day, and not of the night, Mark. 16. 2. In the morning the firſt day of the weeke: the word is [πρωΐ], the ſame which is here vſed by the Septuag: for if the morning were part of the night, and not of the day, Chriſt in no ſenſe could bee ſaid to have riſen the third day, and ſo one of the principall points of our faith ſhould be ſhaken. 3. Further, we refuſe Eugubinus conceit, which thinketh that in this firſt day, there was only an euening, not a morning, as in the reſt; becauſe the morning followeth after the night: but here no night went before, but the light was firſt: for the words of Moſes are plaine and evident, that the evening and morning were the firſt day: it conſiſteth of both theſe parts, as the other dayes did: and this firſt day had alſo a night going before: not that darknes, which was upon the earth, as Iunius, but when God purpoſed to make the light, hee firſt cauſed the night to goe before, and brought forth the light of the day, Ramban, Mercer. 4. And the Sun not being yet made, which by his courſe and turning about maketh it day and night at the ſame time in diuers places: it may be thought, that it was day and night at the ſame inſtant now over the face of the whole earth. Mercer.

Quest. VIII. How God is ſaid to ſee the light to be good.

Verſ. 4. God ſaw the light. 1. Not that God did not know the light to bee good, before hee made it: but Moſes ſpeaketh here according to our capacity, that God approveth and ratifieth that worke now done, which before he purpoſed to make: and Ramban well referreth it to the ſtedfaſtneſſe and continuance of this worke, which God ſaw to be good. 2. God made a ſeparation betweene light and darkneſſe, not only in reſpect of their names, as Aben Ezra: but in the things themſelves, giving to each of them their determined time. Mercer. 3. And in that it is ſaid, God called the light day, &c. 1. God onely did not make and ordaine the light to be the day, Iun. Muſcul. 2. nor yet directed or taught men ſo to call it, Vatab. Mercer. 3. but beſide God gave theſe names himſelfe. Oecolamp.

How God called the light day.

Quest. IX. Why it is called the firſt or one day.

Verſ. 5. Were the firſt day, or one day, as the Chalde, Septuagint, and Hierome tranſlate. It is called then one, and not the firſt day, 1. not as R. Sol. becauſe there was but one God in the world, for ſo there was but one likewiſe in the reſt of the dayes. 2. Neither, as Hierome, becauſe unity is good, and two bringeth diviſion: for after the firſt day, noxious and hurtfull things were created. But the contrarie is evident out of the text, that God ſaw that all which he made, was good. 3. Neither, as R. Moſſ. is it called one day, becauſe there were yet no more: for it is ſo called in reſpect of the reſt that follow. 4. Wherefore the reaſon is this: the Hebrewes uſe, Cardinal numbers, for Ordinal, as the Grammarians ſpeake: as one for the firſt: as Gen. 2. 10. the name of the one, that is, of the firſt is Piſhon: ſo likewiſe in the new Teſtament, Vna ſabbati, one day of the weeke is taken for the firſt day. Mercer.

Quest. X. Whether there are waters above the heavens.

Verſ. 7. By the firmament, which ſeparated the waters which were under the firmament, from the waters above the firmament, divers of the ancient Writers underſtand the ſtarry heaven, and that there are waters above thoſe heavens which ſerve to mitigate the heat of the Starres, and from whence that abundance of raine came, wherewith the world was overflowne: ſo Baſil. hom. 3. Hexemer. Ambroſ. lib. 2. in Hexemer. c. 2. Beda, with others. But this cannot bee ſo: 1. for that the waters being of an heavy ſubſtance, muſt bee there kept againſt nature. 2. Neither could the great waters that drowned the world, come from thence, unleſſe the heavens alſo ſhould have beene diſſolved: the windowes of heaven were opened, which was nothing elſe but the opening and looſing of the clouds, which as Gods bottles did powre downe raine abundantly. 3. Neither are wee to imagine ſuch heat in the celeſtiall bodies (which are of no fiery or elementall nature) that they need to be refrigerated, or cooled. This firmament then is the ſpreading or ſtretching out of the aire, as the word rachiang ſignifieth, which divideth the raine and waters in the clouds, and keepeth them from the waters below: as is expreſſed in Iob. 26. 6. which bindeth the waters in the clouds, and the cloud is not broken under them. Now whereas afterward, verſ. 14. it is ſaid, Let there bee lights in the firmament of heaven: it followeth not, that the firmament before ſpoken of, is the ſtarry heaven; for Moſes here ſpeaketh after the capacity of the vulgar people, who imagine the Starres to bee in the firmament of the aire, the eye being not able to diſtinguiſh betweene the region of the aire, and the azure skie. And according to the vulgar opinion, Moſes alſo calleth the Moone a great light, becauſe it ſo ſeemeth to the eye, to bee the next in greatneſſe to the Sunne: whereas many other, both of the wandring and fixed Starres, doe exceed it in greatneſſe.

Whether the firmament be the ſtarry heaven.

And whereas that place is objected, Pſal. 148. 4. Praiſe him ye waters above the heavens: by heaven we are here to underſtand the lower region of the aire, as Pſal. 18. 13. The Lord thundred in heaven, and gave his voice haileſtones and coales of fire: but thunder, lightning, haile, come not properly from the heaven, but out of the aire. Hereunto agreeth the name given unto heaven, which is called ſhamaiim, of ſham and maiim: there is water: which agreeth firſt unto the inferiour region of the aire, where the raine is ingendred. This name alſo is applied to the higher heavens alſo: becauſe the eye maketh no difference betweene them: Mercer.

Quest. XI. How the waters were gathered together that covered the earth.

Verſ. 9. God ſaid againe: let the waters under heaven bee gathered together into one place, and let the dry land appeare, and it was ſo. Out of theſe words divers queſtions are moved, not unneceſſary to be knowne, nor unprofitable to be handled, which ſhall be touched in their order.

Firſt it is enquired how the waters, and whether they were gathered together, which before covered the face of the whole earth. 1. Some thinke, that the earth was this ſecond day created, and by the earth mentioned v. 1. that matter is underſtood, whereof the world was afterward made. Of this opinion is the Maſter of ſentences, and Hugo lib. 1. de ſacramentis; but wee refuſe it, becauſe the Lord ſaith not, let there bee earth, as when hee maketh other things, but onely, let the dry land appeare: whereby it is evident, that the earth was made before, but now ſevered from the waters.

Mountaines before the flood.

2. Some thinke that the earth was equall and plaine without hils and mountaines, that the waters might more ſpeedily run together, and that this inequality that now is of the ground, begun after the flood: but this conceit is contrary to the Scriptures, Gen. 7. 10. The waters prevailed fifteene cubits above the mountaines. Prov. 8. 25. Wiſdome was begotten before the mountaines and hils: therefore in the beginning there were both mountaines and hils.

3. Others

3. Others imagine, that the waters were dried up by the fervent heat of the Sun, and that the Northerne parts of the earth began to appeare firſt, as the higher ground, and the reſt of the earth by little and little. Eugubinus in Coſmopeia.

4. Others, that the earth was dried by a mighty winde, as it was after the deluge: ſee Toſtatus. But neither of theſe two opinions are probable: for the dry earth appearing all at once, was ſo prepared by a greater power, than either of the Sun or wind, which could not worke it at once, and hardly in continuance of long time. The earth not dryed by the winde.

5. Some thinke, that the waters did run together, and cover the other part of the earth, oppoſite to this where wee dwell, as Auguſtine ſeemeth to thinke, lib. 16. de civitate dei, c. 9. But the experience of skilfull Navigators, as of ſir Francis Drake, Maſter Candiſh, with others, (who by their famous travels haue compaſſed the wide Ocean) hath found that part of the world to bee habitable as ours is, and not to bee under the water. The oppoſite part of the earth not drowned.

6. Paulus Burgenſ. hath a ſtrange device of this matter: he thinketh that the water maketh a globe by it ſelfe, and hath his proper center, and ſo likewiſe the earth, and this is the cauſe why the earth appeared dry, becauſe the water did forſake the land, and was gathered to his owne center: in addition. ad poſtil. Nicol. de Lyra. But this opinion is very falſe and abſurd: Firſt, for that the text ſaith, that the water at the firſt covered the earth, v. 1. and ſo made but one globe with the earth, preſſing to the ſame center: unleſſe he will ſay, that God made a new kind of water the ſecond day, and indued it with new qualities, which cannot be affirmed. Secondly, Iſay 40. 22. The Lord is ſaid to ſit upon the circle of the earth: the word is chugh, a ſpheare or circle: as Iob 22. 14. He walketh in the circle of heaven: But experience ſheweth, that the earth without the ſea maketh not a round globe or circle. The water and earth make but one Globe.

7. Some thinke that the Sea is much higher than the land, and ſo the waters were gathered as it were to a great heape, that the dry land might appeare. Thus Baſil thinketh, and Ambroſe in his Hexemeron, l. 3. c. 2. but that this is not ſo, it ſhall be ſhewed in the next queſtion.

8. Wherefore leaving theſe uncertaine opinions, I rather incline to think that theſe might be the meanes and cauſes of the appearing of the dry land, and ſeparation of the waters. Firſt the water while it compaſſed the earth, being of a lighter and thinner matter, might be coagulate together and thickned, as we ſee the ſea water is of a groſſer ſubſtance than the freſh water, & ſo be contained in a leſſe compaſſe than before: ſo Auguſtine, lib. 1. de Geneſ. ad literam, 12. and Beda in his Hexemer. Secondly, the clouds being made this ſecond day, and the region or ſtretching forth of the aire called the firmament brought into faſhion, it is no other like, but that a great part of the water was extenuate and evaporate into the aire and clouds, a daily experiment whereof we have by the converſion of the miſts & clouds into water. Thirdly, the earth being much greater and deeper than the circumference of the water, which compaſſed the earth, might eaſily receive the water into the concavities and hollow places thereof, which were appointed of God to bee receptacles for the water. And that the earth is of a greater depth than the water, that did at the firſt cover it, thus it may appeare, by taking the iuſt meaſure of the compaſſe of the earth, and ſo of the diameter, that is, the through meaſure thereof. The earth deeper than the water.

Then for the compaſſe & circuit of the earth, Ariſtotle affirmeth it to containe 50000, Italian miles: ib. 2. de cœlo: Hypparchus as Pliny witneſſeth, 34625. miles: Eratoſthenes 31500. miles: Ptolome 22500. whom Baſil followeth: Alphraganus 21500. Pharnelius 24514. But of late they which have compaſſed the whole Ocean, doe find the circuit of the earth to bee but 19080. nineteene thouſand and foureſcore miles. And the diameter thereof is found to be 7000. miles, the ſemidiameter or ſpace from the center of the earth to the circumference 3500 miles. Now what the depth of the water was above the earth, may be conjectured by the height of the middle region of the aire, which is found by Mathematicians not to exceed 60. miles, as they gather both by the twilights which extend no further, and by the diſtance of meteors and exhalations, which appeare in the aire. The meaſure of the compaſſe of the earth. Peterius.

Now the earth ſo far exceeding the water in depth, might eaſily receive it into the hollow places & concavities thereof, which alſo is inſinuated by the Hebrew word, Kava, that here ſignifieth to congregate or gather together, from whence the latine word Cavus, hollow, may ſeeme to be derived, as Peterius well noteth. And this laſtly, is Ambroſe conjecture, that God did enlarge the low places of the earth, and the force alſo of the waters might make them deeper, lib. 3. Hexem. c. 2. And this is agreeable to the Scripture, Pſ. 104. 8. The waters deſcend to the place which thou haſt founded for them: the word Iaſadh ſignifieth to lay a foundation; ſo that God did make a low foundation for the waters in the earth. And in the ſame place the Prophet ſheweth the manner how the waters were diſperſed, that wheras they covered the earth as a garment, and ſtood vpon the mountaines: at the rebuke of God they did flee, and aſcended by the mountaines, and went downe by the vallies, to the place appointed for them. 104. v. 6, 7, 8. Whither the waters were conveied that covered the earth. Terra humilia patuit deſundere.

Quest. XII. Whether the Sea be higher than the earth.

SEcondly, we are to enquire whether the Sea be higher than the earth, which was, as I ſhewed, the opinion of Baſil and Ambroſe with others, that thinke that the waters are kept by Gods extraordinary power and miraculous work, that they returne not to cover the earth: and that place is alleaged, Pſal. 104. 6. The waters ſtand above the mountaines: v. 9. Thou haſt ſet them their bounds, which they ſhall not paſſe, &c. and Ierem. 5. 22. Will ye not feare my preſence, which haue ſet the ſand for the bounds of the ſea, by a perpetuall decree, that it cannot paſſe it, and though the waues thereof rage, yet can they not prevaile? &c.

For anſwer hereunto, we ſay, that in the firſt place the Prophet ſpeaketh of the firſt ſituation of the waters above the earth and hils, before by Gods commandement they went to their place. In the next the Prophet ſpeaketh not of any myraculous worke againſt nature, but of the ordinary providence of God by naturall How the ſea is kept in, that it overfloweth not the earth.

naturall meanes, keeping backe and bounding the Sea: as the Prophet giveth the like instance of the raine, verſ. 24. They ſay not in their heart, let us feare the Lord, that giueth raine in due ſeaſon, early and late, and reſerueth the appointed weekes of harueſt. All theſe workes ſhew the watchfull providence of God, not by miracle, but by the naturall courſe of the creatures preſerving the world. Indeed, the water in the red ſea, ſtood up like a wall, by a miraculous worke, and in Noahs deluge, the ſea ouerflowed the earth by an extraordinary work: but now the ſea is kept in by his naturall banks & bounds, as with ſwadling bands, Iob 38. 9.

Whether the red ſea be higher than Egypt.

But whereas Ambroſe, to prove the Sea higher than the earth, alleageth how Seſoſtris King of Ægypt, and Darius afterward would have cut the earth, and joyned the Ægyptian and the red Sea together: they finding the red ſea higher by three cubits than the land of Ægypt, fearing the inundation of the whole countrey, left off from their purpoſe. Ambr. lib. 3. Hexemer. c. 3. Firſt, it is true that theſe Kings attempted to bring Nilus into the red ſea, and ceaſed from their enterpriſe upon that erroneous conceit: yet afterward the Ptolomies, Kings of Ægypt, as Strabo writeth, effected that worke, and made a paſſage out of Nilus into the red ſea, without any ſuch danger of inundation. Secondly, though it were granted, that the red ſea were higher than the plaines of Ægypt, it followeth not that it ſhould be higher than all the earth.

The earth higher than the ſea.

So then our opinion is, that the earth is higher than the ſea, and that this is more agreeable to the Scripture, 1 Pſal. 107. 23. They are ſaid to goe downe to the ſea in Ships, as to the lower place. 2 Pſal. 24. 2. Hee hath founded the earth, ſuper maria, above the Seas: ergo not under them. 3. Eccleſ. 1. 7. All the rivers goe into the Sea: but the water hath his naturall courſe downward. Now whereas the ſhips ſailing upon the ſeas ſeeme to one ſtanding upon the ſhoare, as floting aloft; the reaſon thereof is, becauſe the ſea being a plaine and liquid element, doth more eaſily ſhew the round compaſſe thereof riſing to the faſhion of a globe, than the earth, being uneven full of hils and dales.

Quest. XIII. How the waters were gathered into one place.

Whether the whole ſea be a continued water.

THe third queſtion is, how the waters are ſaid to bee gathered into one place, ſeeing there bee ſo many lakes, rivers, and fountaines that are farre aſunder: First, we may anſwer with Baſil, that this one place is not to be vnderſtood of every collection and gathering of water, but only of the ſea, which though it be diuers in name, yet it is continued together, one ſea being perpetually joyned with another, unleſſe it bee the Caſpian Sea, which ſome thinke to be filled by the Northerne Ocean, as Strabo, Pliny, Baſil: others, that it is fed only by rivers, and emptied againe by the ſecret paſſages of the earth, as Herodotus in Clio. Ariſtot. lib. 2. Meteor. And Ambroſe hereto agreeth, that like as all the earth, except certaine Ilands, maketh one continent, as Spaine, Syria, Africa, ſo the ſea being joyned together, maketh but one general collectiō of water. Some other thinke, that the waters are gathered into one place, becauſe as Solomon ſaith, All rivers (though they have divers heads) run into the ſea, Eccleſ. 1. 7. Or elſe we may ſay, that the waters are gathered into one place, that is, a place ſeparated and divided from the habitable earth: ſo that the waters have not one place in reſpect of their divers diviſions, but becauſe they are ſevered from their earth, into their proper places.

Quest. XIV. Whether the earth be founded upon the waters.

THe fourth queſtion is, whether the earth be founded upon the waters, which was the opniō of Thales among the Philoſophers, & of Chryſoſtome among the Chriſtians. Which opinion ſeemeth to be favoured by two places of Scripture, Pſal. 24. 2. He hath founded it upon the Seas. 2 Pet. 3. 5. The earth was of the water, & by the water, by the word of God. For the firſt place, Baſil ſo underſtandeth it, that upon the Seas & flouds ſhould ſignifie, in the waters, becauſe the earth was firſt in, and under the water. Auguſtine referreth it to the Ilands and promontories, that doe hang over the ſea, lib. 2. de Geneſ. c. 5. Euthymius thinketh it is meant of the ſecret paſſages of the water, that run within the earth. But the meaning of that place is evident to bee this, that the earth is founded not upon, but above the waters: ſo the Hebrew word gual ſignifieth ſupra, above: and ſo we ſee, as was noted before out of Auguſtine, that the dry land hangeth over the ſea.

For the other place of S. Peter, the earth is ſaid to be of the water, not as though it was made of the water, but becauſe it was made to appeare out from the water which before covered it: the other part of the ſentence is not well tranſlated, by the water, δι' ὕδατος, but in the water: as 1 Pet. 3. 20. Noe is ſaid to bee ſaved, δι' ὕδατος, not by the water, but in the water. And ſo the earth may be well ſaid to be in the water, becauſe the whole continent being leſſe in compaſſe than the Ocean, ſeemeth to be as a great Iland in the ſea.

But that the earth hath not his foundation upon the waters, it is evident both by experience, becauſe we ſee the earth to be the heavier element, and ſo to have his ſituation loweſt: as alſo by the Scripture, Iob 26. 7. He hangeth the earth upon nothing, then not upon the waters. Pſal. 104. 5. He hath ſet the earth upon her foundation, &c. that it cannot be moved: the earth hath no foundation, but of it owne by the word of God: and ſeeing the earth is immoveable, it is not like to be founded upon the waters, which are moveable.

Quest. XV. Whether the dry land was cauſed to appeare upon the ſecond or third day.

Verſ. 9. GOd ſaid againe. 1. Some thinke that this was part of the ſecond dayes worke, the cauſing of the dry land to appeare: as Aben Ezra, to whom ſubſcribeth Mercerus; their reaſons are theſe: 1. becauſe it is ſaid. Gen. 2. 4 that in one day God made the heavens and the earth. Anſ. This is ſpoken of the heaven and earth which were made in the beginning on the firſt day. Gen. 1. 1, 2. becauſe the approbation of this worke, omitted before in the ſecond day, is inſerted here. verſ. 10. Anſw. This approbation, God ſaw that it was good, is omitted before: not becauſe Gehenna was made the ſecond day, and the Angels fell then, as the Hebrewes imagine, nor becauſe two is the beginning of diviſion, as Hierome: for this diviſion was good, whereas the creatures were in confuſion before: nor yet for that the ſecond dayes worke was not yet ended, as Aben Ezra: but becauſe the worke begun upon the ſecond day, was finiſhed upon the third. For the which cause, this approbation is omitted in the first verse, when as yet the heavens and earth were created in their rude and imperfect state.

Why the approbatiō, God ſaw it was good, is omitted the ſecond day.

Quest. XVI. Of the divers kinds of trees and plants created out of the earth.

Vers. 11. Then God said, let the earth bud forth, &c. 1. God caused the earth to bring forth these things, without helpe of the Sunne or Starres, which were not yet made: as hee caused the light to shine in the first day, without the ordinarie instrument thereof, the Sunne: Iun. 2. Although God speaketh to the earth, yet it hath no understanding or will to obey, as some Philosophers imagine, but God worketh this by his power: Mercer. 3. Here are three kindes of plants and fruits brought out of the earth: the bud, the herb, the tree; which some distinguish into herbs, shrubs, and trees. Vatablus maketh the bud and herb to be all one: the first so called in the sprouting thereof, the other in the perfection: but they differ rather thus; deseb is that kinde which the earth bringeth forth of it owne accord: gneseb; that which beareth seed, and is set and planted by the industry of man: gnetz, is that kinde of greater plants, which are called trees: Iun. 4. Whereas the earth is bid to bring forth gnetz peri, the tree of fruit: Rob. Sel. his note is ridiculous, that God would have had the trees to bee all fruit, and not only bearing fruit, and because the earth did not bring forth such, it was afterward accursed. Likewise R. Isaak his collection is curious, that would have this clause understood only of the trees of paradise, as though there were no fruit-bearing trees without paradise: Mercer. 5. Neither had the earth onely power given to bring forth these kindes of fruits, but it both brought them forth in act, and had power given to continue the propagation of them: Mercer. Calvin. And therefore it is added, fruitfull trees, bearing fruit, that is, which even then came forth with fruit for the present use of man: Iun. 6. Neither yet, as Basil thinketh, all trees were made fruitfull in the beginning, which afterward became barren when the earth was cursed. But either Moses speaketh of the fruitfull trees as more principall, or even those trees which beare not fruit, yet because they are profitable for medicine, or other uses, may also be numbred among the fruitfull trees: or rather they may bee comprehended among those trees, that beare their seed, though no fruit: of such kinde are ashes, willowes, and such like.

Hebrewes curious observations.

Quest. XVII. Whether the world were created in the spring or autumne.

Vers. 12. And the earth brought forth the bud of herb. Some would prove by this, that the world was made in the Autumne, because the trees were created with ripe fruit. Concerning this matter there are three opinions.

1. Mercator thinketh that the world was made in Iulie: and his chiefe reason is taken from Noahs floud, where the beginning of the yeere he would have to bee in Julie; because in the eleventh moneth, which he supposeth to bee in May, when the olive beginneth to put forth, the dove brought greene olive leaves. Contra. 1. There is no mention made of greene leaves. Gen. 8. 11. the word is gnaloh, which Hierome translateth elsewhere frondes olivæ, branches of olive. Nehem. 8. 16. such as they made bowers of: and the Septuagint, cals it (κόμας,) a dry stalke: it might be then some branch of the olive tree, rather than the leaves. 2. Admit that the branch or stalke had leaves, this is no argument of the spring in May: for the olive loseth not her leaves, as other trees, Plin. lib. 16. c. 20. and therefore as Chrysostome thinketh, the olive might remaine greene under the water: for it is unlike, that the olive in seven dayes should have new leaves: for seven dayes before the dove was sent forth, and could finde nothing.

2 Other doe thinke, that the world was made in the Autumne, in the moneth Tisri. 1. because that moneth was the beginning of the yeere, as Iosephus thinketh, before Moses by a new institution appointed Nisan (which answereth to part of March and April,) to be the first moneth: and therefore it is called the end of the yeere, Exod. 34. 22. from whence they began the account of the Jubile. 2. And beside they use this as another reason: because, in the autumne the fruit of trees and plants, as grapes, apples, are ripe, and not before. Contra. 1. It might bee, that the Israelites accounted the beginning of their yeere according to the manner of the Egyptians, among whom they lived, who began their yeere in the moneth Ptho, which answereth to September: as the Athenians did in the moneth [Hecatombaion,] which is in June: but it cannot bee shewed, that this reckoning was observed from the beginning. It is indeed called the end of the yeere, because all the fruit of the yeere past was then gathered, and seed time began anew: and so it is with us: the autumne is counted the beginning of the yeere for matters of husbandry; and yet wee in the computation of yeeres begin in the spring at the Annuntiation. It is true also that the yeere of Jubile then tooke beginning; but it is notwithstanding called not the first, but the seuenth moneth, Levit. 25. 10. the reason is, why it began then, because all workes of husbandry, and labours of servants, which then used to begin, did cease in the Jubile.

Dionys Halicar. Rom. Antiq. li. 1. What Moneth the first in the yeare.

2. Concerning the other objection of ripe fruit, we shall not need to answer as some doe, that the fruit did hang still upon the trees till the autumne, or that some trees in Paradise bare fruit in the spring, some in the autumne: or that they might beare fruit twice in the yeere, as Plinie reporteth of India, and Solinus of the Island Taprobane: but I rather thinke, this first bearing of fruit being supernaturall, that the trees againe,

againe bare fruit the ſame yeere according to their naturall courſe. And this may ſeeme to bee gathered by S. Iohns alluſion to the tree of life, that bare fruit every moneth, Revel. 22.2. that in the beginning, trees did beare fruit in the yeere more than once.

Lib. 1. Hexem. c. 4.

3. I thinke it therefore more probable, that the world was created in the ſpring, for theſe reaſons. 1. Ambroſe uſeth this reaſon, upon theſe words, germinet terra, let the earth bud forth the bud of the herb: Dedit formam fructus, &c. God gave and preſcribed a forme for the fruits to grow, ut initio cujuſque anni, that in the beginning of every yeere herbs ſhould ſprout forth. This we ſee to be done only in the ſpring.

First moneth in the yeare.

2. He uſeth alſo another reaſon: Vt oſtenderet Scriptura veris tempora in conſtitutione mundi, ait, menſis hic vobis initium menſium: to ſhew that it was ſpring when the world was made, the Scripture ſaith, this ſhall be unto you the beginning of moneths. Moſes then brought in no new inſtitution, but it is more like, he revived the old uſe of beginning the yeere from March, which was diſcontinued in Egypt by another cuſtome of that country.

Exod. 12.2.

3. Further, whereas God bleſſed the creatures, and bid them increaſe and multiply: which bleſſing preſently tooke effect: who knoweth not, that for moſt kinds of creatures, eſpecially the fiſh and fowle, the fitteſt time to engender and increaſe is in the ſpring. And whereas God gave them the greene herb for meat: it is not like, that preſently the greene herb with froſt and cold began to wither and decay. Adam alſo was thruſt out of Paradiſe to till the ground: but the ſpring time is apter for tilling, than the autumne or winter ſeaſon.

Epiſt. de celebr. Paſchali.

4. Beda beſide his owne opinion, maketh mention of a ſynode holden in Paleſtina by Theophilus Biſhop of Ceſarea, wherein it was agreed, that the world was made in the ſpring, and that Chriſt was crucified the ſame day that Adam was created: at which time he alſo tranſgreſſed, that the firſt Adam herein might be a type of the ſecond.

5. This alſo may be proved by comparing the time of Noahs floud with the time of the creation: for ſeeing there are accounted full yeeres 1656. from the creation to the deluge, they muſt fall out both about the ſame ſeaſon. But that the floud came in the ſpring, not in the autumne, may appeare by divers reaſons, which I reſerve for that place. Chap. 8. queſt. 10.

And of this opinion, that the world was made in March, Pererius nameth many, though he diſſent from them: as Euſebius, Cyrillus, Hieroſolym. Athanaſius, Nazianzen, Damaſcen, Ambroſe, Beda, with others. About this queſtion there is a great controverſie betweene two famous Rabbins, R. Ioſua, who holdeth the world to be made in the ſpring, and R. Eleazer in the autumne: but the other opinion is more probable, as I have ſhewed.

QVEST. XVIII. When the Sunne and Moone were created.

Verſ. 14. God ſaid, let there be lights in the firmament, &c. 1. Theſe lights then, were neither made the firſt day, and but placed now in the firmament, as the Hebrewes thinke. 2. Neither was the Sunne made the firſt day, the Moone the next, the Stars the third, as Eugubinus: but they were all made upon the fourth day. 3. Neither yet doe we thinke that the celeſtiall bodies were made in order, as Baſil conceiveth, but rather, that they were created all at once. Mercer. 4. And whereas the light created the firſt day, is called, Or: but the Starres are called, meoroth, as of the light: hence it may appeare, that theſe lightſome bodies were made the receptacles of that light then created, which was now increaſed and united to theſe lights: Mercer. rather than to thinke, that the element of fire was that firſt light, as Iunius. 5. But wee explode thoſe Jewiſh fantaſies: that the Sunne and Moone were created of equall light in the beginning; but when the Moone envied the light of the Sunne, God brought it into ſubjection, and ordered, that from thenceforth, the Moone ſhould receive light of the Sunne: and of the light ſtarre-beames, which the Moone was deprived of, they ſay, God made the reſt of the leſſer Starres: ex Mercer.

Hebrewes fables.

QVEST. XIX. Of the greatneſſe of the Sunne and Moone.

Verſ. 16. God made two great lights.) That theſe two great lights are the Sunne and Moone, there is no queſtion: and that the Sunne is the greateſt of all the celeſtiall bodies, it is alſo queſtionleſſe. Anaxagoras did hold the Sunne much greater than Peloponeſus, a countrey in Grecia. Anaximander to be as big as the earth. Plutar. lib. 2. de placitis Philoſophor. c. 21. but ſince the Mathematicians have found that the Sunne exceedeth the earth in bigneſſe 166. times, and none of the other Starres, which they call of the firſt magnitude, whereof there are 15. to exceed the earth above 18. times. The Moone, though ſome among the heathen have judged it bigger than the earth, as the Stoikes, and equall to the Sunne, as Parmenides, and ſome among the Chriſtians have thought it in bigneſſe next to the Sunne, becauſe it is here named to bee a great light, as Baſil upon this place, and Auguſtine, yet ſince by more diligent ſearch, it is found to be leſſe than the earth. 39. times, and to be the leaſt of all the Starres, except Mercurie. Moſes therefore here ſpeaketh according to the opinion and capacity of the vulgar ſort, to whoſe ſight the Moone ſeemeth greateſt, next to the Sunne, becauſe it is neareſt of all the Starres to the earth, and for that it is greateſt in operation, and hath the government of the night. The reaſon of the greatneſſe of theſe lights, is their farre diſtance from the earth. Empedocles ſaith, the Moone is twice ſo farre from the Sunne, as it is from the earth, but the Mathematicians ſay, it is 18. times ſo farre from the Sunne. Eratoſthenes affirmeth the Sunne to be 804000000. furlongs diſtant from the earth, that is, an hundred thouſand thouſand, and five hundred thouſand miles, counting eight furlongs to a mile. And the Moone to bee remote from the earth 780000. furlongs, almoſt an 100. thouſand miles. Plutarc. de placitis Philoſoph. l. 2. c. 31. The Hebrewes make the diſtance of the ſtarry heavens from the earth to be about 500. yeeres journey: Aratus but 30. dayes dayes journey: and the thickneſſe of the earth, as much: the one maketh it too little, the other too much.

Why the Moone is called a great light.

The diſtance of the Sunne and Moone from the earth.

But not to ſtand upon theſe curious obſervations, Ambroſe giveth ſenſible and apparant reaſons of the greatneſſe of the Sunne and Moone by daily experience. Firſt, ſaith he, by this their magnitude is evident, becauſe they appeare of the like quantity to all through the world, whereas heards of cattell being eſpied farre off, ſeeme as ants, and a ſhip diſcerned farre in the ſeas, ſeemeth no bigger than a flying dove. Againe, as ſoone as the Sunne ariſeth, all the Starres are hid: and further, if the Sunne were not of ſuch greatneſſe, how could all the world be lightened by it? Ambr. l. 4. Hexemer. cap. 6. Ambroſe reaſons of the greatnes of the Sunne and Moone.

Quest. XX. How the Starres doe ſerve for ſignes.

Verſ. 14. Let them be for ſignes and ſeaſons, dayes and yeeres:] 1. By ſignes here we need not underſtand, thoſe extraordinary ſignes, which it hath pleaſed God ſometime to ſhew, as in the Sunne in Ioſua, and afterward in Hezekiahs time: for in this place the ordinary uſe of theſe creatures is ſhewed. 2. Nor yet are we forced to referre it to the Aſtronomicall ſignes, though the Scripture doe alſo approve the lawfull uſe of them, Iob 9. 9. He maketh Arcturus, Orion, Pleiades, and the climates of the ſouth: for this combining and conjunction of the Starres was afterward found out by art and experience. 3. But theſe celeſtiall bodies doe ſerve, both for politicall obſervations, as the computation of moneths and yeeres, and the celebration of feſtivals among the Jewes, as alſo to be ſignes of naturall things, as for ſetting, ſowing, planting, and diſcerning of the weather, and ſeaſons of the yeere: as Orion bringeth raine, the Pleiades the ſpring. Iob 38. 31. We acknowledge then foure lawfull uſes of theſe celeſtiall bodies. 1. To diſtinguiſh the day and night, light and darkneſſe. 2. To be for ſignes of weather. 3. To ſerve for times and ſeaſons, as weekes, dayes, and yeeres. 4. To give influence by their heat, light, and motion, to theſe inferiour parts. Mercer. Iun. The lawfull vſe of the celeſtiall bodies.

But for morall matters, as to calculate mens nativities, and to diſcerne of their diſpoſitions to good or evill, or for ſupernaturall, to foretell things to come, to diſcover ſecrets, finde out things that are loſt, or ſuch like, theſe celeſtiall ſignes have no uſe at all, neither hath the vaine and ſuperſtitious invention of Aſtrology any ground at all out of this place, but is altogether repugnant to 1. the Scripture: 2. againſt reaſon: 3. vaine: 4. impious.

Theſe foure points ſhall briefly be proved. 1. The Scripture thus teſtifieth, Iſay 44. 25. I deſtroy the tokens of the ſouthſayers, and make them that conjecture fooles, and turne the wiſe men backward, &c. Ierem. 10. 2. Be not afraid of the ſignes of heaven, though the heathen be afraid of ſuch. 2. The wiſe man ſaith, Prov. 27. 1. Boaſt not thy ſelfe of to morrow, thou knoweſt not what a day may bring forth. If a man know not his owne way, neither can tell what ſhall happen to himſelfe, much leſſe can it be ſeene in the Starres: for the Spirit of a man beſt knoweth the things of man. 1 Cor. 2. 11. and if we cannot bee certaine what ſhall befall the next day, much leſſe, what may happen the next moneth, or yeere. Againe, if by the aſpect of the Starres judgement could be given of man, then ſhould they have dominion over man, whereas they were created for mans vſe, Pſal. 8. 3. The vanity of judiciall Aſtrology.

3. It is a vaine and deceitfull ſtudy; neither are the predictions of Aſtrologers true, as it may thus appeare; firſt, if there had beene any certainty in this art, it is moſt like, that the Devill ſhould have the beſt inſight into it, both by reaſon of his ſubtilty of nature, and long experience: but it is certaine that the Devill herein is deceived; for hereof it is, that the Oracles of Apollo miniſtred by ſpirits, directed by the aſpect of Starres, were for the moſt part vaine, falſe, deceitfull. This teſtifieth Porphirius in his booke of Oracles, cited by Euſebius, lib. 6. de preparat. Evang. c. 1. that Apollo his Oracles were made by Aſtrology; and that they were falſe and vaine, or ambiguous and deceitfull, one Oenomaus a Philoſopher among the Greekes, proveth at large, as Euſebius witneſſeth, lib. 5. de preparat. Evang. cap. 10. Againe, if there were any certainty in theſe Aſtrologicall prædictions, it would chiefly appeare in their Prognoſtications of the weather, which is the proper ſubject of the Planets operation: but herein daily experience ſheweth how groſſely they are deceived, that foretell ſuch things, neither agreeing with themſelves, nor yet with the event of the weather: yet I deny not but that the faireneſſe and foulenеſſe of the ſeaſons may be conjectured, when as the time is neere, and the naturall cauſes have begun to worke: as in the evening to gheſſe of the weather the next day, and in the morning, of the afternoone weather; as that a cloud in the weſt will bring a ſhower, and the ſouth wind heat: as our Saviour ſaith, Luk. 12. 55. But long before to declare theſe things, before there is any working in the naturall cauſes, it is not in the art or skill of man. Ambroſe to this purpoſe ſaith well: Cum pluvia expeteretur ab omnib. &c. when, ſaith he, raine was deſired of all, and one ſaid, the new Moone will bring raine, although we were very deſirous of raine, yet I wiſhed, that ſuch ſpeeches ſhould not be true: yea it did me good that no raine fell, till it came at the prayers of the Church, that it might appeare, that it came not by the influence of the Moone, but by the providence of the Creator. Hexem. lib. 4. 7. Aſtrologicall predictions falſe and uncertaine. Oracles of Apollo deceitfull. How men may prognoſticate of the weather.

4. The impiety of this ſcience is evident, becauſe they aſcribe all to the influence and operation of the ſtarres, and ſo bring in a fatall neceſſity, and rob God of his honour and glory. One Petrus de Aliaco a magnifier of Aſtrology, doubteth not to ſay, that Noahs flood, and the birth of our Saviour, might have beene foretold by the knowledge of the ſtarres. Maternus affirmeth, that when Saturne is in Leo, men are thereby long lived, and their ſoules goe to heaven. Albumazar ſaith, that the Moone being joyned with Iupiter in the head of the dragon, whatſoever a man asketh of God, he ſhall obtaine. Thus reporteth of them Pererius, lib. 2. in Geneſ. cap. 1. Thus they attribute all things both good and evill to the ſtarres, and thus the grace of God is made void: yea as Origen ſaith, while they make alias ſtellas beneficas, alias maleficas, ſome good, ſome bad ſtarres, they open their mouth againſt heaven, making the creature faulty and culpable, whereas God created all things good: tract. 4. in Matth. The blaſphemous aſſertions of ſome Aſtrologers.

But

How it commeth to passe that astrological predictions sometimes come to passe.

But if it shall be objected, that many things fall out according to the predictions of Astrologers: I briefly answer, that it commeth so to passe sometimes, not by the dexterity of their wit and knowledge, but either by the subtilty of Sathan that foretelleth, what he himselfe is permitted to worke, or by the credulity of such as consult with them, whereby their affections give way unto the effect: or by the secret disposing of Gods providence, that such things should fall out for the probation of the faithfull, and further confusion of misbeleevers.

Quest. XXI. Great Whales, how said to be created.

Vers. 21. God created great whales. 1. We need not, because God is said here to create the whales, which were made out of the water, to have recourse unto that indigested matter which was made the first day of nothing: Calvin. So not only that is said to be created, which is made of nothing; but that also, which is made new out of some matter, as man is said afterward to bee created, yet made out of the earth. 2. But we deride that Jewish fable, that God when he had made two great whales, lest the increase of so huge a creature might tend to the destruction of the rest, he did geld the male, and salted the female to be meat for the just in the next world. As though God did not foresee every thing before it was made, and approved it being made; and beside the Lord gave a blessing to all fishes, and so to the whales among the rest, to increase and multiply. Mercer.

Quest. XXII. Of the great Whales.

Vers. 21. Great Whales: the word turmin signifieth a serpent, dragon, or great fish. And this epithete great, is not added without cause: for the whale or great fish is the greatest of all living creatures, Iob 41. 24. In the earth there is none like him. It is almost incredible, what some writers report, of the hugenesse of these creatures: the Hebrewes write, that whales have beene found of 500. stadia or furlongs in length: Mercer. Some have appeared in the waters of the bignesse of Islands: Muscul. Pliny writeth, that in the Indian sea there are certaine fish called balænæ, whirlpooles, quatuor jugerum, of three or foure akors or furlongs in length, and certaine long fish called pristes, of 200. cubits, and eeles in the riuer Ganges, of 300. feet in length: lib. 9. cap. 30. The same Author citeth Iuba King of Mauritania, who maketh mention, writing to Caius Cæsar sonne of Augustus, of whales in the Arabick coasts of 600. foot in length, and 300. in breadth: lib. 16. c. 40. Ælianus also writeth, lib. 15. c. 21. that Alexander found in a caue in India, a dragon supposed to be 70. cubits long: they saw only his head out of the caues mouth, not daring with the whole hoast to approach neerer, whose eyes appeared to be of the bignesse of a Macedonian target or shield. These strange reports are found in forraine histories, the truth whereof I will leave to the credit of the authors, and the judgement of the readers. Ambrose saith, aqualia montibus corpora habere prædicantur: the Whales are reported to have bodies equall to Mountaines. Hexemer. li. 5. c. 10. Certainly it is evident out of Scripture, that these creatures of the sea, are of a wonderfull bignesse: as it appeareth both by that description, Iob 41. His jawes are likened to doores, v. 5. his scales to shields, v. 6. hee maketh the sea to boile like a pot, v. 22. As also by the story of Ionas, where we reade, that the Prophet was swallowed whole of a great fish, and cast up againe. And not to search further, our owne Chronicles make mention of great fishes, that have been taken, as of one that was in length 22. yards, being 12. foot broad betweene the eyes: some of his ribs were 16. foot long, his tongue 15. foot long: three men might stand upright one upon another in the opening of the jawes. Stow, ann. Elizab. 16.

Quest. XXIII. Whether the fowles were made out of the water or earth.

Vers. 21. Which the waters brought forth, &c. and every feathered fowle, &c. By these words it seemeth, that the fowles had their beginning out of the water: but the contrary is affirmed, c. 2. v. 19. So the Lord God formed of the earth every beast of the field, and every fowle of heaven, &c.

To reconcile these places, we neither affirme that the fowles were made of the thinner part of the water extenuated into the aire, as Augustine, lib. 3. in Genes. ad lit. c. 3. and Rupertus: nor yet that they were made of mud or slime, and so partly of earth, partly of water, as the Hebrewes; not yet that they were made of the element of the water, as Eugubinus in Cosmopeia: nor yet that the fowles were made part of the water, and part of the earth: as wee see there are two sorts of them, some that live in the water, and some that keepe the land, as Vatablus. But we thinke, that the fowles were created onely out of the earth, Gen. 2. 19. neither is the contrary affirmed here, that the waters brought them forth: but the Lord saith, let the fowle flye upon the earth. v. 20. so Iun. Cajetan, Catharin.

Quest. XXIV. How and wherefore God is said to blesse the fish.

Vers. 22. And God blessed them, &c. 1. God is not said before to have blessed the herbs and trees, as here hee blesseth these living creatures; because the generation of living things, whether it be ἐν τῷ ζωογονεῖν, ἐν τῷ ὠοτοκεῖν, ἢ διμλαχοτοκεῖν, in bringing forth young, egges, or wormes, is a more admirable worke of nature, than is seene in the increase of plants. 2. In that the beasts of the earth are not blessed, as here the fishes and fowles, it is not because of the serpent, that was to be accursed, as the Hebrewes imagine: but for that the abundance and number of the fishes exceedeth the other: yet it must bee understood that God also blessed the rest, though it bee not expressed. 3. The Lord here first of all speaketh to the creatures, because now he beginneth to create living things: Iun. hee speaketh to them, as he did to the whale to cast up Ionas, not by any syllabicall voyce, but by his omnipotent will and power, which the creature forthwith obeyeth. Mercer. 4. The fishes are said to fill the waters, the fowle to multiply; because cauſe the fiſhes are more in number, and they only live in the waters: but the fowles live not only vpon the earth, but other creatures beſide. 5. By the waters in the ſeas, all other gatherings together of waters are underſtood: but the Seas are named as the principall, wherein there is greateſt ſtore of fiſh. Iun. 6. Eugubinus here is deceived, that thinketh, that the fiſhes began to riſe out of the water; as ſoone as the Seas were gathered together, and ſo every day their creation was in working till the fifth day: for this were to confound the workes of the creation, which Moſes preciſely referreth to their ſeverall dayes workes. Mercer.

QVEST. XXV. Whether all kind of creeping things were made in the beginning.

Verſ. 25. Every creeping thing.] If every kind of worme and creeping thing were created in the beginning, then we refuſe Auguſtines conceit, that ſuch creatures as are generated of dead bodies, were not then made, lib. 3. de Geneſ. c. 14. For like as other perfect beaſts were at the firſt formed out of the earth, yet afterward left to their uſuall generation, ſo theſe creeping wormes, flyes, and ſuch like, might then have their creation as the reſt, though now ingendred by corruption of other matter. Likewiſe wee reject Pererius conceit, that thinketh thoſe creatures which doe ſpring of corruption, and are noyſome and offenſive to man, not to have had their beginning then: for by this reaſon, neither ſhould the ſerpent have beene created: theſe creatures, though hurtfull now to mans nature, if man had not fallen, ſhould nor have beene ſo. We therefore rather allow Baſils opinion, that even theſe ſmall beaſts, which doe ſpring from corruption now, were produced in the firſt creation. hom. 7. in Geneſ. and this is more agreeable to the text, which mentioneth every creeping thing then to have beene made: yet wee doe not thinke that there may not bee, or is not in the world, any other forme or faſhion of flye or worme, than was in the firſt creation, but that the generall kind was then formed of ſuch ſeverall creeping things, and a generall power and ability given to produce them out of ſuch corruptible matter, as is fit for their generation.

QVEST. XXVI. Whether creatures of a mixed kind were made in the beginning.

ANother queſtion alſo here ariſeth, concerning thoſe kinds of beaſts which are brought forth by a mixt generation, as the mule by the mixture of the Aſſe and the Mare, the Leopard of the Libbard and Lioneſſe, the Lynx of the wolfe and hind: whether theſe mixed kindes were created in the beginning. Some doe thinke that they were, but I hold rather the contrary with Rupertus, lib. 1. de Trinitat. c 57. and for theſe reaſons: 1. becauſe theſe are no new kinds, but the firſt kinds made in the creation mixed and conjoyned together, that we need not fetch their originall from the creation. 2. Becauſe wee finde it directly expreſſed in Scripture, that Anah the ſonne of Sibeon firſt found out mules in the wilderneſſe, as he fed his fathers aſſes, Gen. 36. 24. he was the firſt that found out the generation of mules, by the unnaturall coupling of aſſes and mares. 3. The Lord directly forbiddeth to plow with an oxe and an aſſe, Deut. 22. 10. much more unlawfull was it to couple divers kinds for generation, than to yoke divers kinds together for tillage. 4. By the ſame reaſon wee might fetch the patterne of other monſtrous births from the creation: as ſuch whereof Plutarch maketh mention, as of one Onoſcelis, the daughter of one Ariſtonymus, begotten of an aſſe; and Epona begotten of a mare by Fulvius Stellus: Plutarch. parall. 29. But theſe monſtrous generations were never by Gods creation or ordinance brought into the world, but by mans wicked invention.

Monſtrous births of women begotten of beaſts.

QVEST. XXVII. How God made man according to his image.

Verſ. 26. Let us make man in our image according to our likeneſſe. 1. We neither here approve the opinion of Rupertus, who by image, here underſtandeth the ſecond perſon of the Trinity, by likeneſſe or ſimilitude the third perſon, namely, the holy ſpirit, lib. 2. de Trinitat. c. 2. for in that the Lord ſaith, let us make man in our image, the image of the whole Trinity is expreſſed, and not the image of the father onely.

2 Neither are the words ſo to be taken, as though man was made according to the ſimilitude of that humane nature, which Chriſt the Sonne of God was to aſſume: whereas the Scripture ſaith, that Chriſt tooke upon him the likeneſſe of man, Phil. 2. 7. and not man his likeneſſe.

3. We alſo reject the conceit of Eugubinus and Oleaſter, who thinke, that God took upon him an humane ſhape, when he created man, and therefore ſaid, Let us make him in our image: for neither did God the Father ever appeare in any ſuch ſhape, neither could it bee ſaid to bee Gods image, being aſſumed but for a time.

God appeared in no humane ſhape, when he made man.

4 Neither yet doe we diſtinguiſh theſe words, as ſome of the Fathers, Origen, Baſil, Ambroſe, who referre image to the naturall gifts of reaſon, underſtanding, memory, the ſimilitude to the ſupernaturall gifts of grace, as of holineſſe, righteouſneſſe: for we ſee that the Apoſtle applieth the image to the work of grace in our renovation or regeneration. Coloſſ. 3. 10. Let us put off the old man, &c. ſeeing wee have put on the new, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him. Wee conclude therefore, that there is no difference in the ſenſe and meaning of theſe words, but that one is the explication of the other.

QVEST. XXVIII. Wherein the image of God conſiſteth in man.

ANother great queſtion is here briefly to be diſcuſſed, wherein this image of God conſiſteth, according to the which man was created.

1. Epiphanius judgeth it a matter incomprehenſible, becauſe he thought that the perfect image of God is here underſtood without any difference or diſſimilitude: Epiphan, hæreſ. 70. whereas the Scripture ſaith not, that man abſolutely was made like unto God.

2. Theodoret, thought that men onely and not woman was created after the image of God: whereas the contrary contrary is evident, verſ. 27. God created man in his image: and then it followeth, male and female created hee them: ſignifying thereby, that both were created according to his image. And whereas the Apoſtle ſaith, 1 Cor. 11. 7. Man is the image and glory of God, the woman the glory of the man: he ſpeaketh onely of the authority and preeminence given unto man, wherein the image of God in that behalfe is more expreſſed in the man, but not of the principall part of that image, which, as the Apoſtle ſaith, conſiſteth in righteouſneſſe and holineſſe: according to which image the woman was created as well as the man.

Divers opinions of the image of God in man.

Baſil, Chryſoſtome, doe underſtand this image of the dominion which man hath over the other creatures. Auguſtine of the immortality of the ſoule, wherein it is like unto God, lib. de quantitat. anim. c. 2. Nyſſenus in Hexemeron. herein ſaith this image conſiſteth, becauſe the ſoule is capable of all goodneſſe: Damaſcene, becauſe man hath free-will, lib. 2. de fide, c. 12. The Maſter of Sentences, diſtinct. 16. becauſe man hath reaſon and underſtanding, and therein excelleth all other creatures. Others, beſide theſe faculties of the ſoule, wherein the image of God is expreſſed, doe further affirme, that the likeneſſe is in theſe reſpects: 1. Becauſe that as all things originally are in God, ſo alſo man doth participate with the nature of all creatures, of plants in growing and increaſing, of beaſts in ſenſe and moving, of God and Angels in underſtanding. 2. As God can doe all things by his power, ſo man by wit, reaſon, and art, doth compaſſe many difficult things. 3. As God is the principall end of all things: ſo man is the ſecondary end, for whoſe uſe all things were created, and he for the glory of God.

Auguſtines diverſ conceits hereof.

I will alſo ſet downe more at large the divers conceits of Auguſtine, of this creating of man according to Gods image.

1. He thinketh this image and ſimilitude chiefly to conſiſt in the ſoule, and ſecondarily in the bodie, becauſe it was made to bee obedient to the ſoule, and of an upright forme to behold the heavens, lib. 83. queſt. 51.

2 Hee placeth Gods image in man in this, that as all things are of God, ſo all men had their beginning from Adam. qu. 45. ex vet. teſt.

3. Hee thinketh this image to conſiſt in mans dominion over the creatures, de Geneſ. cont. Manich. c. 22.

4. The ſoule is like unto God, becauſe it is whole in the whole body, and in every part thereof, it neither increaſeth, nor decreaſeth with the body.

5. The ſoule expreſſeth the image of the Trinity, in the underſtanding, will, memory, which are three faculties, yet make but one ſoule.

6. The ſoule liveth by it ſelfe, and doth alſo quicken the body, as God quickneth all things.

7. The ſoule beareth the image of God in reaſon, the ſimilitude of likeneſſe of God in charity. lib. de ſpirit. & anim. c. 29.

Thus Auguſtine varieth, placing this image ſometime in one thing, ſometime in another. But to put all out of doubt, the Apoſtle ſheweth, how we are to underſtand the image of God in man, Eph. 4. 24. Which after God is created in righteouſneſſe and true holineſſe. Coloſſ. 4. 10. Put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him. This image then conſiſteth not ſo much in the ſubſtance of the ſoule, or in the naturall faculties thereof, as of underſtanding, free will, memory, but in the knowledge and illumination, holineſſe and juſtice of the ſoule, which are now wrought in man by grace, and then were given by creation. Our reaſons are theſe: 1. If this ſimilitude and image were in the ſpirituall eſſence and ſubſtance of the ſoule, both wicked ſpirits and wicked men ſhould have the image of God, for the ſubſtance of ſpirit and ſoule remaineth in them.

The image of God conſiſteth not in the naturall ſubſtance of the faculties of the ſoule, but in the gifts of grace.

2. Ambroſe thus reaſoneth: Deus non damnat imaginem ſuam, &c. God doth not damne his owne image, or ſend it into hell fire, &c. but the ſoules of the wicked are damned: ergo, the image is not in the ſubſtance of the ſoule: imago illa, &c. that image wherein thou waſt made after the likeneſſe of God, is not condemned, but crowned, Serm. 10. in Pſ. 119. but the righteouſneſſe and holineſſe of the ſoule only is crowned.

3 That image, after which men are naturally begotten, is not the image of God: for it were abſurd, if not impious, to ſay, that Gods image may naturally be propagated: but men by nature receive the image of the reaſonable ſoule, as Adam begat Seth in his owne likeneſſe after his image, Gen. 5. 3. that is, like unto him both in ſoule and bodie: wherefore the image of God conſiſteth not in the ſubſtance of the reaſonable ſoule.

Adam loſt the image of God by his fall.

4 That image of God, after the which Adam was created, is by his fall utterly loſt and extinguiſhed, for otherwiſe this image need not to bee renewed and revived in us, as it is by Chriſt, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, Epheſ 4. 24. Coloſſ. 3. 10. the fore-cited places: but the ſubſtance of the reaſonable ſoule, with the naturall faculties and powers thereof are not loſt, therefore therein is not expreſſed this image. To this purpoſe Auguſtine: that the whole man both in his inward and outward part, inveteravit, is waxen old and decayed by ſinne, the inward man is renewed now by grace, the outward man ſhall bee reſtored in the reſurrection: lib. 24. contr. Fauſtum. Epiphanius therefore had no reaſon to note this as an hereſie in Origen, for ſaying, that Adam had loſt by his tranſgreſſion the image of his creation, epiſt. ad Ioann. Hieroſol. He might as well charge the Apoſtle with hereſie, who ſaith the newe man is renewed after the image of him that created him: but there need no renewing, where is not firſt a decaying; nor a reſtoring of that, which is not loſt.

Origen unjuſtly condemned by Epiphanius.

Quest. XXIX. Why it is added, God created them male and female.

Verſ. 27. THen God created man in his image, &c. 1. To take away all ambiguitie, leſt man might be thought to have beene created according to his owne image, it is added, in the image of God created he him. 2. Thrice in the ſame verſe Moſes maketh mention of the creation of man, leſt any might imagine imagine with the Philosophers, that man had no beginning, but was eternall. 3. Mention also is made of male and female, that both man and woman should be knowne to be made according to Gods image: though man first, and as the more principall. Iun. 4. And Moses saith, he created them male and female, not created him: contrary to the conceit of Plato, and some Hebrewes, which thinke that Adam was at the first created both a man and woman, and afterward divided in twaine, Mercer.

Quest. XXX. Of mans rule and dominion over the creatures.

Vers. 28. Rule over the fish of the sea, the foule of heaven, and over every beast. Theodoret thinketh, that the great Whales were exempted from the dominion of man, q. 20. in Gen. but his conceit is contrary to the text, which giveth man rule over all the fish: and Basil reporteth, that he had seene great whirlpooles of the sea taken and subdued by the will and industrie of man, hom. 10. in Genes. This rule and dominion of man was absolute before his fall, for then both man should have beene of more excellent government, by reason of his excellent wisdome, to keepe the creatures in subjection, and the beasts also by Gods providence should have had a naturall inclination to obedience: a president whereof we have Gen. 2. when all the creatures presented themselves before Adam, to receive their names of him.

Since Adams fall, this preeminence and dominion of man over the beasts is greatly diminished and impaired, that as he first disobeied his Creator, so they also have cast off mans yoake, yet notwithstanding, though now man have not so absolute a command over the creatures, his Lordship and authority remaineth still, which he exerciseth over the creatures by these foure wayes and meanes.

How man exerciseth his dominion over creatures.

First, there remaineth yet a naturall instinct of obedience in those creatures which are for mans use, as in the oxe, asse, horse, wherein Gods mercy appeareth, that though man by his sinne be deprived of his authority over the wilde and great beasts, as lyons, beares, yet the more necessary and serviceable creatures are kept in subjection still: such a naturall inclination toward man appeareth in the Dolphins, of the which Plutarch reporteth strange things, as how the body of that ancient Poet Hesiode was borne up in the sea by the Dolphins, and brought to land: and how one Evalus with a virgin, which was carried to be sacrificed, leaped into the sea, and were both preserved, beeing supported by the Dolphins, Plutarch. convivials. It is also most strange, that Plinie writeth of the Tentyrites, that inhabit by Nylus, that they are a terror to the Crocodiles, and leaping vpon their backes to bring them as captives to the shoare, Plin. lib. 8. c. 25.

Secondly, God by his extraordinary worke and miracle subdueth the fierce and cruell beasts vnto man: as when they all came unto Noah in the Arke: the lions mouthes were stopped against Daniel, the viper had no power to hurt Paul.

Thirdly, this dominion lost by Adam is restored by Christ, and the beasts subdued to the faithfull, when the Lord seeth it meet: as it is said, Iob 5. 23. The beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee. Thus by Gods providence many of his children have beene preserved, as Ionas by his faithfull prayer was preserved in the belly of the whale: Hierome reporteth, or one under his name, in the life of Malchus, (if the story bee true) how he being pursued of his cruell master, fled into a cave where was hid a lionesse with her whelpes, which stirred not at him, but as soone as the Pagan entred, tending his servant in before, they were both soone by the beast dispatched.

Fourthly, man sometime by his strength doth subdue the beasts, as Sampson did slay a lion, and David a beare: or, where strength faileth, by his wit and policy, as Saint Iames saith, c. 3. 7. The whole nature of beasts and of birds, and of creeping things, and things of the sea, is tamed and hath beene tamed of the nature of man: so Augustine saith, when all other beasts are tamed by man, hee himselfe is tamed of none. de Genes. cont. Manich. c. 18.

Quest. XXXI. How all things are said to be good that God made.

Vers. 13. God saw all that hee had made, and loe it was very good. The Manichees here objected, that God created many things hurtfull and pernicious to man, as herbs, and beasts, venomous and noysome, many things superfluous, whereof man hath no use, how then were all things created good? Augustine to this objection most fully in this manner answereth: 1. God hath made nothing superfluous, although we know not the use thereof: like as in an artificers shop, we condemne not those instruments and tooles, which we are ignorant of, though wee cut our hands with them. 2. Wee need not to complaine of those things, which are profitable, or superfluous, for these hurt not, and the other are for our use, and by those which are pernicious, we are either punished, or exercised, or terrified: usurpatilia, cave pernicioſa, relinque ſuperflua, use the commodious creatures, take heed of the pernicious, leave those which thou thinkest superfluous. de Genes. ad litter. c. 21. To this answer of Augustine, thus much may bee added: that these noxious creatures, which now serve for the correction of man, should not have beene hurtfull, if man had not fallen by his transgression: and againe, they are not now altogether unprofitable, for even those creatures, which are venomous, and not fit for food, are yet profitable for medicine.

There remaineth yet one question of weight concerning the creation of the Angels: first, it is not doubted of, but that God created the Angels. Coloss. 1. 16. By him were all things created which are in heaven and earth: things visible and invisible, &c. But there are two other questions, wherefore Moses omitted the creation of the Angels, and when they are thought to have beene created.

Quest. XXXII. Why Moses omitteth the creation of the Angels.

FOr the first: 1. Moses neither passed over the creation of Angels in silence, for feare lest the Israelites should have committed idolatry in worshipping of them, as Chrysostome and Theodoret thinke: for the Israelites could not be ignorant that the Angels had divers times appeared to their fathers the Patriarkes, and so could not bee ignorant of them. 2. Neither are they omitted, because Moses only treateth of those things, which had their beginning with this materiall world, but the Angels were created long before the visible world, as Basil and Damascene thinke, for it shall even now appeare; that this is a false supposition, that the Angels were created so long before. 3. Neither yet is the creation of the Angels comprehended under the making of heaven and the light, as Augustine and Beda thinke, for this were to leave the litterall sense which is to be followed in the history of the creation. 4. But the only reason is this, because Moses applyeth himselfe to the simple capacity of the people, and describeth onely the creation of visible, and sensible things, leaving to speak of spirituall, which they could not understand: and this seemeth to be Hieromes opinion, epist. 139. ad Cyprian.

Quest. XXXIII. When the Angels were made.

FOr the second: 1. We neither receive the opinion of those that thinke the Angels to have beene made long before the world, as Origen affirmeth, tract. 35. in Matth. and Damascen. lib. 2. de fid. c. 3. with others. For the Scripture testifieth, that the evill angels fell, as soone as they were created. Ioh. 8. 44. He abode not in the truth: and as soone as the Angels had sinned, they were cast downe to hell. 2 Pet. 2. 4. But before heaven was made, there was no hell, neither any such distinction of place, before the world was founded. 2. Neither is their opinion currant, that thinke the Angels to have beene created the same day with man: as Gennadius, and Athecius: because of that place, Iob 38. 7. Where wast thou, saith the Lord to Iob, when the Starres praised mee together, and all the children of God rejoyced? From hence it is evident, that when the starres were made, the Angels also had then their being, and rejoyced before God, which was upon the fourth day of the creation. 3. There is a third opinion, that the Angels were created, when in the beginning God created the heavens, Gen. 1. 1. August. lib. 1. de Genes. ad lit. c. 4. And whereas it is said, that darknesse was upon the face of the deepe, Origen thinketh that was the deepe, whither the Devill and his Angels were cast. This opinion seemeth most probable, because together with the heavens were created the heavenly host of Angels: c. 2. 1. & 148. 2. Where the same word tzaba host or army is used.

Quest. XXXIV. Whether all trees in the beginning bare fruit.

Vers. 29. I Have given unto you every herb, &c. It shall all bee to you for meat: likewise to every beast of the earth, &c. Wee mislike the conceit of Beda in Hexamer. upon these words, that before mans fall every tree did beare fruit, fit for food, none was barren or unfruitfull, because the text saith, I have given you every tree, &c.

For 1. it is evident out of the Scripture, that divers kinds of trees were created in Paradise for beauty and ornament, which bare no fruit for food: as the Cedar, and Firre tree, Ezek. 31. 8. The Cedars in the garden of God could not hide him, no Firre tree was like his branches. 2. This generall permission to eat of every tree, concludeth not a necessity of fruit-bearing in every tree, but a liberty to eat of all which were fit for food, excepting only the tree of knowledge of good and evill, Gen. 2. 17.

Quest. XXXV. Whether the flesh of beasts were eaten before the floud.

LIkewise we refuse the opinion of Beda, that neither man nor beast did eat of any flesh, but onely of the fruits of the earth before the floud: neither doe wee allow the iudgement of Thomas Aquinas, who thinketh that the beasts which are now devourers of flesh, should have used that kind of food in the state of mans innocency. 1. part. quæst. 96. artic. 1.

If man had not sinned, no beasts should have been killed for food.

The latter opinion wee reiect, because if man had not transgressed, there should have beene no death in the world, Rom. 5. 12. Sinne entred into the world by one man, and death by sinne: if there should have beene no death in the world, because no sin, I see not how death should have entred upon other creatures, especially this violent death by slaughter: as the Apostle also saith, Rom. 8. 22. The every creature groaneth with us, and travelleth in paine together to this present: so that this bondage of paine and corruption, which maketh man and beast groane together, was laid upon them together. Neither doe I see how Basils opinion can stand, hom. 11. in Gen. that man in his innocency, though hee should not have used the beasts for food, yet might have slaine them, to take knowledge of their inward parts, and to helpe his experience that wayes: or it should have beene lawfull unto him to kill them in hunting for his delight, as Peterius thinketh, lib. 4. in Gen. p. 663. for this slaughter, and killing of beasts, upon what occasion soever, whether for food, for knowledge or pleasure, belongeth unto the bondage of corruption, which by sin was brought into the world.

Beasts should not have beene killed for knowledge or pleasure, before mans fall.

The other opinion seemeth probable, especially because of these two places of Scripture; first, for that the beasts and fowles lived in the Arke, not of flesh, but of other food then usuall; as Noah is bidden to take of all meate that was eaten, Gen. 6. 21. for there being only one couple of unclean beasts, and seven couple of cleane preserved in the arke: out of these there could not be food of flesh sufficient for the reliefe and after the cattell went out of the Arke, there was no other food for them, all flesh being destroyed, but onely by the fruits of the earth. Secondly, the first permission to eat flesh, that we reade of, was after the floud, Gen. 9. 3. Every thing that moveth and liveth shall be meate for you as the greene herb.

But

But theſe objections may be eaſily anſwered. To the firſt we anſwer: 1. that the beaſts which did devoure fleſh, did alſo feed of herbs: and ſo Noah might provide for them according to their eating: 2. Though they did uſe altogether to live of fleſh, yet I thinke that for that preſent time, and ſome while after, all beaſts might returne to the firſt food appointed in the creation, this being a ſecond creation and renewing of the world; ſo that upon this extraordinary occaſion and urgent neceſſity, it cannot be gathered what was the ordinary food of beaſts before, no more than it can bee inferred, that becauſe beaſts of contrary natures, as the lion and calfe, beare and cowe, woolfe and lambe, leopard and kid, did lye together, Iſay 11.6. that there was no enmity betweene them before.

Their reaſons anſwered that thinke no fleſh to have beene eaten before the floud. What food the cattell lived of in the Arke.

To the ſecond place our anſwer is, that there that liberty is onely renewed, as is the bleſſing to increaſe and multiply, verſ. 1. and the prohibition of ſhedding mans bloud: verſ. 5. at the hands of a mans brother will I require the life of man: for before the floud, the bloud of Abel was required at the hands of his brother Caine.

Notwithſtanding therefore theſe objections, I thinke it more probable, that both man and beaſt after the tranſgreſſion before the floud, did uſe indifferently both the fruits of the earth, and the fleſh of beaſts for food: the grounds of this opinion are theſe.

Divers reaſons proving the uſe of beaſts for food before the floud.

1. That one beaſt did not raven upon another in the ſtate of mans innocency, two principall reaſons may be given: one, becauſe as yet no death was entred into the world; the other, for that man bearing perfect rule and dominion over the creatures, did keepe them in order: but after mans fall, both theſe cauſes were taken away; for not onely death entred upon man, but the other creatures were brought into the ſame bondage, and were killed for ſacrifice: as Abel offered of the fat of the ſheep, Gen. 4 3. if it were lawfull then to ſlay beaſts, why not to eat of their fleſh? And againe, man having loſt his ſoveraignty over the creatures, they then began one to rage upon another, as not ſtanding now in the like awe and feare of man as before: this cauſe is touched by the Prophet, Habbac. 1.14. Thou makeſt man as the fiſhes of the Sea, and as the creeping things that have no rule over them: that is, which doe one conſume and devoure another, becauſe they have no governour: this rule the beaſts, fiſhes, and fowles, had ſhaken off immediately upon mans fall, and not only after the floud.

2, Seeing in the old world two great ſinnes abounded, carnall luſt, and concupiſcence, Gen. 6.2. and tyranny and oppreſſion: verſ. 4. there were gyants or tyrants in the earth: and tyranny and oppreſſion brought forth bloudſhed; for which cauſe the prohibition of ſhedding of mans bloud is ſo ſtraightly forbidden after the floud, that God will require it at the hands of every beaſt, and of a mans brother, Gen. 9. 5. How is it like, that they would abſtaine from killing of beaſts, that ſpared not to ſpill the bloud of men? or from eating of fleſh, which is more apt to provoke unto luſt, than the ſimple fruits of the earth?

3. If the fleſh of beaſts was not eaten before the floud, what then became of the increaſe of cattell? how was not the earth over-run with them? This reaſon was given, why the Lord would not at once but by little and little deſtroy the Canaanites before the Iſraelites, leſt the beaſts of the field ſhould increaſe upon them, Deut. 7.22. becauſe they both helped to deſtroy the cruell beaſts, and did eat the uncleane, as ſwine and ſuch other, both which by their multitudes otherwiſe might have beene an annoyance to the Iſraelites. But greater feare was there, of overſpreading the earth with increaſe of beaſts before the floud, if no ſuch proviſion had beene made to diminiſh their number.

4. But that place moſt of all confirmeth our opinion. Gen. 7.2. where mention is made of cleane and uncleane beaſts: which difference was obſerved before the floud, and continued by tradition; not in regard only of ſacrifice, but alſo for their eating, as it may appeare in the reviving of this law afterward. Levit. 11.47. That there may be difference betweene the uncleane and cleane, and betweene the beaſt that may be eaten, and the beaſt that may not be eaten: that then is ſaid by the definition of the law to bee a cleane beaſt, that might be eaten, that uncleane, that might not be eaten. So I conclude this queſtion, with the ſentence of Ambroſe, Qui convivium adornat, &c. he that prepareth a feaſt, doth kill his oxen and fat cattell before, and then biddeth his gueſts: ſo the Lord, ante homini caterorum animalium præparavit epulas, before prepared the meats of other beaſts, and then as his friend invitavit ad convivium, bid him to the banket, Epiſt. 37. His opinion is, that the cattell were provided of God to bee meat for man. Mercerus is of another judgement, that the eating of fleſh was generally forborne before the floud, which is alſo the opinion of the Hebrewes: 1. both becauſe it was neceſſary for the preſervation of the kinds of cattell: 2. as alſo herbs being then of greater vertue and ſtrength before the floud and after, might ſuffice for mans ſuſtenance. Mercer. in v. 29. 1. ch. Gen.

See more of this matter, C. 9. q. 1.

But theſe reaſons conclude not. 1. Like as after the floud, when liberty was granted to eat fleſh, as the greene herb, yet they did forbeare for a time, till the breed of Cattell was increaſed, upon the like reaſon before the floud, immediately after the creation, they might abſtaine for a time from the eating of fleſh, but not altogether. 2. The great vertue and ſtrength of herbs concludeth, that the eating of fleſh was not ſo generall, or neceſſary, then as afterward, but the whole abſtinence from all kind of eating of fleſh, it concludeth not.

I rather preferre Muſculus opinion, who upon the ſacrificing of beaſts, and wearing of their skins, inſerreth, that beaſts were killed before the floud, and conſequently their fleſh eaten. in 1. Gen. v. 29.

4. The didactica, that is, places of doctrine observed out of this first chapter.

1. Doct. Of the Trinity proved.

1. AGainſt the Jewes that deny the Trinity, and the Sabellians, which affirme but one perſon in the Deity, we have evident proofe in this chapter, verſ. 1. where the word (God) or, in the hebrew elohim, gods, is joyned to a verbe of the ſingular number, [bara] created, noting the ſingularity of the Godhead, and plurality of the perſons. But exception is taken againſt this argument by Cajetanus, for the which he is reproved of Catharinus another Popiſh writer, lib. 4. animadver. and by Bellarmine. lib. 2. de Chriſt. c. 6. for that it is the uſe of the Hebrewes to joyne words of the plurall, with a verbe of the ſingular number, upon which reaſon this collection is miſliked alſo by Calvin and Mercerus: but it may be replied, that it is not the uſe of the Hebrewes to put in the plurall number, that which hath no plurality in nature: as to ſay (Gods) if there were but one perſon in the godhead.

To whom God ſaid, let us make man.

But yet this argument for the Trinity is more evident, verſ. 26. Let us make man after our image, &c. where God neither ſpeaketh to himſelfe, ſaying, let us make, not I will make: neither yet to the earth, as though that wrought together with God: nor to the Angels, for God only created man, verſ. 27. nor yet doth God ſpeake in the plurall number, according to the faſhion of great men, for that uſe of ſpeech, was not yet knowne: but in this forme of ſpeech is ſet forth the conſultation of the bleſſed Trinity, the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghoſt.

2. Doct. That the heavens and earth had a beginning.

2. OUt of the firſt verſe wee conclude, that the world had a beginning, and that it was created by God: contrary to the opinion of Xenophanes, who held the world to bee without beginning or end: and of the Epicures, who did impiouſly hold, that the world was made by chance, by the concurrence of bodies together: and of Ariſtotle among the heathen, and Eugubinus in Coſmopeia among Chriſtians, who affirme Cœlum empyræum, the higheſt and ſupreme heaven to have beene eternall.

The lying computation of yeeres of the Egyptians.

Likewiſe wee condemne the folly of the lying Ægyptians and Chaldees, who extend the age of the world many thouſand yeares before it was made. The Ægyptians boaſted that they had a continuall ſucceſſion of Kings. 70. thouſand yeares. Auguſtine maketh mention of a letter that Alexander writ to his mother Olympias, wherein he reporteth, that hee heard of an Ægyptian Prieſt, that the Kingdome of the Aſſyrians exceeded 5000. yeares: of the Perſians, 8000. yeares. Pompeius Mela writeth, that they have chronicles of 13000. yeares. Diogenes Laertius, from Vulcan to Alexander, accounteth. 48860. yeares, Auguſt. lib. 12. de civitate. dei. cap. 10. The Ægyptians alſo reckon 100. thouſand yeares ſince they firſt learned Aſtrology, de civitat. dei. 18. c. 40. All theſe are lying fables, ſeeing by juſt computation of yeares it is found, that the world hath not yet continued ſince the firſt beginning thereof, 6000. yeares.

3. Doct. The word from the beginning.

3. Verſ. 3. THen God ſaid: hence Servetus would confirme his wicked error, that the word was not from the beginning, becauſe the heavens and earth are here ſaid to bee made, before God ſpake. But wee have an evident teſtimony, that the word was in the beginning with God, and that nothing was made without it, Ioh. 1, 2, 3. and ſeeing the light was made by this word, the word muſt needs be before the light: the cauſe goeth before the effect: ſo that the heavens and earth were in the beginning made by the word of God: but in this place firſt onely it is added, And God ſaid, becauſe now more manifeſtly the wiſdome and power of God appeareth in the diſtinction and perfection of the creatures, which before were confuſed together. Calvin. Mercer. Further, another hereſie of Servetus is confuted, who thinketh that this was a new quality in God to ſpeake, which ſpake not before, for this ſpeaking in God, was no quality in God, as in man, but it ſignifieth only his will and decree, though Ab. Ezra doe without cauſe finde fault with R. Saadias for ſo expounding: this word of God was nothing but Gods decree and commandement, whereby the heavens alſo and earth were firſt made, Pſal. 148. 5. ſo that then God thus ſpake alſo. Calvin. Mercer.

4. Doct. Of the different beginning of the ſoules of man and beaſts.

4. Verſ. 24. LEt the earth bring forth every living thing: animam viventem, the living ſoule: from hence it was gathered, that not only the bodies of bruit beaſts, but their life alſo, and as it were ſoule, were derived out of the earth: whereby a manifeſt difference appeareth betweene the originall of mans ſoule, which was breathed of God, and of the ſoule or life of beaſts, which was produced out of the earth: contrary to the opinion of Porphirius, and the Pythagoreans, who taught that the ſoule of man tooke beginning from the elements, as the life of other creatures.

5. Doct. That God hath no humane ſhape.

5. LEt us make man after our image. verſ. 26. which image was ſhewed before to be in the graces of the ſoule, and not in the body, againſt the hereſie of the Anthropomorphites, who imagined God to be of a humane ſhape like unto man.

6. Doct. God not the author of evill.

6. Verſ. 31. God ſaw all he had made, and loe it was very good. From hence we conclude, that God only is the author of good: and that whatſoever the Lord doth, is very good. Againſt the Manichees, who affirmed, that the God of the law was the Prince of darkneſſe, and author of evill.

7. Doct. Marriage made free for all men.

7. Verſ. 28. Bring forth fruit and multiply] This Scripture ſheweth, that marriage had the inſtitution in mans innocency, and that this bleſſing to increaſe, ſhould have taken place though man had not fallen: againſt the hereſie of the Tatiani and Manichees, which condemned marriage as a work of the devill.

Againe, ſeeing God giveth here a liberty to all men and women by marriage to increaſe and multiply, it maketh ſtrongly againſt the Popiſh inhibition of marriage in Eccleſiaſticall perſons, and Monaſticall enforced vowes: for by both theſe, this generall liberty given of God is reſtrained.

To this argument divers anſwers are framed. 1. That this precept of multiplying was onely to hold till the world was repleniſhed. Magiſter, lib. 4. diſtinct. 26. 2. This precept was not given to all, but onely to the multitude. Thomas 2. 2. quæſt. 152. art. 2. 3. This precept was not for all times, but only in caſe of neceſſity, when propagation failed, Scotus. 4. Some ſay this precept did hold onely till Chriſt. 5. Some that this increaſing is to be underſtood of fructifying in the ſoule, not in the body. But all theſe anſwers miſlike the moderne Papiſts. And therefore now their anſwer is, that theſe words, increaſe and multiply, containe not a precept, but an inſtitution of nature, and a promiſe of fecundity: for the ſame words are uttered unto other creatures, which are not capable of precepts; and if it were a precept, it ſhould binde all to increaſe and multiply by marriage, and ſo injury ſhould be offered to Chriſt, to Mary, and other holy Virgins: thus Bellarmine de Clericis, lib. 1. c. 21. Pererius in Geneſ. lib. 4. p. 657.

The Papiſts confuted that reſtraine marriage.

Contra. 1. Our adverſaries fight here with their owne ſhadow: for neither doe wee ſay, that this is an abſolute precept binding all to marriage: but a liberty granted to all that will marry, that thereby mankinde may ſtill be propagated: like as where Chriſt ſaith, if they perſecute you in one City, flye into another: hee doth not take away this liberty, that flyeth not, having received a greater gift of ſtrength and patience to ſtay and endure the utmoſt triall: but he, which ſhall deny this remedy to the weake. So they offend not againſt this grant of marriage for increaſe, that need it not, but are indued with a more excellent gift of continency, but they, which deny it to thoſe that are apt to generation. 2. Though bruit beaſts are not capable of mans precepts, yet when God biddeth, the creatures underſtand in their kind and obey. Jon. 2. 10. God ſpake to the fiſh, and it caſt up Jonah upon the dry land. 3. If it bee an inſtitution of nature, then they tyrannize by their ſuperſtitious lawes over the bodies of men, forcing them to ſingle life againſt the generall inclination of nature.

5. The αὐξησις, that is, places of confutation out of this firſt chapter.

1. Conſut. Againſt the Manichees and Atheiſts.

I Will briefly firſt ſet downe the objections of the Manichees and ancient Pagans, concerning the creation, becauſe they are ſutable to the impious conceits of the Atheiſts in theſe dayes.

1. Object. If God in the beginning made the world: what did hee before? was hee weary in doing of nothing? Anſw. God, as Auguſtine ſaith, nec ceſſando torpuit, nec operando laboravit, neither was idle in reſting, nor weary in working: neither received he any happineſſe by the things created, without which he was happy: but when it pleaſed him, he made the world to manifeſt his glory, and declare his mercy. Auguſt. cont. adverſ. leg. lib. 1. c. 2.

2. Object. If God created light, hee was before in darkneſſe. Anſwer. God needeth no corporall light, which was made, but dwelleth in a ſpirituall and uncreated light. Aug. de gen. cont. Manic. cap. 4.

3. Object. If God made the light, who made darkneſſe? Anſwer. Darkneſſe is nothing, it need no creation, being but the abſence of light, as nakedneſſe is the want of cloathing, ſilence the ceaſing of a ſound. ibid.

4. Object. If the ſpirit moved upon the waters, then were they the habitacle or manſion of the ſpirit. Anſ. The Sunne is carried above the earth, yet is not the earth the habitation thereof: and the ſpirit did ſo move upon the waters, as the workman over the worke which he intendeth to make. Aug. ibid. c. 5.

5. Object. But who made the waters whereupon the ſpirit moved? Anſw. It is comprehended under the name of the earth, which was covered with the waters, made at the firſt, as an unformed lumpe of matter, whereout other creatures were made. Aug. c. 7.

6. Object. God ſaw that the light was good, it ſhould ſeeme he knew it not before. Anſw. It followeth not, that becauſe God approveth the light being made, he knew it not before. Chriſt wondred at the Centurions faith, which he himſelfe had wrought: God ſaw it before in his intention, and now approveth it, brought forth in action.

7. Object. How could there be light, or the diſtinction of daies and nights, before the Sun was made? Celſ. lib. 6. Orig. and ſo object the Manichees. Anſ. Auguſtine anſwereth, that there was a diviſion of the day and night before the ſunne, but a more exact diviſion afterward: de geneſ. cont. Manich. c. 15. Ambroſe ſaith, the light of the day is one thing, the light of the ſunne another: as wee ſee by experience, that there is a light before the ſunne riſe, and after he is ſet, lib. 4. Hexemer. c. 3. But we doe againe ſay, that God is not tyed to the creature, as though hee could not make light without the ſunne: hee that made the ſunne, was able to make light before and without the ſunne: ſee more hereof, in the Theologicall explanation upon verſ. 3. I will now touch ſome of the Papiſts objections.

2. Confut. Sacraments doe not conferre grace.

Bellarmine by the moving of the ſpirit upon the waters, enforceth, that the Sacrament of Baptiſme conferreth grace, as thoſe waters concurred to the making of naturall things, ſo the water of baptiſme toward ſpirituall regeneration: lib. 2. de ſacram. ca. 4. Anſ. This collection maketh againſt his opinion: for like as the waters were dead without the ſpirit, ſo we ſay that it is the ſpirit in baptiſme, and not the element that doth regenerate us.

3. Confut. Not lawfull to make the image of God.

MAn is the image of God, but it is lawfull to make the image of the image of God: ergo, to make the image of God, lib. 2. de imaginib. ſanct. c. 8. Anſ. Man is made according to Gods image in his ſoule, not in his body: that therefore in man, wherein he is like unto God is ſpirituall and inviſible, and therefore cannot be by a viſible image deciphered.

4. Confut. Man created immortall.

BEcauſe the Lord ſaid to man, increaſe and multiply, Bellarmine collecteth, that man was created of a mortall and corruptible nature, yet ſhould he have beene preſerved by a ſupernaturall grace, if he had not ſinned, lib. de grat. primi hom. c. 9. Anſ. 1. His collection is weake, for man ſhould have increaſed in the ſtate of innocency, where no corruption was, and Mary was increaſed with her holy Sonne Chriſt, whoſe fleſh ſaw no corruption, Act. 2. 27. 2. Neither needed Adam to have had any ſupernaturall gift, beſide his creation, to have beene preſerved from death, if hee had not ſinned: for death entred onely by ſinne, Rom. 5. 12.

5. Confut. Againſt the Anabaptiſts.

Verſ. 26. LEt them rule over the fiſh of the Sea, &c. Hence the Anabaptiſts would prove their confuſed community and free uſe of all creatures: becauſe God giveth unto Adam and all his poſterity, rule, and dominion over them. But it is a groſſe collection: for the gift muſt be uſed according to the mind of the giver: now the Lord, who firſt gave this liberty unto man, hath alſo ſet an order, appointed Magiſtrates, forbidden to ſteale: that every man ſhould content himſelfe with his owne portion, and not uſurpe upon anothers right. Muſcul.

6. The παρ᾽ αἰνετικὰ, places of exhortation and comfort.

1. The great wiſdome of God in the creation.
2. The great bounty of God.
3. Gods image muſt be repaired.
4. Mans obedience toward his Creator.
5. God illuminateth the ſoule.
6. To delight in good things.

1. THe great wiſdome of God appeareth in the creation of the world, as the Prophet noteth, Pſal. 104. 24. In wiſdome haſt thou made them all, &c. for all things were ordained of God in excellent order, and diſpoſed with great wiſdome.

2. The great bounty of God appeareth toward man, for whoſe cauſe hee hath made all theſe things, which the eye beholdeth: that we againe ſhould magnifie the mercies of God toward us: thus the Prophet exhorteth, Pſal. 8. 3. When I behold the heavens, &c. what is man ſay I then, that thou art ſo mindfull of him?

3. Seeing man was created after the image of God in righteouſneſſe and holineſſe, and ſince by his tranſgreſſion hee hath loſt this image, Eccleſ. 7. 31. God hath made man righteous, but they have ſought many inventions: we ſhould labour to repaire this image, and to be renewed in the ſpirit of our minds, to put on the new man, which after God is created in righteouſneſſe and holineſſe, Epheſ. 4. 24.

4. As God hath given unto man rule over the creatures, verſ. 28. as the Prophet ſaith, The oxe knoweth his owner, &c. Iſay 1. 3. So man ſhould endevour to know his Creator and Maker, and to bee obedient to him.

5. As God commanded light to ſhine out of darkneſſe, ſo we ſhould pray to God to illuminate our minds with the knowledge of Chriſt, 2 Cor. 4. 6.

6. All things which God created were good, ſo we ſhould delight in doing of good, and overcome evill with goodneſſe, Rom. 12. 21.

CHAP.

CHAP. II.

The Analysis, or Methode.

THis second chapter containeth an institution of somewhat not ordained before, and a repetition of things done before.

The institution is of the Sabbath, the sanctification thereof, vers. 3. the reason of the sanctifying, Gods rest, vers. 2.

The repetition is generall, of the creation of the whole world, and the things therein contained, vers. 4. 5. Particular in the description of paradise, and the rehearsall of things concerning Adam.

Paradise is described by the situation of the place, vers. 8. by the materiall parts thereof, the pleasant trees, vers. 9. the river divided into foure heads from vers. 9. to vers. 15.

Foure things are rehearsed concerning man: 1. his vocation to keepe the garden, vers. 15. the prohibition to eat of the tree of knowledge, &c. with a permission to eat of the rest. vers. 16, 17. 3. The nomination of the creatures: their bringing to Adam, vers. 16. his naming of them. vers. 20. 4. The creation of woman: where we have 1. the consultation of God, vers. 18. 2. The conformation, or manner of the womans making, vers. 21, 22. 3. The approbation of Adam, vers. 23. The benediction of marriage interserted by Moses, vers. 24.

The Exegeſis, or Theologicall explication.

Quest. I. How God is ſaid to have reſted.

1. God reſted from all his worke. 1. Neither as being weary in working, but reſting is here taken only for ceaſing, or leaving to worke. 2. Neither did he reſt from his workes, to receive any uſe thereof or benefit to himſelfe: but the wiſe man ſheweth how God taketh delight in his workes: Prov. 8. 31. I tooke my ſolace in the compaſſe of the earth, and my delight is in the children of men: he made all things for mans uſe, and man for his owne glory: not that by man there is any new acceſſion of glory to God, which he had not: for infinite was the glory of the bleſſed Trinity before the world was. Ioh. 17. 5. but by man, Gods glory in the world is manifeſted, not to Gods benefit, but to his owne everlaſting reward. 3. Neither is God ſaid ſimply to reſt, but only from the workes of the creation: by his providence he worketh ſtill in the preſervation of thoſe things which he hath made. Iohn 5. 17. My father worketh hitherto, and I worke.

Quest. II. How the Lord is ſaid to have made an end of his worke the ſeventh day.

Verſ. 2. In the ſeventh day God finiſhed his worke, &c. 1. Not that God made any of his workes upon the ſeventh day, as Hierome urgeth this place againſt the Iewes: tradition. in Geneſ. 2. neither is it ſo ſaid, becauſe God in the laſt point of the ſixt day finiſhed his worke, which therefore is counted of the ſeventh: as the Hebrewes. 3. Neither need we with the Septuagint to read ſixt for ſeventh; which were a corrupting of the text. 4. Nor yet with ſome Hebrewes to underſtand the creation of the ſeventh day: for God had already appointed the dayes to follow in order: and the dayes are not properly ſaid to bee created, but the workes made therein. 5. Neither yet doe wee approve the conceit of Aben Ezra, who ſaith, that the end or abſolution of a worke is no worke. 6. But without any more controverſie, the meaning is no more but this, that God had now already upon the ſeventh day finiſhed his worke: the finiſhing was done before, but now the Lord beheld it as complete and perfect. Mercer. Iun.

Quest. III. The meaning of theſe words, verſ. 3. which he created to be made.

Verſ. 3. Which he created, to be made.] 1. This is neither to bee referred to the eternall purpoſe of God to create thoſe things, which after were made, as Rupertus, lib. 2. de Trinitat. c. 18. for Gods decree and purpoſe to create the world, is of like eternity to himſelfe: but the creation had a beginning. 2. Neither by theſe words [to be made] is ſignified the power of generation given to the creature, to make like to it ſelfe: for from this worke Gods providence ceaſeth not ſtill. 3. Neither is inſinuated thereby the end to the which, and order wherein every thing was made: as Cajetanus: for this was done in the creation, that beſide it, there need no new making. 4. But either it is a phraſe of the Hebrewes, who for more certainty and emphaſis of ſpeech, doe uſe to double the word: as verſ. 16. in eating thou ſhalt eat. verſ. 17. in dying thou ſhalt dye: that is, ſhalt freely eat, and ſurely die: ſo God created in making: that is, powerfully and wonderfully made: Mercer. or the words are inverted, and may be placed thus, in ſetting, making, before created, as Tremellius and R. Iſaac: he reſted from making the work which he had created. 5. Or if we make any difference, the creation was in the beginning of heaven and earth, as the matter and ſubſtance, the making was of the forming of the creatures on the ſix dayes out of that ſubſtance before by God created and prepared. Muſcul. 6. But moſt ridiculous and blaſphemous is that fable of ſome Hebrewes, that this worke which God created to make, and made not, were the Faunes and Satyres, which God made in the evening upon the ſixt day, and being ſhort of time, could not finiſh them. ex Muſcul.

Of the Faunes and Satyres.

Quest. IIII. The Sabbath inſtituted of God, after the creation.

Verſ. 4. God bleſſed the ſeventh day, and ſanctified it.] Here wee have the inſtitution of the Sabbath, which afterward was revived by the promulgation of the morall law. We refuſe therfore the erronious opinion of Tolletus and Pererius, two Popiſh writers, who do think that this ſanctifying of the Sabbath, is here mentioned by way of anticipation, being not inſtituted till the time of Moſes: for every day to man in the ſtate of innocency ſhould have beene a Sabbath, neither was there any poſitive precept given to Adam in Paradiſe, but only that of not eating the forbidden fruit. Perer. in Geneſ. lib. 1. p. 223. But in this affirming they are groſly deceived. 1. Man had now tranſgreſſed, before the Sabbath was inſtituted, as afterward ſhall be proved, and therefore they doe out of time urge the ſtate of mans innocency. 2. If man had continued in that ſtate, ſeeing he was appointed to keepe the garden, and not to live idly, no nor in Paradiſe, it is moſt like, that even then he ſhould have kept the Sabbath, as a reſt & intermiſſion even from ſuch labour, as became that place, and as a ſymbole unto him of a further perfection to bee attained unto. 3. That the Sabbath was inſtituted now, the creation finiſhed, it may appeare by the fourth commandement, Exod. 20. 11. where this reaſon of the law is given: For in ſix dayes the Lord made heaven and earth, &c. 4. It is alſo evident, that the Sabbath was kept by godly tradition, before the morall law was given, as Exod. 16. 23. To morrow is the reſt of the holy Sabbath to the Lord. 5. Thus the fathers ground the inſtitution of the Sabbath upon Gods example in this place: as Hierome, trad. in 2. Gen. Auguſtine, Pſal. 80. and Origen thus anſwereth. Celſus, lib. 6. objecting, if God were weary, that he needed to reſt. God reſted (ſaith he) ut nos ab operibus quieſcentes, &c. that we reſting from our works ſhould celebrate that day.

Pererius deceived.

Quest.

Quest. V. Of the generations of the heaven and earth, how to be underſtood.

Verſ. 4. These are the generations, &c. 1. This word, generations, is not here to be taken actively, as ſome of the Hebrewes, for thoſe things, which the heaven and earth brought forth of themſelves, but paſſively for the beginning and originall of the heavens and earth. 2. The Maſorites note that this word toldoth, which ſignifieth generations, is twice only found fully written, with vau in the beginning, in this place after the world was finiſhed, and in the generation of Phares in the end of Ruth: and they yeeld this reaſon thereof, becauſe this generation in the perfection of the world was complete, and that other whereof Meſſiah ſhould come, but all other generations are imperfect, and therefore they are defective in letters: but theſe obſervations are curious: ex Mercer. Hebrewes curious obſervations.

Quest. VI. Of the name of God Iehovah.

Verſ. 4. In the day that the Lord God. 1. This is the firſt place of Scripture where the Lord is called by his name Iehovah. 2. The reaſon whereof the Hebrewes make to be this: that as Elohim is a name of power and juſtice, given unto God in the creation: ſo now Iehovah a name of mercy, is attributed unto God, the whole worke being finiſhed, becauſe therein his mercy appeared: or rather now after God had made his worke full and complete, he is alſo ſet forth in his full and complete titles. Iun. 3. The Hebrewes very ſuperſtitiouſly forbeare the reading or naming of this word Iehovah, and uſe in ſtead thereof Adonai: which word we confeſſe is ſoberly to bee uſed, and that it conveniently cannot bee pronounced, becauſe it borroweth all the prickes from Adonai: and wee condemne alſo the heathens profanation of this name, who derive from them the oblique caſes of Iupiter, Iovis, Iovi. 4. This name Iehovah, ſome would have to expreſſe the Trinity, becauſe it conſiſteth of three kinds of letters, ſome by He, double underſtand the two natures of Chriſt, but this is too curious. It is derived of haiah, which ſignifieth Gods being and eſſence: and therefore hee is called Iehovah, as by whom man and all things elſe have their being. ex Mercer.

Quest. VII. The world made in ſix dayes, and not all at once.

Verſ. 4. In the day that the Lord made the earth and the heavens] From this place Auguſtine would gather that all the world was made in one day, and that Moſes doth divide the creation into ſix dayes worke, that it might be the better underſtood of the ſimpler ſort. l. 4. de geneſ. ad lit. c. 21. the ſame was the opinion of Philo Iudæus, Procopius, and Cajetanus, a Popiſh writer.

But this opinion cannot ſtand. 1. It is contrary to the Scripture, Exod 21. 11. For in ſix dayes God made heaven and earth. And Moſes writing the ſtory of the creation, muſt be taken plainly as he writeth. For if the world was made at once, how can it be true, that it was made in ſix dayes? 2 Auguſtine other-where holdeth the contrary, that the world was not made in one day, but in order, and he giveth this reaſon, becauſe if the creatures had beene made together, non haberent ſenſum, infirmitatis, &c. they ſhould not have the like ſenſe of their infirmity, as now they have, one ſeeing another made before them. quæſt. 106. ex veteſtam. Ambroſe giveth the like reaſon: ne increata crederentur, the creatures were not made at once, leſt they might be thought not to have beene made. lib. 1. Hexem. c. 6. 3. Whereas Moſes here ſaith, in the day: we will not anſwer with Gregory, that it is ſo ſaid, becauſe the matter or ſubſtance of the creatures was created at once in the beginning, Gen. 1. 1. though they received their forme and perfection afterward. lib. 32. moral. c. 10. this alſo is Iunius opinion in his laſt edition: for as yet the day was not created, nor the light, when the heaven and earth were made in the beginning: and Moſes here directly ſpeaketh of the plants and herbs, that were not made before the third day. I allow rather Tremellius judgement in the firſt edition, who tranſlateth, for in the day, beeum: in the time: a part being taken for the whole: as afterward, verſ. 17. in the day, thou eateſt thereof: (that is, in the time, whenſoever thou ſhalt eat thereof,) thou ſhalt dye the death: ſo alſo Mercerus.

Quest. VIII. Of the miſt that went up from the earth.

Verſ. 6. But a myſt went up] becauſe the Latine text readeth a fountaine, Auguſtine being unskilfull of the originall, much buſieth himſelfe about this matter, ſometime thinking that one fountaine is here taken for many, whereby the earth is overflowne: other while that ſome great river, as Nylus, might water the earth. lib. 5. de geneſ. ad lit. c. 9. Others taking that to be impoſſible, doe only underſtand Paradiſe to have beene watered with this fountaine, as Albinus, contrary to the text, which ſaith, it watered all the earth: yea, to make this matter more doubtfull, the interlineary gloſſe ſaith, that there fell no raine before the floud, but that all the earth was watered with the fountaines and ſprings of the earth. Wherefore to cleare theſe doubts, we are to reſort to the originall word, gnedh, which ſignifieth a vapour, or a myſt: and let it here be noted, that Pererius a Jeſuit writing upon Geneſis in this place, forſaketh the vulgar latine text, and cleaveth to the Originall. The latine vulgar text refuſed of the Papiſts.

It being then agreed, that wee are to read, not a fountaine, as Hieromes tranſlation hath, and the Septuagint, but a myſt or vapour, yet there remaineth another doubt: for ſome read affirmatively, but a vapour aſcended, as all the interpreters, but Tremellius, who underſtandeth it negatively, joyning it thus with the former verſe, there was not a man to till the ground, or any vapour had aſcended, &c. and ſo he would have the negative (ain, not) uſed before, to be ſupplied here. This I take to be the beſt reading, both for that it is moſt agreeable to the text, which ſheweth that God created the plants without any naturall helpe, either of raine or myſts, or artificiall of mans labour: that neither raine had yet deſcended, nor vapours aſcended. As alſo becauſe the manner of Scripture phraſe will beare it: as Exod. 20. 4. Thou ſhalt not make to thee any graven image, or any similitude, &c. where throughout the whole verse, the negative particle, lò, not, must be supplyed, which is but once in the beginning of the verse expressed.

This interpretation we preferre before either that of the Hebrewes: 1. who referre this verse to that which followeth, and joyne it not with that, which goeth before, but make this sense: that as yet there were no plants or herbs that appeared above the earth, but lay yet hid, till God sent raine, whereby the earth was prepared for the creation of man, and the plants watered: so R. Sel. But this is a vaine conceit: for upon the third day trees were made, which appeared above the earth: and the earth having beene so lately covered with the waters, was yet moist enough. 2. Either that of Eugubinus, who saith it rained the second day, and then the plants were brought forth the third: for upon the second day the waters were gathered together from covering the earth, so that no raine was then needfull. 3. Mercerus distinguisheth the times: the 5. verse hee understandeth of the first growing of the plants in the creation, which was done without raine or dew: but the 6. verse hee referreth to that ordinary course, which God appointed afterward, by dewes and raines to refresh the earth. 4. Musculus will have the 6. verse, of the ascending of vapours, to be understood of the very time of creation: that God used those helps of nature, but this were to tye God unto meanes: wherefore I take it with Iunius to be an explanation of the former verse: that it had neither yet rained, nor any mist had ascended, when God onely by his word caused the plants to grow out of the earth: this is the exposition of R. Saadia, which Kimhi preferreth before all the rest.

Quest. IX. Whether Paradise were terrestriall.

Vers. 8. THe Lord planted a garden eastward in Eden, &c. Hierome readeth for eastward, à principio, from the beginning, whereas the word is Kedem, the East, translated by the Septuagint ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, so that Hieromes conceit that God made Paradise before the heaven and earth, tradit. in 2. gen. is grounded upon the false interpretation of this place: and how could Paradise which was upon the earth be planted, before the earth was founded? 2. Their conceit is removed, that imagine Paradise to bee no terrene or corporall place, but to be spiritually understood: as Philo, lib. de mund. opific. and Origen, whom Epiphanius confuteth by this reason, that where there are true rivers, as Euphrates, which is confessed of all to bee one of the rivers of Paradise, where were also very trees and plants, there Paradise must bee a terrestriall place. epist. ad Ioann. Hierosol. 3. Neither can the whole earth be taken for Paradise, as some have thought, because it is said here to bee planted in Eden, which was the name of a speciall country. Esech. 27. 23. Harah, Canneth, Eden, are joyned together.

Quest. X. Where Paradise was situate.

LIkewise for the situation of Paradise: 1. it was neither in a remote place beyond the Ocean, which opinion is attributed to Ephrem. 2. nor a place higher than all the earth, Damasc. lib. 2. de fid. orthodox. c. 14. 3. nor next unto heaven, as Rupertus, de Trinitat. c. 37. 4. nor reaching up to the Moone, as some other have imagined. 5. nor in the aire, though not so high as the Moone, as Alexander, Hales, and Tostatus. 6. nor under the Equinoctiall. Bonavent. in 2. senten. c. 17. for these rivers, Tigris, and Euphrates, which flowed out of Paradise, and the country Eden, where Paradise was, came not neare the Equinoctiall: and they are knowne to be in Asia, not in any remote and unknowne countrey, in earth, not in the aire, or next to the Moone. All these are ridiculous & childish fancies, and need no long confutation.

Quest. XI. Of the tree of life.

Vers. 9. THe tree of life, &c. 1. This was a visible tree, planted in the midst of Paradise, in a visible place, not spiritually or allegorically to be understood, as Origen thinketh. 2. neither is it called the tree of life, because it was able to give immortality, and to preserve from death for ever, as Tostatus, or onely because it was able to preserve man from death, till such time as hee should bee translated to immortality, as Scotus in 2. lib. sent. dist. 19. qu. 1. and Thomas, with others. 4. Neither need it bee disputed, whether the tree of life had this power to preserve from death, by a supernaturall gift, as Bonaventure: or by a naturall faculty, as Hugo, Thomas, Pererius upon this place. 5. For it is evident that this tree had no power to give immortality at all, by the taste of the fruit thereof: 1. because that no corruptible food can make the body incorruptible: but the fruit of this tree could not nourish nature without corruption and alteration, and without nourishment it could not give life to the body. 2. Againe, man had by his creation power given him to dye, if he had not sinned wherfore immortality was the gift of his creation, not effect of the eating of the tree. 3. And if it could have give immortality, it must have had a power to preserve from sin: for by sinning, man became mortall: so that if it could not defend him from sin, it was no more the tree of life in regard of the effect, than any other tree of the garden: for if he had not sinned, he should not have dyed, what fruit soever he had eaten of, that only tree of knowledge of good and evill excepted.

The tree of life did not give immortality.

6. Then our opinion is this, that it was called the tree of life, not so much for the operation (though we confesse it might give strength and vertue also to the body: Mercer.) but chiefly for the signification, because it was both a signe of life received from God, and a symbole of Christ, who is our true life: and herein we approve rather the opinion of Augustine, Eugubinus in Cosmopeia, who thinketh it was called the tree of life, not effective, but significative, not effectually, but significatively; as a signe of true immortality, which he should receive of God, if he continue in obedience: First, it is the tree of life, as the other was of knowledge of good and evill, which was not so called, because it gave knowledge, but was a seale unto them of their miserable knowledge, which they should get by experience in their transgression, Magister. lib.

Tree of life not effectively so called, but significatively.

lib. 3. distinct. 17. therefore the tree of life must be so called, because it was a seale and pledge of life: secondly, thus the Scripture significatively and simbolically expoundeth the tree of life: Prov. 5. 18. Wisdome (which is Christ) is a tree of life. Revel. 2. 7. To him that overcommeth will I give to eat of the tree of life: see more of this, Synops. 17. cent. err. 5.

Quest. XII. Of the tree of knowledge of good and evill.

vers. 9. The tree of knowledge of good and evill. First we affirme, that this was a visible materiall tree, not spiritually to bee interpreted, as some have thought, because Eva was tempted with a visible object, it was pleasant to the eyes, Gen. 3. 6. Secondly, we hold it a curious matter, to search what kind of tree it was. 1. whether a vine tree, as some thinke, because of the institution of the Sacrament, where wine is used: which is a signe of Christs bloud, not a remembrance of mans transgression. 2. or a fig-tree, as Theodoret. qu. 28. in Gen. because they made them aprons of fig-tree-leaves: whereas they had cause rather to abhorre that tree of all other, and therefore not touse the leaves. 3. or whether any tree rather than a fig-tree, as Tostatus, or an apple tree, because it is said, Cant. 8. 6. I raised thee under an apple tree, &c. which words have an allegoricall sense. None of these certainly bee affirmed, the Scripture having not expressed it. What kind of tree it was.

Thirdly, it was called the tree of knowledge of good and evill: 1. Neither because it endued them with reason and understanding, as some of the Hebrewes: and Onkelos translateth, of whose fruit they which eat shall know good and evill: for being created according to Gods image, they are made reasonable soules. 2. Neither because it gave them indeed, sharpnesse of wit, as Iosephus, 1. lib. antiquitat. for God then would not have forbidden man the use of it, being for his good. 3. neither, as Ramban, because before only by a naturall instinct, as other creatures, they were led: for then, as R. Moses well noteth, they should have gained and not lost, by eating of the tree of the knowledge of good and evill. 4. neither was it so called, because of the lying and enticing words of Satan, that promised they should be as Gods, knowing good and evill: as Tostatus, Pererius upon this place: for it was thus called before the tentation, Gen. 2. 9. 17. and God forbiddeth them to eat of it under that name: so that it is most like to have beene so called by God himselfe. 5. We thinke rather it was so called of the event, because by transgression of Gods commandement, in eating of the forbidden fruit, they had an experimentall knowledge, (a speculative knowledge of good and evill, they had before, as the rich man hath of poverty) what good they had lost, and what evill they were fallen into: and this is the sentence of most of the fathers. Neither doth that place hinder this interpretation, Gen. 3. 22. because the Lord saith, man is become as one of us to know good and evill: that seeing man in knowledge was now become like unto God, (and this experimentall knowledge is not in God) therefore it cannot be so taken: for here the Lord speaketh (ironically) not that man was now become like indeed in knowledge to God, (for it is not to be thought, that mans knowledge was increased by his sinne, and if it were so, Sathan had not lied, in promising them to bee like unto God) but the Lord derideth mans folly, that was brought into such a foolish conceit to thinke by breaking the commandement, to be made like to God. 6. This tree of knowledge of good and evill may bee also mystically understood of that perfect and absolute knowledge, which God hath reserved to himselfe: the which they are forbidden to search after, but to content themselves with that gift and portion of knowledge, which God had already abundantly given unto them. Mercer. in Gen. 2. v. 16. Why it was so called.

Quest. XIII. Of the river of Paradise.

Vers. 10. Out of Eden went a river, &c. and from thence it was divided into foure heads. 1. These foure heads had not their beginning in Paradise, as some have thought: but the river out of the which these foure heads or branches issued forth, came out of Eden, and is found to have his head or fountaine in the mountaines of Armenia the great: there this river Euphrates, is called Pac Perath, the flowing out of Euphrates. Ian. 2. Neither was this river divided into foure heads in Eden before it came to Paradise, which seemeth to be the opinion of Eugubinus: for from thence, that is, when it had passed thorow the garden, it parted into foure streames. 3. Neither doe I thinke that the two great rivers Tigris and Euphrates, doe first run together thorow Paradise, and then divide themselves into foure brookes, as Mercerus thinketh: for this is but one river, that came out of Eden to water the garden: and beside the rivers Tigris and Euphrates touch not together, till they come to the Towne Massica, not farre from Babylon, and then they part againe, and one streame runneth along by Seleucia, another by Babylon, Calvin. ex Plin. lib. 6. c. 26. but Paradise is supposed to have beene situate more east-ward than Babylon. 4. Neither can I subscribe to their sentence, that make Physon and Gihon, to bee the two doores or passages, whereby the river Tigris entreth into the Sea: for they are too remote from Paradise, and therefore serve not fitly for the description of the river of Paradise. 5. Nor yet can we properly make these foure heads, to be the two rivers Euphrates and Tigris, before they enter into Paradise, and the two streames, whereinto they are parted againe beneath Paradise: which is the opinion of Calvin, and Iunius edition 1. which else-where I have approved as most probable. But these reasons make against it. 1. wee must have but one river that commeth out of Eden into Paradise, not two. 2. These two rivers joyning together and parting againe, are still not foure but two streames. 3. The text saith, that from thence, that is, as the river runneth out of Paradise, it is divided into foure heads: wee must then seeke for these foure heads, as the comming forth, not at the entring. 6. Tostatus thinketh, that this river made a great lake, after it passed Paradise, and from thence branched forth into foure streames: but then not the river, but the lake should be divided. 7. Barcephas hath this conceit, that this river ran under the Ocean, and so breake forth in divers places of the earth, earth, lib. de Paradiſ. But Moſes deſcription is againſt him: who maketh this river immediatly to divide it ſelfe from Paradiſe, and ſheweth what countries every one of them compaſſeth. 8. Wherefore I thinke it more probable, that this river which runneth through Paradiſe, is the river Euphrates, which afterward ſtreameth into foure rivers, as they are here deſcribed by Moſes. Of this opinion is Ioſephus, who beſt knew the ſituation of thoſe countries, as he is cited by Ambroſe, Ioſephus hiſtoriographus paradiſum, &c. dicit rigari flumine, qui dividitur in 4. fluvios: Ioſephus the hiſtoriographer ſaith, that Paradiſe is watered with a floud, that divideth it ſelfe into foure rivers. epiſt. 42. Firſt then it is certaine, that Euphrates that great river, did ſend forth divers chanels and ſtreames out of it, more than one or two, as Iunius proveth out of Ptolomy, lib. 5. Geogr. c. 23. Calvin out of Arrianus, lib. 7. Secondly, it is evident, that there were ſuch rivers ſo called, as Moſes here deſcribeth them. For Pliny maketh mention of a river called Phaſitigris, lib. 6. c. 27. as compounded of Phaſis (which ſeemeth to be derived of phiſhon) and Tigris: and a part of Tigris was called Diglito, Plin. lib. 6. c. 27. for hidekel, which was this Hiddekel. Thirdly, Iunius very learnedly ſheweth which were theſe foure ſtreames iſſuing out of Euphrates: Piſhon is that part which runneth with Tigris about Armenia, and was corruptly called Phaſitigris: the ſame alſo is Nahar malcha, Ptolomy calleth it Baſileon, the Kings riuer: Gihon is the riuer Naharſates, that emptied it ſelfe into the Caldean fens: Hiddekel, is that branch, which above Seleucia falleth into Tigris, which was corruptly called Diglito. Perath is the river Euphrates, that ran along by Babylon, and at the firſt had his proper paſſage into the Perſian gulph, but now falleth in with Tigris.

But whether theſe are thoſe foure heads or ſtreames of Euphrates, it may be doubted: becauſe the riuer Nahar malcha, the Kings riuer, was thought firſt to be cut out by Gabaris the governor of that province, to ſtay the ſwiftnes of Euphrates, as it falled vpon Babylon: which river was afterward ſcoured & ditched by Traianus and Severus. It is certaine then, if the current of this river were not naturall, but made by the induſtry of man, and that long after Moſes time, that it can be none of theſe foure heads here deſcribed; unleſſe we ſay with Calvin, that mans induſtry only here helped nature, and that Gabaris cauſed the naturall current, landed vp, to be opened and enlarged. Wherefore I hold it the beſt reſolution with Mercerus, to ſay, that ſeeing not only the names, but the channels and currents of rivers and ſtreames may be altered & changed in time, that it can hardly now be defined, which are theſe foure ſtreames of Euphrates: it ſufficeth us to know, that ſometime this river was ſo divided by branches, where the ſituation of Paradiſe was: the particular place whereof is not now knowne.

Quest. XIV. Of the river Piſhon.

Verſ. 11. The name of one is Piſhon.] Moſt of the ancient writers, as Hieronme, Ambroſe, Epiphanius, with others, did take this Piſhon for the river Ganges in India, which they underſtand here by Havilah, from whence great ſtore of gold is brought. But this cannot be ſo: 1. Ganges hath his originall, as Strabo writeth, from the mountaine Caucaſus, lib. 15. and is found to bee 70. degrees, that is, 4030. miles diſtant from Tigris and Euphrates, and therefore theſe rivers can have no concurrence together, as theſe are deſcribed by Moſes to run through Paradiſe. 2. Havilah is not here taken for India, but for a countrey much nearer: as Gen. 25. 18. Iſmael is ſaid to dwell from Havilah to Sur, that is toward Ægypt: and Saul is ſaid to have ſmote Amelech from Havilah, as thou commeſt to Sur. 1 Sam. 15. 7. but neither Iſmael dwelt in India, nor yet Saul purſued the Amalekites ſo farre. 3. And though India be fertile of gold, from whence it is ſuppoſed Salomon had ſuch ſtore, yet the neerer countries yeelded great plenty of gold unto David, Moab, Ammon, Amalech, 1 Chron. 17. 11. 4. Wherefore it is moſt like, that this river Piſhon was a branch of the river Tigris, which alſo was called in a certaine place, Phaſis, as witneſſeth Curtius, lib. 5. and Paſigris, a word compounded of Phaſis and Tigris, as Pliny ſaith, lib. 6. c. 27.

It cannot be the river Ganges.

Quest. XI. Of Bdellium.

Bdellium. 1. It is neither a precious ſtone, as the Hebrewes thinke, for it is like Moſes would have ſo called it, becauſe he nameth the Onix ſtone in the ſame place with it. 2. Neither was it a kind of Margarite or pearle, as Eugubinus and Oleaſter ſuppoſe. 3. but a kind of tree, which Pliny deſcribeth to be of a blacke colour, leafed like an oake, of the bigneſſe of an olive tree, bearing fruit like a wild fig-tree, growing in Bactriana, lib. 12. c. 9. Dioſcorides calleth it bdolchon, comming very neere the hebrew word bedoloch, lib. 1. 4. Neither doth that place make any thing againſt this ſenſe, Numb. 11. 7. where Manna, which was white, is ſaid to be of the colour of bdellium: by the which, ſome gather, bdellium to be pearle rather for the whitneſſe, than the tree called bdellium, which is blacke. But this doubt is eaſily removed, for though the tree was black, yet did it beare a bright gumme like vnto wax, ſomewhat whitiſh. Plin. lib. 12. 9. ſo then Manna is likened for colour not to the wood, but the gumme of the tree bdellium.

Quest. XV. Of the river Gihon.

Verſ. 13. The name of the ſecond is Gihon.] This cannot be Nilus a river of Ægypt, as many have ſuppoſed: for this river had not affinity with Tigris and Euphrates, neither did ever meet with them, being ſo farre aſunder: for Tigris and Euphrates had their beginning in the mountaines of Armenia, Nilus from the mountaines in Æthiopia: and they run into the Perſian Sea, and Nilus into the Mediterranean. Againe, Nilus is named to be a river of Ægypt, not of Æthiopia. 2. Where that place is objected, Ieremi. 2. 18. what haſt thou to doe in Ægypt, to drinke the waters of Geon, as the Septuagint read? the hebrew hath not Geon, but Sichor, which ſignifieth blacke or troubled, as Hieronme tranſlateth, which ſome take for Nilus, which was called Melas, blacke: ſome for another river that divided the land of promiſe from Egypt, falling into the lake Sirbon. Ioſu. 13. 3. 3. Æthiopia here is not that great countrey beyond Ægypt, but another countrey neere unto Paleſtina, called Arabia deſerta, in hebrew Cuſh, which is a common name both to that large kingdome called Æthiopia, and to Arabia. And this may appeare, Gen. 10. 7. where the ſonnes of Cuſh are rehearſed, Seba, Chavila, Subteca, who all inhabited about Arabia: likewiſe Zipporah, which was a Madianitiſh woman, Exod. 2. 16. is Chuſitis, an Æthiopian, or Cuſhite, Numb. 12. 1. ſo that the Madianites about Arabia were alſo called Æthiopians or Cuſhites. 4. Neither is this Gihon, that river, that ran by Jeruſalem, 1 King. 1. 33. though it beare the ſame name: for the head of that river was not farre from Hieruſalem, whoſe ſprings Hezekiah ſtopped, and turned them another way. 5. Wherefore this Gihon compaſſing the land of Cuſh, that is, Arabia deſerta, was a part or branch of the river Euphrates, called Naharſares, with Ptolomy, Buarſarù, Iun.

Quest. XVI. Of the rivers Hidekel and Perath.

TO other two rivers, Chidekel and Perath, are confeſſed of all to bee the river Tigris and Euphrates: the firſt is ſo called of his ſwiftneſſe, for Tigris in the Median language ſignifieth a ſhaft: the other retaineth the hebrew name: for whereas Moſes here ſaith, hu Perath, this is Perath, both theſe joyned together, make Huphrates, or Euphrates: ſo called, becauſe by the inundation thereof, as Nilus, it maketh the land fruitfull, of the root phara, which ſignifieth to fructifie. Theſe two rivers taking beginning, from divers parts of the Mountaine Taurus, doe run aſunder a great diſtance, Tigris by Ninive, Euphrates by Babylon, and then ioyning together, and parting againe, doe compaſſe Meſopotamia, ſo called, becauſe it is betweene the rivers. Theſe then are the foure heads or ſtreames of Paradiſe, as hath beene ſhewed.

Quest. XVII. Whereof Adams was made, and of the excellent conſtitution of his body.

Verſ. 7. THe Lord God made man of the duſt of the earth. First, it is evident that God only made man, not the Angels, they were not ſo much as preparers, or temperers of the matter, whereof man was made, as ſome have thought: for God himſelfe ſaid, Gen. 1. 26. Let vs make man. 2. Man was made of the duſt, as the thinner and purer part of the earth, not of a ſlimy matter mixed of earth and water, as ſome thinke: and this is evident by this reaſon: Man was made of that element to the which he is laſt reſolved, but his body falleth at the laſt to duſt. Gen. 3. 19. Duſt thou art, and to duſt thou ſhalt returne. Wee deny not, but that out of duſt God might prepare a ſecond matter compounded of the elements, and thereof frame mans body, but it is curioſity to inquire after that, which is not in Scripture expreſſed, or out of the ſame by ſome collection may bee gathered. 3. It is alſo evident, that God made mans body of a more excellent conſtitution, than any creature beſide, and of a fit temper to be a convenient inſtrument for his ſoule. 1. Mans body hath the preheminence in reſpect of his upright ſtature, whereas other creatures looke downewards, whereby he ſhould be admoniſhed to looke upward toward his Creator, and to behold the heavens, as alſo thereby is ſignified the lofty dominion and command, which is given unto man over other creatures. 2. The temperature of mans body is moſt excellent, whereas other creatures, by reaſon of their groſſe and cold humours doe grow over, beaſts with haire, fowles with feathers, fiſhes with ſcales. 3. The faſhion of mans body, and the ready uſe of his members, ſurpaſſeth all other creatures: as God hath given unto man his hands, whereby he worketh, and perfecteth the invention of many profitable arts. 4. Though other creatures in the quickneſſe of ſome ſenſes exceed man, as the vulture in ſeeing, the dog in ſmelling, the moule in hearing, the ſpider in feeling: and in ſtrength, many beaſts goe beyond man: yet herein is mans excellency, that he both better diſcerneth and judgeth of the outward ſenſe, and is endued with reaſon, wherby he ſubdueth all other creatures to his ſervice: and ſo maketh uſe unto himſelfe of their ſtrength, ſenſe, or what other naturall faculty they have. Laſtly, it was fit that mans body ſhould bee made of an earthly, not of an æthereall or celeſtiall matter, becauſe he was to live in the earth: and for that ſuch a body was fitteſt to bee capable of ſenſe, by the which the ſoule being ſent into the body as a naked table, might gather experience, and by experience knowledge. Perer.

The frame of mans body more excellent than of any other creature.

Quest. XVIII. In what ſtate or age Adam was created.

1. FVrther, that Adam was created in a perfect age, it is without queſtion, becauſe his body was in the firſt inſtant apt to generation: for the Lord ſaid unto them, increaſe and multiply: and immediately after his tranſgreſſion Cain was begotten, Geneſ. 4 1, 2. But in what age, and ſtature of body Adam was created, it is not ſo certaine: ſome think, that he was made about the yeares of Chriſts age, between 30. and 40. but I rather approve their collection, that thinke his body was in the creation, of the ſame growth and perfection, wherein thoſe long lived Patriarks were fit for generation, which was about 65. yeares, for at that age Kenan & Henoch begat children, and none under thoſe yeares, Geneſ. 5. 12. whereupon it followeth, that if Adams bodie did ſhew as it were 50 or 60 yeares in his creation, he might well bee thought to bee longeſt liver of all the Patriarks: for he lived after his creation, 930 yeares, to the which adde 50 yeares, all which time his bodie if it had beene borne would haue beene growing to that ſtate, wherein he was created: and ſo he ſhall exceed the age of Methuſelah, who lived but 969 yeares. 3. But that is a ridiculous conceit of Ioannes Lucidus, lib. 1. de emendat. tempor. c. 4. that Adam was the biggeſt Giant that ever was: and Moſes Barcepha reporteth the like fanſie of ſome, that iudged Adam to be of that bigge ſtature, that he could wade ouer the Ocean. This fanſie is grounded vpon the Latin text, Ioſu. 14. 15. the name of Heborn was before Ciriatharbe, or citie of Arbah: Adam the greateſt among the Anakims is there placed: and thoſe Anakims, ſay they, were Giants. Contra. But the text in the Hebrew is thus: he was a great man among the

Adam how the longeſt liver of all the Patriarks.

Adam not the greateſt man in ſtature of body.

the Anakims: meaning Arba before mentioned the word indeede is Adam, which is here no proper name, but a common name for a man, as it is taken in the Scripture, he, a great Adam, or man among the Anakims: if Adam should be taken properly, then must they make the Giant Arba and Adam all one, which is impossible, the one living before the other after the floud.

QVEST. XIX. Whether Adams soule was created after his bodie.

Vers.7. AND breathed in his face the breath of life, and the man was a living soule. 1. We neither thinke, that Adams soule was created before his bodie, as Plato among the heathen, and Origen among the Christians thought, that all soules were made together in the beginning, and after sent into the bodie. 2. Neither that Adams bodie and soule were created in the same instant together, as Damascen, lib. 2. de fide. c. 12. & Thomas Aquinas with others are of opinion. 3. But wee rather judge with Chrysostome, hom. 12. that Adams bodie was first framed out of the dust, and then God breathed into it life: and this opinion is most agreeable to the text: that God first made man out of the dust and then breathed the breath of life, and so he became a living soule: so that he was not a living soule in the first instant of his creation, but after God had breathed into him the breath of life: such also is the generation of Adams posteritie, the bodie is first framed in the wombe, and then the soule is infused: as David describeth the manner of his conception, Psalm. 138. 15. 16. I was made in a secret place, and fashioned beneath in the earth, thine eyes did see me, when I was yet without forme: where David may seeme to allude to Adams creation, who properly was framed beneath in the earth, and of whom also it may truly bee said, that God saw him, when hee was yet without forme.

QVEST. XX. What is meant by breathing the breath of life.

Vers.7. THE Lord had formed man, &c. 1. The word is jatsar, which signifieth to fashion or to give shape: & so the Lord here doth perfect the feature of man. 2. He is made not of the dust as some read, but dust of the earth: to shew that man is nothing else but dust: as the Lord afterward said unto him, Dust thou art: the Lord compounded the bodie of man both of the dust, & red clay of the earth called adamah whereof Adam had his name. 3. But where God is said to breath into man the breath of life, we neither thereby understand with Ramban, that God inspired into Adam his reasonable soule, as part of his owne substance: neither yet doe we thinke that God used any materiall blast: nor yet isit only a metaphoricall speech, uttered according to our capacitie, as Mercer. neither doe we understand here only the vitall and sensitive facultie to be given to man, with Musculus: for the words following, he was made a living soule, which S. Paul setteth against a quickning spirit, 1. Cor. 15. 45. doe shew more, than life and sense: therefore I thinke that properly, the breathing of the breath of life, is to be referred to the vitall power, yet so, that the soule of which that facultie dependeth, must be understood together to have beene infused and inspired by the spirit of God, which is here signified by the breathing of God: so that mans creation is set forth in three degrees: the forming of his bodie, the giving of it life, the endewing of him with a reasonable soule created after Gods image. Gen. 2. 26.

QVEST. XXI. Whether Adam were created in Paradise.

Vers.15. THEN the Lord tooke the man and put him into the garden of Eden, that he might dresse it, and keepe it. Wee reject their conceit that imagine that Adam was created out of Paradise, as also Eva: as Iosephus. lib. 1. antiquit. c. 1. and Rupert. lib. 2. de Trinitat. c. 22. because it is said, the Lord tooke the man, &c. Contra. 1. God is said to take him, not as removing him out of another place but shewing him what he should doe, namely, to keepe the garden. 2. The word javach signifieth to leave, as Ind. 3. 1. These are the nations which God left: God then left Adam in Paradise, where he had made him: as before is expressed, vers. 8. 3. It is evident that Eva was made out of Adams side in Paradise, by the order of Moses narration: it is therefore most like, that Adam also was made there. 4. Where it is objected, Gen. 3. 23. that God sent Adam out of Eden to till the earth, whence he was taken: as though he were taken from the earth out of Paradise: there by earth, is not understood any speciall kind of earth, but generally that element out of the which he was created: for as well that ground within, where Paradise was planted, as that without, was earth.

QVEST. XXII. Wherefore Adam was placed in Paradise.

TO dresse and keepe the garden. 1. Though man should not have toyled or wearied himselfe with any labour in Paradise, for that was laid upon him as a punishment afterward, to eat his bread in the sweat of his browes, Gen. 3. 19. yet it is evident that hee should have exercised himselfe in some honest labour, even in Paradise. 2. As his charge was both to dresse the garden in planting and nourishing of trees: in which kinde of husbandrie many even now doe take a delight, and hold it rather to bee a recreation, than any wearinesse unto them: as also to keepe it from the spoile of the beasts. 3. This labour was enjoyned Adam, 1. that beeing thus occupied in continuall beholding of the goodly plants in Paradise, he might thereby bee stirred vp to acknowledge the goodnesse and bounty of the Creator. 2. as also thereby the Lord had respect to our instruction, that if Adam was not to live idely in Paradise, much lesse should we spend our daies now in doing of nothing.

QVEST.

Quest. XXIII. Whether the precept given to Adam were only negative.

Verſ. 16. AND the Lord commanded him ſaying, Thou ſhalt eat freely of every tree of the garden, &c. From theſe words divers queſtions are moved. Firſt, wee doe not thinke with Thomas Aquinas, par. 1. qu. 97. art. 3. that this precept was as well affirmative in commanding Adam to eat of all other trees, as negative in forbidding him to eat onely of one tree. 1. This precept to eat of every tree ſhould have beene burdenous to Adam, and a reſtraint to his liberty, if hee ſhould have beene tyed to eat of all, and not where him liked, 2. It had beene ſuperfluous, ſeeing his owne naturall appetite would have moved him to eat of the food appointed for him: for though Adam in the ſtate of innocency ſhould not have beene pinched with ſuch hunger and thirſt, as wee now are, yet a naturall appetite to his meat hee ſhould have had: for otherwiſe his food would not have beene pleaſant unto him. 3. Eva beſt ſheweth, what Gods precept was, Gen. 3. 2. We eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden, but of the fruit, which is in the middeſt of the garden, God hath ſaid ye ſhall not eat of it. Gods charge then was only negative, not to eat: the other to eat of the trees, was left unto their choice.

Quest. XXIIII. Whether the precept was given both to Adam and Eve.

SEcondly, though Auguſtine doe thinke, that this precept of not eating was given only to Adam, and by him to Eva, lib. 8. de geneſ. ad lit. c. 17. yet we hold it more probable, that God gave this charge unto them both together. 1. Eve confeſſeth, that God ſpake unto them both, and ſaid, Yee ſhall not eat of it. Gen. 3. 2. 2. The Lord ſaith unto both of them together, Gen. 1. 19. Behold, I have given unto you, every herbe, and every tree, &c. at which time alſo, it is like, that he gave them the other prohibition, of not eating of that one tree: for if God had made that exception before, he would not have given a generall permiſſion after, or if this generall grant had gone before, the exception comming ſhould ſeeme to abrogate the former grant. 3. The Septuagint ſeeme to bee of this minde, that this precept was given both to Adam and Eve, reading thus in the plurall number, In what day ye ſhall eat thereof, ye ſhall dye: and ſo doth Gregory read, lib. 35. moral. c. 10. 4. But though in the originall the precept be given in the name of Adam only, that is ſo, for that Adam was the more principall, and he had charge of the woman: and for that the greateſt danger was in his tranſgreſſion, which was the cauſe of the ruine of his poſterity: or as Mercerus well noteth, Adam was the common name both of the man and woman, Geneſ. 5. 2. and ſo is taken, verſ. 15. and likewiſe here.

Quest. XXV. Why the Lord gave this precept to Adam.

THirdly, if it be asked, why the Lord gave this precept to Adam, 1. we anſwer with Gregory, lib. moral. 35. c. 10. that for the better triall of Adams obedience, it was fit he ſhould bee prohibited to doe that, which of it ſelfe was not evill; that Adam in abſtaining from that which was good, might ſhew his humility to his Creator. 2. In that God gave Adam ſo eaſie a precept to keep, only to refraine to eat of one tree, having liberty to uſe all the reſt beſide, not like in hardneſſe and difficulty to the commandement given to Abraham, to ſacrifice his only ſonne: herein the tranſgreſſion and diſobedience of Adam appeared to be the greater, in tranſgreſſing a precept ſo eaſie to have beene obeyed. This Auguſtine, lib. 14. de civit. dei. c. 15. Thirdly, we anſwer with Tertullian, that this precept, though in ſhew but eaſie and light, yet containeth the very foundation of all precepts, and of the whole morall law: for therein was contained both his duty toward God, in obeying his will, and love toward themſelves, in eſcaping death, which was threatned, if they tranſgreſſed. Tertul. lib. con. Iud. So that in this precept Adam might have ſhewed both his love toward God in his obedience, faith in beleeving it ſhould ſo fall out unto him, if he diſobeyed, as God ſaid, hope in expecting a further reward, if he had kept the commandement. The Hebrewes here are ſomewhat curious, as R. Iſaach: that if they had taſted only of the fruit, and not eaten it, they had not tranſgreſſed: but the commandements of God doe concerne the very thought: R. Levi, by eating, underſtandeth the apprehenſion of things ſpirituall, which is here forbidden: but we take it rather litterally and hiſtorically, that God giveth them ſo eaſie a precept to try their love and obedience. Mercer.

Quest. XXVI. How a Law is not given to a righteous man.

BUt the Apoſtle ſaith: The law is not given to a righteous man, but unto the diſobedient, &c. 1 Tim. 1. 9. And Adam was now juſt and righteous, and therefore he needed not a law: for anſwer whereunto, I ſay; that the law in two reſpects is ſaid, not to be given to a juſt man: 1. in reſpect of the negative precepts, as to abſtaine from murther, theft, adultery: but in regard of the affirmative precepts, to retaine them in obedience and doing of good workes, ſo the juſt man had need of a law, and ſo had Adam. 2. A juſt man need not to feare the puniſhment of the law: as S. Paul in another place ſaith of the Magiſtrate, which is the ſpeaking or living law: he is not to be feared for good workes, but for evill, Rom. 13. 4. And in this reſpect ſo long as Adam remained in his integrity and juſtice, the puniſhment in the law concerned him not. 3. And a righteous man rather of a voluntary diſpoſition, than by compulſion of law yeeldeth his obedience.

Quest. XXVII. Why God gave a precept to Adam, fore-ſeeing before that he would tranſgreſſe it.

FOurthly, A queſtion will here bee moved, why the Lord gave this precept to Adam, which hee knew hee would not keepe: for anſwer whereunto, firſt wee ſay, that God gave him a precept, which was poſſible to be kept, and Adam had power to keep it, if he would: it was then not Gods fault, that gave him free will, but his owne, that abuſed that gift. Secondly, if it be replyed, why God did not give him grace and ſtay him from tranſgreſſion: I anſwer, that God could have given him ſuch grace, and to the Angels likewiſe, that they ſhould not have fallen: but it was fit that God ſhould leave the creatures to their free will, and not hinder the courſe of nature, which hee had made. Thirdly, though God foreſaw mans tranſgreſſion, yet that was no reaſon to withhold the precept: for then God ſhould neither have made the Angels, nor man, becauſe he ſaw, that ſome of both ſhould bee reprobates: and by the ſame reaſon God ſhould not have given his written word, becauſe many heretikes doe pervert it to their deſtruction. Fourthly, as God foreſaw mans tranſgreſſion, ſo he knew how to turne it to good, as in ſhewing mercy to ſinners, and in ſending Chriſt to reſtore what man had loſt: ſo that notwithſtanding Gods foreſight of Adams tranſgreſſion, he was not to forbeare to charge Adam with this commandement, in regard of the great good, which God alſo did foreſee ſhould enſue.

Quest. XXVIII. What kind of death was threatned to Adam.

Verſ. 17. IN the day that thou eateſt thereof thou ſhalt die the death. The firſt queſtion here moved is, what death God threatneth to Adam, whether the death only of the body, or ſoule, or of both. 1. We neither think that the ſpirituall death of the ſoule is here only ſignified, whereby the ſoule is ſeparated by ſinne from God, which was the opinion of Philo Iudeus, lib. 2. de allegor. Moſaicis: and of Encherius lib. 1. in Geneſ. for wee ſee that the Lord himſelfe threatned the death of the body to Adam, Geneſ. 3. 19. Duſt thou art, and to duſt thou ſhalt returne. 2. Neither is the death of the body here onely implyed, as ſome have thought, but the death of the ſoule by ſinne alſo, which bringeth forth the death of the body, as the Apoſtle ſheweth. Rom. 5. 13. Death went over all men, for as much as all men have ſinned. There was firſt ſinne in the ſoule, before there followed death in the body. 3. Neither doe we think, that everlaſting death is here excluded, as Peterius ſeemeth to inſinuate, lib. 4. in Geneſ. qu. 4. of this matter. For the Apoſtle ſaith: We were by nature the children of death, as well as others. Eph. 2. 5. by Adams tranſgreſſion we were the children of wrath, hee therefore much more, that made us ſo: and if Adam had not by ſinning made himſelfe guilty of eternall death, why was the promiſe of the Meſſiah preſently upon his fall made unto him? Gen. 3. 15. whoſe office is to redeeme us from ſinne and everlaſting damnation. 4. Wee therefore thinke with Auguſtine, that by death here is underſtood, whatſoever death either of the ſoule or body, temporall or eternall, lib. 1. de civit. dei. c. 12. for Auguſtine maketh foure kinds of death: the temporall death of the ſoule, when it is for a time ſeparated from God by ſin: the eternal death of the ſoule, when it is ſeparated from the body: the temporall death of the body, when it is ſeparated from the ſoule: the eternall death of the body in hell. So Adam firſt died in ſoule, by loſing his innocency, he died in body, returning to duſt, he was ſubject alſo to everlaſting death both of body and ſoule, but from that he was redeemed by Chriſt. 5. Beſide under the name of death, are comprehended all other miſeries, calamities, and ſorrowes, which are the forerunners of death: ſo that we may fitly compare death to the center, all other miſeries, as the circle, or circumference about the center: or as the Scripture reſembleth it, death is as the burning coale, other ſorrowes and miſeries are as the ſparkles that doe riſe from the coale, Iob 5. 7. Man is borne to travaile, as the ſparkes flye upward.

Adam by his tranſgreſſion, made ſubject to eternall death.

Foure kinds of death.

Quest. XXIX. When Adam began to die.

SEcondly it is inquired, when this ſentence began to take place, that in what day ſoever Adam did eat of the tree he ſhould dye the death. 1. Some thinke, that a day is not here to bee taken, according to mans account of dayes, but as it is before God, with whom a thouſand yeares are but as a day: and ſo Adam died within a thouſand yeares after: ſo Iuſtinus dialog. cum Triph. but this ſenſe ſeemeth to bee ſtrained. 2. Neither doe we refer theſe words [in what day ſoever] to the firſt clauſe only [thou ſhalt eat] and not to the ſecond, thou ſhalt dye the death: as though the meaning ſhould not bee, they ſhould dye the ſame day, wherein they did eat, but at any time after: for this ſeemeth alſo to be but a forced ſenſe. 3. But we rather allow Hieromes interpretation, that Adam began in the ſame day to dye, not actually, but becauſe then he became mortall and ſubject to death: lib. tradit. in Gen. ſo Symmachus readeth, thou ſhalt bee mortall. 4. And beſide that; then actually Adam entred into miſery and ſorrow, labour, hunger, thirſt, which are the forerunners of death. 5. Adde unto this alſo, that in the ſame day, death entred by ſinne into the ſoule of Adam, in the very ſame day of his tranſgreſſion.

Quest. XXX. Whether God made death.

THirdly, ſeeing that by Gods ſentence death ſeaſed upon Adam, the queſtion is, whether God made death, and whether this corporall death be a puniſhment of ſin. We anſwer. 1. that as death is a defect of nature, beſide the firſt intention of the Creator, brought in by ſinne into the world, that God is not the author of it, but it is ſo only the fruit and effect of ſinne. 2. But as death is a juſt puniſhment inflicted for ſinne, ſo it is of God: who though hee firſt made not death, yet now hee diſpoſeth of it, thereby ſhewing his juſtice upon mans tranſgreſſion: ſo that as Auguſtine ſaith, ſpeaking of the beginning of darkeneſſe: Deus non fecit tenebras, ſed ordinavit: God made not darkneſſe, but ordered them: ſo may it bee ſaid of death. 3. Eugubinus objecteth, that death is not properly a puniſhment of ſinne, becauſe it remaineth in the faithfull, and it is not taken away by Chriſt. in Coſmopeia. To which we anſwer. 1. That death alſo at the laſt ſhal be deſtroyed by Chriſt, 1 Cor. 15. 26. The laſt enemy that ſhal be deſtroied is death. 2. That although the death of the body remaine yet in the members of Chriſt, in them it is not now as a puniſhment, but as a conſequent of their corruptible nature, becauſe all fleſh is now as graſſe, Iſa. 40. 6. and death now unto them is not a curſe, but turned to a bleſſing in Chriſt, being both a ceſſation from labour, and an entrance into reſt, Rev. 14. 13. Bleſſed are they that dye in the Lord, they reſt from their labours, and their workes follow them.

Death of the body whether now a puniſhment.

QVEST. XXXI. Why it was not good for man to be alone.

Verſ. 18. IT is not good for man to be alone] 1. not, as R. Sel. leſt if man would have beene alone, hee might be thought to be chiefe Lord in earth, as God was in heaven: for if man had beene alone, who ſhould have ſo thought or ſpoken? 2. Neither was it not good in reſpect of God, who by his infinite power and wiſdome could otherwayes have multiplyed and increaſed man, but in reſpect of that order and courſe of generation which God appointed for other creatures. 3. Neither is this ſo ſaid, as though no man could live without a woman: as the Hebrewes have theſe ſayings, nothing is good but a woman: he that hath not a wife, is not a man, for God hath given unto ſome a ſpeciall gift, which may ſupply this want. 4. Neither is S. Paul contrary to Moſes, where he ſaith, it is not good to touch a woman: for he ſpeaketh in reſpect of thoſe preſent times of perſecution, wherein their wives might have beene a let unto them. Mercer. 5. But this is ſo ſaid, 1. in reſpect of mutuall ſociety and comfort: 2. in reſpect of the propagation of the world: 3. eſpecially for the generation and increaſe of the Church of God: 4. but moſt of all it was meet that woman ſhould bee joyned to man, becauſe of the promiſed ſeed of the woman, of whom came our Saviour Chriſt after the fleſh.

QVEST. XXXII. Wherein woman was a meet helpe for him.

Verſ. 18. LEt us make an helpe meet for him] The word cenegdo, ſignifieth, as one before him, or againſt him. But we neither allow the conceit of ſome Hebrewes, as R. Selamon, that the woman is ſaid to be againſt man, becauſe ſhe is contrary to him. 2. Nor yet doe wee like of Toſtatus conjecture, becauſe the male and female in reſpect of their naturall parts are contrary. 3. Nor yet doe wee approve David Kimchi his collection, that the woman is ſaid to bee as before man, that is, as a ſervant to attend vpon him: for ſhee is appointed to bee his fellow-helper, not his ſervant: neither is it like, that if ſhee had beene ordained to any baſe uſe, or ſervice, that ſhe ſhould have beene framed out of Adams ſide. 4. Therefore ſhee is called a helpe like to man, as Hierome readeth, or according to him as the Septuagint, or as before him as the Hebrew: both becauſe ſhee was made like unto man, as well in proportion of body, as in the qualities of the mind, being created according to the image of God: as alſo for that ſhe was meet for man neceſſary for the procreation & education of children, and profitable for the diſpoſing of houſhold affaires 5. This maketh a manifeſt difference betweene woman, which is alwayes before man, cohabiting and converſing with him, and other females which after their copulation, forſake their males. Luther.

QVEST. XXXIII. When the woman was formed.

A Further doubt is moved by ſome: at what time the woman was made: where 1. wee reject the conceit of Cajetanus, who making an allegory of this ſtory, of the framing of the woman out of Adams ſide, is forced to affirme, that God made man and woman together upon the ſixth day, and not the woman out of the man: for thus the hiſtory of Moſes is called into queſtion, and as well may the whole diſcourſe of the creation of the world be allegoriſed, as this narration of the making of woman. And again, it is contrary to the Apoſtle, who ſaith, that the woman was of the man, 1 Cor. 11. 9. 2. We likewiſe refuſe the opinion of Catharinus, who thinketh the woman to have been made the ſeventh day: for this alſo is contrary to the Scripture, Exod. 20. 11. In ſix dayes the Lord made heaven and earth, the ſea and all that in them is. 3. So then we hold, that the woman was made of a rib out of Adams ſide, as Moſes ſetteth it downe, neither made together with him out of the earth, nor yet made ſo long after him upon the ſeventh day: but ſhe was formed upon the ſixth day; as is expreſſed, Gen. 1. 27. God created them male and female: which ſtory being briefly ſet downe in the firſt chap. is by way of recapitulation, rehearſed more at large in the ſecond chap.

QVEST. XXXIIII. How the creatures were brought to Adam.

Verſ. 19. GOd brought them unto man, to ſee how he would call them. 1. We neither thinke that Adam gathered the cattell together, as the ſhepherd his ſheep. 2. Nor yet, that they were brought to Adam by the Angels: for the text ſaith, that God, that formed of the earth every beaſt of the field, brought them: by his ſecret moving and ſtirring of them to preſent themſelves to Adam, as they did afterward to Noah, when they went into the arke. 3. Neither was this impoſition of names done myſtically, nor hiſtorically as ſome thinke. 4. Nor yet doe wee thinke that the beaſts were not brought before Adam, but his eyes ſo illuminate, that hee ſaw them every where in their places: for this is contrary to the text, which ſaith, God brought them. 5. Nor yet is it to be imagined, as Barcepha reporteth it, to be the conceit of ſome, that Adam ſate in ſome high place in Paradiſe, his face ſhining as Moſes did, and that every beaſt came as he was called, and bowed the head as he paſſed by, not being able to behold Adams face for brightneſſe: for theſe are but mens conceits. 6. But we thinke that all the beaſts, by Gods ſecret inſtinct were gathered to Adam, for theſe cauſes,: 1. that man ſeeing his excellent creation farre ſurpaſſing all other, might thereby be ſtirred up to praiſe his Creator. 2. that there might be a triall of Adams wiſdome: hee brought them to ſee how he would call them. 3. that by this meanes the Hebrew language, wherein thoſe names were given, might be founded. 4. that mans authority and dominion over the creatures might appeare: for howſoever man named every living creature, ſo was the name thereof. 5. that man finding among all the creatures no helpe or comfort meet for him: v. 20. might have a greater deſire thereunto, and more lovingly embrace his helper, which ſhould be brought to him.

To what end the creatures were brought to Adam.

Quest. XXXV. How an helpe could not be found meet for Adam.

Hebrewes vaine collections.

For Adam found he not an helpe meete for him, &c. 1. not as Ramban noteth: Adam could finde none to whom to give his name, as he did to the woman, calling her, of iſh, iſhah: but it muſt bee underſtood of the nature of man, that an helpe could not bee found anſwerable to him. 2. R. Eliezer, doth ſo interprete, as that God could not finde an helpe: but God knew that alreadie hee needed not for that cauſe to bring the creatures before Adam: hee then, that is Adam, could not finde one for himſelfe. 3. But impious is the conceit of R. Sel. that man companied with every ſort of beaſt, and ſo could finde none apt and meet for him. Mercer.

Quest. XXXVI. Of the excellant knowledge and wiſdome of Adam.

Salomon not wiſer than Adam.

FUrther, by this impoſing of names upon the creatures, appeareth the great knowledge and wiſdome of man. 1. in naturall things: for names were given at the firſt according to the ſeverall properties and nature of creatures: and if Salomon had ſuch exact knowledge of beaſts and fowles, of trees and plants, even from the Cedar to the hyſop, 1 King. 4. 33. no doubt Adam had greater knowledge, whom we may ſafely hold to have beene farre wiſer than Salomon, notwithſtanding that place, 1 King. 12. where Salomon is ſaid to bee the wiſeſt of all before him, or after him: for that is ſpoken of the common generation of men, where both Adam is excepted, created after Gods image, and Chriſt that holy ſeed borne without ſinne: this place then need not to have forced Toſtatus to preferre Salomon before Adam in wiſdome. 2. Adam had alſo the knowledge of ſupernaturall things: as he was not ignorant of the myſtery of the Trinity, according to whoſe image he was made, one part whereof is knowledge, Coloſſ. 2. 10. 3. It may alſo be ſafely held, that Adam had knowledge of Chriſt to come, though not as of a redeemer, for that promiſe was firſt made after mans fall, Gen. 3. 15. but as of the author and fountaine of life, whereof the tree of life in Paradiſe was a ſymbole. 4. And whereas ſome thinke that Adam and the woman were not ignorant of the fall of the Angels, as Catharinus upon this place; yet it ſeemeth to bee otherwiſe, as may appeare by the conference of Satan in the ſerpent with the woman, wherein ſhe is altogether without ſuſpition, and the knowledge of the fall of the Angels, would have made her more cautelous, not to have committed the ſame ſinne of pride, in deſiring to be like unto God, though not in the ſame meaſure or degree.

Whether Adam knew of the fall of the Angels.

Quest. XXXVII. Of Adams ſleepe.

Verſ. 22. God cauſed an heavy ſleepe to fall upon man, and he ſlept.] 1. This was not a naturall ſleepe, as ſome thinke, which Adam fell into by reaſon of his wearineſſe, in taking view of the creatures: but an extraordinary ſleepe cauſed by the Lord: who could otherwiſe have effected his purpoſe, but it pleaſed him to uſe this meanes. Mercer. 2. This was an heavy ſleepe: the word is tardemah: teunivah, ſignifieth a light ſleepe, ſhenah a more profound ſleepe: but thardemah is the deepeſt ſleepe of all. 3. R. Iſaac Cara thinketh that man was caſt into a ſleep, to ſignifie, that he ſhould be as aſleep in the houſe, not given to contention and ſtrife. 4. We doe thinke, that as this was a ſound, heavy or deepe ſleep of the body, ſo the ſoule of Adam was in an ecſtaſis or trance, being illuminated of God, as it may appeare by this, that when he awaked, he knew that the woman was taken out of him. 5. And this was done (Adam ſleeping rather than waking) both that neither Adams ſight might be offended, in ſeeing his ſide to be opened, and a rib taken forth, nor yet his ſenſe of feeling oppreſſed, with the griefe thereof, which was not only by ſleepe mittigated, but by the power of God concurring with the ordinary meanes: for we ſee by experience, that ſleep is a binding of the ſenſe.

Quest. XXXVIII. Why the woman was made of one of Adams ribs.

And he tooke one of his ribs, and cloſed up the fleſh in ſtead thereof.] Firſt, the reaſon is evident, why it pleaſed God to make woman out of the body of man, not of the earth as he had made man. 1. That hereby might appeare the preheminence that man hath over woman: as the Apoſtle noteth, 1 Cor. 11. 7, 8. that as man is the image and glory of God, ſo the woman is the glory of the man, becauſe ſhee was taken out of man. And therefore alſo the woman hath her name and denomination of man, becauſe ſhe was taken out of him. v. 23. 2. Another cauſe of this worke was, that it might be a ſurer bond of love, that the man knowing the woman to be taken out of him, might more firmely ſet his affection upon her, being fleſh of his fleſh, and bone of his bones. v. 23. 3. Other reaſons are given, why the woman was taken out of mans ſide: as not out of his head, that ſhe ſhould not be proud: nor out of his feet, as though ſhe were mans vaſſell: but from his ſide, to ſhew the love and conjunction betweene them. Muſcul. R. Ioſue giveth this reaſon, why ſhe was taken from under the armes, that ſhee might acknowledge her ſelfe under ſubjection to man: but that is ridiculous, which ſome Hebrewes note, that the woman was made of a bone, to ſhew her hard and intollerable nature. ex Mercer.

Quest. XXXIX. Whence the bone was taken, whereof the woman was made.

SEcondly, we hold that a curious queſtion, which is diſputed of the Schoolemen, how Eva was faſhioned out of a bone, whether by multiplication of it, as Hugo thinketh, or by addition of ſome new matter taken out of the earth, as Toſtatus, or created of nothing, as Thomas: that ſeemeth more probable, that God uſed no other matter, in the making of woman, but out of the man, becauſe the text ſaith, ſhe was taken out of man, which had not beene true, if ſhee had beene taken out of any other matter. Wee therefore thinke the firſt opinion probable, that this was done by multiplying of the matter: Auguſt. Mercer. but we muſt not curiouſly ſeeke to finde out a reaſon of Gods omnipotent power.

Quest.

Quest. XL. How many ribs, and whence taken.

THirdly: 1. We neither thinke with Oleaster, that God tooke two ribs, out of each side of Adam one, because the scripture saith, v. 21. God tooke one of his ribs. 2. Wee also deride that fable of the hebrewes: that God made man and woman together, but joyned by their sides, and after parted and separated them: for the text is contrary, which saith, that God tooke a rib out of Adam to make the woman (for the word (tselang) properly signifieth a rib, and not the side) and so R. Iosua taketh it. 3. It is also a superfluous question, out of what side of Adam Eva was taken, whether out of the right or left: it is resolved by most, out of the left, because Adams heart lay there: but these are frivolous and needlesse matters.

Quest. XLI. Whether this rib were a necessary or superfluous rib.

FOurthly: so also is that question unnecessary, and more curious than profitable, whether this rib were any one of Adams necessary and substantiall parts, or one supernumerary and superfluous: some think, that whereas a man hath now 24. ribbes, on each side 12. that this rib was one of them, and that God created a new rib in stead thereof: but this opinion seemeth to be contrary to the text: because it is said, God closed up the flesh in stead thereof: if flesh were in stead of the rib, then another rib was not made in stead thereof. Againe, God had already done with the creation of Adam, v. 7. hee made man of the dust of the earth: but if Adam had a rib created afterward, then was he not before perfectly created. Wherefore it is more like that this rib was above the usuall number of ribs created of purpose by the Lord, not as a superfluous or monstrous part, but as necessary for the creation of the woman, which God intended. Mercer. Calvin. And therefore Cajetanus needed not so to have beene perplexed with this question, as not finding a solution thereof, to have left the veritie of the story, and flye to allegories.

Quest. XLII. Of the womans soule.

FIfthly, though no mention be here made of the creation of the womans soule, yet it may be gathered, that she had her soule from God immediately as Adam had, because they were both created according to Gods image, Gen. 1. 27.

Quest. XLIII. How God is said to have built the woman.

Vers. 22. HE made or built a woman, and brought, &c. 1. God is said to have built woman: neither because of the frame and fashion of her body, which is made broadest and lowest downeward, like the building of an house, as Rab. Sel. which though it be so, that God framed the womans body as fittest for procreation of children, yet Moses in thus speaking aimed not at it. But by this is meant, both that man was yet as an unperfect building, before woman was made: and that by the woman the house and family is builded by procreation of children: and thereof the hebrewes call a sonne Ben, of Banah, to build. Mercer.

2. Shee is called Ishah, woman, by a figure called Prolepsis, for this name was afterward given her by the man.

3. She is said to bee brought to man, not as though shee were made in some other place; but God doth present her and offer her to man, and as it were, marrieth and joyneth them together.

4. But the Hebrewes have here some ridiculous observations: as upon the word Itsgor, in the former verse, he closed up: which is the first word with Samech used hitherto by Moses: because Samec answereth to the first letter of Satan in sound, which is Shin, with a left pricke, they note, that Satan came into the world, and so the occasion of evill by women: so likewise out of the word Iebseah, which letters make 24. in number, they note that the woman was brought to man with 24. ornaments: whereas they cannot deny, but that she came naked. Hebrew curiosities.

Quest. XLIIII. How Adam knew the woman to be taken out of him.

Vers. 23. THe man said, this now is bone, &c. 1. Adam understood this, that the woman was taken out of him, not so much by the contemplation of the similitude and likenesse of her shape. Mercer. or that he felt some alteration in his body, as though somewhat had beene taken from it: Reuchlin. but hee had this knowledge especially by divine revelation. Calvin. 2. Adam looking upon the woman, did not presently desire her company, but sincerely with a cheerefull minde acknowledgeth how fit a mate God had provided for him. Reuchlin. 3. This now, or for this time: which words are not to bee referred with the Hebrewes to the time to come, that though at this time a wife was prepared out of man, yet it should not be so afterward, but it hath relation to the time past: that although before among all the creatures he could not find a fit companion, yet now hee had obtained one. Fagius. 4. Hee giveth the woman her name, to shew the authority of man over the woman: and in the derivation of the word ishah, from ish, the antiquity of the Hebrew tongue appeareth: the like is not to be found in any other language. 5. The Hebrewes wel note, that ish with Iod, signifieth a man, without Iod, which is the first letter of the name, Iehovah, it is fire, so where God is not the directer of the inward parts, there is nothing but fire & contention. Mercer.

Quest. XLV. How a man is said to leave father and mother.

Vers. 24. THerefore shall a man leave, &c. 1. These are not the words of Adam, as Epiphanius thinketh or immediatly uttered by the Lord to Adam, but of Moses directed by the spirit of God, who inserteth here a perpetuall law concerning marriage. 2. The man is said to leave father and mother, either comparatively and in degree, that he is rather to leave them than his wife: Oecolamp. or conditionally, if they shall seeke to dissolve the knot of marriage, therein the sonne is to leave them: Muscul. as also the leaving leaving of the father and mother, signifieth the erecting of a new family: as the Chalde readeth, hee shall leave his father and mothers bed: for the ancient use was for children unmarried to lye in their parents chambers. Mercer.

3. They shall be one flesh, not only in respect of carnall copulation, as R. Sel. for so bruit beasts may be said to bee one flesh: but in respect of their perpetuall society, the conjunction both of their bodies and minds. Now whereas the Apostle saith, that he which is joyned to an harlot, is one flesh: the Apostle there applieth not that which is proper to marriage, to fornication: but sheweth, what injury they doe to marriage which commit fornication, yeelding that to harlots, which is peculiar to wives, to be made one flesh with them. And yet this difference there is, that the man and wife are joyned together both in flesh and spirit: as it followeth in the same place, he that is joyned to the Lord is one spirit. 1 Cor. 6. 17. but the harlot though joyned in body, is severed in heart and affection.

How the harlot is made one flesh.

Quest. XLV. How man was not ashamed of his nakednesse.

Vers. 25. [They were both naked, and were not ashamed] 1. Adam was not ashamed, not, as some Hebrewes say, because Heva was of his owne flesh, for afterward they were one ashamed to behold the nakednesse of another: neither doth Moses set them forth as impudent and unshamefast persons: such as the Adamites are, pretending this example, companying together like bruit beasts: but this nakednesse of their bodies, sheweth the nakednesse and simplicity of their minds: for shame is the fruit of sin: and therefore before sinne entred, they were not ashamed. 2. Some thinke, that there remaineth yet in children that are not ashamed of their nakednesse, some shadow of our first estate: but children are therein unshamefast for want of reason, as the like is to be seene in bruit beasts. But in the kingdome of heaven, we shall be all naked, and without shame as Adam was: and without feare or danger of sinne, which Adam was not. 3. Further, notwithstanding their nakednesse, they should not have beene offended with the weather, either heat or cold: not that their skin was like unto the nailes of the fingers, as R. Eliezer thinketh, which was taken away after their fall: but God would have so tempered the elements, and the quality of their bodies, as that all things should have beene serviceable unto them.

4. The places of doctrine.

1. Doct. The Dominicall or Lords day, is grounded, not upon tradition or Ecclesiasticall institution, but upon the scriptures.

IN that the Lord sanctified the seventh day, and made it a day of rest: we inferre, that as the Sabbath kept then upon the seventh day in remembrance of the creation, was of the Lords institution: so the Lords day is now observed by the same authority, in remembrance of the resurrection of Christ, and our redemption by the same: contrary to the Rhemists, who count the observation of the Lords day, but a tradition of the Church, and Ecclesiasticall institution. Rhemist. Matth. 15. fect 3. Our reasons are these:

The observation of the Lords day is morall.

1. The observation of a Sabbath or day of rest unto the Lord, is commanded in the moral law, which is perpetuall, and not to be abrogated: if this bee denied, it will follow, that there are but nine commandements, if that of sanctifying the Sabbath doe not binde now. And although wee observe not now the same day for our Sabbath, which the Jewes did, yet the seventh day we keepe still, retaining the substance of the law, which is to keepe one day holy of seven. The manner of computation and account of seven, where to begin, where to end, and to bee tied to the very same prescript of the day, was ceremoniall and a circumstance of the law, and in that behalfe doth conclude us.

The Lords day instituted by the Apostles

2. That which was by the holy Apostles by precept enjoyned, and by example observed, was of a divine institution: thus the Lords day is prescribed by Saint Paul. 1 Cor. 16. 2. where the Apostle enjoyneth them to make collection for the poore in their meetings upon the first day of the weeke, which then began to be observed for the Lords day: he himselfe, also Act. 20. 7. observeth the same day, and preacheth in it. Saint Iohn calleth it the Lords day: Revel. 1. 10.

The Lords day a symbole of everlasting rest.

3. Every symbole significative or representing signe mentioned in scripture, had a divine institution: but so is the Sabbath a symbole or type of our everlasting rest. Heb. 4. 9. There remaineth therefore Sabbatisme, a Sabbath rest to the people of God: which words doe conclude, that both the type remaineth, that is a sabbatisme, and the signification of the type, everlasting rest.

The observation of the Lords day bindeth in conscience.

4. No constitution of the Church doth simply bind in conscience: for Gods commandements only do so bind, Iam. 1. 12. There is one law-giver, which is able to save and destroy: but the keeping of the Lords day bindeth in conscience: for therein we are commanded not to doe our owne wayes, nor to seeke our owne will, nor to speake a vaine word, Isay 58. 13. which duties, are alwayes commanded, so especially upon the Lords day: but these precepts, the observation whereof is properly incident to the Lords day, doe bind in conscience, Ergo. &c.

Difference betweene the Lords day and other festivals.

5. If the Lords day were but a tradition of the Church, there should be no difference betweene that and other festivall dayes, but all of the like necessity, and with as great strictnesse are to be observed and kept, these as the other. But that were very absurd, seeing we find the Lords day by the Apostles to have beene observed, whereas no mention at all is made of the other in the scriptures: and the Church of God in her practise hath alwayes made a difference betweene the observation of the Lords day and other festivals: enjoyning that with greater devotion alwayes to be celebrated, than the rest.

6. This also hath beene the constant doctrine of the Church of God, and the judgement of the fathers, that the Lords day is of the Lords institution: as may appeare by this sentence of Augustine: Dominicum diem, apostoli & apostolici viri religiosa sanctitate habendum sanxerunt, &c. The Lords day the Apostles and Apostolicall

Apoſtolicall men have ordained with religious holineſſe to bee kept, becauſe in the ſame our Redeemer roſe from the dead, and therefore it is called the Dominicall or Lords day, that in it we onely may attend upon the divine ſervice: this is the firſt day in the world, in it were created the elements, and the Angels: upon this day Chriſt roſe, the holy Ghoſt was given, and Manna deſcended from heaven firſt on this day: ſerm. de tempor. 251.

Wherefore I cannot wholly condeſcend to Mercerus judgement, who ſaith, politica cauſa retinuerunt Apoſtoli diem dominicum Sabbato ſubrogatum: that the Apoſtles for policy ſake have retained the Lords day in ſtead of the Sabbath: in 2 Gen. verſ. 3. A policy I grant in the uſe of the Lords day, but that is neither the only nor chiefe reaſon of the inſtitution thereof.

There are three cauſes of the obſervation of the Lords day: a religious and holy uſe: for the Lord to this end did conſecrate this day by his owne example and commandement to bee ſpent in holy exerciſes: the Civill or politicall uſe of the Lords day is for the reſt of our ſelves, our ſervants, and cattell: the ceremoniall or ſymbolicall end, was to ſhadow forth our ſpirituall reſt in Chriſt: in this laſt reſpect, I confeſſe the ceremony of the Sabbath in part to be aboliſhed: for it is a ſymbole ſtill of our everlaſting reſt in heaven. Heb. 4. 9. But in the other two reſpects, the law of the Lords day is perpetuall: for that as Philo ſaith, it is ἑορτὴ κοινὴ, feſtum populare, a popular or generall feſtivall to be obſerved of all people for ever.

I doe wonder then, this doctrine of the Sabbath, and day of reſt, now called the Lords day, having ſuch evident demonſtration out of the ſcriptures, and being confirmed by the conſtant and continuall practice of the Church in all ages: that any profeſſing the Goſpell, ſpecially being exerciſed in the ſtudy of the ſcriptures, ſhould gainſay and impugne theſe poſitions following, as erronious.

1. That the commandement of ſanctifying the Sabbath is naturall, morall, and perpetuall: for if it be not ſo, then all the commandements contained in the decalogue, are not morall: ſo ſhould we have nine only, and not ten commandements: and then Chriſt ſhould come to deſtroy the Law, not to fulfill it, contrary to our Saviours owne words, Matth. 5. 17. See the booke of the catholike doctrine, of the Church of England, printed at Cambridge, p. 37. ibid.

2. That all other things in the law, were ſo changed, that they were cleane taken away, as the prieſthood, the ſacrifices, and the ſacraments: this day (namely the Sabbath) was ſo changed, that it yet remaineth: for it is evident by the Apoſtles practice: Acts 20. 7. 1 Cor. 16. 2. Apocal. 1. 10. that the day of reſt (called the Sabbath,) was changed from the ſeventh day, to the firſt day of the weeke: and ſo was obſerved and kept holy under the name of the Lords day.

3. That it is not lawfull for us to uſe the ſeventh day to any other end, but to the holy and ſanctified end, for which God in the beginning created it: for this were preſumption to alter Gods appointment: and the will and ordinance of the Creator, muſt ſtand in the uſe of the creature: otherwiſe the Apoſtle had not reaſoned well for the uſe of meats from the end of the creation: which God hath created to be received with thankeſgiving. p. 195.

4. As the Sabbath came in with the firſt man, ſo muſt it not goe out, but with the laſt: for if the keeping of a day of reſt holy unto the Lord, bee a part of the morall law (as it cannot bee denyed) then muſt it continue, as long as the Lord hath his Church on earth: and the morall Sabbath muſt ſtand, till the everlaſting Sabbath ſucceed in place thereof. 1 Tim. 4. 3. ibid.

5. That we are reſtrained upon the Sabbath from work, both hand and foot, as the Jewes were: though not in ſuch ſtrict particular manner as they were, for whom it was not lawful to kindle a fire upon the Sabbath. Exod. 35. 2. yet in generall wee are forbidden all kind of worke upon the Lords day, as they were which may hinder the ſervice of God: ſaving ſuch workes, as either charity commandeth, or neceſſity compelleth: for it is a part of the morall precept: in it thou ſhalt doe no manner of worke. Ibid.

6. That the Lord would have every Sabbath to be ſanctified by the Miniſter and the people, and that in the Church he ought to preach the word, and they to heare it every Sabbath day: (but not each of theſe under paine of condemnation, as the place is miſconſtrued,) is confirmed by the practice of our bleſſed Saviour, Luke 4. 16. and of S. Paul: Act. 13. 14. and 20. 7. And hereunto are the Canons of our Church agreeable, which require that every Miniſter preach every Lords day, and likewiſe catechiſe the youth. p. 196. Can. 45. & 54.

7. That the Lord hath commanded ſo preciſe a reſt unto all ſorts of men, that it may not by any fraud, deceit, or circumvention whatſoever, be broken, under the paine of his everlaſting diſpleaſure: who doubteth of this, but that every breach of any part of the morall law, eſpecially by deceit and circumvention, deſerveth in it ſelfe Gods curſe, and everlaſting diſpleaſure: as the Apoſtle ſaith, the wages of ſinne is death: and the Law ſaith: Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the booke of the law, to doe them: as the Apoſtle citeth this text. p. 189. Rom. 6. Galath. 3. 10.

This doctrine of the Sabbath firſt grounded upon the authority of ſcripture, hath accordingly beene ratified by the conſtant and perpetuall practice of the Church.

Origen ſaith; In noſtro Dominico die, ſemper pluit Dominus Manna de cœlo: in our Lords day, the Lord alwayes raineth Manna from heaven. Hierome; Dominicus dies, orationi tantum & lectionibus vacat: upon the Lords dayes, they onely give themſelves to prayer and reading. Hom. 7. in Exod. ad Ruſtic.

Ambroſe: tota die ſit vobis oratio vel lectio, &c. nulli actui ſeculi, actui divinitatis impediant, &c. Let us all the day be converſant in prayer, or reading: let no ſecular acts, hinder divine acts, let no table play carry away the mind. Serm. 33.

Auguſtine: quomodo Maria mater Domini, &c. As Mary the mother of our Lord is the chiefe among women: ſo among other dayes, this is the mother of the reſt: the whole grace of the Sabbath, and the ancient feſtivity of the people of the Iewes, is changed into the ſolemnity of this day. de tempor. ſerm. 36.

Concil.

Concil. Tullen. cap. 19. Oportet eos qui præsunt Ecclesiis &c : it behoveth those which are set over the Churches, upon all dayes, but especially upon the Lords dayes, to teach the people, &c.

Matisconens. 2. cap. 1. Exhibeamus Deo liberam servitutem, &c. Let us exhibite unto God our free service, not because the Lord requireth this of us, to celebrate the Lords day by corporall abstinence, but he looketh for obedience : whereby we treading downe all terrene rites, might be raised up to heaven.

D. Bound. But these allegations are here superfluous, seeing there is a learned Treatise of the Sabbath already published of this argument : which containeth a most sound doctrine of the Sabbath, as is laid downe in the former positions, which shall be able to abide the triall of the word of God, and stand warranted thereby, when other humane fantasies shall vanish : howsoever some in their heat and intemperance, are not afraid to call them, Sabbatorum errores; yea hereticall assertions, a new Jubile, Saint Sabbath, more than either Jewish or Popish institution : God grant it bee not laid to their charge, that so speake or write, and God give them a better mind.

2. Doct. The soule is not part of Gods substance.

SEcondly : where it is said, God breathed into the face of Adam the breath of life : we are not thereby to gather, that the soule of man is part of the divine substance, to the which opinion Lactantius seemeth to have inclined. lib. 2. divinar. institution. for as the breath is no part of his substance that doth breath, so neither is the soule of Gods essence, that gave it : for then, the soule of man, if it were of the divine nature, it should be immutable, and without beginning; from all eternity, as God is.

3. Doct. There is but one soule in a man.

THirdly, from hence it may be concluded, that there is but one soule in man, and that all the other faculties of sense and powers of nature are but handmaids to the soule, waiting upon it, and departing with it : therefore God is said to have breathed into man the spirit of life, that is, the reasonable soule, because the body, no longer doth breath or live, than the soule is present. We doe therefore refuse Origens conceit, upon these words, Mat. 24. 51. The Lord will divide or cut him off : that is, the spirit of the wicked shall returne to God, and their soule shall goe to hell : hee maketh A difference betweene the spirit and soule : contrary to the Apostle, who saying, be ye renewed in the spirit of your soules and minds, Eph. 4. 24. sheweth that the spirit belongeth to the mind or soule, as the purer part thereof.

Tractat. 3 in Matth.

4. Doct. Paradise was a place not altogether unknowne.

FOurthly, whereas Paradise is described by the countrey of Eden where it was situate, and by the knowne rivers of Tigris and Euphrates, we inferre that Paradise then was not a place secret and unknowne, as Bellarmine supposeth, lib. de grat. prim. hom. c. 12. for if it had beene unknowne in those dayes, the Lord needed not to set the Cherubims to keepe it with A sword shaken. And if it be objected, that Paradise was never found out by any, the answer is easily made : 1. because it was kept by the Angels with great terrour, that none durst approach. 2. The Infidels and incredulous persons regarded it not. 3. The faithfull looked for a much better Paradise in heaven, and therefore sought not after it. And herein we have the judgement of Pererius against Bellarmine : one Jesuit against another, lib. 3. in genes. qu. 5. de paradis.

5. Doct. The terrestriall Paradise is not now extant.

FIfthly, whereas Bellarmine affirmeth, that the terrestriall Paradise is yet remaining, and that Henoch and Elias are there kept : it appeareth by the description of Paradise to bee a meere fable. 1. Paradise was planted where the knowne rivers Tigris and Euphrates ran together, which is either in Armenia, or Mesopotamia, or some of those knowne countries : then if Paradise were now extant in the world, it is like that in all this time it should have beene found out by the inhabitants of those places. 2. The floud over-flowed the highest hils, 15. cubits, Gen. 7. 20. then Paradise also was covered with the water, where if Henoch then was, he must have also perished in the waters, being out of Noahs Arke. 3. The scripture maketh mention now of no other Paradise, but heaven, 2 Cor. 12, 13. S. Paul calleth it the third heaven Paradise. 4. Pererius sheweth Rupertus and Gregory to have beene of this mind, that Henoch was not translated to the terrestriall Paradise : to the which he subscribeth against Bellarmine.

Pererius against Bellarmine.

6. Doct. Marriage is not to be prohibited to any.

SIxthly, whereas the Lord saith, vers. 18. It is not good for man to bee alone : wee enforce this text against the popish forced virginity : for whereas God saw it was not good neither for Adam, then present, nor for his posterity, which should have more need of the remedy, to bee alone : they contrariwise constraine their Priests and votaries to live alone, depriving them of that mutuall helpe and society, which God hath appointed for their comfort ; and to be a remedy against sinne : and that this place is understood not of the marriage of Adam only, but of all the faithfull, Bellarmine confesseth, lib. de Matrim. cap. 2.

7. Doct. Polygamie condemned.

SEventhly, vers. 24. They shall be one flesh : and as this place is alleaged, Matthew 19. 5. They two shall be one flesh : This place sheweth the corruption of polygamie, which is the having of many wives : for if God had seene it good for one man to be joyned to two, or divers women, he would have made at the first to one man, more helpes than one.

5. Places

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Experimentall knowledge of evill not to be desired.

1. THe Maniches objected, why did God forbid man to eate of the tree of the knowledge of good and evill, would he have him like unto bruit beasts, that cannot distinguish betweene good and evill? Augustine answereth this experimentall knowledge of evill, which Adam got by transgression, was not the wisdome of an happie, but the experience of a miserable man: for Christ knew no sinne by his experience, though he knew it by his sapience or wisdome.

2. Confut. Why God gave a commandement that man would not keepe.

2. WHy did God give a commandement, that man should not keepe, and why did he not make him so, that man should not have fallen? Ans. 1. God gave man this precept, that hee might shewe his obedience, and though he foresawe he would sinne, yet he also provided a remedie and redeemer for his sinne. 2. Though hee be in a better state, that cannot sinne at all, yet his state is good, and not to be complained of, that if he will, cannot sinne: lib. cons. adversar. leg. c. 14.

3. Confut. against Celsus.

3. Celsus derideth this storie, of the making of the woman, and counteth it a fable: Origen answereth, if you will not beleeve Moses, why doe you credit Hesiod your Poet? who hath the like narration, how Vulcan made a woman out of clay, whom all the gods adored, Venus gave her beautie, Pallace comelinesse of bodie, Mercurius wit, whereupon she was called Pandora, which opening the lidde or cover of the tunne, divided care and griefe unto men, that lived without before. Origen. lib. 4. cont. Celsum. Hesiods story of Pandora.

4 Confut. Paradise planted in a knowne place.

4. THe Papists object thus: Bellarmine would proove that Paradise was an unknowne place, because it is said, the river that went out of Eden, did divide it selfe into 4. heads. But there is no such river in Mesapotamia. Bellar. lib. 1. de grat. prim. homin. c. 12. For further answer to this objection, I referre the reader to q. 13. before these 4. streames might be known in former time, though not now. For further answer to this objection.

5. Confut. Adams sinne pardonable.

5. WHereas we say that all sinnes are veniall to the faithfull and elect: Bellarmine replieth that Adam committed a mortall and damnable sinne, because it was said vnto him, in what day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt die the death: lib. 1. de amiss. grat. c. 7. Ans. Wee say, that though this sinne was damnable in it owne nature, yet by Gods grace through Christ it was made veniall and pardonable to Adam, unlesse Bellarmine say with the hereticke Tatiane, that Adam was damned.

6. Confut. Adam lost not his faith.

6. BY this place also he would proove that Adam and Eve lost their faith, because they beleeved not the sentence of God, that they should die, if they transgressed the commandement. lib. 3. de amission. great. c. 6. Ans. This prooveth, that they failed in faith, not that their faith was utterly lost and extinguished: for if Adam had no faith remaining, to what purpose should God have propounded the promise of the Messiah to a faithlesse man?

Places of Exhortation.

1. INthat God sanctified the Sabboth, and rested therein from all his works he did it for our example, that we thereby should learne religiously to observe the Lords day. 1. in abstaining from all bodily and servile workes: 2. in keeping our selves undefiled and unspotted of all sinnefull works. 3. in sanctifying it to holy exercises, to the praise of God, and our owne comfort. The religious vse of the Lords day.

2 v. 7. In that God made man of the dust, and put the breath of life into his nostrils: man is here to learne humilitie, by the consideration of his base and poore beginning, and to remember how brittle his state is, whose life is but a blast of the breath, a puffe of the aire: Isay, 2. 22. Cease from man whose breath is in his nostrils. Mans base beginning should teach him humilitie.

3 Seeing that goodly garden of paradise, replenished with such goodly plants, and fruitfull trees is now destroyed, and not to be found in earth, we are taught to sequester our affections from all earthly delights, and to seeke for a paradise much better in heaven. The earthly paradise should put us in minde of the celestiall.

4 v. 15. Seeing man even in the state of his innocency was not to live idlely, but God assigned him to keep the garden: we are thereby admonished, that now much more every man should occupie himselfe in some honest labour of a lawfull vocation. No man ought to live idlely.

5 In that God made the woman out of man, from whom shee had her beginning: thereby is described the dutie of the wife, to be obedient to her husband, as her head and principall, for whose cause shee was made. The dutie of the wife.

6 And seeing the woman is bone of mans bone, and flesh of his flesh: thereby the husband is put in remembrance, to love, tender, and cherrish his wife, even as his owne flesh. The dutie of the husband.

Gods watchfull providence over man.

7. verse 18. It is not good for man to be alone: in that God first taketh care to provide an helper for man, before he saw his owne want: and while Adam slept, and thought nothing, the Lord prepared him an helpe: we see how Gods providence watcheth over us, foreseeing for us, many things, which we see not our selves, yea taking care for us, while we sleep, as it is in the Psalme, Hee giveth his wel-beloved sleepe, Psal. 127. 3. Mercer.

Chap. III.

The Analysis or Method.

His Chapter describeth the fall of man, first his sinne and transgression, from verse 1. to verse 9. then his punishment, verse 9. to the end. In their transgression is to be considered, the tentation of Sathan, verse 1. to verse 6. the seduction of the man and woman, verse 6. thirdly, the effects and fruits of their sinne, verse 7, 8.

In Sathans temptation wee haue his subtill insinuation, verse 1. the womans simple confession, verse 2, 3. the suggestion it selfe, verse 4, 5.

In their seduction, verse 6. first are set downe the inducements, or provocation: the goodnesse of the tree for meat, the pleasantnesse to the eye, the fruit thereof, supposed to be knowledge: then the pravarication, or offence, they did eat.

The effects of their transgression, are shame, which causeth them to cover their nakednesse, verse 7. feare, which maketh them to hide themselves, verse 8.

In the punishment, there is first their conviction of the man and woman, verse 9. to 14. then the malediction or curse: denounced first, then executed.

The sentence is denounced against the tempter, or parties tempted.

The tempter is either the accessary, that is the serpent, which was the instrument; whose punishment is set forth, verse 14. or the principall, namely Sathan, who is censured, verse 15.

The persons tempted: first, the woman is punished, with sorrow in travaile, subjection to her husband, verse 16. secondly, the man is judged: the cause is first shewed, his transgression, verse 17. then his judgement, in the cursing of the earth with thornes and thistles, in cursing of man with misery in his life, mortality in his end. verse 19.

The sentence lastly, is executed, in the expulsion of man out of Paradise, verse 23. with the consultation going before, verse 22. and his perpetuall exile from thence: the Angels keepe the way to Paradise with a sword, that Adam should not returne thither.

The

The Exegeſis, or theologicall explication.

Quest. 1. Whether it were a true ſerpent that talked with Eva.

verſ. 1. NOw the ſerpent was more ſubtill, &c.] 1. we neither thinke with Ioſephus, that it was in the beginning naturall to the ſerpents, as to other beaſts, to have the uſe of ſpeech and underſtanding: which was the conceit alſo of Plato, that under Saturne men uſed to ſpeake & conferre by language with beaſts. Euſeb. lib. 12. de propar. Evang. c. 9. for if it had beene naturall to beaſts to ſpeake, they ſhould no more after the fall have beene deprived of their naturall faculties, than the Angels or men, that fell: and beſide, this opinion is contrarie to the Scripture, which ſaith, that man onely was created according to Gods image: that is, with reaſon and underſtanding, which guideth the ſpeech.

Serpents whether they had the uſe of ſpeech.

2. We refuſe alſo the opinion which Barcephas aſcriberh to Ephrem. lib. de paradiſ. c. 27. that the uſe of ſpeech was given unto the ſerpent onely for this time, as it was to Balaams aſſe: that the Devill ſpake in the ſerpent, as the Angell did in the Aſſe we grant: but the ſerpent could not ſpeake of himſelfe, wanting the inſtruments and organs of the voice which man hath.

3. Neither is Cyrillus opinion to be received, that it was not a true ſerpent, but a ſhew onely and apparition. For then it ſhould not have beene ſaid, that the ſerpent was wiſer, than all the beaſts of the field: and afterward God layeth a curſe upon the ſerpent, that he ſhould goe upon his bellie and eate the duſt of the earth: it was a true ſerpent then, not a ſhadow onely.

4 Cajetanus conceit alſo is to be rejected, who by a continued allegorie, by the ſerpent, would have the Devill underſtood: that there was neither ſerpent in truth nor in ſhew that appeared to Eva, but this tentation was altogether internall and ſpirituall: for by this meanes, the whole ſtorie of the creation may as well be allegorized, and ſo the truth of the narration called in queſtion, and beſide, whereas the Devill internally tempteth onely two wayes, either by alluring the ſenſe by ſome object, or elſe by moving and working the phantaſie, our parents before their fall could not be ſo tempted, having no inordinate motion.

5 Some thinke that the woman did underſtand the ſpeech of the ſerpent, ſuch as beaſts uſe, to expreſſe their minde, and not otherwiſe: but it is evident, that the ſerpent did verily ſpeake.

6 Aben Ezra is of opinion, that it was the ſerpent, and nothing elſe: but the curſe afterward pronounced upon the ſerpent, and that propheſie, that the ſeed of the woman ſhould breake the ſerpents head, ſheweth, that the Devill ſpake in the ſerpent, who is principally accurſed.

7 Our opinion then is, that it was a true ſerpent which talked with Eva, as may appeare by the puniſhment inflicted upon this kind: and that the Devill uſed the ſerpent, a ſubtill beaſt, as his inſtrument, and ſpake out of him. This our Saviour confirmeth in the Goſpell, that it was Satan, which was a murtherer from the beginning, and cauſed the death and fall of our parents, Iohn 18. 44. And Saint Paul affirmeth, that the ſerpent beguiled Eva through his ſubtiltie: but the woman was not deceived by the ſerpent, but by the craft of the Devill, ſpeaking and working by the ſerpent. Of this judgement are moſt of the auncient fathers, Baſil, Chryſoſtome, Auguſtine, Damaſcene, &c.

Quest. II. How the ſerpent is ſaid to have beene more ſubtile, &c.

THe ſerpent was more ſubtile than any beaſt of the field: 1. Theſe words cannot be underſtood of the Devil, as Cajetane thinketh, who here by a metaphore is called a ſerpent: for betweene the Devil and the beaſts of the field, there is no compariſon, who in ſubtiltie farre exceedeth man, who is wiſer than any brutiſh nature. 2. Neither was the ſerpent more ſubtill onely for this time, as Auguſtine ſeemeth to thinke, lib. 11. Geneſ. ad lit. c. 29 for Satan could not infuſe more ſubtilty into the ſerpent, than by nature it had: and the text it ſelfe ſeemeth to inſinuate, that the ſerpent by nature was more ſubtill than other beaſts. 3. wherefore the truth is, that whereas the ſerpent is a moſt ſubtill beaſt, it was not by chance, that Satan uſed him as his inſtrument, beeing by his naturall ſubtiltie apt thereunto: and the ſerpents ſubtill nature appeareth, both by the ſleights he uſeth in helping himſelfe, as to let paſſe what Plinie reporteth, that by the juice of fennel, he ſtrippeth himſelfe of a certaine skinne, wherewith he is overgrowne in winter, and with the ſame heath cleareth his dimmed ſight: the Scripture ſheweth, that the ſerpent ſtoppeth his eare againſt the voice of the charmer. Pſal. 58. As alſo his craft appeareth in his enmitie againſt man, whom he aſſaileth ſecretly and in ſilence: as biting the horſe by the heele to cauſe the rider to fall, Gen. 49. 17. And further, concerning the naturall wiſdome of the ſerpent, our Saviour witneſſeth, ſaying to his diſciples, bee yee wiſe as ſerpents, innocent as doves. Mat. 10. 16. 4. Some thinke, that this is ſet forth as a praiſe and commendation in the ſerpent, that he had ſuch a gift of wiſdome & ſubtilty given him in the creation: but the contrarie appeareth, that although this naturall gift in the ſerpent was good, yet here relation is made to Satans craft, whereby he ſeduced Eve: Adam and Eve are ſaid before to be gnarumim, naked ſimple: and here the ſerpent is ſaid to be gnarum, in the contrarie ſenſe, craftie covert, not ſimple: for the Hebrew word admitteth a contrarie ſenſe. Mercer.

Of the naturall wiſdome of the ſerpent.

Quest. III. Why Satan in the ſerpent beginneth with an interrogation.

verſ. 1. YEa hath God indeed ſaid. &c. 1. Some doe take this to bee an ironicall ſpeech, as though Satan in the ſerpent ſhould ſcoffingly ſay: it is a like matter that God careth what you eat. 2. Some make it an interrogation, as though Satan ſhould aske the reaſon, why God had ſo ſaid, &c. as the Latine and Septuagint. 3. Some make it a naked queſtion: Is it true that God hath ſaid: Chald. 4. R. Sel. expoundeth it, forſan, perhaps: and would have it doubtfully ſpoken. 5. Some make the emphaſis or force of the ſetence in this word God: it is not like that God would give you any ſuch precept. 6. Aben Ezra interpreteth aph ci, by quanto magis, how much more: that after Satan had ſhewed many reaſons to perſwade the woman, that God loved them not, hee urgeth this above the reſt that God had given them this prohibition. 7. But the beſt interpretation is this, that after long communication had with the woman, at length the ſerpent commeth to that which he intended, to draw from the woman ſome anſwer, whereupon he might worke further: and therefore with ſome admiration ſaith in effect; it ſeemeth very ſtrange, or I much wonder, that God would give any ſuch prohibition unto you. Mercer.

Quest. IIII. Why Satan tempted man, and that by the woman.

NOw the Devill thought to ſupplant man in Paradiſe, not becauſe he did foreſee that the Meſſiah ſhould take fleſh of Adam: for as yet man was not fallen, nor Gods counſell revealed concerning the Redeemer, that ſhould breake the ſerpents head: but the envie of Satan was the cauſe that moved him to this tentation, that he might bring man into the ſame ſtate of damnation: and he ſheweth his malice againſt God, in ſeeking to deface his image. Calvin. 2. Hee ſetteth upon the woman firſt, not becauſe, as Ambroſe thinketh, the precept was given onely to Adam by God himſelfe: for it was ſpoken to them both: but becauſe he ſaw her to be the weaker, and ſo fitteſt for him to worke by. Mercer.

Quest. V. How Eva indured to talke with the ſerpent.

NOw whereas it will bee queſtioned, how it came to paſſe that Eva was not afraid to talke with the ſerpent: 1. which was not, either becauſe this ſerpent, which Satan vſed, had a pleaſant countenance and virgins face, which opinion is imputed to Beda, which is rather to be held a painters fancie, than the worke of nature, there beeing no ſuch ſerpent to be ſeene in the world: 2. neither for that the ſerpent was more familiar with man, than any other creature, as thinketh Damaſcen: 3. neither can the very kind of the ſerpent be deſcribed, as Eugubinus ſaith it was the Baſiliske, which poiſoneth hearbs and plants with his very breath. Pererius ſaith, it is moſt like to be the ſerpent called Scytale, which hath a backe of divers colours: for this is too great curioſitie, ſeeing the Scripture onely generally nameth a ſerpent, noting no ſpeciall kind. 4. But as Chryſoſtome well obſerveth the ſight of the ſerpent, which after ſin became terrible & hatefull to man, was now not abhorred, neither were any creatures as yet in the ſtate of mans innocencie, loathſome unto man, and therefore Eva might well indure the ſight of the ſerpent.

What kind of ſerpent it was.

Quest. VI. What mooved Eva to give eare to the ſerpent.

BVt whereas Eva was not aſtoniſhed to heare the ſerpent ſpeak: 1. it was neither as Rupertus thinketh, becauſe the woman imagined, that ſome powerfull ſpirit cauſed the ſerpent to ſpeake, and therefore gave reverent eare: for this had not beene farre from Idolatrie, to yeeld any ſuch reverence to any but to the Creator. 2. Neither did ſhee thinke, as Bonaventure holdeth, that ſome good ſpirit intending her good, thus ſpake in the creature. For then ſhee would not have ſaid, the ſerpent, but the ſpirit or Angel deceived me. 3. Neither is it like, that Eva, as Cyrillus ſeemeth to thinke, was ignorant, whether the uſe of ſpeech were given unto any creature beſide man: to the which opinion Toſtatus and Pererius ſubſcribe: for ſeeing that Adam had before given names to all creatures, which God brought unto him, they could not be ignorant by this experience, that man onely had the gift of calling and giuing names. 4. But Eva knowing well, that God had created angelicall powers, was carried away with the voice and goodly promiſes delivered from the ſerpent, not beeing ſo much intent from whom they came, as what was ſpoken, not conſidering, while ſhee was raviſhed with an ambitious deſire of bettering her eſtate, whether a good or a bad Angell might thus ſpeake out of the ſerpent: for to ſay, that man was either ignorant of the creation of Angels, or of the power and facultie of beaſts, was too great a defect of knowledge, to be incident to that perfect eſtate.

Quest. VII. Whether the ſerpent went upon his bellie before the curſe.

verſ. 14. Upon thy belly ſhalt thou goe, duſt ſhalt thou eate, &c. 1. It is neither to be thought with Barcephus, that the ſerpent before went upon his feete as other beaſts: for God would not alter the nature and ſhape of his creature, having given power to every creature before to multiply his owne kinde, & this had beene to miſlike the worke of his owne hands. 2. Neither is it to be ſuppoſed with Didymus Hieronimes maſter, that the ſerpent, during onely this time of tentation, was cauſed by the ſpirit to ſtand upright, for it had beene no puniſhment for the ſerpent to returne to his firſt nature. 3. Neither doe we approove the ſentence of the fathers, as of Auguſtine, Gregory, and others, who by an allegorie doe apply theſe words to the Devill: that he goeth upon his belly when he tempteth men to gluttony & leachery, whereof the bellie is the inſtrument: and he eateth earth, having power over earthly minded men: for after this manner, the whole ſtorie may likewiſe be allegorized. 4. Neither with ſome others, as Pererius, doe we approve both an hiſtoricall ſenſe of this malediction in the ſerpent, & an allegoricall in the Devill: but the whole is hiſtoricall; the firſt part whereof concerneth the ſerpent the inſtrument, the other Satan the principall, that his head and power ſhould be broken by this meanes: and where he had thought to gained, he ſhould ſuſtaine a greater loſſe.

5 Our ſentence then is this, that the curſe denounced againſt the ſerpent, conſiſteth not in the thing it ſelfe, but the manner of it: the ſerpent did from his creation creepe upon his breſt, and feede of the earth, but now, this is made ignominious and accurſed unto him, which was not before: as weeds and thiſtles were created before mans fall, but after beganne to bee a curſe to the earth: and man was naked before his

tranſgreſſion, but was not aſhamed of it till after: ſo the raine-bow was before the floud, but then onely ordained to be a ſigne of the covenant, that God would no more deſtroy the world with water.

Quest. VIII. Why the Devill ſpake out of the ſerpent.

IF it bee further demanded, why the Devill ſpake out of the ſerpent, rather than appeared in any other ſhape. 1. I ſay with Auguſtine, becauſe God permitted Satan to uſe no other beaſt as his inſtrument, but the ſerpent. 2. That it was neither fit that hee ſhould have appeared in humane ſhape, for Eva knew well enough, that her ſelfe and Adam, were all mankind, and none beſide them: neither if Satan had framed a voice out of the aire, would Eva have endured ſo familiar a conference: and for that the ſerpent, in regard of his ſubtilty, was the fitteſt inſtrument, that would ſoone winde himſelfe in and out, and creepe away, that he ſhould not be ſeene of Adam. 3. In that Moſes maketh no mention of the Devill, but of the ſerpent only, it was both in regard of the weakneſſe and rudeneſſe of the people, who could not well conceive any other but the viſible creatures, and for that Moſes writing a ſtory, reporteth things as they appeared, as the ſtory of Samuels apparition to Saul, calleth it Samuel, whereas it was Satan in Samuels ſhape, becauſe it ſo appeared. 4. The Hebrewes here are not to be approved, that ſay the ſerpent covered to have company with the woman: for that is againſt the nature of beaſts. Hebrewes fanſies.

Quest. IX. Of the manner how the woman was tempted of Satan.

COncerning the tentation of Satan, and ſeduction of the woman: 1. he beginneth ſubtilly, hath God indeed ſaid, yee ſhall not eat of every tree? whereas God onely forbad them one tree, as though God had dealt hardly with them, in abridging them of their liberty. 2. The woman reporteth not the words of the prohibition truly: ſome thinke, that ſhee added of her owne; yee ſhall not touch it, as Ambroſe: ſome, that ſhe changed the words, as Rupertus, for the tree of knowledge of good and evill, ſaying, the tree in the midſt of the garden: but certaine it is, that ſhe taketh ſomewhat from Gods words, pronouncing doubtfully, leſt ye die, which God had denounced moſt certainly, ye ſhall dye the death: that is, ſurely dye. 3. Satan in his reply, v. 4, 5. heapeth up many lies together, 1. that they ſhall not dye: 2. that God did envy their happineſſe: 3. that knowledge might be had in eating of fruit: 4. that they ſhould thereby bee made like unto God. Beſide, Rupertus conceit is here excellent, that the Devill in every one of theſe points ſpeaketh doubtfully, as he gave the Oracles of Apollo, that every word which he ſpake, might have a double meaning: ye ſhall not die: that is, not preſently the death of the body: though preſently made ſubject to mortality: your eyes ſhall bee opened, ſo they were to their confuſion: knowing good and evill, not by a more excellent knowledge, but by miſerable experience after their tranſgreſſion: ye ſhall bee as gods, either as Angels, or like unto us, ſinfull and wicked ſpirits. 4. The woman ſeeth the tree to be good for meat, there is her voluptuous deſire: pleaſant to the eyes, there is her curioſity: and to be deſired for knowledge, there is the vanity of her minde. Thus as the Apoſtle ſaith, whatſoever is in the world, is the concupiſcence of the fleſh: the concupiſcence of the eye, the pride of life. 1 Ioh. 2. Eva altereth Gods words. Satans doubtfull anſwers.

Quest. X. Adam tempted and deceived as well as the woman, though not in the ſame degree.

THe order then and manner of the tentation was this. 1. It is evident, that neither Adam nor Eva, had committed any ſin before this congreſſe with Satan, for the Scripture ſaith, that til then they were both naked, and were not aſhamed, Gen. 2. 25. So that herein both Rupertus and Ferus are deceived. 2. Satan firſt aſſaileth the woman, both being as the weaker, more eaſie to be ſeduced, & as a fit inſtrument alſo to entice Adam. 3. Adam did not only incline unto her, amicabili quadam benevolentia, of a loving mind, and thereby enticed as Sampſon was by Dalilah, and Salomon by his wives: but it is like he was ſeduced by the ſame flattering and falſe perſwaſions, whereby the woman was firſt beguiled, being carried away with an ambitious deſire in knowledge, not to be equalized, but made like unto God: this may appeare out of the 22. verſe, Behold man is become like unto us, to know good and evill: where the Lord reproveth alſo mans affected and curious deſire to attaine to a greater perfection.

Neither doth that place of the Apoſtle contradict this opinion: Adam was not deceived, but the woman was deceived, and was in the tranſgreſſion. 1 Tim. 2. 14. for whether we expound it with Epiphanius and Calvin, that the Apoſtles meaning is, the woman was firſt deceived, not the man: or with Mercerus, that the man was not deceived, but entiſed by the woman: or with Hierome, that Adam was not deceived by the ſerpent, but by the woman: or that Eva did not wittingly deceive Adam, as the ſerpent beguiled Eva: whereof the two firſt expoſitions, being one in effect, are moſt agreeable to the Apoſtles minde: by this text Adam is not wholly exempted from being deceived, but only in that manner as Eva was perverted and ſeduced.

Quest. XI. Whether Adams ſinne was the greateſt of all ſinnes.

NOw as touching the greatneſſe of Adams ſin, ſimply it was not the greateſt ſin of all committed in the world: neither in reſpect of the kind of the ſinne, as adultery is greater than fornication, for ſo we hold blaſphemy and Idolatry to be greater ſins than Adams was: neither in reſpect of the affection of the offender; for many are with a more ungodly, violent, and ſinfull deſire given over: then Adam in this tentation: neither was it the greateſt, in reſpect of the quality of the ſin, for it was pardonable in Adam, whereas ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt is impardonable. But yet it may truly bee ſaid to bee the greateſt, 1. in regard of the fruits and ſequele of that ſin, the contagion and infection of all mankind. 2. in reſpect of Adams perſon, who in his excellent gifts conſidered, might have more eaſily reſiſted. 3. in regard of the facility of the commandement, which required no hard or difficult thing. 4. the place also it selfe being considered, namely in Paradise, where there was no provocation, or allurement unto sinne.

QVEST. XII. Whether Adams or Eves sinne were the greater.

NOw if Adams sinne be compared with the womans: in some things it will be found equall, in some things superiour, in some inferiour to it. 1. Both Adam and Eva sinned in their infidelity, in not beleeving the word of God, but giving credit to Satans faire promises, that they should not dye. 2. in their concupiscence, in coveting the forbidden fruit. 3. in their ambition in desiring a further state of perfection. Secondly, in respect of Adams person, who was appointed to be the womans head, and of his gifts of knowledge and wisdome, the man was more faulty than the woman. Thirdly, yet simply, the womans sinne was greater, because beside other sinnes common unto them, this was proper unto her in seducing her husband: so that as Augustine well noteth, de Genes. 11. 42. the man sinned onely against God and himselfe, the woman, against God, her selfe and her neighbour: beside, the woman was first deceived, and became the author and beginner of transgression. Therefore the opinion of them is not here to bee allowed, who doe either aggravate Adams sinne, or extenuate the womans: of the first sort is the author of the questions upon the old Testament under Augustines name, who ascribeth idolatry to Adam. quest. 83. whereas hee desired not to be worshipped as God, but onely in knowledge to be like unto God: neither can Adam be properly charged with covetousnesse, as Hugo S. Vict. doth, unlesse it be taken for an immoderate desire of any good thing, more than is fit: of the other sort is Cajetan, who would lessen the womans offence, both in the thing desired, which was the knowledge of good and evill, the externall act, in coveting the fruit which was faire to the eye, in regard of her sex, being a woman, and the weaker vessell. But this notwithstanding, the womans offence in the nature thereof, was the greater, as before is shewed.

Adams sinne neither is to be aggravated, nor the womans to be extenuate.

QVEST. XIII. Whether Eve added to the commandement, and spake doubtfully.

Vers. 3. Neither shall ye touch it lest ye dye, &c. 1. Ab. Ezra. noteth, that the serpent useth the name Elohim, speaking of God, not Iehovah, because hee knew it not: But that is not the reason, for the woman useth also the name, Elohim, who was not ignorant of Iehovah: but Satan of purpose forbeareth to use that name Iehovah, which is a name of mercy, and urgeth in the name Elohim the severity of God. Mercer. 2. Neither doth the woman adde any thing to Gods precept, that they should not touch it, but faithfully expoundeth the meaning of the precept: some Hebrewes think, that Satan took occasion hereby to move the woman to touch the fruit; that seeing she died not by touching, shee should though the Hebrew particle pen, be not alwayes so taken; yet it appeareth so to bee used by the woman: because Satan hereby taketh occasion to put her out of doubt, that shee should not dye at all. See Muscul. Iun. though Mercerus herein dissent from them.

QVEST. XIIII. Why Eve gave to her husband.

Vers. 6. She gave to her husband with her, &c. 1. This sheweth not, that Adam was at this time with Eve, as some Hebrewes thinke, he might come before the tentation was finished. The meaning is, that he might eat with her, that is, as she had done. 2. Some thinke that before the woman did forbeare to eat of the fruit, supposing it was poyson, and so present death: but the truth is, that hitherto she had abstained in obedience to the commandement. 3. Neither did she give it to Adam, lest, if she died, he might have taken unto him another woman, as some Hebrewes imagine; for shee was the onely woman in the world: but she was desirous to make her husband partaker of her happinesse, as she thought. Mercer.

QVEST. XV. How many wayes the eyes of the body and minde are said to be opened.

Vers. 7. Their eyes were opened. Their eyes of the body and minde are said divers wayes to bee opened, the eyes of the body three wayes. 1. When they that are blinde, are made to see, as Christ caused the blind to see. 2. When he that hath his eyes, seeth somewhat, which he saw not before, as Balaam his eyes were opened, when hee saw the Angell, with a naked sword. 3. When they which see discerne that which they perceived not before; as the Disciples discerned Christ in the breaking of bread. The eyes of the minde are opened likewise three wayes. 1. When men are brought from ignorance and darknesse to the knowledge of Christ. Act. 26, 18. 2. When men are brought by affliction to know themselves, as the prodigall childe is said to come to himselfe, Luke 15. 17. 3. When a mans sinne, when it is committed, presenteth it selfe, as Judas sinne did, when hee had betrayed Christ. Thus the eyes of Adam and Eves minde were opened to see their sinne, and the eyes of their body were opened to see and discerne the deformity of those parts, which were comely before: Muscul.

QVEST. XVI. How their eyes are said to be opened.

Vers. 7. Their eyes were opened, and knew that they were naked. 1. Not that they were either blinde before, for how could Eva have seene the fruit of the tree that it was faire to the eye, if shee had beene blinde? 2. Neither as Iosephus thinketh: lib. 1. antiquit. c. 1. by the eating of the forbidden fruit had they gotten a sharper wit and understanding, for then the eating thereof, had bin a gaine unto them. 3. Neither is it so said, as R. Salomon conjectureth, because now first they began to have knowledge of evill; for as they had knowledge of good before, so as by the contrary, they had the knowledge of evill also: but now indeed they know evill by miserable experience. 4. But now their eies were opened, the eyes of their minde and conscience, to see and acknowledge their sinnes and disobedience, wherein they were blinded before, and to feele the rebellion and diſobedience of their members in their diſordered and unruly motions, which maketh them for ſhame to cover them; which uſe of vailing and covering the ſecret parts, even nature hath taught the barbarous nations, which even in their baths, as Auguſtine writeth, will not have their unſeemely parts uncovered: the like Strabo reporteth of the Indians, and Diodorus Siculus of the Æthiopians, that going naked in the reſt of their body, uſe to cover their ſecret parts.

Quest. XVII. Why they made aprons of fig-leaves.

[And they ſewed fig-tree leaves:] 1. Not becauſe the fruit thereof, whereof they had taſted was forbidden, for they would ſo much more have abhorred the leaves thereof. 2. Neither to betoken the deſire of the fleſh now procured by ſin, which they ſay is provoked by the rubbing of the fig leaves. 3. Nor yet as the teſtimony of repentance, becauſe fig leaves doe pricke and ſting the fleſh. 4. Neither yet need wee run to allegories: that this covering with leaves or with fruit, betokeneth the vaine excuſe and defence of ſinne. 5. But they made them aprons of fig leaves, both being fit for their breadth, and ready at hand, for no other cauſe than to hide their nakedneſſe, whereof they were now aſhamed.

Quest. XVIII. Why man was created naked.

NOw if it be further asked, why man was created naked. I anſwer, 1. with Baſil, leſt his mind might have beene occupied in ſeeking for outward things, and ſo withdrawne from better meditations: God having a purpoſe to cloath his body with ſome excellent brightnes, ſuch as is in the Angels. 2. Or with Ambroſe, that being not naked and deſtitute of the ornaments of vertue, they leſſe needed outward ornaments. 3. Whereas clothing ſerveth for neceſſity, to defend from the cold, and for honeſty and comelineſſe, Adam before his fall in neither reſpect needed cloathing, being neither ſubject to heat or cold, nor yet having any uncomelineſſe in his members. 4. Adde hereunto, that whereas other creatures were created with their naturall cloathing, birds with feathers, beaſts with haire and wooll, fiſh with ſcales, man was created naked, that hee might exerciſe his wit and be profitably occupyed in the invention of arts for the neceſſary uſe of man.

Quest. XIX. Why the voyce of the Lord was heard in the coole of the day.

Verſ. 8. THey heard the voyce of the Lord walking in the garden in the coole of the day.] 1. This was neither ſome great wind, or terrible voyce, which went before God, as when he ſpake to Elias, to betoken the Lords comming: for the Chalde paraphraſt tranſlateth [the voice of the word of God.] 2. Neither yet need we run to allegories, as with Irenæus, that this walking of God in the coole of the day, did ſhadow forth the comming of Chriſt toward the end, as the evening of the world. 3. Nor with Gregory, that man having loſt the fervent heat of charity, did now ſlumber in the ſhadow of ſin, as in the coolneſſe of the aire. 4. Nor with Rupertus, that as men riſen from ſleepe doe walke in the coole aire, ſo God now awaked commeth forth, having beene as it were aſleepe before while hee ſuffered Satan to tempt our parents. 5. But the meaning is plaine, that after man had tranſgreſſed, in the eventide, or ſunne-ſet, when the winde in thoſe countries adjoyning to the ſea, uſeth moſt to be ſtirring, the Lord ſheweth himſelfe to Adam, and calleth him to account, the winde of the day brought the ſound of Gods voice to Adam. Iun. So then, this word walking, is neither to be referred to Adam, nor yet properly to God, but he heard Gods voyce walking, and comming toward him afarre off: Aug. And this winde was no extraordinary tempeſt, as Mercer: ſhewing Gods approaching; neither doth it properly deſcribe the time of the day: neither the morning, as Calvin: noonetide, as the Septuagint or eventide, as the Hebrewes (although I thinke it moſt probable, that Adam fell in the evening of the ſame day of his creation) but it expreſſeth only the manner, how Gods voyce was brought by the whisking wind to Adam: ſome, doe take haiom, not for the day, but the ſea, from whence the lowdeſt winds doe come; but that is not ſo proper in this place. The voyce which Adam heard, was not a ſound only of Gods comming, as Iun. but it was the ſame voice, which is expreſſed, v. 9. when God called to Adam, firſt afarre off, when Adam hid himſelfe, and then neere hand.

Lib. 3. adverſ. hæreſ. cap. 37. lib. 28. moral. c. 2.

Quest. XX. Why Adam hid himſelfe.

ADam hideth himſelfe, when God firſt began to call unto him, 1. not for that as Irenæus thinketh, hee thought himſelfe unworthy to come into Gods preſence: 2. or, as Auguſtine, did he it only as a man amazed, not knowing which way to turne himſelfe: 3. but being guilty of tranſgreſſion, he thought ſimply to hide himſelfe from the preſence of God, as Iob expoundeth, If I have hid my ſin as Adam. &c. Iob 31. 33.

Lib. 3. adverſ. hæreſ. cap. 37. Lib. 11. de Gen. ad liter. cap. 33.

Quest. XXI. How God diverſly ſpeaketh unto man.

Verſ. 9. THe Lord called to the man] God diverſly hath uſed to ſpeake unto man: either by himſelfe by his ſecret inſpiration and revelation, as he did to Iſaiah, 2 Kin. 20. 4. or by his meſſengers the Angels: who ſpake ſometimes by voyce only, as Ioh. 12. 28. there came a voice from heaven: ſometime by viſion internall, ſuch as was the ladder, that Iacob ſaw in his dreame, Gen. 28. externall, ſometime in humane ſhape, as to Abraham, Gen. 18. by other creatures either without ſenſe, as by fire in the buſh to Moſes, or having ſenſe, as the Angel ſpake in Balaams aſſe. Now the queſtiō is, which of theſe waies God talked with Adam: for I neither thinke with Gregory, that Adam per Angelū increpationis verba audivit, that Adam was rebuked by an Angel: for v. 17. the Lord ſaith, becauſe thou haſt eaten of the tree, whereof I cōmanded thee, &c. the ſame God now ſpeaketh to Adam, that gave the firſt commandement concerning the tree: neither with Auguſtine, to whom ſubſcribeth Mercerus, per creaturam viſibiliter factum, in that Adam heard the voice of God, it was done visibly by some creature: for mention onely is made, that they heard the voice of God, vers. 8,10. they saw him not, that spake to him. Therefore it is like, that as God spake to Elias, 1. *King.*19. to our Saviour Christ, Iob 12.28. to Moses in the mount: *yee saw no image in the day that the Lord spake unto you, Deut.*4.15. so Adam onely heard the voice of God, he saw him not.

In cap. 38. Iob.

In Genes. ad lit. l.11.c.15. Adam heard Gods voice, he saw him not.

Quest. XXII. Why God asketh Adam, where art thou?

Where art thou? 1. God was not ignorant where Adam was, for no place be it never so secret, is hid from God, but by this question God draweth Adam to confession and acknowledgement of his sinne: as afterward the Lord for the same cause asked Cain, where his brother Abel was. 2. Neither doe we refuse Ambrose collection, who saith it was not tam interrogatio, quam increpatio, so much an interrogation, as an increpation, that Adam should consider not in what place, but in what state he was now, and from whence fallen. 3. Pererius upon this place noteth well, that God by thus saying, did declare that Adam was one of those, to whom the Lord saith, *I know not whence yee are, Luk.*13.27. that by his sinne he was separated and estranged from God.

Lib. de par. c.44.

Quest. XXIII. How the Serpent is accursed.

Vers. 14. The Lord said to the Serpent, because thou hast done this, &c. 1. God curseth the Serpent because hee was Satans organ and instrument: as this standeth with Gods justice to punish the instrument with the principall: and he that lay with a beast, they were both to bee burned, Levit. 20.15. And though the Serpent had no understanding, yet God curseth him for mans instruction, that he might see how much this their action in seducing him, was displeasing to God, Mercer. 2. Some doe referre the whole curse to the Serpent, some apply it wholly to Satan, by way of allegory: some understand the whole, literally of the Serpent, mystically of Satan, Mercer. But the better course is, to give part to the Serpent in this verse, part to Satan in the next, Iun. Calvin. 3. Some doe understand the Serpents curse, of the shortnesse of life: but other beasts are as of short continuance: some Hebrewes understand the going upon his belly, of the Serpents long being with young, which is seven yeares together: the Wolfe, Lion, and Beare, and the Ape, bring forth once in two or three yeares, the Viper in seven yeares: but if this were the curse, then woman that goeth nine moneths with childe, should be of worse condition in this behalfe, than other beasts, as the Fox that goeth but six moneths, the Sow sixty dayes: the meaning of the curse is, that the Serpent should be detested of all other creatures, as noxious and poysonfull, and should be marked with this ignominie, to creepe upon his breast, Mercer. 4. Gechon by Hieronie is translated breast, Onkelous readeth the belly, the Septuagint both belly and breast: because the Serpents breast and belly is altogether, and he goeth upon them both: the word Halach, to walke, is not only given to those creatures that walke on foot, but to other things that move howsoever: as to Rivers, *Gen.*2.14. to Noahs Arke, *Gen.*7.18. Muscul. 5. The Serpent did neither goe upright before, neither at that instant onely when Satan used him: but whereas he did extoll himselfe against man, he is brought to his first condition: and his creeping and feeding of the earth, which should not have beene ignominious before, is accursed and made reproachfull now, Mercer, Calvin.

Quest. XXIV. Of the enmity betweene the seed of the woman and the Serpent.

Who is understood to be the seed of the woman.

I will put enmity betweene thy seed and her seed. 1. This first is truly understood of Christ, quia solus ita semen mulieris est, ut non etiam viri semen sit, who was so the seed of the woman, as he was not of the man: and betweene Christ and Satan the greatest enmity was, who consented to him in nothing. 2. We may also understand by the seed of the woman, all the Elect, and by the seed of the Serpent, all the wicked, who are the sons of the Devill, as Christ said to the unbeleeving Jewes, *Yee are of your father the Devill, Ioh.*8.44. betweene whom, the Elect and the wicked, there shall be perpetuall enmity: and therefore Rupertus saith, the Scriptures are called the booke of the battells of the Lord, Num. 21. which declareth the continuall combate betweene the Church of God and the world. 3. Part of this sentence is literally true in the Serpent: for as Rupertus noteth, if a woman tread upon the Sepent with her bare foot, he presently dieth; but if he first bite her heele, the woman dieth of that poyson. But howsoever this be true, it is most certaine, that betweene man and those venomous creatures, there is a naturall hatred, that one cannot endure the sight and presence of the other. 4. Some doe marvell, why the Serpent is not made mute and dumbe, seeing Satan abused his tongue and mouth to tempt the woman: the Hebrewes thinke that the punishment is included, in that dust is appointed to bee his meat: for such whose mouthes are filled with earth, cannot speake. And to this day we see that the punishment remaineth upon the Serpent, who maketh no perfect sound as other cattell doe, but hisseth onely. 5. Satan was accursed before God before, nor any hope of recovery remained, but now the sentence is declared to the comfort of man, and Satans state declared to be irrepairable: for his punishment shall endure all the daies of his life, that is, for ever. 6. Some by the heele, understand the end or extremity, as Onkelos: that in the end the Devill as a Serpent shall bite the heele: some the inferiour part of the soule, some the humanity of Christ, which Satan pinched at when Christ was put to death: but thereby Christ gave him a deadly blow upon the head. But generally it signifieth, the weaker parts of Christs body, which is the Church: that Satan shall bee nibling and biting at the heele, as a Serpent doth, when hee is overwhelmed and turned upon his backe: that is, hee shall touch the members of Christ, and trie them with many temptations, but hee shall not be able to hurt them, Mercer. 7. By the dust also, some understand terrene and and earthly things, wherein the Devill is converſant, being caſt downe from heaven: ſome the graves and ſepulchers of dead men, where the ſpirits appeare: but this clauſe is properly referred to the Serpent, who as he was Satans inſtrument, to cauſe man to ſinne and returne to the duſt, ſo that he ſhould feed of the duſt.

Quest. XXV. Of the ſorrowes of women.

Verſ. 16. I will greatly increaſe thy ſorrowes.] There is a threefold puniſhment inflicted upon the woman, as Rupertus well noteth, pro ſeductione, conceptus multiplicitas, pro gula oblectamento uteri dolor, pro ſcandalo, quod uiro exhibuit ſervitutis pœna, &c. becauſe ſhe was ſeduced, ſhe hath ſorrow in conceiving, for the delight of her eye, the paine of her wombe for the offence in enticing her husband, ſubjection unto him. But where the Lord ſaith, I will multiply thy ſorrowes and conceptions.] 1. It is neither with Oleaſter to be referred to the bearing of the child ſo long in the womb, for that is agreeable to nature, and our Saviour was ſo borne in his mothers womb, and therefore this was no part of the curſe. 2. Neither doth the curſe conſiſt in the multiplicity, as Rupertus, becauſe many are borne, which are ordained to deſtruction: for ſimply the fruit of the womb is a bleſſing, Pſal. 127. 3. But hereby the many ſorrowes are ſignified which women doe endure in the conception of their children: as faintneſſe, loathing of meat, longing for ſtrange things, griefe, ache, unwilſomneſſe, perill of abortion, and ſuch like. Secondly, whereas women ſhould before have brought forth without pain, now their travaile is ful of labour, in ſo much as many have miſcarried in the birth of their children, as Rachel: and it is well obſerved of Ariſtotle, that no other creature with ſuch difficulty bringeth forth her young, as woman doth, which is an evident demonſtration of this puniſhment laid upon them. Thirdly, where it is ſaid, the womans deſire ſhall bee to her husband, and he ſhall rule over her: 1. It is not underſtood of the naturall deſire the woman hath eſtſoone of her husbands company, notwithſtanding her paínfull travaile, which is no puniſhment but a delight unto them: 2. But of that ſubjection, whereby by the law of nature practiſed among Pagans, women doe depend upon their husbands. The woman ſhould before have beene obedient to man, but of a loving ſociety to be made partaker of all his counſells, not of an urging neceſſity as now: whereby the woman in reſpect of her weakneſſe, both with her will dependeth of her husband, for her direction and proviſion of things neceſſary, and againſt her will ſhe often endureth the hard yoke of an unequall commander.

Quest. XXVI. How the earth was curſed unto man.

Verſ. 17. Curſed be the earth, &c. 1. It is to be obſerved, that the Serpent is onely pronounced accurſed, becauſe his ſtate is remedileſſe and deſperate: but neither the man or woman are accurſed, for whom there is hope. 2. The earth is accurſed not in it ſelfe, but in reſpect of the uſe of man: as S. Paul ſaith, that the creatures doe yet groane with us together. 3. Some Hebrewes note, that ſome men are exempted from this puniſhment, to eat their bread in the ſweat of their browes, as Kings and Princes: but no women are exempted from their puniſhment, becauſe the woman both ſinned her ſelfe, and enticed the man, ſo did not Adam: but this ſentence is generall againſt all men, that although one particular onely be expreſſed of the labour and toyle in tilling of the ground, yet therein are contained all other the cares and troubles of this life; from the which none are free. 4. Some Hebrewes thinke that in mans innocencie, he ſhould not have travelled ſo for his bread, as in threſhing, grinding, baking of it: and it may very well bee, that although man ſhould not then have lived idlely without labour, yet his labour ſhould have beene pleaſant, rather for delight than neceſſity, Mercer.

Man ſhould not have returned to duſt if he had not ſinned.

Quest. XXVII. Of the growing of Thiſtles.

Verſ. 18. Thornes alſo and thiſtles, &c. 1. The earth ſhould have brought forth thornes and thiſtles before; but now it bringeth them forth as noxious and hurtfull to man: 2. And whereas he is bid to eat the herbe of the field, this is neither interlaced as a conſolation, as Calvin, for all this here uttered belongeth unto mans puniſhment; neither is man here deprived of the eating of all other fruit ſaving hearbs. But here the Lord ſheweth, how man had deſerved by his ſinne to bee deprived of the pleaſant fruit of Paradiſe, and to live of the herb, as other bruit beaſts: though by herb, corne is eſpecially ſignified, ordained for the uſe of man. 3. But where mention is made of the ſweat of the browes, by this particular all other kinde of labour in ſeverall vocations, as of Magiſtrates Miniſters, handi-crafts men is implied, Luther. Likewiſe under one kinde of labour and ſorrow, all other miſeries and cares of this life are comprehended, Calvin. 4. Yet God ſheweth mercie in inflicting of theſe puniſhments, in turning them from eternall to temporall. 5. And whereas the Lord giveth this as a reaſon, that man ſhould returne to duſt, becauſe he was taken out of it; this is not ſo to be underſtood as though he ſhould have turned to duſt if hee had not ſinned: for as S. Paul ſheweth, death came in by ſinne (Adam ſhould have beene tranſlated and changed, as Henoch and Elias were, and they ſhall be, that remaine alive at the comming of Chriſt.) But while man ſtood in his integrity and happineſſe, he remembred not his terrene beginning, as hee conſidered not his nakedneſſe; but now the Lord maketh it an argument of his mortall condition, and bringeth it to his remembrance, to humble him thereby, Mercer.

Quest. XXVIII. Why Eva is called the mother of the living.

Verſ. 20. And the man called his wives name Hevah.] 1. Neither as Lyranus thinketh, is ſhe ſo called, becauſe ſhe was the mother of all which live in ſorrow and miſerie. 2. Neither (as Rupertus) that Adam of incredulity ſo named her, not beleeving that ſhee ſhould returne to duſt, as the Lord had had ſaid, but that he and his poſterity ſhould live. 3. Neither need we referre it to the birth of Chriſt, who brought true life into the world: the woman cannot be truly ſaid to be the mother of the ſpirituall life, ſhe was the mother of him that was the Author of ſpirituall life. 4. And it is but a fond conceit to derive Ave, the firſt word of the Angels ſalutation to Marie of Eva, as though ſhe repaired what was loſt by Eva, for the one is a Latine word, the other Hebrew: neither did the Angell ſay Ave, all haile, but the tranſlater, and the right word is not Eva, but Hevah. 5. Neither is Adam here to be noted of inſolency and pride, that having received ſentence of death, doth give unto the woman a name of life: but Adam being confirmed by Gods promiſe concerning the ſeed of the woman, that although they themſelves were mortall, yet by them mankinde ſhould be propagated, ſo calleth his wife. 6. But the conceit of R Levi here hath no ground, that ſhee is called the mother of all living, that is of bruit beaſts, in reſpect of the ſtupidity and dulneſſe of her minde: for by living, man is here underſtood, as ſometime he is called fleſh, becauſe of his excellencie among the reſt. 7. Neither was this name given unto Eva before they had ſinned, when Adam gave the names to the reſt of the creatures, as Pererius thinketh with the Hebrewes, nor yet was it given ſo long after, when he had ſome children, as ſome other thinke; but the name was given at ſuch time and place, as is here ſet downe; before Adam called her Iſhah, as if you ſhould ſay, Manneſſe, as a name of the whole ſex, but here he calleth her Hevah, as by her proper name; ſo that theſe words, becauſe ſhe was the mother of all living, were not the words of Adam, who yet by propheſie did foreſee that it ſhould ſo bee, but Moſes inſerteth this ſentence. Mercer.

Lib. 3. de Trinit. c. 26.

Quest. XXIX. What the coats of skinnes were which God made for Adam and Eve.

Verſ. 21. Vnto Adam alſo and his wife did the Lord God make coats of skins and cloathed them. 1. Theſe coats of skinnes were not their bodies, as Origen, with ſome other of the fathers ſeeme to thinke: for God had made man before of the duſt of the earth, cap. 2. 7. 2. Neither were theſe coats made of the barkes of trees, as Barcephas, and Gregor. Nazianzene: for the Hebrew word gnor, is no where found in that ſenſe. 3. Neither is Theodorets reaſon ſound, that they could not bee the skinnes of beaſts, which were created but two and two, and ſo if any of them had beene ſlaine, the generation of that kinde ſhould have beene hindred; for that there were no more created but two of a ſort is not extant in Scripture. 4. Neither need we imagine with Hugo, that theſe skinnes might be made of the Elements, or ſome other matter: we are not to runne to miracles, where an ordinary courſe is offered. 5. Some would have theſe skinnes made of ſheepes wooll, but that is not skinnes. 6. Ionathan of the Serpents skin, but this is too curious. 7. Neither did the Lord onely teach man how to make him garments for his neceſſary uſe afterward, for the text is, that he cloathed them, that is actually, preſently. 8. Therefore there is no inconveniencie to ſay, that God cauſed skins, whether of ſlaine beaſts, or otherwiſe, by the miniſtery of his Angels, or how elſe it pleaſed him, to be brought to Adam; whereof he made them coats.

Theod. queſt. 35. in Geneſ.

Quest. XXX. Why God cloathed man in beaſts skinnes.

And thus it pleaſed God to cloath man, not for any ſuch typicall ſignification, as either to betoken the incarnation of Chriſt, that was cloathed with our fleſh, or the cloathing of the nakedneſſe of the ſoule by repentance. But for theſe cauſes, 1. to ſhew him how his mortall body might bee defended from cold and other injuries: which uſe of skinne or leather cloathing was firſt uſed in the world. 2. To cover his nakedneſſe for comelineſſe ſake: and therefore the Chalde Paraphraſt calleth them veſtimenta honoris, garments of honour. 3. To teach man, that it was lawfull to uſe the beaſts as for meat, ſo for cloathing. 4. And to give a rule, that modeſt and decent, not coſtly or ſumptuous apparell ſhould be uſed. 5. And that he might know what difference is betweene Gods works and mans invention, betweene coats of leather and figge leaves. 6. And to put him in minde of mortality, by his cloathing of dead beaſts skins: as Origen well noteth: talib. indici oportebat peccatorem, ut eſſent mortalitatis indicium.

Origen. hom. 1. in Levit.

Quest. XXXI. How Adam is ſaid to become as God.

Verſ. 22. Behold man is become as one of us. 1. Not as one of the Angels, as Oleaſter interpreteth, or that the Lord ſpeaketh in the plurall number, as is the manner of great perſons: for this phraſe of ſpeech, was not uſed in thoſe dayes, neither are the Angels and God alike. 2. But by us the Trinity is vnderſtood; and the reſt is uttered, ironice, by way of deriſion Adam is rebuked: that he came farre ſhort to be as God, as Sathan promiſed him: either as God the Father in power, or as the ſonne in wiſedome, or as the holy ghoſt in goodneſſe, holineſſe. Verba ſunt inſultantis, as Auguſtine ſaith, quod non ſolum factus fuerit, qualis eſſe voluit, ſed nec illud, quod factus fuerat conſervavit: they are as the words of one that inſulteth, becauſe he was ſo farre from being made that which he deſired, that hee could not keepe that which he was made. And as Rupertus, non ſolum nequaquam ſicut Deus, ſed pene factus erat, ſicut diabolus. He was ſo farre from being as God, that he was almoſt become as the Devill: if Gods mercie had not prevented him. 3. I rather preferre this ſenſe, with Mercerus and Calvin, that God ſpeaketh ironically, even in Adams hearing: then either with Iunius and Pagnine to referre theſe words to the time paſt, when man was in the ſtate of innocencie: or to make it an affirmative ſpeech of the time preſent, with Onkelos: that Adam now of himſelfe knew good and evill, as God: for then he had gained, and not loſt by his tranſgreſſion; he knew evill by experience, as he did not before, but he had no ſuch perfect knowledge, as in the Angels: therefore the Lord here derideth mans folly, and alludeth to the vaine words of Satan, who promiſed they ſhould be as God. 4. And where he ſaith, leſt he put forth his hands, &c. by living for ever. 1. Neither long life is meant. 2. Nor that God herein had compaſſion of man, that being brought Lib 11. Geneſ. ad lit. c. 33.

Lib. 3. comment. in Geneſ. c. 28.

brought to so miserable an estate, he should not alwayes live in it. 3. Neither that if he did eat of the tree of life, he should have lived for ever, as Calvin thinketh, that God vitam conjungit cum externa tessera: did joyne life with the outward signe, for the tree of it selfe gave not life, but was a symbole only of immortality, which man should have received of God, if he had persevered in his obedience. Muscul. 5. But seeing the Lord had deprived man of life, he taketh away also the symbole of it: and speaketh according to the judgement of man, who foolishly might thinke to recover his estate by eating of the tree of life: and therefore by putting forth his hand, is expressed that voluntary action, whereby man of purpose would have eaten of the tree of life, to releeve himselfe, Mercer. 6. Now although it had not beene materiall, though Adam before his fall had eaten of the tree of life, for it could not have helped him now: yet I rather thinke with Ramban, that he did not eat of it at all.

Adam being deprived of life, lost also the symbole and signe of it.

QVEST. XXXII. At what time Adam fell.

Vers. 23. Therefore the Lord sent him forth from the garden of Eden.] Here a great question is moved, how long Adam continued in Paradise, and when he was cast out of Paradise. Some would have Adam to continue so long in Paradise, as Christ lived yeares on earth: others the space of forty dayes, and that Christ fasted so many dayes for a remedy against Adams intemperancie in Paradise so long: others thinke that Adam fell the next day after his creation, upon the day of rest, as Tostatus: but it is not like, that God upon that day which was a time of rejoycing, would execute judgement, nor curse in that day, which he blessed: some thinke that Adam fell upon the eighth day of his creation, that day seven night wherein he was made, as Pererius: but the most approved opinion is, that Adam fell the same day of his creation, which seemeth to be most probable for these reasons.

1. The Angels that fell, presently after their creation sinned: as our Saviour saith, that the Devill, non steterit in veritate, did not stand or continue in the truth, Ioh. 8. 44. Hereunto Augustine consenteth, Factus continuo se à luce veritatis avertit: as soone as he was made he presently turned aside from the light of truth: unde angelicæ vitæ dulcedinem non gustavit, quam non acceptam fastidivit, sed nolendo accipere, deseruit & amisit: so he tasted not the sweetnesse of the angelicall life, which he loathed not, being received but by disdaining to receive it, lost it. So it is like, that man also essoone lost the benefit of the creation. 2. Our Saviour saith, that the devill was a murtherer from the beginning, Ioh. 8. 44. not of the world, but of mans creation: therefore at the very first he set upon them. 3. The subtilty of the Devill doth insinuate as much: who would then assault them, when they were least able to resist, before they by experience were confirmed in their obedience. 4. And it was fit, that man sinning should be cast out of Paradise, before he had fully tasted of the pleasure thereof, lest he afterward might have beene tormented with the losse, and attempted to returne. 5. And it is cleare by the serpents first onset: Hath God said, ye shall not eat of every tree; &c. that they had not yet tasted of any fruit, but at the very first the forbidden fruit was offered before their appetite had beene served with any other. 6. Adam had not yet eaten of the tree of life, as is evident, vers. 21. lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life: and therefore Augustine is in an errour, that he did eat of other trees, and specially of the tree of life: but if they had stayed any time in Paradise, it is not unlike, but they should have tasted of the tree of life, it being in the heart of Paradise, where Adams chiefe aboad was. 7. Likewise seeing presently after the creation, they were bidden increase and multiply; it is not other like but the man should have knowne his wife in Paradise, if they had stayed there so long, and so they should have gotten children without sinne. To this purpose Augustine saith, Quasi in ea ætate facti credendi sunt, ut expectanda esset maturitas pubertatis, aut non illud tunc legitimum esset, cum primum fieri potuit: as though they were created of such an age, which was not fit for procreation, or that it had not beene lawfull (for them to come together) as soone as might be. 8. What became of Lions and Beares, that lived of flesh, all this while of Adams being in Paradise? they could not fast so long, and flesh they did not eat, because there was no death before mans fall: and they did not feed on grasse: for then their nature should not so soone have beene changed to devoure flesh. 9. Never any man in earth (Christ onely excepted) kept the Sabbath without sin: the Apostle saith, He that is entred into his rest, hath also ceased from his owne workes, as God did from his, Heb. 4. 10. it is the rest onely of Christ, where there shall be cessation from all the workes of sinne. But that rest which Adam should have kept in Paradise, was not Christs rest: therefore he kept no rest there without sin: he fell then before the Sabbath. 10. That place lastly maketh to this purpose, Psal. 49. 13. Adam lodged not one night in honour: for so are the words if they be properly translated: the word is lun, which signifieth to lodge or stay all night: and thus divers of the Rabbines doe expound this place of Adam. Upon these reasons it seemeth most probable that Adam did not continue one night in Paradise, but fell in the same day of his creation. Of this opinion are Irenæus, Cyrillus, Epiphanius, Moses, Barcephas, Philoxenus, Ephrem. with others, rehearsed by Pererius upon this place: though he himselfe be of another opinion.

Divers reasons shewing that man fell the day of his creation. De Genes. ad lit. l. 11. 23.

That objection, that so much businesse, as the giving of names to the creatures by Adam, the temptation of Eva by the Serpent, and seduction of Adam by woman, could not be dispatched in so small a time of six or seven houres, may easily bee answered. 1. It is evident by the text, that the imposition of names was performed the day of his creation before the woman was made, Gen. 2. 20. and it asked no long time in regard of the singular wisdome and knowledge of Adam, who was able at the first sight of the creatures without any long search or triall of their nature, to give them fit names. 2. Of Satans nimblenesse in hastening the tentation, and insinuating himselfe to the woman, there need bee made no doubt; the celerity and agility of spirits is great. 3. It was the coole of the day, about the Eventide, when sentence was given against Adam: so that in the space of eight or nine houre from his creation to his fall, all these matters might easily be done.

The contrary objections answered.

Quest. XXXIII. Whether Adam was cast out.

Verſ. 24. THus hee caſt out man, &c. 1. Where the Septuagint adde, and placed him before Paradiſe; whereupon ſome writers have deſcanted of the cauſes why Adam was placed before Paradiſe, that by the ſight thereof, he remembring from whence he was fallen, might more effectually repent his ſinne: the originall is otherwiſe, that not Adam, but the Cherubims were placed before Paradiſe. 2. Whereas Theodoret thinketh, that theſe Cherubims were not Angels, but certaine terrible viſions ſet to feare man from that paſſage, it may be otherwiſe gathered out of Scripture, where wee read, that the Cherubims pictured over the Arke, were beautifull faces repreſenting Angels: and therefore the Prophet compareth the king of Tirus glittering in his pretious ſtones to the Cherub. Ezech. 28.14. 3. Concerning the fiery ſhaken ſword, we refuſe, 1. either the collection of Tertullian, who taketh it for torrida zona, the parching countrie under the æquinoctiall: or of Liranus, who would have it to be a certaine wall of fire about Paradiſe: or of Rupertus, that underſtandeth it of purgatorie fire: for all theſe are deceived about the tranſlation; the word ſignifieth not a fiery ſword ſhaken, but rather a ſharp ſword ſhaken, as the Chalde paraphraſt readeth, which by the ſhaking ſeemeth to glitter as the flame of fire: or becauſe the word Lahat ſignifieth to inflame, it is not unlike, but that ſome fierie inflammation, in the likeneſſe of a ſword, might be ſet as a terrour in that place, Iun.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Spirits have power to poſſeſſe bodies, and ſpeake out of them.

WHereas Satan uſeth the ſerpent, and out of his trunke frameth a voice: we neede not thinke it ſtrange, that the Devill hath this power to poſſeſſe the bodies of beaſts, and to ſpeake out of them: which though Iulian the Apoſtata counted a fable, Cyrillus learnedly ſheweth the like to have beene done out of the heathen writers, as how in Homer, Achilles horſe inſpired by Iuno, foretelleth his death: Porphyrius writeth, that the river Cauſus ſaluted Pythagoras, ſaying; Ave Pythagora: and Philoſtratus, that a certaine Elme ſaluted Apollonius. Iſogonus Cithienſis ſaith, that in Rhodes a certaine bull conſecrate to Iupiter did ſpeake. The Pagans therefore and Atheiſts finding the like in their owne writers have no reaſon to deride this ſtorie of the Devils ſpeaking in the ſerpent. Perer.

WHereas Satan was the firſt that inveigled the woman with ambitious deſire, ſaying, yee ſhall be as Gods, verſ. 5. The opinion of Proſper is diſcovered not to be ſound, that our firſt parents were tickled with pride before the tentation, and therefore were permitted of God to fall into it: for this difference is made betweene the ſinne of man, and of the Angels: he fell being ſeduced, but the other of their owne pride without a ſeducer tranſgreſſed.

3. Doct. Adam if he had not ſinned, ſhould not have died.

Verſ. 19. DUſt thou art, and to duſt thou ſhalt returne: hence it is gathered, that death was not naturall to man, but hapned becauſe of ſinne: contrary to the opinion of Ioſephus, that thinketh, that man ſhould have died though he had not ſinned, but his life ſhould have beene much longer. It was the opinion alſo of the Pelagians, that death was in mans nature, and ſprang not from ſinne. Not much differing is the ſentence of the Popiſh writers, that man was created mortall by the condition of his nature, yet preſerved by a ſupernaturall gift: the contrary is evident from hence, becauſe it was never ſaid to man before he had ſinned, that he ſhould returne to duſt.

4. Doct. The Trinity proved out of the Old Teſtament.

Verſ. 22. BEhold the man is become as one of us. This is an evident place againſt the Iewes, to prove the Trinity: for here the Lord ſpeaketh of more than one: neither can it be anſwered, that it is but a phraſe of ſpeech to uſe the plurall for the ſingular: for here is more than a phraſe: this ſpeech could not be true, to ſay, one of vs, if there were no more than one perſon in the God-head.

5. Doct. Why God ſuffered Adam to be tempted and fall.

FUrther, whereas the queſtion will be demanded, how it ſtood with Gods juſtice and holineſſe, to ſuffer man to be tempted, whom he foreſaw ſhould fall. Our anſwer is this: 1. we ſay with the Apoſtle, O the deepeneſſe of the riches both of the wiſdome and knowledge of God! how vnſearchable are his iudgements, and his waies paſt finding out? Rom. 11. 33. And Auguſtine maketh the ſame anſwer to this queſtion; Altitudinem conſilij ejus penetrare non poſſum, &c. I cannot enter into the depth of Gods counſell. 2. Yet for as much, as God had given man free-will and ſufficient ſtrength to reſiſt this tentation, if he would, it was fit he ſhould be left to exerciſe his ſtrength: as Auguſtine againe ſaith, Adminiſtrat omnia, quæ creavit, ut etiam ipſa proprios motus exercere ſinat: God doth ſo governe all things, which he created, that yet hee ſuffereth them to exerciſe their owne motions. 3. God might juſtly ſuffer this to be done, becauſe hee did know how to turne Adams fall unto good. Deus permiſit hominem tentari, quem ſciebat eſſe caſurum quia ſimul videbat, eo caſu ſe uti poſſe ad miſericordiam, &c. God ſuffered man to be tempted, whom he knew ſhould fall, becauſe he ſaw how to uſe his fall, to declare his mercy and juſtice, while he juſtly puniſhed ſome out of the ſame damned maſſe, and delivered others in mercy.

Doct. VI. Adam not damned.

WHereas v. 15. a promise is made concerning Christ, that the seede of the woman should breake the serpents head: from hence we infer, that our first parents, though they sinned, yet were by faith in the Messiah to come restored, and not utterly condemned which was the heresie of the Tatianes. Augustin. de hæres. c. 23. In the booke of wisdome we read, that wisdome preserved the first father of the world, and brought him out of his offence, c. 10. 1. which is agreeable to the Canonicall scripture: because Adam is called the sonne of God. Luke 3. 38. he was not then the child of death and hell, everlastingly to perish.

Doct. VII. Wherein Adam transgressed.

NOw because carnall men doe extenuate Adams sinne, that he was cast out of Paradise for eating an apple; I will briefly shew the greatnes of our first parents transgression, wherein many sins concurred. 1. There was in them both incredulitie, in not beleeving Gods words to be true. 2. Vnthankfulnesse, in not being contented with their estate. 3. Pride, in desiring to be like unto God. 4. Wantonnes, in sinning without any necessitie, having all the trees in the garden beside to eate of. 5. There was the sinne of gluttonie, in pampering the desire of the bellie. 6. Disobedience in transgressing the commandement. 7. Curiositie in coveting to know the operation of the fruit, in bringing them to knowledge. 8. Presumption, in that they presumed of Gods mercie, that they should not die though they did eate. 9. Then followed the concupiscence and rebellion of the flesh, in being ashamed of their nakednesse. 10. They excused their sinne. 11. They are guiltie of homicide, in bringing death not only upon themselves, but all their posteritie. 12. Beside Eva seduced her husband. 13. Adam sinned in his inordinate affection to his wife, in listning to her. 14. The easines of the commandement maketh the transgression more heinous, as Augustine well noteth: answering to this question, why God forbad them to eate of that tree: Si bona est, quare non tangor? si mala est, quare in Paradiso? ideo in Paradiso est, quia bona est, sed noto tangas, quia obedientē te volo: if it be good, why doe I not touch it? if it be evill, why is it in Paradise? therefore it is in paradise because it is good, but I will not have thee touch it, because I would have thee obedient. God could not then make better triall of mans obedience, than in forbidding that which was good. August. in Psal. 70.

Places of confutation.

Confut I. Infidelity not pride, the first sinne of our parents.

1. THe opinion of the Popish writers is, that pride was the first sinne, that Eva was tempted unto, because Satan saith unto them, ye shall bee as gods: but it is rather evident, that their first sinne was infidelitie: first Satan telleth them, ye shall not die at all: and so perswadeth them not to give credit to the word of God: for if they had verely beleeved that to come to passe, which was threatned, they would never have given any credit to Satan. Bellar. tom. 3. amiss. grat. lib. 3. c. 4. Peter. in Gen. l. 6. disputat. de pec. Eva. qu. 1.

Confut. II. Our parents lost not their faith.

2. Bellarmine also holdeth, that our first parents in their transgression lost their faith, because by the seducement of Satan, they beleeved not what God said unto them; ye shall not die. Ans. 1. It followeth not if in this one act of faith they failed, that therefore totally their faith was extinguished: he that shal be seduced in one article or point of faith, is he presently stripped of all faith? 2. It was no formall infidelitie, as though wittingly, they rejected Gods word, but they were materially deceived onely, and their sudden & violent affection over-shadowed their knowledge & judgement. 3. So Peter denied Christ through feare and frailtie, yet in his judgement, he could not so at once cast off all opinion of Christ: his faith was shaken and winnowed, but it failed not, as our Saviour testifieth of him, that he had praied for him, that his faith faile not, Luke. 23. 32. and so was the case in our first parents.

Confut. III. Not Marie but Christ brake the serpents head.

3. vers. 15. THe vulgar latine translation readeth she shall breake thy head, &c. which the Popish writers understand of the virgin Mary, as Peresius doubteth not to give this marginal note; B. virgo contrivit caput serpentis, the blessed Virgin did break the head of the serpent: and Bellarmine also justifieth this translation: whereas in the original it is hu, ipsum, it, in the neuter gender, which must be referred to seed: the Septuagint, and the Chalde, read, he, in the masculine, understanding it of Christ: for none else but Christ broke the serpents head. Peter. in 3. Gen. v. 15. Bellar. lib. 2. de verbo Dei. c. 2.

Confut. IIII. The tree of life, could not actually give life, but was a symbole of it.

4. vers. 22. LEst he take of the tree of life, and live for ever. Bellarmine would proove from hence, that this tree by eating the fruit therof, might bring true immortalitie. Ans. 1. As the Lord saith (by way of derision) man is become as one of vs to know good and evill. So in the same sense is this other part of the sentence uttered, that as a man simply thought to get knowledge by eating of the one, so he might imagine to obtaine life by the other. 2. For if Adam might have lived by eating of this tree, now after he had sinned, how would that other saying have taken effect, in the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt die the death, Gen. 2. 17. These speeches had beene contrarie the one to the other. 3. It was therefore the tree of life as the other was of the knowledge of good and evill, that is significative, non effective, not in operation, but in signification: it was a signe or symbole of life received from God, and by Gods gift should have beene reserved, if a man had not sinned; and therefore man beeing deprived of life, lost also the signe thereof. Bellar. de grat. primi hom. c. 18.

Places

Places of Exhortation and practice.

Degree of tentation.

1. WE have here set forth unto us from v.1. to v.7. the degrees of tentation: 1. the suggestion of Satan. 2. delectation, the woman saw the tree was pleasant, &c. 3. Consent, shee tooke of th. fruit. 4. The effecting of the thing desired, shee did eate. 5. the contagion or infecting of others: shee gav to her husband.

Eyes opened after sinne.

2. v.7. Their eyes were opened: till a man hath sinned his eyes are shut, but afterward they see the greatnesse of it; as David did acknowledge his sinne of adulterie after he had committed it.

Worldly shame.

3. v.10, Because I was naked I hid my selfe, &c. He was more ashamed of his nakednesse, than of his sinne, so many doe feare rather to offend because of publike shame, than for any conscience of sinne: as Caine rather grieved because he was made a vagabond, than for that he had killed his brother.

Excusing of sinne.

4. v.12. Adam putteth off the fault to his wife, she to the serpent: so it is naturall to us to excuse our sinnes, and to seeke to colour them, and lay them upon others.

Sobriete in apparel.

5. v.21. In that God made them coats of skinnes, not of silke or any such costly or curious stuffe, it sheweth, that sober and plaine apparell best becommeth Adams sonnes.

Chap. IIII.

The methode or parts of the Chapter.

THIS consisteth of two parts. 1. of the historie of Caine and Habel. 2. the genealogie: the first to the 17. verse, the second from thence to the end.

In the historie there is set forth, 1. Their life; both their birth and beginning, v.1. Their vocation and calling, v.2. Their divers manner of worship, v.3,4. Their divers successe: Abel is accepted. 4. Caine is rejected and reproved, v.6,7. 2. The sinne of Caine is killing his brother. 1. the manner of the fact, under pretence of friendship, v.8. 2. The examination and conviction of Caine. 9.10. 3. His punishment, v.11.12. 4. The mitigation thereof, containing the privilege or exemption of Caine from beeing murthered of others, v.14.15.

The genealogie is either of the Cursed, or of the righteous seed: In the first are set forth their names and persons, v.18,19. Their gests or acts, which are either civill or morall: their civill, as building of cities, v.17. The inventing of tents, v.20. Of instruments of musicke, v.21. Of carving in iron and brasse, v.22. Their morall acts, namely the sinne of the flesh in Lamech in taking two wives, v.19. Of murther and revenge, v.23.

The generation of the righteous sheweth the birth of Seth, v.25. Their conversation, in invocating the name of God, v.26.

This

The Theologicall explication.

Quest. I. At what time Cain and Abel were borne.

Vers. 1. WHereas Heva saith, I have obtained a man by the Lord, per Deum. 1. We refuse Rupertus conceit, that thinketh this to be an oath: it only signifieth that she had received a son by the Lords gift, or coram Domino, before the Lord, as the Chalde paraphrast. 2. Neither is it to be thought that she had other sonnes before Cain, because she nameth him a possession: because he was the first, which she possessed from God. 3. we reject that fable, which is ascribed to Methodius, that Cain was borne 15. yeares after Adam was cast out of Paradise, and Abel 15. yeares after that, and that an hundred yeare after Cain slew Abel, and then Adam and Eve mourned another hundred yeare after for Habel, and then Seth was borne. 1. For neither is it like, that they continued so long without children. 2. Or that there was such distance betweene the birth of the children: seeing God had made them fruitfull, and said unto them, increase and multiply. 3. And it seemeth that Seth was presently supplyed in the place of Habel, because the woman said, God hath given her another seed for Habel. 4. And the text is plaine, that Adam at an 130. not 230. yeares begat Seth. 5. But that these sonnes of Adam were borne in Paradise, as R. Sel. and other Hebrewes thinke, it is but a dreame: for Adam in the state of innocency should not have gotten so ungracious a sonne, as Cain was: and whether Cain and Abel were both borne together, as Calvin thinketh, it is uncertaine: it is more like that they were borne at two sundry births. Mercer.

Rupertus lib. 3. in Gen. c. 34.

A fable fathered upon Methodius.

Quest. II. Wherein Abels sacrifice excelled Cains.

Vers. 4. 1. THough no mention be made of Adams sacrificing, because no such notable accident fell out therein, as in the sacrifice of his sonnes, yet it is not to be doubted, but that he used to sacrifice, and that of him his sonnes learned to doe the like. 2. Abels sacrifice was preferred before Cains in three respects: 1. it was more plentifull, as the Apostle calleth it, πλείονα θυσίαν, a greater sacrifice: Cain brought sparingly, ex fructu, of the fruit, not fruits of the earth: Abel brought plentifully. 2. Abel brought of the fat and the best. 3. hee offered in faith, Heb. 11. 4. 3. It should seeme that God by some outward testimony approved Abels sacrifice, whether it were by kindling it by fire from heaven, as hee did to Moses sacrifice, Levi. 9. 24. and Elias, 1 King. 18. as Hierome thinketh, and Theodotion readeth; Deus inflammavit, &c. God set on fire Abels sacrifice: or by the rebounding of the flame of Cains sacrifice upon himselfe, as the fire of the furnace, whereinto the three children were cast, slew those that made it. Dan. 3. 22. It is like, that by some visible signe God delivered his acceptance, as the Apostle saith, God testifying of his gifts, Heb. 11. 4. Iunius, Mercerus, and Calvin, referre this to Abels prosperous successe, but I approve rather the other opinion. 4. Ambrose note may well here be received: ubi nascuntur hi fratres &c. that in the birth of these children the order of nature is observed, the eldest is named first: ubi exprimitur disciplina vivendi, seniori junior antefertur: but when mention is made of their religion, the yonger is preferred before the elder, and first named: ex Perer.

Lib. 1. de Cain & Abel c. 3.

Quest. III.

Vers. 7. IF thou doe well, &c. 1. The Septuagint here translate very corruptly, as is before shewed, which while some of the fathers followed, they did weary themselves with many interpretations. Ambrose saith, he divided not aright, quia ante omnia Deo debuit offerre primitias, because hee offered not the first fruits unto God, but kept them to himselfe: be quiet, that is, erubesce, be ashamed of thy sin. Chrysostome expoundeth it of Cains intention, that it was not good: and be quiet, that is, tranquillitatem facito cogitationum, appease thy thoughts, and proceed not to adde sin unto sin against thy brother. Augustine, non recte dividendo. i. non recte vivendo: he divided not aright, because he offered a good sacrifice in it selfe, leading an evill life: quiesce. i. manus à scelere contine, be quiet & keep thy hands from mischiefe. Thus, while they justifie a corrupt translation: if thou divide not aright, which the Hebrew hath not, they are divided among themselves: the sense is evident: that if he did well, upon his repentance he should finde forgiveneſſe, if not, sinne lay at the doore, both inwardly gnawing upon his conscience, and outwardly drawing speedy punishment. To lye at the doore, sheweth, that the punishment of sinne is ready at hand, so that it cannot properly bee referred to the day of judgement, as the Chalde paraphrast, which is prolonged and deferred.

Ambr. de Cain & Abel. c. 6.

Hom. 18. in Gen.

Aug. l. 15. de civ. dei. c. 7.

How sinne is said to lye at the doore.

Quest. IIII. How Abels desire was subject to Christ.

VNto thee his desire shall be subject. Which is not understood of sinne, as Rupertus, that sinne while it is in the desire, and not effected, a man may subdue it: as Oleaster, because the punishment of sin committed, hath a desire to lay hold of the offender: as Ambrose expoundeth; the turning thereof shall bee toward thee: in te revertetur crimen, quod à te capit, the sinne returneth upon thee, where it began. And so Augustine, that then a man hath dominion over sinne, when non defendendo sibi præposuerit, sed pœnitendo subjecerit: he doth not advance it by defence, but subjecteth it by repentance. But this clause, as Chrysostome well taketh it, is understood of Abels subjection to his brother as the elder, post peccatum hoc permitto ut primogenitura privilegiis gaudeas: though thou hast sinned, I deprived thee not of the privilege of thy birthright: and so the Lord would appease the wrath of Cain towards his brother, by shewing his ready and willing subjection unto his elder brother, both by the law of nature, and his owne ready disposition, Iun. Mercerus with the rest expoundeth it of sin, but the other exposition is more proper.

Lib. 4. in Gen. c. 9.

Quest. V. Of the talke betweene Cain and Abel.

Hierom. in lib. trad. in Gen.

Vers. 8. THen Cain spake to his brother Abel. 1 It is superfluous to inquire what Cain said to Abel: the Septuagint and the vulgar latine doe make these to be his words: Let us goe into the field: but they are added to the text: Hierome thinketh he rehearsed those words which God before spake to Cain: the paraphrast of Hierusalem supposeth this to have beene the talke: that Cain affirmed, there was no Judge, that governed the world, nor no other life but this, nor reward for the righteous, or punishment for the wicked, because his oblation was not accepted, as well as his brothers: Abel did hold the contrary: some thinke that Cain provoked Abel with angry and furious words into the field, but then it is not like, that Abel would have gone with him: but it is more probable that Cain dissembled and spake friendly to his brother, till he had him in the field, where seeing they were alone, he might execute his wicked purpose.

Quest. VI. How Cain killed Abel.

2. AS touching the manner of death: it is not like, as the Hebrewes imagine, that Cain worried Abel with his teeth: it was such a death, whereby Abels bloud was abundantly shed, and that in many places: for the word is in the plurall number vox sanguinum, the voyce of his blouds: so that it is like to have beene done with bats or stones, or by some such meanes: and when he had slaine his brother, he buried and hid his body, because the Lord asked him, where his brother was: Pererius. But the Hebrewes conceit, because it is said that Cain rose against Abel, that Cain was first downe, and then rose againe, hath no ground.

Quest. VII. The sinne and punishment of Cain.

Vers. 9. 12. COncerning Cains sin: hee sheweth himselfe a lyer, in saying, I know not: wicked and prophane, in thinking, that he could hide his sin from God: unjust, in denying to be his brothers keeper, or that hee ought to have any care of him: obstinate and desperate, in not confessing his sinne, but stubburnly complaining of the greatnesse of his punishment. 2. Hee sustaineth a threefold punishment: he is cursed in his soule: a vagabond in his body, unprosperous in his labours, the earth should not yeeld her fruit: thus as the Devill was cursed, so Cain is the Devils minister: to Adam God said not, cursed art thou, but cursed is the earth for thy sake: Genes. 3. 17. and as Cain for slaying righteous Abel is made a runnagate, so the Iewes, for shedding the bloud of Christ the most innocent Lamb of God, are vagabonds to this day over the face of the earth.

Quest. VIII. Whether Cain confessed his sinne.

Vers. 13. MY sinne or punishment is greater: this was no confession of his sinne, as Chrysostome thinketh: sufficiens confessio, sed intempestiva: a sufficient confession, but unseasonable, because God had given sentence upon Cain, and therefore his confession came too late: for no confession in this life is unseasonable: neither doth Cain complaine of the greatnesse of his sinne, as some translators have it, but rather of the greatnesse of his extreme punishment, because he feared lest every man might have liberty to kill him, as he himselfe expoundeth, v. 14.

Quest. IX. Whether Cain, or he that did slay him should be punished seven-fold.

Rupert. lib. 3. in Genes. c. 8.

Vers. 15. HE should be punished seven-fold.] 1. We neither receive Rupertus exposition, that by seven-fold is understood everlasting punishment, but with a secret condition, unlesse they repent: for he thinketh Lamech who is supposed to have killed Cain, did repent, confessing his sinne to his wives. 2. Neither are the words so to be taken, as meant of Cain, that he should, septem vindictas evolvere, pay seven punishments, as the septuagint translate, for so many sinnes committed. 3. Or as Lyranus, Tostatus, because Cain was in the 7. generation slaine by Lamech: for these two last expositions are forced to divide the words: whosoever slayeth Cain, &c. that is, shall be punished, which must be understood: and then the other words, he shall be punished seven-fold, are referred to Cain. But the sentence in the originall is joyned together, neither distinguished in sentence, nor in sense. 4. So the plaine meaning is this, that he which killed Cain should be more deepely punished than Cain himselfe, because beside homicide, hee should expresly transgresse Gods commandement, who would have Cain to live, for the example of other.

Quest. X. What marke God set upon Cain, and to what end.

Vers. 15. GOd set a marke upon Cain.] 1. Not as some read: posuit Cain in signum: God made Cain a signe or marke. 2. But God set some visible marke upon Cain, whether it were an horrible trembling and shaking of his whole body, as the septuagint translate, who for, thou shalt be a vagabond and runnagate, read he should sigh and tremble: or an exceeding shame and confusion, in that hee ran from place to place to hide himselfe: or some visible mark set in his face, as Lyranus thinketh: some Hebrewes think it was an horn in his forehead, some a letter, some that a dog lead him, these are mens conceits. 3. Certainly whatsoever it were, it was a signe of Gods wrath, not as Iosephus thinketh, a token, that God appeased by Cains sacrifice, forgave the punishment of his fratricide: for if God accepted not his sacrifice before, much lesse after. 4. Neither was this marke set, to exempt Cain from the invasion of beasts, as though there were none alive on the earth but his parents: for this murther falling out, as is supposed about the 130. yeare of Adams age, the world was by this time much replenished: And where the Lord saith, whosoever slayeth Cain, &c. he speaketh of men, not of beasts. 5. Wherefore God set this visible and fearefull marke upon Cain, Ambros. lib. 2. de Cain & Abel. c. 9.

both that other men, seeing apparant signes of Gods wrath upon him, might feare to commit the like, and that he might have the greater punishment, in prolonging so wicked and miserable a life.

QVEST. XI. How Cain was cast out of Gods presence.

Vers. 16. Cain went from the presence of the Lord.] 1. Hee both was excluded from Gods favour and protection, which is signified by Gods presence, from the which otherwise no man can escape. 2. He also was expelled from that Countrey where he was borne, and where God was first worshipped by sacrifice, and shewed visible signes of his presence. 3. And where it is said, that Cain dwelt in the land of Nod: wee neither approve Catharinus conceit, that this land, from the which Cain was expelled, was the land of Judea, whether Adam and Eve came, after they were exiled out of Paradise: for the text is, that the land of Nod, was on the east side of Paradise: whereby it appeareth, that neither Adam and Eva, nor Cain had their habitation farre from thence: neither yet is it like, as Iosephus, that Cain built a City and called it Nod: for Henoch is the first City mentioned in Scripture. Of the land of Nod.

Vers. 17. 4. But the Land was called Nod of Cains vagrant and vagabonds life: which sheweth, as Iosephus well conjectureth, that Cain was not amended by this punishment, but waxed worse and worse, giving himselfe to rapine, robbery, oppression, deceit. Iosephus lib. 1. antiquitat. cap. 2.

QVEST. XII. Wherefore and for whom Cain built a city.

Vers. 17. And he built a City.) 1. Cain neither built him a City, to be defended against wild beasts, which was the first cause, as Plato thinketh, that moved men to build Cities: for this reason might as well have moved the righteous seed to have done it: neither because man is a sociable creature and loveth company, as Aristotle: for this reason might as well have caused Adam to build, as Cain: but it is most like because Cain was a fugitive and runnagate, he would build him a City to stay in, and to be a defence unto him, as though Gods curse should not have taken place: but as Iunius well writeth upon the words, erat ædificator: or as the 70. ædificans, he began only to build, but hee finished it not, leading still a runnagate life, and so often constrained to leave the worke, as the giants, that built the Tower of Babell were constrained to give over. 2. It may be doubted for whom Cain built a City, there being no more yet in the world but himselfe, his parents, and his sonne: the answer is ready: that it is not like that he built this City presently after his sonnes birth, much lesse before his condemnation, as Mercerus: but now when the world was replenished, for if Abrahams stock in lesse than 400. yeares amounted to 600. thousand, Cains posterity in the like time might arise to the like multitude, which might suffice not only to inhabite a City, but a country. And Lodovicus vives, maketh mention, that in the memory of his parents, there was a town in Spaine consisting of an 100. housholds, which were all inhabited by the progeny of an old man then living, which was so old, that the youngest of his stock could not tell by what name of kindred to call him. Plato in protagora. Arist. lib. 1. politicor.

QVEST. XIII. Lamechs speech to his wives, and the meaning thereof.

Vers. 23. I would slay a man in my wound.) 1. This place is neither inexplicable, and not possibly to be unfolded, as Catharinus a popish writer thinketh, and as it seemed to Origen, who as Hierom witnesseth writ two whole bookes, the 12. and 13. of his commentaries upon Genesis, in interpreting this place. 2. Neither doe these words shew, as Suidas expoundeth, that Lamech had killed two men, an elder and a younger, the brethren of Henoch, that was translated. 3. Or one man as Theodoret thinketh, for the which fact Lamech repenteth: for the words are, I would slay a man, not I have. 4. And we hold that to bee a fable, that Lamech killed two men, the one was Cain, whom hee shot at in a bush, supposing it to be a beast, and the other was his boy, that led him being blinde, whom for anger hee all to beat and so killed him: this exposition seemeth most probable to Cajetanus and Pererius, having no probability in it: both because Cain was privileged by God not to be killed; and for that no mention is made of Lamechs seven-fold punishment, which should not in this case have beene omitted. 5. Neither can this place be so taken as the Chalde and some Hebrewes expound, which read those words with a negative, or interrogation, as though Lamech should plead for himselfe before his wives, which intended to kill him, that hee had not killed a man, as Cain had, and therefore they should bee more grievously punished, that killed him. 6. Further, these words of Lamech are not uttered enimtative, as shewing that Lamech, had committed any murther already: nor yet interrogative: by way of interrogation, as if Lamech should say thus to his wives, have I yet slaine a man in my wrath, as Cain did? yet he was privileged that none should kill him: therefore ye need not feare, that any such thing should happen unto mee, that have killed none: some read these words conditionally: supposing Lamech to have beene a good man: as though the sense should be this: If I should kill a man, as Cain did, I should be punished more than he that should kill Cain, because I did not take heed by his example. 7. But the best exposition is with Ramban to expound Lamechs speech summis, potencially: hee to reconcile his wives, that were alienated from him, doth bost of his strength and tyranny, that this, and this he could doe, and that he would not take the least wrong, at any mans hand. Sic etiam Calvin. Epist. 125. ad Damas. Theod. quæst. 44. in Gen.

Now concerning the occasion of these words of Lamech spoken to his wives. 1. It was not by reason of any conspiracy intended by his wives against him, and therefore hee should excuse himselfe, that hee had not killed a man as Cain had: and therefore, they that killed him should bee more severely punished. 2. Neither was it by reason of some brawle betweene his wives, as Iunius, and therefore Lamech threatneth them, that should set any division betweene them, and offer him the least wrong. 3. Nor yet because his wives feared lest the sinne of Cain might bee punished in Lamechs posterity, and therefore The occasion of Lamechs speech to his wives.

he maketh them ſecure in promiſing impunity. 4. But the moſt likely occaſion is this: that whereas his wives feared, leſt becauſe of his cruelty, ſome evill ſhould happen unto them: hee boaſteth of his ſtrength, that rather than any ſhould doe him any hurt, he would not ſpare to kill in his wrath.

Quest. XIIII. How Lamech is ſaid to be avenged ſeventy times ſeven times.

Chryſoſt. hom. 20. in Gen.

Verſ. 24. IF Cain ſhall be avenged ſeven-fold:] 1. Chryſoſtomes expoſition is not here to be received, who thinketh, that Lamech confeſſed his ſinne, and condemned himſelfe for murther committed: Ipſe ſua lingua confeſſionem peccatorum facit, & pœnam ſibi definit: he confeſſeth his ſinne himſelfe, and defineth the puniſhment. So alſo thinketh Theodoret: for the Scripture propoundeth the example of Lamech, not as of a penitent, but a licentious diſordered perſon, who firſt preſumed to breake the law of wedlocke in taking two wives. 2. Neither is their conjecture of any weight, that imagine Lamech to ſpeake of his 77. children, which hee had by his two wives, as Ioſephus writeth, that they ſhould bee puniſhed for their fathers ſinne. 3. But among the reſt Rupertus miſſeth the marke, that by ſeventy times ſeven-fold, underſtandeth a temporary, by ſeven-fold eternall puniſhment, this Cain had becauſe hee repented not, the other Lamech for his repentance: for that 70. times ſeven is more than ſeven times, our Saviour ſheweth in the Goſpell, where he ſaith to Peter, that he ſhould forgive his brother not only ſeven times, but ſeventy times ſeven. 4. But the meaning is, not that Lamech ſhould be puniſhed 77. times 7. times, but hee that killed Lamech, as he that killed Cain, 7. times: and ſo Lamech boaſteth of impunitie: that though hee committed murther as Cain did, yet hee ſhould be exempted from puniſhment as Cain was. 5. To expound it of the 77. generations to Chriſt, rehearſed, Luk. 3. in whom Lamechs ſinne ſhould bee expiated is a forced and improper ſenſe.

Queſt. XIIII. How the name of God is ſaid in Enos time to be called upon.

Verſ. 26. MEn begin to call, &c. 1. Neither the Septuagint here tranſlate aright: that hee, 1. Enos hoped to call, or as Hierome, hee begun to call: for neither doth the word ſignifie hope, nor can it be referred to the perſon of Enos. 2. Neither could hee be ſaid now to begin to call upon the name of the Lord, either as Cajetan thinketh, becauſe Enos firſt uſed to call upon the name Iehovah; for Cain and Abel are ſaid to have offered to Iehovah, v. 3. either for that Enos was more religious and given to prayer, than any before him, or that he found out ſome forme or order of prayer, as Pererius judgeth: for it is not like but that Adam, and Abel, in the ſpirituall exerciſes of prayer and ſacrifice, were as zealous, as any of the ſucceeding age. 3. But now, when as the worſhip of God began to be corrupted and prophaned in the wicked poſterity of Cain, then Adam, Seth, and other of the righteous ſeed began publikely to exerciſe religion, and to have their holy meetings and aſſemblies for the ſervice of God. 4. Some read, then the name of God began in calling upon to be prophaned, as by giving the name of God to beaſts, trees, and plants. But here invocation is taken in the better part: and Moſes deſcribeth the practice of the Church and righteous ſeed in thoſe dayes. 5. Wee likewiſe refuſe that ſenſe, that the name Iehovah began now to bee called upon, whereas he was invocated by the name Elohim before: for Cain and Abel offered ſacrifice to Iehovah, v. 3, 6. Wherefore the true meaning is, as is before expreſſed, that now the Church of God being increaſed to a full number, did make a publike ſeparation in their worſhip from the generation of the wicked: and began apart in a ſolemne manner to worſhip God. Mercer.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. A man is firſt accepted for his faith before his workes.

Lib. 22. Moral. cap. 12.

1. Verſ. 4. THe Lord had reſpect to Abel, and to his offering: hence it is inferred, that works make not a man acceptable to God: but firſt a man is accepted by faith, and ſecondly his workes are reſpected, as Gregory upon this place: Deus non habet gratum offerentem propter munera, ſed munera propter offerentem: Abel is not accepted for his gifts, but his gifts becauſe of him.

2. Doct. Paradiſe planted in a knowne place.

Bellar. lib. 1. de grat. prim. hom. c. 13.

2. Verſ. 16. (Cain dwelt in the Land of Nod, toward the eaſt ſide of Eden.) Hence it is gathered, that Paradiſe was planted in a known place contrary to the opinion of Bellarmine: for Eden was the name of a knowne Country in Meſapotamia: as may appeare, Ezech. 27. 23. Bellarmine anſwereth, that Eden is here no proper name, but a name of pleaſure, unleſſe wee will ſay that Cain was puniſhed to dwell in Paradiſe: Cont. 1. Neither was Cain exiled into a place of pleaſure. 2. It is not ſaid that Cain dwelt in Eden, but over againſt it, קדמת, as the Septuagint tranſlate, on the eaſt ſide: now Paradiſe is ſaid to be planted not on the eaſt ſide of Eden, but in Eden toward the eaſt, in reſpect of the ſituation, as it was then to the Iſraelites being at that time, when Moſes wrote this ſtory in the deſart. 3. all the tranſlators in this place take this word Eden for a proper name.

3. Doct. Henoch the firſt city in the world.

3. V. 17 HE called the city Henoch.) Hence it is apparãt, who was the firſt founder of cities: that they were not frõ the beginning as Ariſtotle thought. 2. Neither that they firſt began to be built under the reigne of Iupiter, who was after the floud. 3. Neither that Athens, or Cecropia built by Cecrops as the Greeks. 4. Or Argos as the Argives. 5. Or Thebes as the Ægyptians were the firſt Cities: but this City built by by Cain, and called Henochia: whereof Berosus Annianus writeth, that it was built about the mountaine Libanus, and that in his time, some part of the foundation did appeare being called by the inhabitants, the city of Cain.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Man hath no power of himselfe to rule over sinne.

1. Vers. 7. VNto thee his desire shall be subject, &c. From hence Bellarmine and Pererius understanding these words of subjection of sin, would prove, that man hath free will by nature to sin, and not to sin, & dominari peccato, to rule over sin. Answer. 1. It is evident, that this place is understood not of the subjection of sin, but the submission of Abel to his brother, as Chrysostom expoundeth. 2. For of sin it was not true that Cain had dominion over it, as he had over his brother. 3. Neither can it properly be said, that sin hath a desire to the soule, but the soule rather to it. 4. The Septuagint translate, the conversion ἀνου thereof, making no mention before of sin at all, whose conversion then is it but Abels, who was spoken of before? 5. And if they will understand it of sin, it would follow that man by his naturall power only could resist the temptation of sin, which yet Bellarmine is ashamed to affirme.

Bellar. de liber. arb. lib. 5. c. 22. Perer. in hunc locum.

Bellar. lib. de liber. ar. c. 7.

2. Confut. Monkery not knowne to the old world.

2. Vers. 26. THen began men, &c. This place is urged by Bellarmine to prove the institution of Monkery: that Enos brought in a more strict kind of life, than was used before. Ans. If the text be thus read, they began to profane the invocation of the name of God, then they have no colour of monkery from hence. 2. If the other reading be admitted, it followeth not, that because Enos began after a more strict manner to worship God, that therefore he was a Monke. 3. And his begetting of sonnes and daughters, Genes. 5. 10. sheweth, that he was no monke.

6. Places of morall observation.

1. Vers. 5. Cain was exceeding wroth.) Wee see the cause, why the righteous are hated of the wicked, is for their innocent life: as Cain hated his brother, as the Apostle saith, because his workes are evill, his brothers good. 1 Iohn 3, 12.

The wicked hate the righteous.

2. Vers. 14. Thou hast cast me from thy face, &c. This is the greatest punishment of sinne to bee forsaken of God, and given over to a reprobate sense, as Cain was: and as the Apostle saith, the Gentiles were delivered over to a reprobate mind, Rom. 1. 28. as Ambrose noteth well: nihil gravius quam errantem a deo deseri, ut se revocare non possit: nothing is more grievous, than for him that erreth to be forsaken of God, that he cannot recall himselfe.

A great judgement for a sinner to be forsaken of God. Ambros. lib. 1. de Cain & Abel. c. 9.

3. Vers. 14. WHosoever findeth me shall slay me, &c. Bernard well noteth here, consolationem miseram obtinuit, quam querebat: he obtained that miserable comfort which hee desired: that is, not to be killed: as Saul desired the Prophet to honour him before the people: Sam. 15. such are the momentany solaces of worldly men which are farre from the true and ever-during comforts.

The vaine cōforts of worldly men.

4. Vers. 17. In that Cain built a City, and his posterity were the inventers of humane acts, of tents, musicke, carving: we see that saying of our Saviour to be verified, that the children of this world are wiser in their generation, than the children of light. Luke 16. 8. and Gregory well observeth: iniquimentem in amore presentis vitæ figunt: that wicked men doe fire their minde in the love of this present life. Kaine buildeth a city and calleth it Henoch, by his sonnes name, which signifieth dedication: but Henoch in the righteous line is the seventh: so the wicked doe dedicate worldly possessions in the first place, the righteous in the last.

The hope of worldly men in this life.

5. By this example of Cain and Habel, we learne, that we are not to measure Gods favour by the accidents of this life: as Ambrose well sheweth, that Abel, justus, innocens, immaturus sublatus est, &c. a just, innocent, devout man in his young yeares is taken away: whereas wicked Cain liveth long, begetteth children, buildeth Cities: which is an evident demonstration of another life after this, wherein God shall measure to every man according to their workes.

A righteous man afflicted in this life.

Chap. V.

The Method.

IN this Chapter there is a rehearsall of the yeares of the Patriarkes before the floud, and of their acts: there is a threefold account of their yeares: before they begat children, and after, and the summe of both joyned together.

Their acts are either generall, in begetting sonnes and daughters, or speciall, as of Henoch, his godly conversation, he walked with God in earth, v. 22. his translation, he walked with God in heaven, v. 24. of Lamech: his consolation in his sonne Noah v. 29.

3. The Theologicall explication.

Quest. I. Booke of generation, how to be understood.

Matthew and Luke reconciled concerning the generation of Christ.

Vers. 1. This is the booke of the generation. 1. Moses setteth downe the genealogy of the fathers before the floud, because of Christs line, which Luke deriveth from Adam: Matthew goeth not beyond Abraham: not, as some thinke, because of the rest of that line beyond Abraham might easily bee supplyed out of Moses books, which were then well knowne, but for that the most conspicuous and manifest promises of the Messiah, were made to Abraham: all the generations to Matthew, supplying Henry from Adam to Abraham, make but 72. but Luke reckoneth 77. The Reason is, because Matthew omitteth some of purpose, to make the numbers equall, which Luke supplyeth, and Matthew maketh his account by Salomon, Luke by Nathan: so that there might bee more persons in the one discent than in the other. 2. Moses beginneth now to set downe Adams generation by Seth: because Cain was rejected, and Abel died without issue. 3. It is called a booke, that is, an ennumeration, for so Sepher signifieth a booke, because things are rehearsed in it: not because, as R. Isaac, Carus, Moses beginneth his booke here, and the other 3. chapters should bee as a preface. 4. Generation is here taken actively, for the posterity of Adam increased by him: as in Matthew, the booke of the generation of Iesus Christ, is taken passively, for the generations of whom Christ came. 5. And whereas it is added, in the day that God created Adam: we need neither with Lyranus, to understand day generally for time, and wee refuse the opinion of the Hebrewes, that hold that Adam in the same day of his creation began to have generations, for so they fable, that Adam and Eve had foure or five children the same day they were created: but in the day; is to be referred to the latter part of the verse, wherein mention is made, of Adams creation, according to the image of God. Mercer.

Quest. II. How Adam begat a Sonne in his owne likenesse.

Vers. 3. Adam begat a sonne in his owne likenesse, &c. 1. which is neither to be understood of the shape and image of his body, for so Cain was in outward shape like to Adam. 2. neither is it to be taken for the image of vertue and piety in his soule, for Adam had lost that image: neither is vertue ingendred by nature: and Abel had the image of his fathers vertue before Seth. 3. neither is it so said, because the image of mankind was continued and preserved in Seth: whereas both Abel died without issue, and Cains posterity was extinguished in the floud; for this notwithstanding, seeing the world was increased by Cain, he might be said also to be after Adams image. 4. But hereby is signified that originall corruption, which is descended unto Adams posterity by naturall propagation, which is expressed in the birth of Seth, not of Abel, because hee had no of-spring, nor of Cain, because it might appeare, that even the righteous seed by nature are subject to this originall depravation: and yet Seth was otherwise after the image of Adam, than Cain, because his seed was sanctified of God, who purposed in Seth and his seed to make good the promise made to Adam, as touching the seed of the woman, that should breake the serpents head. Iun. 5. And whereas Adam was an hundred thirty yeere old before he begat Seth, wee abhor the lewd fables of the Hebrewes, that thinke in this meane space, that Adam companied with female spirits or devils, and begat male spirits, and Eve with male spirits, and brought forth masculine or male devils: neither doe I thinke with Mercer, that in the meane time Adam begat other sonnes and daughters: but God by this meanes (Adam staying so long without children) did try his faith in looking for the promised seed, and his patience in seeing the wicked stocke of Cain so mightily to increase. Iun.

Hebrew fables.

Quest.

Quest. III. Wherefore it is added, and he died.

Verſ. 5. ALL the dayes that Adam lived, &c. 1. Neither were theſe yeares otherwiſe accounted than by 12. moneths, as it may appeare in the ſtory of Noahs floud, where mention is made of the 7. moneth, and 27. day of the moneth. 2. Neither did theſe righteous fathers onely live thus long by miracle, as thinketh R. Moſes, but it was uſuall in thoſe dayes. 3. And the concluſion of every ones life is, & mortuus eſt, he died: not as ſome think, becauſe it ſhould appeare, that they dyed not in the floud, but by their owne naturall death: and therefore they ſay, this clauſe is not added after the floud in the genealogy of the fathers: but it is thus ſaid, to ſhew what the condition of all mankind was after Adams fall. 4. It is ſaid only of Adam, all the dayes that he lived: Whereby the Hebrewes inferre that Adam lived a godly life, and repented: his repentance we doubt not of, but not ſoundly hence gathered. Mercer.

Quest. IIII. Whether Adam the longeſt liver.

NOw whereas Adam lived but 930. yeares, Mathuſelah, 969. yeares, v. 27. yet may Adam be well ſuppoſed to have beene the longeſt liver, becauſe he was created in a perfect ſtate of body apt to generation, which was not then under ſixty yeares: for none of the Patriarkes began to have children under that age: Mahalalel begat at 65. yeares of age. v. 15. and none under: then adde unto Adams yeares, 60. more, in what age and ſtate of body he was created, and he will bee found to have beene the longeſt liver of the Patriarkes: and to exceed Mathuſelahs age, 21. yeares.

Quest. V. The yeares of the Patriarkes full and complete yeares, conſiſting of twelve moneths.

COncerning the long life of the aged Patriarkes: 1. Neither is the conceit of the Ægyptians to bee received, that a man cannot live above an 160. yeares; for they ſay, that a mans heart increaſeth till he come to 50. every yeare two drachmaes in weight, and then decreaſeth every yeare as much, till he come to an hundred, and then for want of heart hee can live no longer. For this fancy of theirs is confuted by experience: for Pliny maketh mention, that in Veſpatian the Emperors time, there were found in Italy, two men of an 105. yeares: foure of an 130. three of an 140. and two of an 150. yeares. And in theſe dayes ſome are found farre to exceed an hundred yeares: as I have ſeene my ſelfe an old man of 124 yeares of age, at Everſden in the County of Bedford, who died about ann. 1600. or, 601. he could remember Boſworth field at the comming in of Henry the 7. being then as he affirmed ſome 15. yeares old. Plin. lib. 7. c. 49. Divers men of great yeares. 2. Neither is it to be thought, that the yeares of the Patriarkes were accounted, as the Arcadians reckoned their yeares by quarters, or the Ægyptians by moneths, as ſome have thought, for then Henoch begetting children at 65. yeares, ſhould by this reckoning not exceed ſix yeares and a halfe, when hee had a child. And this Ægyptian yeare conſiſting of the age of the moone, will not allow above two dayes and a halfe to a moneth, whereas mention is made of the 17. and 27. day of the moneth, Gen. 7. 11. and 8. 14. It is evident then that the yeares of the Patriarkes were numbred by complete and full yeares, conſiſting of twelve moneths, and not after the Ægyptian account. And hereunto Pliny giveth teſtimony, who remembreth in the ſame place before recited, that Alexander, Cornelius, Xenophon doe write that ſome lived 500. ſome 600. ſome 800. yeares, Ioſephus alſo alleageth Manethan, Beroſus, Mochus Eſtiæus the Ægyptian, Chalde, Phenician Chronologers, who teſtifie, that thoſe old fathers lived toward a thouſand yeares. Ioſeph. l. 3. antiq. c. 3.

Quest. VI. The cauſes of the long life of men before the floud.

THe cauſes of the long life of the Patriarkes may be thought to be theſe foure. 1. The naturall cauſe, the ſound conſtitution of their bodies, not yet decayed, and the wholeſome aire, not yet corrupted with terrene exhalations, as after the floud. 2. The morall cauſe, for the invention and finding out of arts and ſciences, which as Ioſephus writeth, they cauſed to bee graven in two great pillars, one of bricke, another of ſtone, that if the world were deſtroyed with water, the ſecond pillar might remaine: if with fire the firſt, (for ſo had they learned of Adam, that the world ſhould be twice deſtroyed) and he ſaith further, that the pillar of ſtone was to be ſeene in Syria in his time. Ioſeph. l. 1. antiq. 3. The civill or politke cauſe of the long life of the Patriarkes, was for procreation and peopling of the world. 4. The Theologicall, that God by giving them ſuch long life, might make triall of their obedience, to ſee if they would uſe this benefit of long life to the glory of God, which they did not, and therefore he ſhortned the age of man. Yet the Lord, while they enjoyed this long tearme, would not ſuffer any of them to attaine unto a thouſand yeares: not for that as the Hebrewes ſuppoſe, God granted of Adams thouſand ſeventy yeares to David, nor for that reaſon, which ſeemeth to be too curious, whereof Irenæus maketh mention, to make good that ſaying to Adam, in what day ſoever thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt dye the death: becauſe a thouſand yeares with God is as yeſterday. Pſal. 90. 3. And ſo Adam died in the firſt day, before he came to a thouſand: But God hereby would put the fathers in minde of mortality, that although they lived many hundred yeares, yet none of them filled up a thouſand, leſt they might have too much flattered themſelves in long life: and ſeeing a thouſand is a number of perfection, God would have none of them attaine to 1000. that we might know that nothing is perfect here. Mercer. Iren. lib. 5. adverſ. hæreſ.

Quest.

Quest. V. Of the false computation of the 70. Interpreters, and whence it is thought to proceed.

FUrther, whereas the Septuagint doe much differ in the account of yeares from the Hebrew text, adding to the age of the old world, which in true reckoning maketh but 1656. five hundred eighty six yeares more, so making the whole number of yeares 2242. It is diversly conjectured, how this error should arise. 1. Some impute it to the malice of the Jewes, that of purpose corrupted the greeke text, that the Gentiles should not know the secrets of the Scriptures. 2. Some to the prudency of the 70. translators, or of the writers and scribes, who knowing that the Ægyptians would count it but a fable, that the fathers lived so many Astronomicall yeares, made away for them to take it after the count of the Ægyptian yeares, whereof ten make but one yeare, and therefore they added an hundred yeares to the fathers age before they begat children, to make them apt for generation. But where the yeares will serve without any such addition, they adde none. As Iered lived an 162. yeares, which because it maketh by the Ægyptian calculation sixteene yeares, and somewhat more, the Septuagint there alter nothing. This is Augustines conjecture.

August. lib. 15. de civ. dei. c. 13.

The divers errors of the septuagint in the translation of this 5 chap. of Genesis.

But howsoever the Septuagint came to be so corrupt, it is apparantly in many points erroneous. 1. They adde unto six of the Patriarkes ages before they begat children, to each of them, Adam, Seth, Enos, Cainon, Malaleel, Henoch, an 100. yeares, and detract them againe in the remainder of their life, that the whole summe may agree. 2. They take away from Methusalems age before hee had children 22. yeares, and adde to Lamechs age 6. yeares, as is shewed before. 3. They misse in their calculation, in Methusalems yeares: they make him to live an hundred sixty five before hee begat Lamech, and 802. after in all 969. whereas the other numbers put together want two of this summe, making but 967. 4. They detract from Lamechs age 24. yeares: his whole age according to the Hebrew is 777. according to the septuagint, but 753. 5. By their computation Methusalem must live 14. yeares after the floud: for they make him to live 802. yeares after Lamech was borne: and Lamech lived 188. yeares before Noah was borne, and in the six hundred yeare of Noahs age came the floud. Lamech and Noah make but 788. yeares after the computation of the Septuagint: there remaineth yet 14. yeares of Methusalems life: who according to the Hebrew computation, died the same yeare in the beginning before the floud came: for in the arke hee could not be, where only were eight persons, Noah and his wife, his three sonnes and their wives: Genes. 7. 7. and S. Peter witnesseth, that in the arke eight soules only were saved. 1 Pet. 3. 20. and to say that Methuselah was saved in the terrestriall Paradise with his father Henoch; is a fabulous fiction without ground. Mercerus.

Quest. VI. The reason of the inequality of generation in the fathers.

WHereas the Patriarkes at divers ages began to beget children, Mahalaleel and Henoch at 56. yeares, Iered at a hundred sixty two yeares: Lamech at two hundreth eighty two. Noah at five hundred. 1. Neither is it to be imputed to Noahs holinesse, that so long abstained from mariage: seeing Henoch, that for his godly life was translated, had children at 65. yeares. 2. Neither, as Pererius conjectureth, is it like that Noah had other elder sonnes, which were dead before the floud came: for whereas it is said of all the Patriarkes beside, that they begat sonnes and daughters, beside those, which are expressed, no such thing is mentioned of Noah, that beside these three he begat sonnes and daughters: and the Septuagint read: Noah begat three sonnes, &c. insinuating in so reading their opinion, that these were all their sonnes: yet it is evident. Genes. 6. 9. That these were all Noahs seed: the words are, these are the generation of Noah, Noah begat three sonnes, &c. 3. I rather thinke, not that either Noah deferred his marriage till hee was 500. yeeres old, or that hee being married, abstained from the company of his wife all that time: but that God so disposed, seeing he purposed to save Noah and all his sonnes from the floud, that Noah did not so abound with posterity as his fathers before him, lest they also should have followed the wickednesse of that age, and so perish with the rest: the Lord saw that there might bee sufficient for the replenishing of the world againe: and it was more to Gods glory to increase the world afterward by so small a number.

Quest. VII. Wherein Noah was a comfort to his parents.

7. Vers. 29. THis same shall comfort us concerning the workes and sorrow of our hands. 1. Not because the course of sinne should be stopped, and the grievous workes of sinners stayed by the destructions in the floud, as Chrysostome. 2. Or because Noah found out the use of the plow, whereby the earth was tilled with more ease, as R. Solomon. 3. or for that the use of flesh was graunted to Noah after the floud, as some thinke. 4. Nor yet onely for that, the seminary of the world was preserved in Noahs arke, which otherwise should have perished. 5. Nor yet onely because God renewed his covenant with Noah, promising that the world should never be destroyed with waters againe. 6. But the chiefe scope of this prophesie hath relation to Christ, in whom we finde true rest to our soules, and who hath delivered us from the curse, Galath. 3. 10. who was prefigured in Noah, and his baptisme, wherein is exhibited the remission of sinnes, shadowed forth in Noahs arke as the Apostle sheweth. 1 Peter 3. 22.

4. Places

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Originall sinne by propagation, not imitation.

1. vers. 3. IN that Adam begat a sonne in the likenesse of his owne image, which before is interpreted of originall corruption, the heresie of the Pelagians is confuted, who denied any such originall sinne or depravation of nature to be in infants, by propagation from their parents: but that it commeth onely by a corrupt imitation: this was the heresie of the old Pelagians, who affirmed, Peccatum primo transgressionis in alios homines non propagatione, sed imitatione transisset: that the sinne of the first transgression passeth unto other men not by propagation, but imitation: which heresie seemeth to have beene revived by Catherinus a Popish writer who denieth, that the sinne of Adam is propagated or transfused to his posterity: But the Scripture evidently overthroweth this assertion. David confesseth hee was conceived in sinne, Psal. 51. 5. the Apostle saith, That death went over all, in as much as all have sinned: children then if they had not sinne, should not die: and here Seth is begotten in his fathers image.

Lombard. lib. 2. dist. 30. c.

Catherin. opus. de peccat. origin. ca. 6.

Rom. 3. 12.

2. Doct. Originall sinne not a substance.

2. THeir opinion is confuted, that hold originall sinne to be a substance: for like as the image of God, wherein Adam was created was not the substance of the soule, but the quality, as the Apostle expoundeth, which consist in holinesse and righteousnesse, Ephes. 4. 24. so the image of Adams corrupt nature, consisteth in the contrary qualities of impurity and injustice.

3. Doct. The state of originall sinne in soule.

3. THe opinion of Papists is refuted, who affirme, that this originall corruption hath the seat and place in the flesh, not in the soule: for this image of corruption was in Adams soule: and therefore the Apostle saith, he renewed in the spirit of our minds, Ephes. 4. 24. and put off the old man, and put on the new, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him, Colos. 3. for there the corrupt image of Adam succeeded, where Gods image is decayed, which was in the soule, for there the place of knowledge is.

Bellar. de pecc. origin. lib. 5. c. 7.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Henoch was no licentious liver at any time.

IN that vers. 21. after the generation Henoch is said to walke with God, and not before, Annius Gazeus thinketh, that Henoch was before a wicked liver, but after repented: but the contrary is evident, in that it pleased God with such extraordinarie favour to take Henoch out of the world, that he dyed no death: that he was as a shining starre for vertue and holinesse in that age.

2. Confut. Henoch died not.

WHereas vers. 22. it is said all the dayes of Henoch were 365. Aben Ezra with other Hebrewes, thinke that Henoch died: for if he were still alive, these should not be all his dayes, Cont. 1. The Scripture maketh mention onely of the yeares of his life upon earth: his yeares with God are not to be accounted among men: as the Apostle saith of Christ: who in the dayes of his flesh, Heb. 5. 7. that is now in his flesh in heaven: but these are counted the dayes of his flesh, when he walked in his flesh among men. 2. The Apostle evidently witnesseth, that Henoch was taken away, that he should not see death, Heb. 11. 5. he therefore died not.

3. Confut. Henoch not alive in his flesh.

BEcause it is said that God tooke away or translated Henoch, the Popish writers doe imagine that Henoch is yet alive in his flesh in Paradise together with Elias. Contra. Seeing that Elias is said to have ridden up into heaven, or that he went into heaven, 2 King. 2. 11. where Henoch also walked with God: we do not beleeve that they entred heaven in their whole humanity, but that part onely that is to be saved: for Christ: seeing the Apostle saith, that he hath prepared a new and living way into the holy place for us by his vaile, that is, his flesh, Heb. 10. 20. Christs flesh therefore must make a way into heaven before any mans flesh beside can enter.

Peterius in hunc loc. &c.

4. Confut. Henoch not in the terestriall Paradise.

BUt because they also affirme, that Henoch liveth in his flesh, not in heaven, but in the terestriall Paradise, and it is against the faith as some of them say, to thinke otherwise, the vanity of this opinion shall easily appeare. 1. Because the Scripture saith, that every thing was destroyed upon the face of the earth, and onely eight persons were saved in the Arke: therefore Henoch if he had been upon the earth, must have perished. 2. The waters prevailed fifteene cubits over the highest mountaines, Genes. 7. 20. therefore the earthly Paradise must needs also have beene overflowne and destroyed. 3. If they say, that Paradise might be hemmed in with the water, which might stand as a wall round about it, as the water in the red sea did, or that, though it were covered with water, it might be preserved, as the Olive tree, whereof the Dove tooke a branch, or that God might restore Paradise againe after the flood: the first is presumptuous to imagine a miracle without warrant of Scripture, and if it had been so, Moses would have to have made an arke, he and his ſonnes and the cattell might have beene preſerved there: the ſecond is not ſufficient, for though Paradiſe, which is not like, had beene ſo preſerved, yet Henoch muſt have beene drowned. The third is frivolous, for if the terrene Paradiſe had beene planted againe, ſeeing it was ſituated in a knowne place in Meſopotamia, it could not have beene hid. In this queſtion Pererius is an adverſary to Bellarmine, Senenſ. and the reſt, that yet dreame of a terrene Paradiſe.

Perer. lib. 7. in Gen. queſt. 7.

5. Confut. Henoch ſhall returne into the world to die.

Perer. ibid. qu. 1.

IT is alſo the conſtant opinion of the popiſh writers, that Henoch ſhall come againe toward the end of the world, and then ſhall die, being to be ſlaine by Antichriſt. Pererius, cum Bellarm. Com. But this is contrary to the Apoſtle, That Henoch was taken away, that he ſhould not ſee death, neither was found, Heb. 11.5. Ergo, Henoch ſhall not ſee death, nor bee found in a mortall ſtate in earth: whereas they object that place, Heb. 9.27. It is appointed unto men that they ſhall once die. The anſwer is ready, like as they which are alive at Chriſts comming ſhall not die but be changed, 1 Cor. 15. which notwithſtanding ſhall bee in ſtead of death: ſo Henoch was changed in his taking up, though he died not a common death.

6. Confut. Henoch ſhall not returne to preach repentance to the world.

COncerning the end and cauſes, wherefore Henoch was tranſlated. 1. Wee admit that God thereby would put the righteous in comfort, that notwithſtanding the ſentence pronounced againſt Adam, there was a way of righteouſneſſe whereby to recover Adams loſt ſtate. 2. To miniſter comfort to the afflicted members of Chriſt, that they ſhould not doubt, but that their reward is with God, as Habel, though he had an untimely end, yet lived with God as Henoch did: thus Theodoret. 3. Wee refuſe not the collection here of Thomas Aquinas: that God both by Henochs tranſlation before the law, and Elias under the law, would nouriſh the hope of life in his Church as by types repreſenting the aſcenſion of Chriſt, in whom the promiſe of ſalvation ſhould be accompliſhed: Theſe cauſes of Henochs tranſlation may ſafely be received. 4. But we neither thinke, as it is in the booke of Wiſdome (which is no Canonicall Scripture, and therefore we may ſafely diſſent from it) That hee was taken away, leſt wickedneſſe ſhould alter his underſtanding, for as he walked with God before, God kept him in his feare, and preſerved him from evill, ſo he could have guided him ſtill, as the Apoſtle ſaith: He ſhall be eſtabliſhed, God is able to make him ſtand, Rom. 14.4. ſpeaking of the faithfull ſervants of God, as Mathuſelah the ſonne of Henoch, being the longeſt lived of all the Patriarkes, continued righteous to the end. 5. Neither is that ſurmiſe fit to be received, that Henoch is kept alive to preach repentance in the end of the world, and to maintaine the Goſpell againſt Antichriſt, which is the common opinion of the papall profeſſors. For of Henochs preaching in the end of the world there is no mention in Scripture, but only of the ſending of Elias, which is ever underſtood of Elias perſon, but of his ſpirit and zeale. And this Elias the Angell expounded to be John Baptiſt, who ſhould goe before Chriſt, in the ſpirit and power of Elias. And there is no ſuch neceſſity, that Henoch ſhould be preſerved ſo many yeares by miracle to that end, ſeeing the Lord is able to raiſe up Prophets and Miniſters, as he did John Baptiſt, in the ſpirit of Elias and Henoch, to maintaine the truth againſt the Pope and Antichriſt, which we ſee plentifully performed in theſe dayes.

7. Confut. Of the Prophecie and booke of Henoch.

WHereas S. Jude in his Epiſtle, verſ. 14. maketh mention of the Prophecie of Henoch, the ſeventh from Adam, which is not found in any other part of the Canonicall Scripture, leſt the adverſaries might hereupon build their traditions and unwritten verities, I will briefly declare what is to be thought of this Prophecie of Henoch.

Tertul. lib. de habit. mulier.

Hieron. in 1. cap. ad Tit.

Medin. l. 6. in reſol. in decum. Iude c. 24.

1. Neither thinke with Tertullian, that there was any ſuch propheticall booke of Henoch, then extant, who conjectureth that though it periſhed in the floud, yet it might be reſtored againe by Noah, thereunto inſpired. 2. Neither yet with Hierome, that this booke of Henoch was an Apocriphall booke, yet ſome parcell might be true, which the Apoſtle might alleage. For it is not like that the Apoſtle would derive a truth only from an hidden and obſcure booke of no authority in the Church. 3. Neither yet is it like, as Michael Medina thinketh, that there was no ſuch booke at all under Henochs name: for the fathers, Origen, Hierome, Auguſtine, doe in many places make evident mention, that ſuch a booke there was, but thought to be forged. 4. And it is as unlike, that the true booke of Henoch was extant in the Apoſtles time, which was after ward obſcured with fables, and ſo rejected of the Church: for then the Church would rather have purged the true booke from ſuch errours, and preſerved the reſt pure, as they did diſcerne the true Goſpels, from the forged and adulterate.

Our opinion then is, 1. With Auguſtine, that the booke of Henoch, which in his time was produced by heretikes, was altogether forged, and no part of it of Henochs writing: Non quod eorum hominum, qui Deo placuerunt, reprobemus authoritatem, ſed quod iſta non ea dicantur ipſorum: not that, ſaith he, we refuſe the authority of ſuch men, as pleaſed God, but ſuch as they were thought not to be theirs. 2. We judge it not unlike with Origen, that there might be ſuch an authenticall booke of Henochs prophecie, out of the which Jude did take his teſtimony, which is now loſt as ſome other parts of the Canonicall Scripture are: as the bookes of God, Nathan, Iddo, and other Prophets, mentioned in the Chronicles. 3. Or this prophecie of Henoch might be preſerved by faithfull tradition in the Church of the Iewes, which is approved by the Apoſtle. But this is no warrant for other unwritten traditions, unleſſe ſome had the like Apoſtolike ſpirit to judge of them, as Jude had: and further this prophecie of Henoch, is agreeable to the Scriptures, ſo are not many unwritten traditions urged by the Church of Rome.

6. Places

6. Places of exhortation.

1. IN that the line only of the race of the faithfull is rehearſed in this chapter, it both ſheweth, that God will alwaies have his church in the world, and that in the moſt corrupt times, God will have a remnant, that ſhall worſhip him: as alſo this line is continued, to ſhew the accompliſhment of Gods promiſe, that the ſeed of the woman ſhould breake the ſerpents head: and ſo S. Luke doth fetch the petigree of Chriſt after the fleſh from theſe fathers before the floud. God will alwayes have a Church on earth.

2. Verſ. 22. In that Henoch firſt walked with God in earth, before he walked with him in heaven: it ſheweth, that we muſt firſt ſeeke Gods glory in earth, before we can bee admitted unto that everlaſting glory: ſo Saint Peter reaſoneth; that becauſe we looke for new heavens and a new earth, we ſhould bee diligent to be found of him without ſpot, &c. 1 *Pet.*3.13. Godly life goeth before everlaſting glorie.

3. Verſ.29. In that Lamech ſaid of his ſonne Noah, this ſame ſhall comfort us, &c. it appeareth, that the faithfull then looked for a comforter, that ſhould deliver them from the curſe, and give them true reſt: of which comforter and deliverer, Noah was a figure: who both by faith was made heire of righteouſneſſe himſelfe, Heb. 11.7. and by the arke, which was a type of Baptiſme, 1 *Pet.*3.21. did preach and teſtifie to the world the true deliverance by the Meſſiah. CHAP. VI.

The Method.

THis Chapter hath two parts: 1. Gods determination to deſtroy the world: 2. The preparation or making of the Arke.

In the firſt part there is ſet downe: 1. the occaſion, which provoked God to purpoſe mans deſtruction, which was the ſinne of that age, deſcribed in particular: the ſinne of carnall pleaſure, verſ.1. of oppreſſion and tyranny, v.4. in generall, verſ.5. 2. In Gods determination, there is firſt his repentance that hee had made man, verſ.6. then the limitation of one hundred and twenty yeares, to ſee if they would amend, verſ.3. 3. Gods full reſolution to deſtroy all fleſh, verſ.7.

In the ſecond part, there is firſt ſet downe the ground of this favour of God towards Noah: which was Gods mercy and grace towards him. Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord, verſ.8. and Noahs juſtice and righteouſneſſe, verſ.9. which was by faith, *Heb.*11.7. then followeth in the next place the commandement of God, concerning the making of the Arke: and Noahs obedience thereunto, verſ.21.

In the preſcription or commandement for the Arke, there is deſcribed, 1. the forme and faſhion thereof: both of what matter it ſhould be made, verſ.14. of what length, breadth, height, verſ.15. in what order, for the cabbines, verſ.14. window, doore, verſ.16. 2. The uſe thereof, for the preſervation of man, verſ.18. of beaſts, verſ.19. of foules, verſ.20. and their ſuſtentation in laying up their food, verſ.21.

The explanation of doubts or theologicall explication.

Quest. I. Of the greatnesse of the sinne of the old world.

1. THe sinne of the world was very great, seeing God could endure the wicked inhabitants no longer, but swept them away with the flood : which may appeare by these severall considerations, 1. their wickednesse was universally spread, vers. 12. all flesh had corrupted his way. 2. Their sinne exceeded in greatnesse, it was come unto the very height, vers. 5. God saw that the wickednesse of man was great. 3. Not onely the wicked race, but the righteous seed, the sonnes of God fell to folly, vers. 2. 4. They were exercised a long time in doing evill, a thousand yeares and more, that they were growne to such an habite, that they could doe nothing but thinke evill in their heart. 5. Unto this may be added their graceless obstinacie, that having an 120. yeares given them by the preaching of Noe to call them to repentance, yet despised Gods long suffering.

Quest. II. When the world beganne to be so wicked.

2. THis overflowing of iniquity beganne when men beganne to be multiplied upon the earth, vers. 1. not so soone as the world began to be peopled, which might bee within two or three hundred yeares after the creation : for then they began to build Cities. Ninus King of Assyria who reigned there some 230. yeares after the flood, is reported to have had in his armie 70. hundred thousand footmen, and 200. thousand horse men : in the like time after the creation might the world be exceedingly replenished. 2. But it seemeth, that this great defection was about the seventh age : for then Lamech of Cains race, tooke unto him two wives : then the Lord tooke away righteous Henoch, that he should bee no longer grieved with the wickednesse of the world. Then the world being replenished with great multitudes, which are ring-leaders for the most part unto evill, as it is written, thou shalt not follow a multitude to doe evill: began to give themselves to all kinde of wickednesse, adultery, oppression, cruelty, multiplicity of wives, unlawfull lust even against nature, and to fill the earth with uncleanesse. 3. And although in this seventh age iniquity was come to the full height, yet it began long before, even in the dayes of Enos, when as the righteous abhorring the great wickednesse of Cains posterity, separated themselves, and a part beganne to call upon the name of God. Iun. 4. The Hebrewes note, that at the beginning women were not so multiplied as afterward, by whom they tooke occasion to sinne : and therefore it is added, there were daughters borne unto them, &c. vers. 1. but this clause sheweth not a more speciall multiplying of that kinde, but that when the world began to be stored both with men and women, then they gave themselves to wantonnesse.

Diodorus Siculus. lib. 3. c. 2. Exod. 23. 2.

Exod. 23. 2.

Quest. III. The particular sin of the old world here noted.

Vers. 2. THey saw the daughters of men that they were faire, &c. 1. Their fault was not onely in that they of the righteous seed matched into Cains stocke, Calvin. 2. Or that they respected onely beauty, having no regard to their piety and vertue, Marlorat. 3. But they by violence tooke unto them, not to their wives, but women, for so with Mercerus and Iunius I rather interpret the word nashim, from all men whatsoever, as Iunius readeth : both virgines and wives, they cared not whom. 4. Some Hebrewes here understand also the filthy sinne of buggery : that they tooke all they liked, even from among the bruit beasts : but Moses speaketh onely of the daughters of men.

Quest. IV. Who were these sonnes of God.

Vers. THen the sonnes of God. 1. These sonnes of God were not the Angels, which some have supposed to have fallen for their intemperancie with women, and to have begotten of them spirits, as Ioseph, Philo, Iustine, Clemens Alexandrinus, Tertullian conjectured : who so expoundeth that place of S. Paul, that women should be covered, because of the Angels, lest they should bee tempted with their beauty : This opinion is easily confuted : 1. Because the world was punished, and God was angry, not for the sinne of Angels, but of men : vers. 3. My spirit shall not alway strive with man. 2. Chrysostome urgeth that place, Matth. 22. in the resurrection, they neither marry, nor are married, but are the Angels : Ergo, Angels are not subject to carnall affections, as men are. 3. If Angels fell first for the love of women, then they sinned not for 1000. yeares after the creation, whereas the Scripture sheweth, that the Devill was a murtherer and a liar from the beginning, Ioh. 8.44.

Angels fell not for the love of women.

Quest. V. Devils not corporall nor mortall.

IT is also absurd, and improbable, that these were devils which did company with women, and of them came Gyants, as thinketh Franciscus Georgius, who affirmeth devils to have bodies, and a generative faculty, and to company with women. Of the like opinion is Psellus, that the devils have bodies, and they are nourished by sucking and attraction as spunges : and that they are males and females at their pleasures

some are of a fiery, some ayrie, some a watery, some of a terrene nature. But these are fables and fictions, fit rather to be laughed at, than worthy to be confuted. 1. The Devils are of a spirituall not corporall nature, it appeareth by this story, Luk. 8. where we reade, that in one man, there was a legion, that is, six thousand Devils: how could so many spirits if they were corporall, be included in one body? 2. If they were of a fierie, watery, or earthly, & so of an elementall nature, they should bee subject to corruption, mutability, and mortality: and so some have imagined also, as Plutarch writeth of the death of the great Pan, a famous Devill among the Pagans: and Cardane reporteth, that he heard his Father say, who was above thirty years familiar with the Devils, that he learned of them, that they doe die, & decay, & revive againe: but this fancie is contrary to the Scripture: which testifieth, that the Devill hath beene a murtherer from the beginning of the world, Joh. 8. 44. Ergo, he hath continued from the beginning of the world: and how should the soule of man be immortall, if these spirits, which are of a more subtill nature were mortall? 3. Though it were granted, that Devills have a kinde of ayrie bodies, yet could they not ingender, for the power of generation agreeth onely to perfect bodies, which have their materiall and distinct parts, and receive nourishment. 4. And they being, as they say, male and female, should ingender among themselves in their owne kinde. 5. Or if they did company with women, they could not beget men, but multiply their owne kinde, or at the least a mixt kinde, as the mule is engendred of an horse and an asse: and to some like wise have conceited, that the Fawnes and Satyres were the off-spring of such generation. As Hierom in the life of Antonie, reporteth, that such an one appeared unto him in the wildernesse, with goats feet, long crooked nailes, and homes upon his head, and spake unto Antonie: but either this may be held to be a fable, foisted under Hieromes name, or if there were any such thing, it might be some monster of the wilderneſſe, which the Devill used as his trunke to speake out of.

Devils are not corporall.

Plutarch lib. de orac. defect.

Devils have no generation.

Quest. V. I. Spirits doe not generate.

BUt much more absurd is the opinion of Paulus Burgensis, that thinketh these which companied with the daughters of men, were spirits, called Incubi, which doe assume bodies of the aire for a time, representing the shape sometime of men, sometime of women, in the act of generation, and then they are called Succubi: and thus saith he, were the Giants engendred: and Tostatus approoving this conceit of Incubi and Succubi, seemeth to give credit to that report of Merlin, that he was begotten by a spirit. In these assertions and uncertaine conjectures of men, somewhat is true, some part false. 1. True it is, that the Devill may appeare in the shape of man or woman, and dissemble and counterfeit the act proper to both: not that the spirits have any delight in such carnall acts, having no true but assumed and counterfeit bodies: but they doe it more strongly to delude men and women, and entice them to that abominable sinne of the flesh, which they know hath corrupted the hearts of many excellent men, as of David, Salomon. 2. Though spirits can take upon them the shape of bodies, yet they are but so to the eye, they are not true bodies, being easily discerned by the feeling: and therefore our Saviour saith, feele and see, a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as yee see mee to have. And some have reported, that they have felt such bodies assumed by spirits, as colde as yce, and of a divers substance from humane flesh, as Alexander ab Alexandro, so writeth of another to whom a spirit appeared, and Cardanus of himselfe. If any man object, that Abraham washed the Angels feet, and yet discerned them not: I will not answer with Peresius, whose judgement I refuse not in the rest, that Abrahams intent upon other things regarded it not. But I note a difference betweene the operation of good and bad Angels: that these never appeared with true bodies, and therefore were called Phantasmata, visions, fansies. Marke. 6. 49. But unto the other God gave the use of true bodies for a time, during that ministerie or service, as appeareth, in that they did eat and drinke, were lodged, had their feet washed, &c. 3. But howsoever spirits may assume bodies, they are not such as can be instruments of generation, by conveying of humane seed, as some have imagined: because the scripture saith, children are the inheritance of the Lord, Psal. 127. 3. And Eva confesseth, when Cain was borne, that she had obtained a son of God, Gen. 4. 1. and if that were true, which is fabled of Merlin, such kind of birth should be oftner seene in the world.

Wherefore by the sonnes of God in this place. 1. Neither doe wee understand Angels good or bad. 2. Neither men of tall and great stature: as such things as are excellent in their kind, are so called, as high and tall trees, are said to be the trees of God. Psal. 104. 16. 3. Nor yet the sonnes of Princes, and great men as the Chalde readeth, to whom Mercerus subscribeth, which are called Gods in scripture. Psal. 82. 6. I said ye are Gods, &c. 4. Neither yet are they so called, because they came of Seeth, who as Iaudas thinketh, was in respect of his religion and great knowledge, saluted as a God in earth. 5. But they are here named the sonnes of God, that were of the righteous seed, and worshippers of the true God, as the wicked are called the sonnes of the Devil, and be their father. John. 8. 44. ye are of your father the Devill: who although they were not indeed the sonnes of God in his eternall election, yet were they so in respect of their externall calling.

Quest. VII. The meaning of these words, My spirit shall not alwaies strive, &c.

4 Vers. 3. MY spirit shall not alwaies strive, &c. 1. Not as the latine text is, My spirit shall not alwaies remaine; which some expound of Gods wrath, some of his providence, some of the holy Ghost, some of the soule and spirit of man inspired of God: and then the sense so bee, that Gods wrath shall not alwaies continue, but he will punish them at once, or he will no more protect them, or take care for them, neither his spirit shall be with them, or he will take away their life and spirit from them. For this variety of interpretation ariseth of the mistaking of the word, which signifieth to contend or judge, not to remaine.

2 Neither is Pagnines interpretation so apt, my spirit shall not alwaies be sheathed, as a sword in a scabbard; and so hee would derive the word Yadon, of neden, which signifieth a sheath. 3. The meaning then of these words, my spirit shall not alwaies judge or contend, is neither as Hierom expoundeth, non ultra eis mittam sententiam vindictæ, I will not punish them for ever, but render unto them here that which they deserve. For S. Peter sheweth, that their soules are now in the prison of hell, and so everlastingly punished, 1 Peter 3.19. Neither is Chrysostome, that God would no more punish them spiritually, as hee had done, by taking his grace and spirit from them, but now he would inflict a corporall punishment upon them: for God had not yet punished them, giving them the space of 120. yeares to repent. Neither weigh we understand these words with Oleaster, that God would no longer strive with them, in reproving, and admonishing them, which they regarded not, or with Hosius: God would no longer consult, or dispute the matter as it were with himselfe, what to doe with them, but if they amended not within that space set, he would certainly destroy them.

Quest. VIII. What these Giants were.

Vers. 4. There were Giants, &c. Some thinke that these were called Giants, not for their greatnesse of stature, but their cruell and beastly conditions: so thinke, Philo, Iosephus, Damasc. Cyrill, with others: so also Iunius. 2. But beside their fierce and cruell nature, it is most probable, that they were of huge and great stature, Mercer. for such there were also after the flood: as the sonnes of Anak, in comparison of whom the Israelites seemed as grashoppers, Numb. 13.34 such were the Emmims and Zamzummims, Deut. 2.10,17. and Og the King of Basan, whose bed was of iron, being nine cubits in length, and foure in breadth, Deut. 3.11. and of this judgement are Ambrose, Augustine, Theodoret. 3. And these Giants huge in stature, men of great strength, as is shewed after in this verse, did most abound before the flood, and such also was the off-spring of this unlawfull copulation betweene the sonnes of God and daughters of men. 4. And they were men of renowne, that is, famous over all the world, because they did tyrannize over their neighbours, and brought them in subjection; of whom Berosius writeth, that they had a City called Enos, about the mountaine Libanus, which ruled over all the world; they did eat mans flesh, and had unlawfull company with their mothers, daughters, with mules, and brute beasts. 5. Some, as Rasi, doe referre this generation of Giants to the times of Enos, further affirming, that the Lord sent the Ocean Sea, which destroyed the generation of these Giants, and the third part of the world: but the Giants which succeeded them, were as wicked as they. But of this inundation of the Ocean, no mention is made in Scripture: neither is it like that the generation of Giants began so soone in the world: neither with Aben Ezra, doe we understand this, of the generation of Giants after the flood: of whom came Og and the rest: as though any of the Giants had escaped the flood, to beget Giants afterward: and that Noe and his sonnes were Giants it is not to be thought. Mercer. Neither were these Giants onely in Noahs time; but when this violent rage of lust beganne to reigne in the world, then this off-spring of Giants came in, which continued till the time of Noah. 6. Neither were these Giants onely of Seths race, as some thinke, nor yet onely of Cain, as R. Sel. but in both families there were Giants, after they thus coupled together without the feare of God, Mercer, Calvin. 7. So that the Nephilim here spoken of, so named of Nephal, which signifieth to fall, were not so called, either because they were fallen in stature from the hugeneesse of the first Giants, as Rambam: neither as R. Sel. because they were the cause of ruine of falling to themselves, or others: nor yet onely because they were Apostates and fell from God, Iun. but they were so called in respect of their great stature, the sight whereof caused men to fall to the ground for feare, Ab. Ezra, Mercer. 8. Neither was their talnesse or greatnesse of stature simply evill, but because they abused their strength to lust and violence, and so became both monstrous in their body and soule, and begat a monstrous generation like to themselves. Mercer.

Quest. IX. The space of an hundred and twenty yeares how to be reckoned.

6. His dayes shall be 120. yeares, &c. 1 Which is not referred to the age of man, as Tostatus and Reperus thinke, because Moses the writer hereof lived no longer: for although it be true, that mans life was shortned after the flood, and thrice halfed from 900. and odde, to 400. and odde, as in Arphaxad that lived 438. yeares, and then halfed againe from 400. and odde, to 200. and odde, as in Serug, that lived 230. and then almost halfed to 100. and odde, as in Abraham that lived an 175. yeares: yet wee see that many of these exceeded an 120. We rather with Hierome Chrysostome, and others, take this time set to be that space of yeares which God gave unto the old world for their repentance: which were not shortned by twenty yeares, as Hierome thinketh, because of their wickednesse, for the flood came an 100. yeares after, when Noah was 600. yeares old, Gen. 7.6. Neither need we say with Augustine, that Noah was said to be 500. yeare old, when he was but 480. because he had lived the most part of it: for Sem was but an 100. yeare old two yeares after the flood, Gen. 11.10. but now he should be an 120. if Noah were then but 480. when he beganne to have his sonnes. Therefore this doubt is more easily reconciled, to say that this time was set before Noah was 500. yeares of age, but by way of anticipation, mention is made of Noahs sonnes before, because of the continuing of the story: as we see the like, Gen. 2. where the creation of the woman is recorded after the seventh day, being done the first. Mer. Per.

Quest. X. Of the originall of Giants.

7. NOw as touching the originall of Giants, 1. firſt the opinion of Paulus Burgenſis is to be refuſed, who thinketh they were Devills, called in Hebrew Nephilim, cadentes of falling, becauſe they fell from heaven: for theſe Giants were deſtroyed by the floud, ſo were not the Devils: and the Giants were called Nephilim, both in reſpect of their terrible ſtature, which made men fall to the ground, and for their Apoſtaſie in falling away from vertue and piety. 2. As abſurd is the opinion of Franciſcus Georgius, that theſe Giants were begotten of ſpirits companying with women, and that otherwiſe they are not engendred: and that theſe are the ſeed of the Serpent, betweene whom and the ſeed of the woman the Lord put enmitie: for this cauſe (ſaith he) ſince the comming of Chriſt, who hath broken the Serpents head, we read of no ſuch commixion of the ſpirits with women, nor of this generation of Giants. Thus Franciſcus Georg. 6 tom. problem. 33. c. 33. 1. But theſe fanſies may be eaſily controlled. 1. For Giants to be procreated of men, is no more againſt nature, than for Pygmees and Dwarſes, that are as much admirable for their ſmalneſſe, as the other are for their talneſſe: ſuch an one was one Canopas in Auguſtines time, that was but two foot and a hand breadth high. 2. That ſpirits have uſed the carnall company of men and women ſince Chriſt, Auguſtine ſheweth, lib. 15. de Civit. Dei. c. 23. and experience confirmeth the ſame, though thereof there can be no generation. 3. And likewiſe it is evident, that there have beene men and women of Giants ſtature ſince Chriſt: Auguſtine maketh mention of a woman of admirable talneſſe, her parents being but of ordinary ſtature, lib. 15. de Civit. Dei. c. 23. and Pliny of a man in Auguſtus time, of nine foot and a halfe in height. 4. Neither are theſe Giants that ſeed of the Serpent: for they are alſo begotten of women: neither were all Giants, men of great ſtature, wicked perſons: for it is not unlike but that Adam, Noah, and other Patriarks before the floud, much exceeded the ordinary ſtature of men now: and the Eccleſiaſticall ſtories make mention of one Chriſtophorus, a man of twelve cubits in height, that was put to death under Decius the Emperour, for the Chriſtian faith. And further, all the naturall ſeed of women are not at enmity with the Serpent, but many of them he uſeth as his agents and inſtruments. This place then is much abuſed to that purpoſe, wherefore it is alleaged. Theſe Giants then, were no other but the naturall off-ſpring of men and women in thoſe dayes before the floud: not that all were ſuch, but theſe were ſuch, which were ſo borne by this unlawfull conjunction betweene the ſeed of the righteous and the wicked race: for as the root was, ſo was the branch; the marriage unholy, and the iſſue ungratious.

Quest. XI. How God is ſaid to repent.

8. Verſ. 6. IT repented the Lord. The ancient writers have diverſly collected of theſe words, but all to good purpoſe. 1. Chryſoſtome ſaith, it is Verbum noſtræ parvitati accommodatum: a word applied to our weakneſſe, to expreſſe the greatneſſe of their ſinnes, Quæ miſericordem Deum indignari fecerunt, which compelled the mercifull God to be angry. 2. Theodoret, It repenteth me, &c. that is, I have purpoſed to deſtroy man, as the Lord ſaith, it repenteth me, that I have made Saul King, that is, I have decreed to depoſe him: and ſo as Auguſtine well ſaith; Non eſt perturbatio, ſed judicium, quo irrogatur pœna, it is no perturbation in God this repentance, but an impoſition of puniſhment. 3. Rupertus: in that it repented the Lord: pietatis eſt, it ſheweth his piety, how loth the Lord is to puniſh: but in that the Lord purpoſeth to deſtroy them, ſeveri judicii eſt, it ſheweth his juſt ſeverity. 4. But Auguſtine more to the purpoſe ſaith, Panitudo Dei eſt mutandorum immutabilis ratio: Repentance in God, is his unchangeable diſpoſition of changeable things. God is not changed, but the things altered. 5. Juſtinus Martyr hath moſt plainly opened this point: God is immutable. Sed cum ii quos curat, mutantur, mutat ipſe res prout iis expedit quos curat: but when they whom God careth for are changed, then God changeth the courſe of things, as he ſeeth expedient for them. For God immutabiliter ignoſcit, unchangeably forgiveth thoſe repent as the Ninivites, and immutabiliter non ignoſcit, unchangably forgiveth them not, which amend not, as Saul. So here the Lord holdeth on his unchangeable courſe of judgement in puniſhing ſinne, yet ſeemeth to repent in undoing his worke, in deſtroying man, whom he had made, Perer.

9. Verſ. 7. I will deſtroy from man to beaſt, &c. Not onely man ſhall be deſtroyed, but the other creatures with him; and yet man onely had ſinned. The reaſon is, 1. as Chryſoſtome ſheweth, becauſe all things were made for mans uſe: hic igitur cum e medio tollitur, quis illorum uſus erit: and therefore when man is taken away, there ſhould be no uſe of them. 2. Like as when the head is cut off, all the members die, ſo together with man the creatures, over the which he had power, are puniſhed: not onely he, but his. Hereby the ſeverity of Gods puniſhment appeareth, as alſo the greatneſſe of mans ſin, that brought deſtruction upon many, as Davids ſin in numbring the people, did upon the whole land. 3. Becauſe beaſtly men had abuſed the creatures to their filthy pleaſure and riotous exceſſe, it ſtandeth with Gods juſtice to puniſh the inſtrument with the principall. 4. The fiſhes are not alſo here threatned to be deſtroyed, becauſe they lived in that element wherewith God purpoſed to overflow the earth: neither had man ſo much abuſed them, as the other kinds: and beſide it pleaſed God to ſpare them among other creatures: at other times the Lord threatneth alſo to take away the fiſh of the Sea, *Hoſh. 4. 3. Quest. XIII. How Noah is ſaid to be perfect.

Verſ. 10. NOah was a juſt and perfect man, &c. 1. Noah, nor yet any man living can be ſaid to be perfect in reſpect of Gods juſtice, or in the ſight of God, as the Pſalmiſt ſaith: If thou O Lord markeſt what is done amiſſe, who ſhall be able to abide it? Pſ. 130. 3. 2. Neither yet in regard of that perfection, which the Saints ſhall attaine unto in the Kingdome of God: as the Apoſtle ſheweth: *Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect, Phil.*3.12. 3. Neither yet is any ſo perfect, as that he can be found in this life without ſinne; which was the hereſie of the Pelagians: for the Preacher ſaith: there is *not one juſt man upon the earth, that doeth good, and ſinneth not, Eccleſ.*7.20. 4. Neither is any ſaid to be perfect, becauſe they can keepe the commandements, and doe more than is commanded, in obſerving the Evangelicall counſell; as Pererius, and other Popiſh Writers. 5. But Noah is ſaid to be perfect, in compariſon of others: and therefore it is added, in his generation, or in regard of the perfection which may be attained unto in this life, which is rather in the will and deſire to be perfect, and in increaſing and going ſtill forward, than in any actuall accompliſhment of the deſire: and in this ſenſe the Apoſtle having a little before denied himſelfe to bee perfect, yet ſaith to the Philippians, Let us many as be perfect, bee thus minded, Philippians 3.15. and ſo our Saviour biddeth us be perfect, as our heavenly Father is perfect, that is, that we ſhould more and more labour for perfection. As Auguſtine ſaith, Ingredi ſine macula non abſurde dicitur, non qui jam perfectus, ſed qui ad ipſam perfectionem irreprehenſibiliter curris: Hee is not amiſſe ſaid to walke without ſpot, not who is already perfect, but runneth unto perfection without reproofe. Thirdly, how Noah is ſaid to be perfect, is expounded, verſ.8. Noah found grace in the ſight of God: it was the perfection then of faith, whereby Noah was excepted as juſt and perfect in the ſight of God being by faith cloathed with the perfection and juſtice of Chriſt.

QVEST. XIIII. How the earth was corrupt.

11. THe earth was corrupt before God. 1. That is the inhabitants of the earth, where corrupt, as Chryſoſtome ſaith, Homo terra appellatur, quia totus terrenus, Man is called earth, becauſe he was become wholly earthly. 2. Or, they had infected the very earth with their abominations, and made it accurſed, Jun. as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, *A fruitfull land is turned into barrenneſſe, for the wickedneſſe of them that dwell therein, Pſal.*107.34. 3. The earth may be ſaid to be corrupt, that is, defiled, with thoſe ſinnes of uncleanneſſe, which they committed: as the Scripture teſtifieth, that the land is defiled with ſuch abominations, *Levit.*18.25. 4. The earth was corrupt before God, that is, they were growne to ſuch impudency and boldneſſe in their ſinnes, that they would commit them, even as in the preſence and ſight of God, as the Prophet ſaith, They declare their ſinnes as Sodome, they hide them not, Iſay. 3.9.

Chryſoſt. hom.24. in Gen.

QVEST. XV. Whether they which died in the flood periſhed everlaſtingly.

Verſ. 13. I Will deſtroy them with the earth, &c. Here a great queſtion ariſeth, whether all they which were deſtroyed in the floud, periſhed everlaſtingly: that is, both in body and ſoule. 1. For anſwer to this queſtion, we neither thinke that moſt of the old world were onely temporally puniſhed: which ſeemeth to have beene the opinion of Hierome, that they which periſhed in the floud, as likewiſe the Sodomites, recepernnt in vita mala ſua, received their puniſhment in this life. To the which purpoſe he urgeth that place, Nahum. 1.9. Non conſurget duplex tribulatio: Affliction ſhall not riſe the ſecond time: and therefore it ſtandeth not with Gods juſtice, to puniſh twice for the ſame ſinne, both in this world, and the world to come. To this place I anſwer firſt: that the Prophet ſpeaking of the deſtruction of the Aſſyrians, ſheweth onely, that their overthrow ſhould be finall, that God ſhould not need to ſmite them againe. As Abiſhai ſaid to David, when hee found Saul aſleepe, Let mee ſmite him and I will not ſmite him againe, 1 *Sam.*26.9. Thus Theophylact, and Theodoret expound this place. Secondly, if it bee expounded, as it is alleaged, it muſt be underſtood onely of penitent perſons, that ſuch being afflicted in this life, ſhall not need to be puniſhed againe; as we may ſee in the repentant theefe: but concernig the the other theefe, de temporali ad æternum tranſvectus eſt ſupplicium: he was carried from temporall to eternall puniſhment, as Rupertus ſaith.

Hier. trad. in Geneſ.

How God is ſaid not to puniſh twice.

Rupert. lib.3. com. in Gen. cap.3. Bellar. lib.4. de Chriſt.

2. Neither doe we approve their opinion, that thinke many of the old world, though incredulous before, yet when they ſaw the floud comming, in fine vitæ pœnetentiam egerunt, did repent them even in the end of their life: ſic Lyranus, Bellarmine. For S. Peter calleth them, κόσμον ἀσεβῶν, the world of the wicked, 2 *Pet.*2.5. They then that were wicked ſo continued to the end.

3. Neither is the opinion of Cajetanus to be received, that thinketh, non fuiſſe ſimpliciter incredulos, id eſt ſine vera Dei fide, that they were not ſimply incredulous, that is, without the true faith of God, but only beleeved not Noah in this, that the floud ſhould come, but truſting to Gods long ſuffering, hoped, that it ſhould not be ſo: for it is evident, *Geneſ.*6. that beſide this ſpeciall point of incredulity, the old world was in many other ſinnes outragious: the earth was filled with cruelty, verſ.11. and in that they gave no credit to Noah, Gods Prophet, therein they were incredulous againſt God, as our Saviour ſaith of his Apoſtles: *he that heareth you heareth me: and he that deſpiſeth you deſpiſeth me, Luk.*10.16.

The old world ſimply incredulous.

Nicetas & Biſhop in cat. 2. Nazianzen. de paſcat.

4. Their opinion alſo is to be refuſed, which thinke, that though the wicked of the old world were condemned to hell, yet they might be redeemed from thence by the deſcenſion of Chriſt: who is ſaid by S. Peter, to have preached to the ſpirits in priſon, which ſometime were diſobedient: at which time alſo ſome have fabled, that Plato at the preaching of Chriſt, in hell beleeved: and that divers others have been delivered from hell, as the ſoule of Falconilla, by the prayer of S. Tecla, and of Trajanus the Emperour, at the interceſſion of Gregory: But theſe imaginations are contrary to the Scriptures: for out of hell is no redemption: as Abraham ſaid to the rich man: *They which would goe from hence to you, cannot, neither can they come from thence to us, Luk.*16.26. And hell is thus deſcribed, *Where their worme dieth not, and the fire never goeth out, Mark.*9.46. the worme of the conſcience in everlaſting fire, ſhall torment the wicked: that oration which goeth under the name of Damaſcene, is confeſſed by Bellarmine to be none of his: and that place of S. Peter hath no ſuch meaning, as even now ſhall appeare.

No deliverance out of hell.

Damaſcen. oratio pro mortuis. Bellar. lib. 2. de purgat. c. 8.

5. Neither

5. Neither is their conceit any thing worth, who thinke, that some of them which perished in the flood, did repent them before they died, and so went not to hell, but to purgatory, from whence they were delivered by Christs descending thither, according to that saying of Peter, but was quickned in the spirit, by the which he went and preached to the spirits in prison, which were in time past disobedient, &c. But this place in Augustines opinion cannot be understood of the descending of Christs soule into hell. 1. Augustine objecteth, that Christ cannot be said to be quickned, or made alive in his spirit, that is, his soule, because it was not subject to death. And therefore by the spirit he truly understandeth the divine power of Christ, whereby hee preached in Noah. 2. If there be preaching in hell, then it will follow, that there is a Church there, and repentance and conversion of soules. 3. The Apostle speaketh onely of such as were disobedient, but they were not delivered by Christ. 4. It cannot be shewed in all the Scripture, where the receptacle of the soules of the faithfull and beleevers is called a prison.

Sic Bellarmin. lib. 4. de christi anima. c. 13.

1 Pet. 3. 19.

Aug. epist. 99.

6. Wherefore our opinion is: that all those which were disobedient and incredulous in the dayes of Noah, were first destroyed in their bodies in the flood, and after in their soules perished everlastingly: but from this number both infants must be excepted, such as were of the sonnes of God, who are not capable of faith and obedience, and therefore were neither unfaithfull, nor disobedient; and such also as were ignorant of the preaching of Noah, and framing of the Arke. Of these God might have mercy. The rest continuing still in unbeleefe, everlastingly perished. For it is not like, that they which by the space of an hundred and twenty yeares would not repent, but remained obstinate, would relent in the instant of the flood. Herein therefore we refuse not the judgement and reason of Rupertus, Primo & ultimo judicio soli reprobi condemnantur, & soli electi servantur, istomedio nec soli electi conservantur, nec soli reprobi suffocantur: In the first judgement, when the Angels fell, and the last onely the reprobates shall be censured, the elect saved: but in this judgement comming betweene, neither the Elect onely were preserved in the Arke (for there was Cham accursed of his father) nor the reprobate onely suffocated in the waters. And hereunto agreeth S. Peters comparison, that resembleth baptisme to the Arke, 1 Pet. 3. 21. but all dying without baptisme are not damned, neither is it to be supposed, they were all reprobates which died without the Arke.

All dying in the flood, not utterly lost.
1. Reason: all were not disobedient as Infants.
Lib. 4. comment. in Gen. cap. 6.
2. Reason: all in the Arke not elected. Ergo, all out of the Arke not castawayes.
3. Reason, all dying without baptisme not damned.

Quest. XVI. Of what manner the Arke was made.

Vers. 14. Make an Arke of Pine trees.] 1. Some thinke that no certaine kinde of wood is expressed, but generally the matter whereof the whole Arke should be made, which was not one kinde of wood, but divers, Perer. 2. But some take it for squared wood, as the 70. 3. Some for wood pitched: pro lignis bituminatis, Hierom. tradit. in Genes. 4. Some for the Pine or Pitch tree, because from the word gopher here used, seemeth to be derived gaphrith, taken for brimstone, Gen. 19. sic Oleaster: for gaphrith, brimstone, is digged out of the earth; pitch which commeth from the tree hath another name, it is called copher. 5. Some thinke the Arke was made of the Firre tree, which is the highest and straitest of all other, or the Cypresse tree, because of the continuance. 6. But it is most like to be the Cedar, as the Thargum readeth: which is commended in Scripture for the height, and therefore is called the Cedars of God, Psal. 104. 16. and beside, it is most durable. Plinie maketh mention of Cedar beames in the Temple of Apollo at Utica, which continued from the first foundation untill his time, almost 1200. yeares. 7. Neither need it be doubted where Noah should have timber of sufficient length to serve for the breadth of the Arke, for Plinie reporteth of a beame of the Larix tree, in Tiberius reigne, seene at Rome, an 120. foot long, and of a Cypris tree, 130. foot long. He maketh mention also of the Indian trees to be so high, that underneath an arrow cannot be shot over them: Ex Perer.

Quest. XVII. Of the measure of the Arke.

Vers. 15. This length of the Arke shall be 300. cubits.] The Arke was six times so long as broad, and ten times so long as high: after the proportion of mans body, as Augustine well writeth: for the length of mans body from the crowne to the foot, is six times the breadth from one side to another, and ten times the thicknesse from the backe to the chest: But many have doubted, that the Arke being described to be no larger, was not sufficient to containe all the beasts with their severall food: and Apelles the disciple of wicked Marcion, tooke occasion hereby to cavill at the whole story. But this doubt may easily be removed: 1. Yee we are neither forced with Origen to make of one cubit six, which he calleth a Geometricall cubit: for neither is there any such cubit in use, which in length containeth six ordinary cubits: neither doth the Scripture in other places reckon according to such cubits: for whereas the Altar is prescribed to be made five cubits long, three cubits high, Exod. 27. by this account, taking one cubit (which containeth a foot and halfe) for six, it should be 27. foot high, and 45. foot long, which were no fit proportion for an Altar to sacrifice upon: and further, the Arke would now bee as much too great, and too huge for any use, being by this computation 22800. cubits in length: that is, 900. yards. which almost maketh a mile: and in height an 180. cubits, that is 90. yards.

Aug. lib. 15. de Civitat. Dei. cap. 26.

Origens opinion of the Geometricall cubit refused.

2. Augustine alloweth for every one of the three lofts the same proportion for each: 300. cubits in length, 50. in breadth, 30. in height; so that the length of the whole should be 900. cubits, the breadth an 150. the height 90. but this agreeth not with the text, that saith, the length of the Arke (not of the lofts or divisions) shall be 300. cubits, the breadth 50. &c.

Aug. in lib. 15. de Civitat. Dei. cap. 27.

3. Some to helpe the matter, understand the cubit of the Sanctuary, which was much greater than the common and ordinary cubit. 1. Some thinke that the measure and weight of the Sanctuary, was no bigger than the ordinary, but more certaine, and so as it were the standerd to forme other vulgar measures by: See Perer. but this shall afterward appeare to be otherwise. 2. Some would have the cubit of the Sanctuarie, to be a cubit and an hand breadth, Ezek. 40. 5. but that rather is understood to be regium non sacrum, even the Kings cubit, not the Temple cubit. By this reckoning the Arke shall be in length 350 in breadth 58.

Of the cubit of the sanctuarie.

Per. lib. 10. in Gen. 4. disput.

in height 35. cubits, or thereabout. 3. Some other thinke the Temple cubit was a foot larger than the common, and somewhat more, and so the Arke should containe in length 525. common cubits, and 87. in breadth, and 52. with an halfe in height: but of this opinion there is no good ground. 4. But it is more like, that the cubit of the Sanctuary was twice so much, as the common and usuall cubit: as may appeare by these reasons: 1. Because the weight of the Sanctuary, was double to the usuall: as the sickle of the Sanctuary weighed 20. gerah, Exod. 30.13. Whereas the common sickle was esteemed at the one halfe. 2. Where the Temple of Solomon was but 60. cubits in length, and 20. in breadth, this had beene too small a proportion for such a goodly place, if it had beene but 30. yards long, and 10. yards broad, for two common cubits make but a yard: therefore a cubit of the Sanctuary could be no lesse than so many yards: and so by this estimate the Arke should be 600. common cubits, that is 300. yards in length, 50. yards broad, and thirty high.

Of the weights and measures of the Sanctuarie.

2 Chron. 3.3.

4. Some doe understand the ordinary cubit, which is the measure from the elbow to the top of the middle finger, but doe thinke it to have beene much bigger than it is now, because their stature of body before the floud was much greater, Mercerus. But it should seeme, that Moses taketh the cubit for the measure of ordinary men, not of Giants, as Deut. 3.11. The bed of Og is said to be nine cubits in length, &c. after the cubit of a man: that is, not after Gages arme, but the measure of ordinary men.

5. But we need not use any of these helps (though the third and fourth are not much to be misliked, any man that will may so account for the proportion of the Arke) for if we take the cubit here after the common estimation, the Arke will be found to be of sufficient capacity: three hundred common cubits make an 150. yards, which containe 400. and 50. foot, almost two furlong in length, which make the eight part of a mile; and multiplying the length by the breadth, 50. times 300. make 15000. cubits, which being increased by the height of 30. cubits, there will arise in the whole capacity of the Arke, thirty times 15000. cubits. Beside, if the Arke be divided into cels and cabbins, or nests, as the word chinnim signifieth, v. 14. there will be in one of the chambers or divisions, foure hundred mansions, whereof every one shall be six cubits in breadth, and as much in length, and the height eight or nine cubits: for every six cubits in length of the Arke, carrying fifty in breadth, will make 8. cabbins, and two cubits to spare. And in the length of 300. cubits, we finde fifty times six: so shall we have fifty times 8. cubits, which maketh foure hundred: which mansions will be sufficient for the divers kinds of beasts and cattell, and many will remaine over for other necessary uses, as for passage from place to place, and such like.

Quest. XV. Of the time how long the Arke was in making.

1. THe received opinion is, that the Arke was in preparing an hundred yeares, because Noah is said to have beene five hundred yeare old, Gen. 5.32. before he was commanded to make the Arke, and the floud came, when he was six hundred yeare old, Gen. 7.6. Thus thinketh Origen, lib. 4. contr. Celsum. Augustine lib. 15. de Civitat. Dei, c. 21. Gregor. hom. 15. in Ezech. with others, Mercer.

1. But the truer opinion is, that it was an hundred and twenty yeares in making, Mercer: both for that this time is set for the repentance of the old world, Gen. 6.3. to the which they were invited by the preaching of Noah, as also because of S. Peters words, which in time past were disobedient, when once the long suffering of God abode in the dayes of Noah, while the Arke was in preparing, 1. Pet. 3.20. This time of Gods long suffering, was 120. yeares, and all that while the Apostle saith, the Arke was in preparing.

3. It will be objected, that when Noah was commanded to make the Arke, he had sonnes borne unto him: for the Lord saith unto him, Thou shalt goe into the Arke, thou and thy sonnes, &c. But Noah had no sonnes till he was 500. yeare old. Answ. There is mention made not onely of Noahs sonnes, but of his sonnes wives: now wives it is like they had not before they were forty or fifty yeares of age, seeing Sem lived six hundred yeares; so that by this account, the Arke should not bee above 50. yeares in making, their father being five hundred yeares old before any of his sonnes were borne. We say then, that either these words were not spoken to Noah concerning his entrance and his sonnes, and their wives, into the Arke, till it was finished, or that the Lord provideth for his sonnes that should be borne, or that Noah was some long time in preparing timber and stuffe before he began to build the Arke. Berosus conjecture is, that 42. yeares were spent in that provision, and the residue of the 120. yeares in the building. But this is an uncertaine conjecture: like enough it is, that the providing of the matter would aske a long time.

4. And whereas Noah is said to be five hundred yeare old, cap. 5. that is there expressed for continuing of the Genealogie. And the story following in the 6. chapter is set downe by way of recapitulation: the 100. yeares there mentioned, taking beginning in the 480. yeare of Noahs age.

Quest. XVI. Of the severall chambers and divisions in the Arke.

Hom. 2. in Gen.

Vers. 16. Thou shalt make it with the low, second, and third roome.] 1. There were neither foure roomes or regions in the Arke as Iosephus supposeth, lib. 1. antiquitat. 2. nor yet five, as Origen thinketh: the first, for the dung of the cattell, the second for their food, the third for the cruell and savage beasts, the fourth for the tame & gentle, the fifth for man. 3. Neither were there beside the three regions in the Arke, certaine cabbins without in the side of the Arke, for the beasts called Amphibia, that live both in the waters, and upon the earth, as the Crocodile, Sea-calfe, and such like, as Hugo thinketh: for all the beasts came into the Arke, which were preserved, Gen. 7.9. 4. Neither beside the three partitions in the Arke, was there a bottom beside to receive the filth of the Arke, as Pererius: for conveyances might bee made otherwise in the side of the Arke for that use, and it would have beene a great annoyance to have kept the dung of the cattell one whole yeare in the Arke. 5. All these opinions are repugnant to the text, which prescribeth but three ranks, the lower second, and third: so is that Hebrew text, and Chalde Paraphrast and the Septuagint are so likewise to bee understood: facies inferiora, bicamerata, tricamerata: thou shalt make the lower roomes, the second chambers, and third chambers: and so doth Augustine interpret them: taking these words not joyntly, wherein Origen was deceived, as though there should bee two chambers below, and three above, but distinctly and severally. Aug. quæst. in Gen. qu. 6.

Quest. XVII. Of the severall use of the divisions in the Arke.

COncerning the distinct use of these chambers, 1. Some make the lowest for the dung, the next for the food, the third for the cattell, as Origen, and some Hebrewes. 2. Some the first for the beasts, the second roome for their food, which might bee put downe into their cabins with ease, as Pererius. 3. Some will not have the cruell and tame beasts together, but make two severall regions for them, as Origen. 4. Some doe place men and beasts together in the upper and third roome, dividing it into three parts, leaving both the ends for the beasts, the middle for men: Sio Lyranus, Tostatus. 5. Some doe place the beasts together in the lowest, which they make also the draine of the ship, their food in the middle, and men together with the birds and foules in the uppermost. Mercer. 6. It is most like that the food and provender was in the lowest roome, and the beasts in the middle, because of the fresh and more open aire, as also for the better conveying of their dung by the sides of the Arke into the water: for this second region was ten cubits from the bottome, (allowing for every partition as many) and so much of the Arke may be supposed to be under the water: otherwise if the cattell were in the lowest roome, we must be forced contrary to the text to make a fourth place in the bottome, to bee as the sinke and draine of the Arke. But I rather subscribe unto Calvins judgement, that the order and disposition of these three partitions is to us unknowne.

Quest. XX. Of the window in the Arke.

Vers. 18. A Window shalt thou make, &c.] 1. This was neither a precious or shining stone, as the carbuncle, as some of the Hebrewes thinke: for Noah is said to open the window, Gen. 8. 6. 2. neither was it shut all the time of the flood, and gave no light, as Tostatus thinketh, for to what use should it then have beene made? 3. Neither was this window but of a cubit in length, as Oleaster following Aben Ezra: for such a small window would not have sufficed for all the Arke: and those words that follow, to a cubit shalt thou finish it above, cannot bee referred to the window, but to the Arke: because the gender agreeth not in the Hebrew, and otherwise the description of the Arke should bee unperfect. 4. Neither was there one onely window made, as Mercerus, Buteo, gesseth, and other parts to bee lightned with candles. 5. But it is most like, that divers lights were made: for so the word Tsahar signifieth, a cleare light: but where mention is made of opening the window, Gen. 8. 6. there another word Chalon, is used, which was some principall window which Noah opened. Iun.

Quest. XXI. Of the doore in the side of the Arke.

THe doore shalt thou set in the side thereof.] 1. It was not in the end or the breadth of the arke, as Pererius conjectureth, but in the side: for the side of an hose is rather said to be in the length than the breadth: as in a mans bodie we call that his side, which is part of his length, the top of the head, and the foot, are the two extreme ends, not the sides of mans bodie. 2. Neither was the doore so situate, as it might be even with the waters for the beasts to come swimming unto, as Hugo thinketh: for the beasts were all come into the arke before the waters fell. Gen. 7. 6. 3. Neither was the doore five cubits from the bottome, as Pererius, but it was placed lowest of all, for the more easie entrance of the beasts, which being entered, might ascend by staires and other passages to their cabbins: and the custome of building is such, to make the doore and entrance lowest: and this doore was after closed up, to keepe out the waters: as it is said, that the Lord shut him up. Gen. 7. v. 16. Hug. l. 1. de arca, mo. al. c. 3.

Quest. XXII. Of the forme and fashion of the Arke.

IN a cubit shalt thou finish it above.] Concerning the forme and fashion of the Arke, it was 1. neither like unto a ship, gathered in at the bottome, and so waxing wider: for it had not beene of such capacity to receive such a multitude of creatures: and it is called Teebah, תבה, an Arke, a chest: whereas a ship, is called aniiah, in Greeke πλοῖον. Gen. 49. 13. Chrysostome giveth a nother reason: non dicer potest, quod fuerit admodum navis, ut arte quadam illius iter dirigi potuerit: you cannot say that it was like a ship, as though it should have been guided by art. 2. Neither was it square onely in the bottom and gathered in a narrower both in length and breadth till it came to a cubit breadth in the top, as Origen, who might be deceived in the translation of the Septuagint, who read, v. 16. thou shalt make it gathering in, colligens eam: which words are not in the Hebrew. 3. Neither was it gathered in long-wayes from the bottom, till both sides touched within a cubit, as Cajetanus: 4. Nor yet did it keep square 15. cubits, and then was gathered in 15. cubits more, as Hugo: for in all these formes the capacity and rounth of the Arke within should be much lessened: neither should the Arke hold out in every part to be 300. cubits long, 50. broad, and 30. high, according to the description. 5. Neither doth Lyranus fitly expound these words, in summitate latera non distabant, nisi per cubitum: that the sides were gathered in together in the top, being distant but a cubit: his meaning is, that in the top or ridge there should bee left a certaine plaine or square of a cubit in breadth, which were to no use at all: and againe, if hee would have the sides gathered into this cubit, before they had risen the full height of 30. cubits, the Arke should not be so portable, Chrysost. hom. 22. in Genes.

The Arke not incredible because of the square.

if after, the Arke should farre exceed in height the measure prescribed of 30. cubits. 5. Some thinke that the Arke was gathered in the top every way like a pyramis, taper-wise: so that the very top was a cubit in length, and the sixt part of a cubit in breadth, as Buteo, Mercerus. But this is not like: for then the Arke should not hold his proportion to be 50. cubits high throughout, if it should so farre be carried small and narrow toward the top. 6. Iunius referreth this prescription of a cubit, to the eaves of the Arke, which he would have hang over an each side a cubit, for better defence from the weather. But it is more like, that the more principall part, namely, the cover and roofe of the Arke should be prescribed what fashion to be made of, (which otherwise shoud bee here omitted) than the lesse principall: likewise the word, which signifieth to consummate or finish, better agreeth to the top, where the worke is finished. Like it is, that the eavings hanged over: but Moses described not every circumstance, and somewhat ought to bee left to Noahs discretion: neither can this place be fitly so applyed. 6. Wherefore for the body of the Arke, Augustine well conjecture th, rectis limeis longe lateque porrectam, that it was builded upright both in length and breadth: and then the cover was so made sloping, that the ridge all the length of the Arke was but a cubit higher than the sides or eaves of the Arke, which falling or declining to the roofe by the distance of a cubit, was sufficient to shed the water: for the whole breadth containing but 50. cubits, the ridge being just in the midst was equally distant 25. cubits from each side: so that the roofe on each side did rise for 25. cubits in breadth, one in height, which might fully suffice for the fall of the raine.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Even a carnall minde is flesh.

2. Vers. 3. Because they are flesh.] here we learne, that not only the body but even the soule of carnall men is called flesh: quia se totos carnalibus operibus, dant: because they give themselves wholy to carnall workes as Chrysostome saith: and Gregory, caro quippe homo efficitur quando sensui carnis ratio subjugatur: man is become flesh, when reason is subdued to the carnall sense: for two wayes this word (flesh) is taken in scripture, as he well distinguisheth, secundum naturam, secundum culpam, according to nature, and according to the corruption of nature.

Chrysost. ho. 22. in Genes. Greg. ho. 6. in 3. lib. reg.

2. Doct. No free will to good by nature.

2 Vers. 5. ALL the imaginations of the thoughts of his heart, are onely evill continually.] From this place we conclude. 1. That originall concupiscence is properly sinne (which is denied by Bellarmine) because the imagination of mans heart is only evill. 3. That man hath no free will by nature to any good, seeing his thoughts are only evill. 3. That there is no good worke so perfect, but that it is blemished with mans naturall corruption: because it is said, their thoughts are continually evill, &c. all these conclusions are denied by the papists, and therefore they have devised two answers to this place: 1. That Moses useth here an hyperbolicall speech, because mens thoughts were for the most part evill, not altogether and onely evill. 3. Hee speaketh only of the wicked, not of the righteous, for Noah is here excepted, who is said to be a just and upright man. v. 9. This answer Bellarmine and Pererius: Contra: 1. This generall speech admitteth no exception: for by nature mens thoughts are only evill: for our Saviour saith, that which is borne of the flesh, is flesh. John 3. 6. and in this chapter. v. 3. they are said to be flesh: all their thoughts then by nature, were carnall and fleshly. 2. Yea even Noah and other righteous men by nature, are altogether corrupt: as S. Paul saith, we were the children of wrath by nature as well as others. Ephes. 2. 3. Noahs his righteousnesse was by grace, not by nature.

Concupiscéce is sinne.

No good work perfect.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. None exactly perfect in this life.

Vers. 9. WHere Noah is said to bee a just, upright, or perfect man: the Pelagians doe use this and such other places, to prove that a man might attaine to an absolute perfection in this life, to be without sin: But I have shewed before, in what sense we are said to be perfect, either in respect of the wicked, because the righteous are not defiled with such grosse sins, or for that they do still increase and goe forward to perfection, as also because by faith they are cloathed with the righteousnesse and perfection of Christ: so before, quest. 8.

2. Confut. The capacity of the Arke, sufficient to containe all that entred.

Vers. 12. THe length of the Arke shall bee three hundred cubits. Apelles. Marcions scholler, cavilled at this, that the Arke could not be big enough to containe so many divers kinds of beasts, being hardly able to receive foure elephants. Origen. hom. 2. in Genes. But this cavill I have answered before: quest. 14. where I shewed that the Arke was of sufficient capacity, even after the measure of the common cubit, to hold all that entred into it.

The Arke not incredible because of the bignesse.

Others tooke exception at the bignesse of the Arke: tam magnitudinis arcam non potuisse compingi, that an Arke of such greatnesse could not be made, Augustine, lib. 15. de civitat. c. ap. 27. and thus Celsus objected, Orig. l. 4. contra. Cels. But Augustine answereth 1. that they need not wonder at this, seeing such huge cities have been builded, and considering it was an hundred yeares in preparing. 2. And it need not seeme strange that so many yeares were spent in this worke: seeing Pliny writeth, that the temple of Diana at Ephesus was 200. yeare in building by the helpe of all Asia. 3. It was indeed too huge a vessell to bee governed verned by the skill of man: and therefore Augustine saith, Quam nullus in mare mittat conatus hominum sed levet unda cum venerit, magisque divina providentia, quam humana prudentia natantem gubernet. It was so made, that it could not by mans helpe be set afloate, but lift up by the water, to bee governed by divine providence, not humane prudence. 4. And yet Athenæus reporteth, that Hiero King of Sicilie, caused a ship to be made of such bigneſſe that there went unto it as much timber, as sufficed to make 60. other ships: three hundred workmen beside labouters were employed one whole yeere in this worke: there were in it three divisions one above another, and twenty rankes of oares: it had also within it a fish-pond, wherein were great and small fish: the received report of this great galliasse, may move them not to be so incredulous concerning the Arke.

Vers. 10. Noah begat three sonnes, &c. Because Noah was five hundred yeare old, before he begat any children, and afterward abstained an hundred yeare, for so long it was to the floud, and begat no more children: hence Peterius inferreth, that the gift of continency is not impossible, against certaine heretikes, as he calleth them, meaning protestants: Contra. 1. It is untrue, that we affirme this gift to be impossible: but we say that it is rare, neither is in every mans power to obtaine, as they teach, that any man that will, may have that gift: it followeth not, because Noah had that gift of abstinence, that all therfore are capable of it: S. Paul saith, every man hath his proper gift of god, one after this manner, another after that. 1 Cor. 7. 7. it is then a proper gift to some, not common to all. 2. And though Noah was a chast and temperate man in marriage, yet it may be doubted whether he continued so long unmarried, or did forbeare so long after.

Peter. lib. 9. in Genes. v. 10. The gift of continency possible, but not common to all.

6. Places of exhortation and morall duties.

1. Vers. 2. The sons of God saw the daughters of men, that they were faire.] We see the fruits of such marriage, as is enterprised only upon a carnall appetite, and with persons of a diverse profession, therefore the Apostle saith, be not unequally yoaked, &c.

Marriage for carnall appetite not blessed. 2 Cor. 6. 14.

2. Vers. 3. My spirit shall not alwayes strive, &c.] Gods mercy appeareth, that threatneth before he punisheth, that by his threatning men might learne to amend: ut nobis correctis minas ad opus minime perducat: that we being amended, his menacing need take no effect, Chrysost. so the Apostle saith: despisest thou the riches of the bountifulnesse of God, &c. not knowing that the bountifulnesse of God leadeth thee to repentance, Rom. 2. 4.

God threatneth before he punisheth. Chrys. hom. 22. in Genes.

3. Vers. 4. There were Giants.] By this we see, that they which fall away, doe run from one extreme to another: as these which were in outward profession the sonnes and worshippers of God, falling away, became cruell and outragious tyrants: of such the Apostle saith, *that it is impossible, that they which were once lightned, if they fall away, should be renued by repentance. Back-sliders become worst of all.

4. Vers. 9. Noe was a just man in his time.] Though all the world, even where Noe lived, were given unto wickednesse, yet the Lord preserved him. We learne therefore, that although we be environed on every side, with the wicked, yet we should not doubt, but that the Lord is able to preserve his: and that therefore as the Apostle saith, we should shine as lights in the world in the midst of a naughty & crooked nation. Phil. 2. 15.

The godly are preserved in the midst of the wicked.

Chap. VII.

1. The Method.

This Chapter hath two parts: 1. of the entrance of Noah, and the creatures into the arke, from v. 1. to v. 10. 2. concerning the floud.

1. God prescribeth what Noah should doe for himselfe, vers. 1. for the beasts and fowles as touching their number, of some to take seven, of some two for their kinde, male and female, vers. 3. the reason expressed, vers. 4. Then Noah sheweth his obedience in entring himselfe, vers. 6. 13. and the beasts, vers. 8, 9. the creeping things and fowles shew their obedience in comming, vers. 14, 15. Gods providence in shutting of them up. vers. 16.

2. First, the causes of the floud are set forth, vers. 11. secondly, the manner, in the time when it came, after seven dayes, vers. 10: how long it prevailed, forty dayes, vers. 12. how farre it exceeded, vers. 20. how long it continued before it abated, that is, an 150. dayes, vers. 24. thirdly, the effects of the floud: it beareth up the Arke, vers. 17. it destroyeth all flesh beside those in the Arke, vers. 21. to 23.

2. The grammaticall or literall sense.

v. 5. yet 7. dayes. S. before 7. dayes, that is, expired. T. after 7. dayes. caet. — T.c.

QVEST I. Why Noah prayed not for the old world, as Abraham did for Sodome.

Vers. 1. THey have seene righteous before me, &c. 1. He was not onely righteous in respect of men, but before God: his righteousnesse was in truth. 2. Whereas before Moses added, that hee was just and upright, Gen. 2.9. the Hebrewes hence gather, because he is not here also said to bee upright, but only just, that he is commended only, because hee was not unjust and cruell towards men. But seeing it is said, he was just before God, the other addition need not: for God seeth the heart. 3. The Hebrewes doe further extenuate Noahs faith: some saying, that he thought not, that God would destroy the world, but that he threatned onely some, that Noah only prayed for himselfe, and not for the world, as Abraham did for the Sodomites: and therefore for these his oversights hee afterward offered sacrifice. But they blame Noah without cause: the reason why he prayed not, as Abraham did, for others, for that hee saw them incorrigible, and already God had given sentence, that the world should be destroyed: but when Abraham prayed for Sodome, no sentence was as yet gone forth against them. The sacrifice which Noah offered afterward, was an oblation of thankesgiving for his deliverance, not a deprecation for any such particular offence. Mercer.

QVEST. II. Of the difference of cleane and uncleane beasts.

Vers. 2. OF every cleane beast, &c. 1. Some beasts were counted cleane, some uncleane, not simply in respect of their nature and creation, for God saw that all things were good: neither in regard onely of mans use, because some were more fit for food than others, but chiefly by the institution of God, some were set apart for Sacrifice, and therefore were called cleane. 2. And this distinction of cleane and uncleane beasts is not inserted by Moses by way of antieipation, as though hee spake onely in respect of the times wherein hee writ: but this difference was knowne unto the Patriarkes by revelation from God, in some godly tradition delivered from one to another: as we see the use of sacrifice, the oblation of tithes, the observation of the Sabbath were practised before the law. 3. Whereas this distinction of cleane and uncleane, is not repeated in the rehearsall of the fowles, v. 3. it is not for that, as some thinke, they were not so distinguished before the law: or for some mysticall signification, that not in celestiall things, but in terrene only, this distinction holdeth of cleane and uncleane: but this distinction must bee supplied out of the former verse, which for brevity sake is omitted in the third: yet in that the fowles are sorted out by sevens, it is evident, that he meaneth only the cleane.

QVEST. III. Why the cleane are taken by sevens.

Vers. 2. TAke thee seven and seven: for so are the words in the originall. 1. Not that there were of the cleane fourteene, seven of the male and female, which seemeth to have beene the opinion of Justine and Origen, with others, because they could not see how there should be an odde, if there were but seven: but it is certaine there were but seven; three male, and three female, and the odde was for sacrifice. This is the opinion of Ambrose, Chrysostome, Augustine, with others. And this repetition, seven, seven: is not to be taken collectively, for many sevens of one kinde, but distributively for divers kinds, according to the use of the Hebrew speech. 2. Neither were the cleane taken by sevens, for any mystery in that number; as Ambrose saith, that numerus septenarius est sacer, that seven is a sacred number. But Chrysostome reproveth those that observe numbers, and saith, they doe but fabulari, & ex suo capite introducere fabla, and devise such things of their owne head. But therefore the cleane were chosen by sevens, for the more plentifull breed both for mans food, and for sacrifice, and but two of the uncleane were taken, lest their number might increase to the annoyance of man, as Musculus well observeth: and yet God would have the kind also of hurtfull beasts preserved, for the punishment of man. For the noysome beast is one of Gods 4. great judgements, Exech. 14. 21. 3. Whereas before, chap 6. 20. the Lord saith, two of every sort shall come unto thee; but here Noah is bid to take of the cleane by sevens: the solution is easie: for there the kind and sex is expressed, that for every male there should be a female, they should come by couples: here the number is prescribed, they must be taken by sevens.

QVEST. IV. Whether Noah and his sonnes lived in abstinence in the Arke.

Vers. 7. SO Noah entred and his sonnes and his wife, &c. 1. It is but a point of curiosity to enquire how Noah and his sonnes wives were called, whether Noahs wife were named Noria, as the Gnosticks, or Barthenon, as Epiphanius, or Tytea, as Berosus Amianus saith: and his sons wives, Pandora, Nozla, and Noegla, seeing the scripture is silent herein, it were a vaine labour for us to search. 2. Whereas here Noah and his wife are not named together going into the Arke, but comming forth, they are joyned together, chap. 8. 16. Come forth thou and thy wife. Ambrose thus noteth, Non commiscetur sexus in ingressu, sed commiscetur in egressu, The sex is not mixed in the ingresse, but in the egresse. Whereupon he thinketh, that Noah and his sonnes refrained the company of their wives, all the while they were in the Arke: which his opinion is most probable, though not upon this ground, but upon better reasons, which he adjoyneth in the same place; as he further saith, maroris tempus erat non lætitiæ, it was a time of sorrow, not of mirth. Againe, because they knew that the deluge came because of the intemperancy of the world: as also the rest of the creatures generally did forbeare the act of generation, (which I rather think than with Mercerus, that the cattell ingendred in the arke) either because the place was not fit, or the seasons of the yeare were altered, in being as a continuall winter for the space of ten yeare, by the coldnesse of the over-flowing water, or God so disposing their naturall inclination.

Quest. V. Whether Noah gathered the beasts into the Arke.

Vers. 9. There came two and two to Noah, &c. 1. Neither as Philo thinketh did Noah gather the creatures together, as the shepherd his sheepe, for that had been an infinite labour. Neither (as Hugo) did the beasts come swimming to the arke, seeking for succour from the water, for they were entred before the waters fell. But as God is said to have brought the beasts to Adam, Gen. 2. 19. so the Lord caused them to come unto Noah: non sui ipsius motu, sed divino, This was not mans care but Gods.

Quest. VI. What creatures came not into the Arke.

NEither came there of every kind of living thing, for these are excepted. 1. All that liveth in the water, neither wholly, or partly in the water, partly in the land: for such creatures only came which moved upon the earth. 2. Such creatures as come of corruption, not by generation, as flies of the water, worms of dung, bees of bullocks flesh, hornets of horse flesh, the scorpion of the crab, or crevis, moths of putrified herbs, and certaine small wormes of the corruption of wood and corne, &c. for those creatures only entred, which increase by generation, Mercer. 3. Such creatures are excepted, which are of a mixt kinde and ingender by the male and female of divers kinds, as the mule which commeth of a mare and asse. Cardanus also maketh mention of a certaine beast, which he saw at Papia, of the bignesse of a fox, with feet like a beare, a taile feathered like a goose, with prickles upon the backe like an hystrix or porcupine, barking like a dog, which appeared to be of no certaine kind, but by a mixt generation. Concerning such mixt kinds, Augustine saith well; that they needed not to be preserved in the Arke, sed ibi parentes eorum fuisse sufficerent, it might suffice their parents (that is, the severall kinds, whereof they are ingendred) to be there. 4. R. Sel. because Noah is bidden to take of every living thing, Gen. 6. 19. would inferre that the spirits of the aire were preserved in the Arke: but this is ridiculous, for neither are they to bee counted among these living creatures, neither are they male and female: nor yet are spirits subject to the danger of waters; and their kinde were to be wished rather to be extinguished, than preserved. 5. R. Levy also, because Noah is bidden to take of all meat that is eaten, would inferre that Noah preserved of all kinds of plants and seeds in the Arke; but that was not needfull, except onely for present food: for the seeds of herbs might by Gods providence bee preserved in the earth: as plants were kept under the water, as was the olive: ex Mercer.

Quest. VII. Of the Phœnix, whether there be any such.

COncerning the Phœnix, the question is, because there is but one of that kind, whether it were preserved among other foules in the Arke: but I thinke it may be more worthily doubted, whether there bee any such Phœnix, or no, 1. Pliny saith, this bird is in Arabia. Cardanus and Scaliger in the Mediterranean parts of India, being called Semenda. 2. Some say, that after 500. yeares it dieth. Pompon. Mela. lib. 3. c. 9. Ambrose: others, that it liveth 660. yeares. Plin. ibid. 3. Some, that the Phœnix having made her a neast of divers spices, intrare & emori, goeth in and dieth. Ambr. Pompon. ibid. other, that motu alarum with the flittering of her wings, she setteth the stickes on fire, and is burned to ashes. 4. Pliny addeth out of Cornelius Valerianus, that the Phœnix was brought to Rome, and openly shewed when In. Plautius, and Sex. Papinius were Consuls, the 800. yeare of the City. As this may seeme to bee a fable, so also the rest. For if the Phœnix dye upon her neast, how could she be brought to Rome. 5. Some also write, that the Phœnix hath rostrum trifistulare, a bill with three pipes, wherewith she singeth melodiously before shee dieth: sic Cardanus. But Scaliger holdeth this to bee but a fable. 6. No other like is that, which Pompon. Mela, and Pliny write, that of the ashes of the Phœnix commeth a worme, and thereof another Phœnix, which being now ready to flye, taketh the bones of the old Phœnix with the neast, and carrieth it to the City of the Sunne in Ægypt, called Heliopolis, and there layeth it upon the Altar, as it were solemnizing the funerall thereof: who seeth not how fabulous a fiction this is, devised to countenance Pagan Idolatry, and not agreeing with it selfe: for if the Phœnix bee burned to ashes, how can the bones and neast bee so carried? 7. But among the rest, this seemeth to be most unlikely, that there should never be but one Phœnix at once? for what species or kinde of any creature can they rehearse, whereof there is never but one; and whereas the Lord said to all his creatures, increase and multiply, this benediction should take no place in the Phœnix, which multiplieth not: and beside, seeing of all creatures there came two and two, the male and female, into the Arke, the Phœnix by this meanes should have perished, seeing there was not of this kind male and female to be preserved in the Arke. 8. But whereas Ambrose thus writeth, Phœnix cum querna fuerit, revivisceis, solos nos credamus homines esse fatuos: the Phœnix being dead, reviveth, and we think that man only shall not be raised? Ambrose in so writing, delivereth not his opinion, but ex confesso, as we say, by the received report of the Phœnix among the heathen, out of their owne grounds he proveth the resurrection.

Quest.

Quest. VII. Whether the Arke were sufficient to containe the beasts with their food for a whole yeare.

IT is further doubted, how the Arke could containe so many severall kinds of beasts and birds, and beside sufficient food for them all. 1. For the divers kinds of beasts, they are reckoned not in all to bee above an hundred and fifty: whereof there are 30. kinds of serpents and other creeping things, 40. kinds of ravenous beasts, which live with flesh, which one with another exceed not the bignesse of wolves: there are 40. more of other great beasts, which one with another in quantity may be thought to bee equivalent to oxen: and 40. kinds beside of small beasts, which may one with another in proportion answer unto so many sheepe: the whole number maketh an 150. All these severall paires of beasts were lodged in the middle region of the Arke; which contained 400. cells or cabbins, being each in breadth 6. cubits so much in length, and nine in height, as I have shewed before: these roomes are large enough to receive the greatest paire of beasts: or if some, as the Elephants require a large space, many of the rest might bee received in a lesse: so that there were cabbins enough twice told to place all the beasts in. 2. And if the middle part of the Arke were large enough for the beasts, there is no doubt, but that the upper story being of the same bignesse sufficed for the birds, which though they bee more diverse and variable in their kinds, yet are they of farre lesse quantity, and so might bee contented with smaller cages. 3. And whereas of the cleane beasts, there were seven taken of every sort, whereof there are ten severall kinds reckoned, Deuter. 14. beside the paires counted before, we must number five more for every sort of the cleane beasts, which will make 90. single, and 45. couples: which added to the rest, will make 175. couples: which if they did arise unto 200: there might be found roome enough for them all in the middle division, as before is said. 4. Now that there was capacity sufficient in the lowest region of the Arke, wherein to lay up food for the cattell, thus it may appeare. 1. Let it bee supposed, that there were about 60. paire of beasts, as great as oxen, 50. paire of the bignesse of wolves, and 60. more of the like quantity unto sheep. 2. Allow to every wolfe as much food in quantity because they are ravenous, as to an oxe, and to 4. sheep, as much: wee shall have as it were an 125. paire, and 250. single oxen. 3. Then admit, that all the beasts did eat of hey, which asketh a large roome to lye in, whereas other food, as of graine and such other may bee layed in a narrower compasse. 4. Then allow for every oxe, 40. l. of hey in a day, as Columella doth apportion it: lib. 6. de re Rustic. c. 3. 50. and 40. l. of hey will easily bee contained in the space of a solide or square cubit; so much hey then, as will serve 250. oxen in a day, will require for layer, 250. cubits: the layer then for so much hey, as will suffice a whole yeare, which consisteth of 365. dayes, will have no lesse roome, than of 85250. cubits, it commeth not to 90. thousand cubits: 5. Now take the capacity of one of the chambers, being 300. cubits in length, 50. in breadth, 9. in height, (allowing one cubit for the partition above, for otherwise it should be 10. cubits high,) and it will arise to an hundred, fifty and thirty thousand square cubits: for every ranke of cubits containeth 15. thousand, so much maketh the length of 300. cubits, multiplyed by the breadth of 90. this summe of 1500. being multiplyed by 9. which is the height, will produce the said number of an 135000. whereas fodder for the cattell occupieth not above 90000: ex Perer.

Quest. 14. in 6. 6. art. 5.

Quest. VIII. Whether the ravenous beasts lived of flesh in the Arke.

WHereas it is also questioned, whether the ravenous beasts were fed with flesh according to their naturall use, while they were in the Arke. 1. Neither is it like, that all the beasts did eat of one common food: for the text saith, Genes. 6. 21. take with thee of all meat that is eaten: 2. Neither is it like, as Origen thinketh (of which opinion also is Bucer) that Adam brought into the Arke a great number of cattell, to be food for the ravenous beasts; for there came no more but two of the uncleane, and seven of the cleane. 3. Neither is it probable, that these beasts did not live of flesh, but herbs and other fruits of the earth, before the floud: as I have shewed at large: quest. 23 in 1. cap. of Genes. 4. Wherefore I approve rather Augustines resolution, to the which Mercerus subscribeth, which is to this effect: 1. that these devouring beasts, as they doe live of flesh, so also they use to eat of the fruits of the earth. 2. That it might be revealed to Adam, what food besides flesh was convenient and apt for them. 3. That hunger will enforce beasts to eat that, which otherwise is not usuall. 4. But his best answer is, quid non suave faceret Deus, qui etiam, ut sine cibo viverent, divina facilitate donaret: What could not God make pleasant, who could have given them power to have lived without meat, much more then could God by his power dispose them to live for that time of other food than flesh.

Quest. IX. How the yeare is to be counted wherein the floud came.

Vers. 10. SO it came to passe after seven dayes, that the floud was upon the earth in the six hundred yeare of Noahs life, in the second moneth, &c. 1. Noah went seven dayes into the Arke, before the floud came, not as the Hebrewes conjecture, to lament for the death of Mathusalah: for it is certaine that Mathusalah died the same yeare the floud came, so whether hee died seven dayes or seven weekes before it is uncertaine: but it is more like, that Noah entred before to dispose of every thing in the Arke, before it should be tossed of the waters: as also as Ambrose noteth, that the rest of the world seeing him enter, before there was yet any apparant danger, might have beene drawne to repentance. 2. Neither was the 600. yeare of Noahs age now onely begun, as Lyranus, Tostatus, with others thinke, but complete: for otherwise there should not bee 1656. yeares from the creation to the floud; neither should Noah have lived 900. and fifty yeares, whereof he lived but 350. after the floud, if hee had not beene full 600. yeares old before. 3. This ſecond moneth, was neither the ſecond moneth of the yeare conſidered apart from Noahs age, as Rupertus thinketh: for it hath a coherence with the 600. yeare of Noahs life, whereof mention is made immediatly before: neither is it to be taken for the ſecond of Noahs 600. yeare, without reſpect of the ſeaſon of that inſtant yeare as Cajetan ſeemeth to thinke: but it was both the ſecond moneth of the uſuall yeare, and of Noahs 600 yeare, which concurred both together, for Noah his 600. yeare was the 1656. yeare, of the age of the world from the Creation. Mercer.

QVEST. X. Whether the flood came in the Spring or Autumne:

THis ſecond moneth ſome thinke to have beene in the Spring, anſwering to the moneth of May. 1. That it might be the more griefe to the wicked, to be taken away from their pleaſure, as our Saviour ſheweth, that they were taken away in the middeſt of their mirth, Matth. 24.37. Luther. 2. That the flood might not be imputed to any naturall cauſes, but onely to the power of God, the waters increaſing in the time of Summer, which is a ſeaſon of drought, and decreaſing in Winter, when as the waters naturally increaſe. 3. And againe, becauſe the Dove brought the leafe of an Olive in the 11. moneth after the flood beganne; ſome doe gather that the flood came in the Spring, Rupertus. 4. But better arguments than theſe may be produced to ſhew it more probable, that the flood came in the Spring: becauſe that then the world is ſuppoſed to have taken beginning, as is before proved, Queſt. 10. in 1. chap. Gen. and from the creation to the flood are reckoned 1656. even yeares. 5. The flood came in the ſecond moneth of the yeare: now it cannot be ſhewed in any place of Scripture, where the moneths are accounted in order, the firſt, ſecond, third, but from Niſan, which anſwereth to part of March, part of Aprill: Moſes ordaining this moneth to be the firſt, Exod. 12. doth make no new inſtitution, but reneweth the old account, which was diſcontinued in Egypt, by reaſon that the Egyptians indeed beginne their yeare from the moneth Ptho, which anſwereth to our September. And this reaſon, from the order and account of the moneths, I confeſſe, hath much prevailed with me, to thinke it more likely that the flood came in the Spring. 6. And if it had beene Autumne when the Cattell came forth of the Arke, when the herbs and plants doe fade, whence ſhould they have had food till the Spring? 7. As alſo, the cattell preſently increaſing and multiplying after their comming out of the Arke, this might ſeeme rather to fall into the Spring time, which is the apteſt ſeaſon for the copulation and ingendring of cattell; but moſt eſpecially of the fowles. Of this opinion are moſt of the Eccleſiaſticall Writers, though divers of the Hebrewes hold the contrary: as Ambroſe among the reſt thus reſolveth: Secundum menſem veris tempore fuiſſe non ambigitur, quando augentur naſcentia, ager parturit, &c. tunc ergo fecit diluvium, quando dolor eorum major foret, qui in abundantia puniebantur, &c. It is not to be doubted but that the ſecond moneth was in the Spring time, when things increaſe and grow, the field bringeth forth, &c. God therefore then ſent the flood, when their griefe ſhould be the greater, to be puniſhed in their abundance. The chiefeſt reaſon that moved Ambroſe thus to thinke, was the account of the moneths, which alwayes in Scripture are reckoned from the Spring: yea that moneth which ſome would have the beginning of the yeare, when the feaſt of blowing the Trumpets, and of Tabernacles was kept, is called the ſeventh moneth, Levit. 23.24.34. Of this opinion alſo is learned Mercerus, that when the ſecond or third moneth is ſimply named, it muſt be accounted from Niſan, which is in the Spring.

QVEST. XI. What is underſtood by the great deepe, and the windowes of heaven.

Verſ. 10. THe fountaines of the great deepe were broken up. 1. By the deepe here is not underſtood the Tartarean waters about the center of the earth, as Plato imagined: for by this meanes the waters ſhould aſcend three thouſand and 500. miles (for ſo farre it is from the Center of the earth to ſuperficies) which is againſt the nature of water. 2. Neither was the Sea this great depth, which ſome thinke is higher than the earth, and kept in onely by the power of God, which now was ſuffered to overflow the earth: for neither is it true that the Sea is higher than the earth, as is before declared: neither doth Moſes make any mention of it: which might have beene ſufficient by the overflowing to have drowned the earth, if naturally it were ſo much above it. 3. Wherefore the fountaines of the deepe, were the deepe heads and ſprings of water within the earth, which were opened and enlarged, to make this inundation: ſo that the Rivers that runne in the earth were caſt up, and the deepe gulph guſhed forth: and theſe may be the waters under the earth, mentioned; Exod. 20. verſ. 4.

Queſt. 9. in 1. lib. Gen.

The windowes alſo of heaven, ſignifie not the irruption or breaking forth of any waters in the Chryſtall heaven, (as it is called) above the ſtarrie skie, as Eugubinus and Oleaſter imagine: for neither are there any ſuch waters above the heavens, as hath beene before declared: and if there were, how could they paſſe thorow the ſtarrie heaven without the diſſolution and corruption thereof? and it would follow that the watery heaven ſhould be now a vacant and emptie place, the waters being deſcended from thence. But the opening of the windowes of heaven, betokeneth the breaking of the clouds, where the water is contained: that whereas at other times, The Lord bindeth the waters in the clouds, and the cloud is not broken under them, Iob 26.8. Now the Lord looſed the clouds, which being made as full of windowes powred forth all the water that was kept in them, Mercerus. Perer.

Queſt. 11. in Gen.

QVEST. XII. Of the cauſes of the flood.

THeſe three were the cauſes of the flood: 1. The iſſuing forth of the waters beneath out of the earth. 2. The continuall raine for forty, not onely dayes but nights together, not onely powring from the clouds, but increaſing by the liquefaction and diſtilling of the aire into water. Seneca writing of the generall deluge, which he ſpeaketh of, not as paſt, but to come, addeth unto theſe three other cauſes:

1. Crescunt maria super solitum, &c. the extraordinary swelling and overflowing of the sea. 2. Incipit terra putrescere & laxata ire in humorem: The earth also it selfe did putrifie, and resolve into water. 3. He maketh the conjunction of the celestiall bodies another cause, that like as he thinketh the world shall be burned when the starres shall concurre in the signe Cancer, sic, inundationem futuram cum eadem siderum turba in Capricornum convenerit: so hee thinketh there shall bee a generall inundation when the same company of starres shall come together in the signe Capricornus: These causes may bee admitted as helping and necessary, though not as principall, saving that, the conjunction of the starres in Capricorne, seemeth rather to be a curious inquisition, than to depend of any certaine demonstration.

QVEST. XIII. Vpon what day Noah entred into the Arke.

Vers. 13. IN the selfe same day, &c. 1. Lyranus reading according to the latine text, in the article of that day: thinketh that the noone point of day is hereby expressed, and so also Oleaster. 2. Tostatus taketh it rather for the morning or twilight, which is more properly a point, parcell, or article of the day. It betokeneth nothing else, but in the same day as I shewed before in the interpretation. 3. Some Hebrewes think that this was wednesday, when they say that the Sun is strongest, that Noah might have some rest before the Sabbath, but this is too curious. 4. Some doe take this for the day before the floud, being the sixteenth of the moneth that Noah entred then, and his family before. 5. Others thinke, that Noah entred seven dayes before, according to the text, v. 1. Enter thou into the Arke, &c. v. 4. for seven dayes hence I will cause it to raine. v. 7. So Noah entred, &c. v. 10. and so after seven dayes, &c. And thus Ambrose expoundeth: so that here by way of recapitulation, mention is made of the entring of Noah: and Iunius to make the sense more full, readeth thus: In the same day when Noah was entred, &c. v. 13. &c. God shut him in. v. 16. He maketh the 13, 14, 15. verses to depend upon that clause, in the 16. verse, whereby is shewed how the providence of God watched over Noah and the rest, when they were entred, so shutting them up that the waters could not enter. 6. But Iunius inserteth one word, v. 13. which is not in the Hebrew, quum ingressus esset, when he was entred (when) is added: so that according to the true reading: the selfe same day Noah entred, &c. it is evident, that Noah with his sonnes entred the same day, wherein the raine began to fall: God so providing that against that day all kind of cattell and fowles were present to enter with him. And whereas Noah is bid to enter, v. 1. before the seven dayes, that is to bee understood of the preparing and making all things ready for his entrance: Mercerus. Now whereas Iunius thinketh, that in the very seventh day the floud came, and so readeth, v. 10. I thinke rather, that the seven dayes were fully expired, and that upon the 8. day, it began to raine: becaule the text is, that after seven dayes the waters were upon the earth. Mercer.

Reconciliation

QVEST. XIII. How Noah was shut up.

Vers. 16. GOD shut him up, &c. 1. Not that after Noah was come into the Arke, and his sonnes with their wives, and the rest of the creatures: God by the ministery of the Angels did shut the doore without, and pitched it up: occlusit pro eo; God shut it up for him, as Tremelius and Cajetanus read: that is, whereas Noah being within, could not shut up the doore without God did it for him: for as Noah opened the doore at his going out, so it is like he shut it at his going in: but hereby is signified, that what was wanting in Noahs labour, was supplyed by Gods providence, and that it was Gods worke to preserve Noah in the Arke. Mercer. 2. And this was done not so much to keepe him from the sight of the destruction of the world, which might have ministred griefe unto him, as Chrysostome collecteth, for there was a window, out of the which hee might behold that fearefull spectacle, but to keepe himselfe from the violence and rage of the waters, as also from the rage of men. Mercer.

QVEST. XIV. The 150. dayes must be reckoned from the beginning of the floud, whereof the 40. dayes are a part.

Vers. 24. THE waters prevailed an 150. dayes.] This terme must not be counted from the end of 40. dayes mentioned v. 12. all which time the raine continued, as Tostatus and Cajetanus thinke: but from the beginning rather including the 40. dayes: which seemeth to be the opinion of Ambrose: (and here unto assent Musculus and Tremelius) lib. de Noah & arc. 17. and it may thus appeare: Genes. 8. 4 it is said that in the 7. moneth, the 17. day, the Arke rested upon the mountaines of Armenia, which was after the end of the 150. dayes, when the waters began to abate: v. 3. but if the 150. dayes bee added to 40. which make in all an 190. the waters should not abate till the 27. day of the 8. moneth: for from the 17. day of the second moneth, when the forty dayes must take beginning, to the 17. day of the 7. moneth are but five moneths, that is dayes 150. (counting 30. dayes to a moneth) whereas, putting, 40. and 150. dayes together, wee shall have 190. before the waters should begin to abate, which is contrary to the text: now whereas the Septuagint read the water vpon was exalted an 150. dayes, and Chrysostome saith, tot dies mansit sublimis illa aquarum altitudo, the height of the waters continued so long: unlesse they meane indifferently of the rising and increase of the water upon any part of the earth, which began at the first when the raine fell within the 40. dayes, it cannot bee agreeable to the text: for the waters increased by three degrees, first the Arke was lift up above the waters, v. 17. then it floted and went upon the waters, v. 18. then the waters prevailed so much that the highest hils were covered, v. 20. this increasing, prevailing, and continuing of the water, was but an 150. dayes, from the first to the last; Mercer.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. The flood not caused by any constellation.

1. Vers. 4. I will cause it to raine upon the earth.] This raine then was not caused onely or chiefly by ordinary and naturall causes, as by the constellation of the starres, which was foreseene by Noah: which seemeth to have beene the opinion of Henricus Mechlinien. and Petrus ab Aliaco, and Guliel. mus Parisiensis, cited by Pererius: Seneca also ascriberh inundations to a fatall necessity: and when the great deluge shall be, which (hee beleeved was to come) hee saith the starres shall concurre together in Capricorne: But it is evident, that this flood was caused, not by naturall and ordinary meanes, but by the extraordinary power of God: 1. The Lord saith, I will bring a flood of waters, Gen. 6. 17. The fountaines of the deep, and the windowes of heaven were opened. This sheweth that it was Gods speciall worke by the ministery of his Angels, that the heavens rained, the earth gave up water after an extraordinary manner. 2. The sinnes of that age were the cause of this destruction, Gen. 6. 13. It was then their iniquity, not any fatall necessity, that procured that judgement. 3. And seeing God made all things in wisdome and order, hee framed the world, that one part should concurre for the preservation of another, not to their destruction. 4. No constellation of starres can have a generall operation over the whole earth, but only in that place where their influence worketh: and when they are moved, they cease working. As Seneca rendreth this reason of the increase of some rivers in Summer, Quarta ratio est syderum, hac enim quibusdam mensibus magis urgent & exhauriunt flumina, cum longius recesserunt minus consumunt, &c. The fourth reason is in the starres, which in some moneths doe more worke upon rivers, but when they are gone further off, they have not that force. Constallations then may exercise their strength upon some speciall rivers and places, but not universally upon the whole earth. Senec. ibid.

2. Doct. The highest mountaines in the world covered with the waters of the flood.

Vers. 19. ALL the high mountaines that were under the whole heavens were covered. They then are confuted, which thinke that some high hils, as Olympus, were not overflowne: whom Augustine refelleth. lib. 15. de civitat. c. 27. and Cajetanus, who would have the mountaine of Paradise to bee excepted from this inundation. 1. The words are generall, all high mountaines, under (not the airie heaven only, as Cajetan collecteth, but the whole heaven) were covered: yea the high mountaines were surprised: whether Athos in Macedonia, which cast his shadow unto the Towne Myrinum in Lemnos, the space of 86. miles, or Atlas, whose top is higher than the clouds: or Olympus, which Zinagoras by Mathematicall instruments found to be ten stadia, or furlongs high: Or the mount Tabor, which riseth up 30. furlongs, as Iosephus writeth, or Caucasus whose top is said to be lightned with the Sunne, when day-light is shut in below. All these high mountaines were covered with waters. 2. Augustine thus reasoneth, Non attendant omnia elementorum crassissimam terram ibi esse potuisse, &c. They consider not that the earth the heavieſt of all elements, is in the top of these high hils. It need not seeme strange then, that the waters might ascend thither. 3. Where doth Cajetan find that Paradise was situate upon an hill? nay the contrary is gathered out of Scripture, for out of Eden went a river to water the garden. Gen. 2. 10. But rivers use not to run upon hils. And Cajetan needed not to feare the drowning of Paradise because of Henoch: for he was with God taken up into Heaven, where the flood could not reach him. 4. Of the like conceit with Cajetan is Bellarmine, who thinketh that all the mountaines were not overflowen, but these onely where the wicked dwelt. And Iosephus reporteth out of Nicholaus Damascenus, that there is a certaine hill in Armenia called Baris, in quo multos profugos diluvii tempore servatos ferunt, wherein they say, many flying thither for succour in the time of the flood were preserved. But these dreames and devices are overthrowne by the evident words of Scripture, that all high mountaines under heaven were covered with the waters. 5. Likewise that fabulous dreame of some Hebrewes is here refelled, who imagine that beside Noah and the rest of the eight persons, Og King of Basan, who lived till Moses time, one of those Giants before the flood might bee preserved; for beside, that none after the flood lived so long, where should Og have beene kept in the flood? seeing the mountaines were covered fifteene cubits high, which exceeded the stature of any Giant. For the Hebrewes doe but fable, supposing those Giants to have beene an hundred cubits high. Neither is that report out of Pliny much to bee credited, of a Gyants body found in Crete of 46. cubits. 6. Further, Ab. Exra confuteth the opinion of some in his dayes, that held this deluge not to have beene universall: for although it may bee all the world was not inhabited before the flood, but only the East parts, because they wanted the invention of ships to transport them from place to place (for Noah was the first that used a ship) yet it is without doubt that the whole earth was overflowne, seeing the highest hils were so farre under the water. Mercer.

Hebrewes fables.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. The generall flood past, and not to come.

FIrst out of this Chapter, wherein the manner of the flood, the beginning thereof and continuance is set downe, the errour of Seneca is refelled, who dreamed of two destructions of the world, to come, by fire and water: he did not beleeve that the universall flood was past, sed inundationem futuram, that it was yet to come.

2. Confut. All perished not in the flood.

Senec. lib. 3. Natural.

AGaine in that inundation, he imagined that all mankind, and beasts, should utterly be extinguished: for thus he writeth: Peracto exitio generis humani, extinctisque pariter feris, &c. omne ex integro animal gloriabitur, dabiturque terris homo insciis scelerum: the destruction of mankind being finished, and all beasts perished: every creature shall be renewed, and man restored to the earth without sinne: But these fancies are refuted by Moses, who sheweth how man and beast in the Arke were preserved.

3. Confut. The fish perished not in the flood.

Vers. 32. Every thing in whose nostrells the spirit of life did breath.] By this that fancie of some of the Rabbines is confuted, who thinke that the fish also were destroied by the waters, which they suppose to have beene hot in the flood: for onely those things perished which breathed upon the drie land: sic Vatablus in hunc locum.

4. Confut. The truth of Noahs flood, proved by testimony of the heathen.

Vers. 20. Fifteene cubits upward.] From hence some would gather that the flood did ascend to the middle region of the Arke: for it was higher than the mountaines, whose toppes doe touch the middle region, and sometime are above the clouds: as they gave instance of the hill Olympus, which is so high, that the ashes left of the sacrifices, are neither dispersed by the wind, nor dissolved by the raine: if then the flood was higher than that place where the raine is engendred, the waters could not increase so high by the raine: and thus they would impaire the credit of this storie, and consequently inferre, that there was no such flood.

Ludovic. in 15. de civitat. Dei cap. 27.

Answ. 1. That report of Olympus is found to be untrue: as Ludovicus Vives affirmeth by the testimony of Philadelphius, who went up to the hill, of purpose to try the truth of the report, but found no such thing. 2. No mountaine can bee so high as the middle region, which is distant 50. mile from the earth, whereas no hill exceedeth 4. mile in height: 3. Solinus reporteth, that in the top of the mountaine Atho, there was a towne situate, and divers inhabited there which lived halfe againe so long, as other men did: it seemeth then to have beene a most wholesome place for aire: then was it not in the middle region, which is full of clouds and foggy mists, and beside they affirme, that the top of the hill Atlas is alwayes covered with snow, then it will follow that the snow is not there engendred. 4. Though it bee granted, that the flood might rise to the neather and lowest part of the middle region, yet the upper part thereof was farre remote, from whence raine might be ministred abundantly. 5. Lastly, this universall inundation of the world wanteth not testimony from the heathen: as Iosephus alleageth out of Berosus, Hieronymus, (which writ the antiquities of the Phenicians) Muaseas, and Nicolaus Damascenus, who writeth of one that was carried in an Arke, and did sticke in the mountaine Baris in Armenia: Eusebius reporteth out of Abidenus, how one Sisithrus escaped in a ship to Armenia, being foretold of a great inundation by Saturne, and how by sending out of birds hee searched whether the earth were dry. Pererius in his learned commentaries citeth, beside Cyrillus who alleageth Alexander Polihistor for the same, and Plato in Timaeo. Plutarch also maketh mention, how Deucalion sent a dove out of the Arke: Pompon Mela, Plinius, Solinus, writ that Joppe was thought to be the most ancient City in the world, and to have beene before the flood: which must be understood of the generall flood in the time of Noah: for Ogyges flood was only in Attica, and Deucalions in Thessalia; which came not neere Palestina where Joppe was; and many Cities in the world were more ancient than those floods: that of Ogyges being 500. yeares and more after Noahs flood, about the 90. yeare of Iacobs age: the other of Deucalion 230. after that, about the 50. yeare of Moses age, as Pererius sheweth out of Eusebius, and Orosius: thus the heathen were not ignorant of this great judgement of water upon the world: but they obscured the truth with their fables, giving other names unto Noah, as of Sisithaeus, Ogyges, Deucalion, &c.

Ioseph. lib. 1. antiquitat. c. 4. Euseb. lib. 9. de prepar. evangelic. c. 4.

Li. 12. in Gen. disput. 13.

Of Ogyges and Deucalions floods.

Vers. 21. And every man perished.] Like as from this generall proposition, some were excepted, as Noah, and the rest, which were with him: so notwithstanding, all high mountaines are said to bee covered with the waters, v. 19. yet some may bee excepted, they only are mentioned, where the wicked inhabited: sic Bellarm. de gratia primi hominis, c. 14.

Bellarmine answered concerning the privilege of some hils in the flood.

Contra. The comparison is not alike, betweene these two generall propositions: for from the first, Noah, and his company are by speciall words exempted, v. 23. Noah only remained, and they that were with him in the Arke: but no such thing concerning the hils is expressed in Scripture, that any of them were privileged from the waters.

Cap. 32. qu. 2. q. 4. 12.

6. v. 2. Of uncleane beasts thou shalt take of by couples.] From these words the Canon doth conclude most corruptly: Non esse bonum duplicem numerum, qui praefigurat foedera nuptiarum, &c. that a double number is not good, whereby marriage is prefigured: whereupon all the beasts that enter by two and two are uncleane, impar numerus est mundus, the old number is cleane.

Contra. 1. But the cleane and uncleane entred by couples: v. 8. of the cleane and uncleane, there came two and two: therefore this is a false note. 2. The uncleane are not such, because of their number, but for their kind. 3. By this rule, Noah and his sonnes should have beene uncleane, that went into the Arke by couples, namely with their wives.

6. Places of Morall observations.

God mixeth his comforts with afflictions.

1. Vers. 3. To keepe seed alive upon the earth.] Hence Calvin noteth well, that God tempereth the afflictions of his servants with comfort: as here Noah, the destruction of the world being at hand hand, is put in hope, that it shall bee restored againe: so as the Prophet saith, thy rod and thy staffe doe comfort mee, as God correcteth with the rod of affliction, so hee upholdeth his, with the staffe of consolation.

2 v. 9. There came two and two, male and female.] By this, that to one male there is but one female preserved both of man and beast, wee see the right use of marriage approved, and Polygamy the marriage of more than one at once, condemned. sic Muscul. in hunc locum. Polygamy condemned.

3. v. 10. After seven dayes, &c. v. 12. And the raine was upon the earth forty dayes, &c. But these shew the Lords longanimity and patience: for Noah is warned seven dayes before of the flood comming, that by his preparation and entrance others might be warned. Oecolamp. and whereas God might have destroyed the world at once with water, it was increasing forty dayes, that the world seeing every day some perish, might at length have turned to God. Chrysost. Gods patience towards the old world.

4. v. 16. The Lord shut him in.] God first provideth for Noah, before the wicked are destroyed: so Lot was brought out of Sodome, before the City was consumed: sic Muscul. Mercer. God first careth for the righteous.

5. vers. 24. The waters prevailed an 150. dayes. Thus Noah continued in this desolate and darke place above an whole yeare: but God was his light and comfort. Thus God is able to sustaine his Elect, though they be shut up in the most darke and deepe dungeons: as a light did shine in prison, where Peter lay bound at midnight, Act. 12, 7. according to the Psalme, to the righteous ariseth a light in darkenesse, Psal. 112. 4. Light in darkenesse.

CHAP. VIII.

1. The Method.

THis Chapter hath two parts: 1. Of the ceasing of the flood, to v. 15. 2. of Noahs going forth, and such things as accompanied the same.

1. Here is set forth. 1. The causes of the ceasing of the flood from v. 1. to v. 7. 2. The manner how, and by what degrees the earth was dried.

The causes are the principall, the mercy of God in remembring Noah, v. 1.

The secondary meanes helping, the winde that God sent, v. 1. the letting causes, the raine and fountaines were staied, v. 2.

The manner of the ceasing of the flood, and drying of the earth is set forth, first generally, after an 150. dayes, v. 3. then particularly, to v. 15. by foure degrees declared with their severall seasons. 1. In the seventh moneth and 17. day the Arke rested, &c. v. 4. 2. In the tenth moneth the tops of the mountaines were seene, v. 5. 3. Then the waters were abated, v. 11. Noah to know it, once sendeth the raven after 40. dayes, v. 6. and thrice the dove, once seven dayes after the raven. v. 8. then seven dayes after, v. 10. and other seven dayes after that, v. 12. 4. Then the earth was dried, first in the upper part only, in the first day of the 1. moneth, v. 13, then it was perfectly dry in the 2. moneth, and twenty seven day.

2. In the second part we have, 1. Gods commandement for Noahs going forth, v. 15, 16, 17. 2. Noahs obedience, v. 18, 19. 3. His thankfulnesse in sacrificing to God, v. 20. Gods acceptance, v. 21. with his promise not to destroy the earth againe, v. 21. and his benediction, in restoring the state of things againe, v. 22.

3. The explanation of doubts.

QVEST. I. How God is said to have remembred Noah.

Vers. 1. GOd remembred &c. not that there is oblivion or forgetfulnesse with God, but then God is said to remember, when he sheweth by the effects that he hath care of man: so God is said to remember mens sins, when he punisheth them, Mercer. as the widowe said to the prophet, art thou come to call my sinne to remembrance, and to slay my sonne? 1. King. 17. 20. 2. God also remembreth the cattell: wherein Moses is not contrarie to Paul: doth God take care for oxen? 1. Cor. 9. where the Apostle denieth not that Gods providence watcheth over cattell, but that his care toward man is greater, and that he careth for beasts, for mans cause. 3. So then as the cattell perished in the floud together with the wicked, so they are preserved for the righteous sake. 4. Some of the Hebrewes thinke that God is said to remember the beasts, not the fowles, because they were not made the same day with man: but the reason is, because Moses having made so often mention of the birds, that were likewise preserved in the Arke, as Gen. 6. 20. Gen. 7. 3. 14. needed not to speake of them here. 5. R. Sel. noteth, that God remembred the beasts, because they did not couple together in the Arke. I will not answer with Mercerus, that the beasts engendred in the Arke, both that they might be for sacrifice and for food afterward: for there were enough beside for sacrifice, seeing seven of the cleane entred into the Arke: and concerning food, they might for a while forbeare the eating of flesh, till the creatures were increased: but if both cleane and uncleane beasts should have engendred in the Arke, neither would the Arke have contained them, nor the food by Noah provided have sufficed them. We answer then, that God remembred them, not for any such thing, but for mans cause.

QVEST. II. What manner of wind it was that God sent.

Ambr. lib de Noah, & arc. c. 16. GOd made a spirit or wind to passe. 1. which was not the spirit of consolation, wherewith Noah was comforted, Rasi. 2. Nor yet the holy Ghost, as Ambrose and Theodoret suppose, Ambrose reason is, quomodo non evacuaretur mare ventorum vi: if it were the wind that dryed up the flond, much more is it able to dry up and empty the sea: but this followeth not, because this was an extraordinary wind, not such as usually bloweth in the sea. Theodoret saith further, non solent venti è aqua imminui, sed potius turbari, &c. the wind useth to trouble the water, not to dry it up: so did this wind cause the water to goe and come, but it had also a drying faculty, otherwise than ordinary winds have. 2. Neither was this wind the spirit and heat of the Sunne, as Rupertus thinketh: but this was extraordinarily caused, whereas the Sun kept his ordinary course still. 3. It was then a wind indeed, that was raised by the extraordinary power of God: for by exhalation out of the earth, (whereof winds are usually ingendred,) it being covered with waters, this wind was not caused: and God gave it also an extraordinary power, both to dry the waters, by tossing them to and fro, and to force them by going and comming, (as the property of the water is to ebbe and flow,) to their proper place, into the deepe fountaines from whence they came. And these two properties the Scripture ascribeth to the wind: 1. to force the waters, as in the division of the red sea, and to purge the ayre, to disperse the clouds, and dry up moysture. Prov. 25, 23. as the North wind driveth away the raine. Perer.

Rupert. lib 4. in Gen. c. 22.

QVEST. III. When the fountaines began to be stopped, and the raine to cease.

Vers. 2. THe fountaines of the deepe were stopped, &c. The raine ceased, and the current of the water was stopped immediatly after the forty dayes, as Augustine thinketh: 2. not after the 150. dayes spoken of before, as Oliaster imagineth: for then the waters had not continued in their height any time at all, but should presently have begun to decrease, for after the 150. daies they began to abate: and Moses saith, that the raine was upon the earth forty daies, and forty nights, chap. 7. 21. then not an 150. daies and nights. 3. Wherefore I rather approve the opinion of some other Hebrewes, that it ceased to raine at all, after the forty dayes expired, then of Aben Ezra, to whom Mercerus seemeth to subscribe, that it rained though not continually, an 110. dayes, after the 40. dayes, that is in all, 150. dayes. 4. R. Sel. noteth, that where it is said, all the fountaines of the deep were stopped, not all the fountaines, as before it is said, all the fountaines, &c. were opened: that some fountaines remained unstopped for the procreation and sending forth of rivers and springs: so also Iun. But it is more like that all the fountaines which were extraordinarily opened to augment the floud, were stopped: the ordinary springs of water continued still, as before the floud.

QVEST. IV. How the seven moneth is to be counted.

Latine text corrupt. Vers. 4. IN the seventh moneth, the seventh day, &c. 1. Whereas the Latine text and the Septuagint read for the seventeenth day, the seven and twenty day; which reading is received of the popish interpreters, that are addicted to their vulgar latine text, and hereupon some of them reckon from the beginning of the floud seuen moneths, that is, 207. dayes (counting twenty nine dayes and a halfe to a moneth,) whereof the floud continued one hundred ninety, and so there should be seventeene daies betweene the beginning of the waters to abate, & the resting of the Arke: sic Tostatus. Others beginning their reckoning from the beginning of the floud, till the waters abated, which make five moneths, and two dayes and a halfe, halfe, (accounting but twenty nine dayes and a halfe to a moneth,) and hereunto they put eight dayes more (which was the ſpace between the abating of the water, and the reſting of the Arke) which added to the two dayes, make up thoſe ten, which the latin hath more than the Hebrew: ſic Lyranus, Pererius. But wee refuſe all theſe collections, which goe about to juſtifie the vulgar latin againſt the originall verity wherin S. Auguſtine giveth us a good rule: ei lingua potius credatur unde eſt in aliã per interpretes facta tranſlatio: that tongue is rather to be credited, out of the which the interpreters have tranſlated into another. Auguſt. li. 15. de civit. dei. c. 13.

2. Receiving then the Hebrew text, that the Arke reſted upon the 17. not the 27. day of the 7. moneth yet we refuſe the opinion of Cajetan, who therein followeth R. Sol. that would have this moneth the ſeventh from the beginning of the floud, not the ſeventh of the yeare: and the reaſon is, becauſe hee maketh not the 40. dayes of the raine, part of the 150. dayes, as it is to be truly taken, as is ſhewed before, cap. 7. queſt. 14. but he putteth them together, making of them both 190. dayes; which is the ſpace of ſix moneths and ſixteene dayes (counting but 29. dayes to a moneth) ſo that upon the 191. day after the beginning of the floud, which is the 17. of the 7. moneth of the floud, the Arke reſted, &c. But this account cannot ſtand, to make this ſeventh moneth, the ſeventh from the beginning of the floud, not from the beginning of the yeare: ſeeing both the ſecond moneth, chap. 7. 11. and the tenth moneth, chap. 8. 5. muſt of neceſſity be referred to the yeare, not to the continuance of the floud. And this were to breed a confuſion, in the ſtory, to take ſome moneths according to the ſeaſon of the yeare, and ſome according to the time of the floud: for ſeeing the moneths both before and after, are numbred according to the courſe of the yeare, there is no reaſon to underſtand the ſeventh moneth otherwiſe.

3. Neither doe we approve Lyranus conceit, that whereas hee maketh the 150. dayes to determine the 19. of the ſeventh moneth, after which time the waters began to decreaſe, he would have the Arke to reſt upon the 17. day according to the text: but how is it like, that the Arke ſhould reſt, before the waters began to abate without a miracle?

4. Neither can I condiſcend to Mercerus judgement, wherein hee followeth a certaine Hebrew in his booke of the binding of Iſaack: that the waters began to decreaſe before the 150. dayes expired; though the decreaſe was not ſo ſenſible as afterward: and ſo the waters might abate ſo much by the end of the 150. dayes, as that the Arke might well be ſtaid from floting: but the text favoureth not this collection, which ſaith, that the waters prevailed an 150. dayes: but when they abated, they prevailed not: and againe, v. 3. after the end of 150. dayes the waters abated, Ergo, not before.

5. Wherefore we tooke this ſeventh moneth according to the order of the yeare being the ſixt in number from the ſecond moneth wherein the floud began, and making in all but five compleat moneths, that is an 150. dayes from the 17. of the ſecond, to the 17. of the ſeventh: ſo that wee make the 40. dayes of continuall raine to be a parcell of the 150. dayes mentioned chap. 7. 24. All which time the waters prevailed: ſo then upon the ſame day, the 151. from the beginning of the floud, which was the 17. of the ſeventh, the waters abated, and the Arke reſted upon the mountaines of Armenia: this expoſition beſt agreeeth with the text: and thus Tremelius and Muſculus doe truly expound.

But two objections are made, 1. ſaith Pererius, by this expoſition the Arke ſhall reſt the very firſt day of the abating of the waters, which is not like, ſeeing that it was above two moneths after, (the 1. day of the 10. moneth) when the tops of the mountaines appeared: thus alſo obiecteth Mercerus. Anſwer 1, This doubt is eaſily removed, 1. ſeeing that the waters exceeded not the higheſt mountaines above 15. cubits: and the Arke might draw at the leaſt a 11. cubits of water, as R. Sol. thinketh, ſo that the bottom of the Arke was but 4. cubits above the tops of the high mountaines: it is not unlikely but that the waters might abate 4. cubits in depth the firſt day, that the Arke might well touch the tops of thoſe high mountaines: which may very well be ſuppoſed to be the higheſt of the reſt, becauſe the Arke firſt touched there. 2. And that this great abatement the firſt day may ſeeme probable, let it bee conſidered, that in the ſpace of an 160. and odde dayes from the 17. of the 7. moneth, to the 1. of the firſt moneth in the 601. yeare, v. 13. the very loweſt parts of the earth were dried. Now the higheſt hils are thought to be 3. miles at the leaſt higher than the low places, (as mount Tabor is 30. furlongs high) that is, 3000. yards, which maketh 6000. cubits the eight part of that number, the eight part of the height of water muſt abate, which is 750. cubits: that is every day 37. cubits and an halfe, or thereabout: Now be it admitted, that every day the waters were not waſted alike: for the higher the water, and the greater the compaſſe or circumference, the ſmaller was the abatement, yet according to this proportion, the waters might very well ſinke ſo much the firſt day, that the Arke might well be ſtayed upon the high mountaines of Ararat, or Armenia. How much the waters are ſuppoſed to have abated every day.

3. And if we ſay that theſe mountaines, whoſe tops appeared the firſt day of the 10. moneth, were the lower and inferiour hils, as ſome Hebrewes thinke, whom Mercer. followeth: then there remaineth no doubt at all: but that there might be the ſpace of two moneths betweene the appearing of the tops of the higheſt, and of the loweſt hils.

Queſt. V. How many dayes are to be counted to a moneth.

Secondly, it is objected, ſeeing an 150. dayes make five moneths, and two dayes with an halfe (reckoning 29. dayes and an halfe after the computation of Hebrewes to a moneth) it will be found that the Arke reſted two dayes and an halfe before the waters began to abate, which was not till an 150. dayes expired: but this is not like.

Anſw. 1. We are not forced here, to adde ten dayes more, as the latine text, for 27. readeth 27. which is a corrupting of the Scripture. 2. Neither need wee ſay as ſome, that the waters did abate indeed before the 150. dayes expired, but that abatement was not ſenſible, evident, or apparant, and therefore it is not accounted of: for this were to contradict the text, which ſaith, after the end of the 150. dayes the waters abated: Ergo, not before: and beſide, ſeeing the Arke reſted and ſtayed at the very firſt abatement upon the mountaine, how was it not apparant and ſenſible?

3. Neither for the ſolution of this doubt, are we driven to take this ſeventh moneth according to the tearme of the floud, and not after the order of the yeare; which were to confound the ſtorie, as is before ſhewed.

4. But our anſwer is, that a moneth here is neither taken for the ſpace of 29. dayes, as Cajetanus, nor of 29. and a halfe, as Pererius affirmeth, but for thirty dayes complete, Iunius: and ſo ſhall we have an 150. dayes juſt, from the ſecond to the ſeventeenth of the ſeventh moneth: for vnleſſe this be admitted, we ſhall neither find a ſufficient anſwer to this objection propounded, all thoſe other conjectures being too weake. And beſide, vnleſſe the Hebrewes ſhould account 30. dayes to a moneth, and rather more, their yeares conſiſting of twelve moneths, ſhould be very imperfect: for whereas a yeare according to the courſe of the Sunne containeth 365. dayes: if there be but 30. dayes in a moneth, there will be but 360. dayes: if but 29. dayes and an halfe, there will be but 354. ſo that by this reckoning the Hebrewes yeare ſhould want 11. dayes, of a perfect yeare, which would worke a great confuſion in the computation of yeares, and is not to be admitted.

Quest. VI. What mountaine the Arke reſted upon.

The Arke reſted upon the mountaines of Ararat, &c. Some thinke that the Arke reſted upon the mountaine Taurus, from whence commeth the River Araxis, which ſome underſtand here by Ararath, and upon that part of Taurus which hangeth over Cilicia: and the rather, for that the City Tarſus is there ſituate, which ſeemeth to be derived of the word τηρέω, which ſignifieth to drie, becauſe that part and tract of Cilicia, was ſooneſt dried after the floud, Perer.

But the Chalde Paraphraſt calleth that part of Armenia where the Arke reſted, Karda: Curtius Cordaos, the Cordeans, or Gordians, as Ptolomie: where is one hill higher than the reſt, not called Baris, as Ioſephus alleageth out of Nicholaus Damaſcenus, which Iunius out of Epiphanius ſheweth muſt be read, Lubaris, which in the Armenian tongue ſignifieth a place of deſcending: becauſe there was the place where Noah firſt deſcended out of the Arke: and this is moſt probable. But whether part of the Arke remained ſo long time after, as Ioſephus, Beroſus, Hieronymus, ſay it continued till their time, it is uncertaine, Marlorat.

Quest. VII. How the tenth moneth is to be accounted.

Verſ. 5. The waters were going and decreaſing till the tenth moneth, &c. This cannot be the tenth moneth from the beginning of the floud, as Cajetane thinketh: for ſeeing there was one moneth, and 16. dayes of the ſecond moneth paſt before the floud came: by this reckoning this firſt day of the tenth moneth, when the tops of the mountaines began to appeare ſhould be the ſeventeenth day of the eleventh moneth: which cannot be, ſeeing after this, Moſes accounteth 40. dayes, verſ. 6. and thrice ſeven dayes, according to the thrice ſending of the Dove, verſ. 10. 12. which are in all ſixty dayes, which make two moneths before the beginning of the ſix hundred and one yeare, verſ. 14. But there ſhould onely remaine after Cajetanes computation a moneth and a halfe, about forty five dayes. Wherefore this tenth moneth is to be accounted from the beginning of the yeare, and not of the floud.

Quest. VIII. How much water the Arke drew.

Concerning the depth of water, which the Arke is ſuppoſed to have drawne. 1. I neither thinke that it went ſo ſmall a depth in water, not above two or three cubits. as Ramban, whom Mercerus followeth: for the burthen of the ſhip was great, and muſt cauſe it to ſinke downe deeper: neither need we feare with Ramban, if the water tooke up the third part of the Arke, it being a flat bottomed veſſell, leſt it might have beene drowned: for who knoweth not, but that ſuch veſſels may bee loaden within a third part of the brimme, and yet not ſinke. 2. Hugo thinketh it drew nine cubits, wherein he followeth Raſi, another Rabbin. 3. Lyranus maketh it to draw thirteene cubits, but that is too much: for the Arke floting but two cubits from the tops of the mountaines, might be in danger of daſhing againſt the ground. 4. I ſubſcribe rather to R. Sel. that the Arke did ſinke an eleven cubits: ſo that it was liſted up foure cubits from the tops of the hils, which was a ſufficient diſtance.

Quest. IX. Whether all the dayes of the yeare of the floud are ſummed by Moſes.

Verſ. 6. After the end of 40. dayes, &c. Cajetan thinketh, that all the dayes of this yeare, wherein the floud prevailed, are numbred by Moſes: as firſt 46. dayes before the floud came: 40. dayes, wherein the raine fell: 150. dayes, while the waters prevailed: then 70. dayes from the 17. of the ſeventh moneth, to the firſt of the tenth moneth: then 40. dayes here mentioned: and laſtly, 14. dayes ſpoken of, verſ. 10. 12. when the Dove was twice ſent forth: which in all make 300. dayes: for in the yeare of the floud, there were juſt ſo many dayes: and whereas there is in every yeare, five dayes and a quarter above that number, of ancient time they uſed to every ſixt yeare to put in menſem intercalarem, an odde moneth to make up the number: ſic Cajetanus. Firſt Cajetane erreth in the reckoning of the dayes: 1. The forty dayes wherein the raine fell, are part of the 150. dayes, wherein the water prevailed, as I have ſhewed before: 2. after the forty dayes mentioned, chap 8. 6. there are not twice but thrice thrice ſeven dayes to be accounted, according to the thrice ſending of the Dove, as it may appeare, verſ. 10. Secondly, concerning the Hebrew computation, for the dayes of the yeare, whereas the Egyptians Grecians, and Romans, uſed three divers accounts for the dayes and moneths: for the firſt, in the end of the yeare beſide the twelve moneths added five dayes, and every fourth yeare they put in a day more, as we uſe to doe in our leape yeare, as witneſſeth Macrobius: the Greekes counted preciſely but 360. dayes to a yeare, but then they every third yeare put in a moneth, as Herodotus teſtifieth: the Romans ſo divided the moneths of the yeare, giving to ſome 31. dayes, that they together made up the whole number of 365. dayes, it is moſt like, that the Hebrewes followed the ancient Calender of the Egyptians, making their yeare even with the courſe of the Sunne, ſaving that they had alſo their leape yeare, and ſo doth Moſes here: and thus thinketh Aben Ezra, though other Hebrewes are of opinion, that there are ten dayes above a yeare added, to make it equall with the courſe of the Sunne. Wherefore he numbreth not all the dayes of the yeare, (for from the firſt of the tenth moneth, to the firſt of the firſt moneth of the next yeare, are 90. dayes, whereas there are but 40. and thrice ſeven dayes ſpoken of) but onely thoſe dayes are regiſtred, wherein ſome thing fell out of ſpeciall note and remembrance.

How many dayes the Hebrewes count to their yeare.

Quest. X. Whether Noah opened the doore or window, and wherefore.

Verſ. 6. Noah opened the window of the Arke which he made.] 1. This was neither the doore of the Arke, as ſome Greeke copies read θύρα, which ſignifieth a doore: as Chryſoſt. hom. 27. in Gen. for the doore could not be opened without danger. 2. Neither as Cajetane thinketh, was this another window, beſide that mentioned in the deſcription of the Arke, becauſe there the word (tzohar) is uſed, which ſignifieth a light, here the word (chalon) which is a window: for it is no unwonted thing in Scripture, to expreſſe one thing by divers names. 3. Neither, as Oleaſter conjectureth, did Noah beſide the window, make a cleft or riſt in the ſhip to looke out: for that had beene dangerous, in reſpect of the rage and violence of the water. 4. Neither doth Noah ſend out, rather than looke forth himſelfe, either for feare to behold the terrible waters, as Chryſoſtome, for his heart was not ſo timorous; or for that the window was too little for him to looke out, as Toſtatus thinketh: but becauſe the fowles ſent forth could give notice by their returne of the remote places, which Noah could not ſo eaſily ſee, Perer. 5. Now whereas the tops of the mountaines are ſaid to be ſeene, verſ. 5. before Noah opened the window, the queſtion is, of whom they were ſeene: for beſides Noah and thoſe which were in the Arke, there was no body to ſee them: the anſwer is, 1. that Noah might have opened the window before, though it be not expreſſed: as many things beſide are not, which Noah is ſuppoſed to have done in the Arke: 2. Or it is ſo ſaid, becauſe the tops of the hils were to be ſeene, though no man ſaw them. 3. Likewiſe Noah might know it by revelation, as he did other things: as that the waters were 15. cubits above the hils, which no man could know but from God, Mercer.

How the tops of the mountaines were ſeene before Noah opened the window.

Quest. XI. Of the comming and going of the Raven.

Verſ. 7. He ſent out a Raven.] The Hebrewes text hath, which went and came, the Septuagint and Latine, which went and came not, and ſo many of the Fathers doe reade. 1. It is here no wiſe to be admitted, that the Hebrew text is corrupted: for neither could the Jewes conſpire altogether to corrupt the Scriptures, but their falſhood would have beene ſpied: neither doth this place make any thing for the Jewes againſt us, and therefore they had no cauſe to corrupt it: and beſide it is well knowne, that the Jewes are moſt carefull to preſerve the Scriptures, having all the words in tale, that are uſed in the text, and how often every letter of the Alphabet is found in the Scripture. 2. We alſo refuſe their conjectures, who to juſtifie this erroneous reading, would have the Septuagint and Latine to keepe the ſenſe, though not the words: as now the Crow is ſaid not to returne, becauſe he came not againe into the Arke, but onely reſted upon it: or for that he returned without giving notice of that, wherefore he was ſent, as the Dove did, ſic Lyranus, Toſtatus. 3. Their conjecture alſo, which ſay that the Raven returned not, but lighted upon ſome carrion or dead body, cannot be allowed, as contrary to the text, and beſide unlikely, ſeeing now it was the eleventh moneth, in which time all the dead bodies were either conſumed of the water, or devoured of the fiſh. 4. Wherefore we hold the Septuagint and Latine to be corrupt: and that according to the Hebrew text, the Raven went and came to the Arke, both becauſe there was his food, his mate or fellow, and his neſt or reſting place: though I thinke the Raven was not received into the Arke as the Dove was. 5. But the Hebrewes fables we refuſe: how that the Raven was ſent forth out of the Arke, becauſe of his intemperancie with his mate: and that two other in the Arke, were in the ſame caſe, Cham, and Canis, the dogge: likewiſe, they imagine, that the Raven ſhould expoſtulate with Noah, why he was ſent out from his mate: as though Noah ſhould keepe her for himſelfe: ſome thinke that this was the Raven that afterward fed Elias: but theſe ridiculous toyes are not worth the rehearſall. 6. The Hebrewes and ſome Chriſtian writers doe here much ſtand upon allegories: ſome of them, which tend to edifying we refuſe not: as that the ſimple hearted are ſignified by the Dove, who are to be received into the Church: but Hypocrites and carnall men, muſt not be admitted into the Arke of the Church, as the Raven returned not, Mercer.

The Latine text corrupt, as readeth Pererius: though ſome Latine edition read otherwiſe.

Hebrewes fables.

Quest. XII. Of the ſending out of the Dove, and the computation of the ſeven dayes.

Verſ. 8. He ſent alſo forth a Dove from him. &c. 1. Though the tops of the mountaines appeared before the ſending forth of the Dove, yet ſhe found no reſt for the ſole of her foot, becauſe the earth was not yet dry but muddy, and ſtanding with water, as Chryſoſtome noteth: and Ioſephus ſaith, that chryſoſt. hom. 29. in Gen.

Ioseph. lib. 1. antiquitat. hom. 26. in Gen. Plin. lib. 16. cap. 20.

that the dove returned with fowle and durty feet: and beside, the dove delighteth in the vallies and places which were yet under the water. Mercer. 2. whereas she brought an olive leafe, &c. I rather thinke with Chrysostome, that the olive tree yet keepe the leaves greene under the water, especially, seeing the olive, as Pliny noteth, is one of those trees, whose leaves are alwayes greene: then with Ambrose, that Deo jubente uno die, &c. germinavit terra, &c. at Gods commandement the earth in the same day wherin it began to be dry, did bud and bring forth: that this olive branch was fetcht forth from Paradise, or out of the land of Israel, is a Jewish fable. 3. Where Moses saith, v. 10. he abode yet other seven dayes: I approve rather the opinion of Tostatus, and Lyranus, and Mercerus, that Moses observeth thrice seven dayes, then of Rupertus and Pererius, that understand but twice seven, which Noah waited for the sending forth of the dove: for it is evident that he had staid 7. dayes before: not seven other from those forty dayes, as Pererius expounded it: but other seven from the first seven; as the seven other mentioned, v. 12. were other from the second seven.

Pererius lib. 13. in Genes. disput. 9.

Quest. XIII. Of the account of the 601. yeare of Noahs age.

Vers. 13. IN the six hundred and one yeare, &c. 1. Whereas in the first moneth the upper face of the earth was dried, and yet v. 14. it is said the earth was dried the 27. day of the second moneth: we need not with Cajetan to reconcile this doubt, to say, that this was all one moneth, but divers in computation: the first in respect of Noahs age, the second of the yeare: for it was not like that Moses in the same place would use a divers computation, which would breed a confusion in the story: but the text expoundeth it selfe, that in the first moneth, onely the upper face of the earth seemed to bee dry, but it was not firme and sound, and fit for habitation, till the second moneth. 2. In that Noah removed the covering of the Arke, that is, part thereof, so much as might serve to looke forth, it followeth not that the window of the Arke was too little for Noah to looke out at, as Pererius noteth: or not convenient in respect of the situation for that use, for both Noah out of the window had perceived before the tops of the mountaines to bee bare, v. 5. for how else and of whom were they seene? as also in that Noah put his hand out of the window and tooke in the dove, it appeareth it was not out of his reach: but from the top of the Arke Noah might see round about, whereas the window opened but one way, and therefore he removed some part of the cover.

Of removing the covering of the Arke.

Quest. XIIII. Noahs floud of the longest continuance of all others.

Vers. 14. AND in the second moneth, the 27. day of the moneth.] 1. This floud then which was in Noahs time, was of the longest continuance of all flouds and inundations, that ever were: that great inundation of Nilus under Prometheus, endured but a moneths space: that under Ogyges in Achaia, two moneths: another under Deucalion in Thessalia, three moneths: they make mention also of a fourth inundation of the Isle Pharos, called therefore Pharonica, under the Ægyptian Proteus: but none of these were like unto this inundation in Noahs time, neither for generality of place, or perpetuity of time. 2. For this floud neither continued only nine moneths as Annianus thinketh, or ten moneths as Cajetanus supposeth: but twelve moneths full and ten dayes, according to the course of the Sunne: for Noah went into the Arke, when the floud began, in the second moneth and 17. day of the six hundred yeare, and hee came forth the second moneth of the yeare six hundred and one, upon the 27. day of the moneth.

Xenophon, Anian. lib. de equivoc.

Quest. XV. Abstinence in the Arke.

Vers. 18. AND Noah came forth, &c. 1. Ambrose noteth, as some Hebrewes before, that whereas Noah is bid to come forth, he and his wife, his sonnes and their wives, v. 16. but when he is bid to come in, he and his sonnes, and his wife and his sonnes wives, are joyned together, chap. 6. v. 18. that they lived apart in the Arke, and companied not together, non commiscetur sexus in introitu sed commiscetur in ingressu, although it is like that Noah and his sonnes lived in abstinence in the Arke, because it was a time of mourning: and therefore the Hebrewes note, that Ioseph had his children not in the yeares of famine in Ægypt, but before: yet this cannot be gathered out of the 16. v. where Noah and his wife, his sonnes and their wives are named together, when they are bidden to come out of the Arke: for here v. 18. they are againe named asunder. 2. But R. Isaack Carus, his note is too violent: that Noah doth not here as God bid him, but abstained still from the company of his wife, because hee feared lest men might kill one another, as Cain did Abel, or because he expected another floud, the simplicity of the text warranteth no such thing. 3. Musculus noteth the obedience in Noahs family, that they enter in, and goe forth according to Noahs direction. 4. Luther observeth also the singular order in the creatures that goe not forth confusedly together, but according to their kindes, or as the Hebrew word is, families, every one sorting to his like.

Ambros. lib. de arc. 33.

Quest. XVI. Noah buildeth an Altar, not without Gods direction.

Vers. 20. NOah built an Altar, &c. 1. Though Noah had no expresse commandement now to offer sacrifice: for as Ambrose saith, non debuit Deus quasi avarus mercedem gratia postulare: it was not fit, that God, as one covetous, should require the reward of thankes: yet hee was not without direction in this case: Calvins reason is, because it is evident, that he in this story, did nothing, without a warrant from God, he would not come forth of the Arke, though the earth were dry, till God bid him: Oecolampadius proveth it by these words, that God smelled a savour of rest: but every thing stinketh before God, that is not according to his word. Wherefore Noah knew by the example and practice of the Patriarkes, that God

Lib. de Noah. cap. 22.

God was pleased with this kinde of worship by sacrifices: as also he was directed thereunto, because to this end there were seven of the cleane creatures taken into the Arke by Gods owne appointment, and for the fashion of the Altar, which was made either of earth, or of unhewen stones, whereof first mention is made in this place, he had either the patterne from the practice of the elder Patriarks, or by instinct from God.

Quest. XVII. To what end sacrifices were used.

And offered burnt offerings: three reasons are yeelded why the Lord pleased to be served with sacrifices: two are alleaged by Chrysostome. The morall end was, that the piety and devotion of the people might be stirred up by his externall note: a politicke end, that as circumcision was given as a marke of difference betweene them and other people: so the solemne use of sacrifices might containe them in the service of God, that they should not be enticed to the Idolatry of the Gentiles, by their pompous and magnificent sacrifices. A third end was mysticall, well touched by Calvin. Semper illis ante oculos symbola proponi oportuit, &c. These sacrifices were as symboles and signes to preach and prefigure unto them their Mediatour and atonement maker Jesus Christ, without whom nothing is acceptable to God. And further, although Noah gave thanks also to God for the preservation of the uncleane creatures, as for the cleane; yet he offereth onely of the cleane, because he had so learned from the Patriarks, that God was pleased with such sacrifices, before whom otherwise nothing is uncleane, but in respect of man: and whereas he offered of all cleane both beasts and fowles, it is like he tooke of more kindes, than those five used in the Law: that is, Oxen, Sheepe, with Goats, Doves, and Turtles. Further, he offered burnt sacrifices, rather than oblations, Eucharisticall, not as the Hebrewes imagine, for his owne sinne, but because such sacrifices were most used before the Law, and were best accepted, when as the whole sacrifice was consumed upon the Altar, Mercer. Hom.27 in Gen.

Quest. XVIII. How God smelled a savour of rest.

Vers. 21. God smelled a savour of rest.] 1. As men are delighted with pleasant savours, so this service and sacrifice of Noah was pleasing unto God, as the Chalde Paraphrast readeth. 2. Not that the externall act of sacrificing in it selfe pleased God, but the thankfull minde of the sacrificer, Calvin. 3. All our acts have a double smell, one outward before man, another inward before God: Cain and Abels sacrifice had one outward smell, but Abels had a sweet savour beside within, Musculus. 4. And this savour herein differeth from all sensible savours: for there may be satiety in the most pleasant odours, but with this sweet savour the Lord is never filled or wearied, but alwayes delighted with the prayers of the Saints, Cajetane.

Quest. XIX. How the Lord will no more curse the earth.

Vers. 21. I will not henceforth curse the ground any more for mans sake, &c. 1. The Lord speaketh not generally of all kinde of cursing the earth: for those curses which are upon the earth for mans sinne, *Gen.*3.17.4.12. are not taken away: but he meaneth this particular curse by waters, that all flesh shall no more perish by them: as is shewed, cap. 9. 21. for the world notwithstanding shall bee destroyed by fire. 2. Where it is added as a reason, for the imagination of mans heart is evill, &c. it is not to be taken as Rupertus collecteth: that God will spare the earth, and beasts, because man is subject to sinne: but the promise is made specially for man. That seeing hee is by nature subdued to sinne, hee is to bee pitied, and not for every offence according to his deserts to be judged: for then the Lord should continually overflow the world, Calvin. 3. And whereas this reason is given why the Lord would destroy the world, *Gen.*6.6. because the imaginations of his heart were evill: it may seeme strange, that the same cause is alleaged here, why from henceforth the Lord would spare the world: therefore this is here added, to shew the originall beginning of this mercy, not to proceed from man, who is altogether corrupt by nature, but from Gods owne gracious favour, Mercer. 4. Further, whereas it is said, God said in his heart, this was not only secretly purposed by the Lord, not uttered, but either revealed to Noah as a Prophet, or to Moses the Writer, as some Hebrewes: but it is cleare, that the Lord thus spake to Noah, who is said thus to speake in his heart, as taking counsell and deliberation with himselfe, Mercer. 5. From his youth: not only from his youthfull estate, which age is more prone unto sin, committing the same with rage and violence, as Tostatus: or when man beginneth to have use of reason, and free-will, as Rupertus. But mans thoughts are evill, even as soone as he is able to conceive or thinke any thing; yea our nature is evill from the cradle, Calvin. Though as Ambrose well saith, crescit cum aetatibus culpa, as age groweth, so sinne increaseth.

Quest. XX. How the seasons of the yeare are promised alwayes to continue.

Vers. 22. Sowing time and harvest, &c. 1. The Lord doth not promise that for ever these seasons of the yeare shall continue: for after the end of the world they shall cease. But all the dayes of the earth: that is, so long as the earth continueth in this state, Musculus. 2. Neither is this to bee understood of every particular Countrey: for sometime and in some place, it falleth out through the just judgement of God, that there is neither seed time nor harvest, as it hapned under Elias, 1 *King.*17. But it is referred to the generall condition of the whole earth, wherein there shall be a perpetuall succession of these seasons. 3. The yeare is not here divided into six parts, as the Jewes imagine, giving unto each part two moneths: but Moses divideth the yeare according to the popular estimation, into two parts, cold and heat, Summer and Winter: and by seed time and harvest, are understood the benefits that arise unto men by the ſeaſon of the yeare, Luther, Perer. Mercer, or by them the two other parts of the yeare are implyed the Spring and Autumne. 4. Further it is ſaid, day and night ſhall not ceaſe: not becauſe there was no diſtinction betwene the day and night during the time of the floud, as ſome Hebrewes: for we ſee that Noah accounted the dayes, when he ſent out the Dove, which could not have ſearched about in the dark: but there was not ſuch apparant diſtinction of the day and night, as before: the whole frame of the world being then out of courſe. Like as when the skie is darkned in Sea tempeſts, as Act. 27. 20. neither Sunne nor Starres appeared in many dayes: the Sunne and Starres then kept their courſe, but not to any ſuch uſe of the inhabitants of the earth. And this is to be underſtood generally for the continuance of day and night in the whole earth: for in particular places the night may be altered, as in Egypt, and the day, as when the Sunne ſtood ſtill in the times of Ioſua, Mercer.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Nothing acceptable to God without faith.

Verſ. 21. AND the Lord ſmelled a ſavour of reſt, &c. Becauſe Noah offered up his ſacrifice in faith, therefore it had a pleaſant ſmell before God: whereby it is evident, that all ſervice which is offered unto God being not mixed with faith, doth ſtinke before him: ſic Oecolampadius.

2. Doct. Originall ſinne not by corrupt imitation.

Verſ. 21. From his youth: this place directly proveth originall ſinne, againſt the Pelagians: who denied it to be a depravation of our nature, but a corrupt imitation: but here we ſee, that even in the very youth and firſt age of man, when he is not yet ſo apt to imitate, there is evilneſſe and corruption in the heart: as it is in the Proverbs, 20. 11. a childe is knowne by his doings, whether his worke be pure or right.

3. Doct. Excommunication how to be uſed.

Verſ. 21. I will no more curſe the earth, &c, neither will I from henceforth ſmite, &c. Here curſing and ſmiting goe together; firſt God curſeth, then he ſmiteth: after this rule none ought to be ſmitten by the ſpirituall cenſures of the Church, but ſuch as ſtand firſt accurſed before God: not as the Pope ſmiteth with his thunderbolts, even thoſe, that are the faithfull ſervants of Chriſt: but the Wiſe man ſaith, that a curſe cauſleſſe ſhall not come, Proverbs, 26. 2.

4. Doct. The ſeaſons of the yeare from Noahs time.

Metamorph. 1. Verſ. 22. COld and heat ſhall not ceaſe, &c. That therefore is but a fabulous conceit of Ovid, that in Saturnes time it was a continuall ſpring: for we ſee that even theſe ſeaſons of Winter and Summer began under Noah.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. The Latine tranſlation corrupt.

Bellarm. lib. de Verb. Dei. cap. 3. Verſ. 7. WHereas the Latine text readeth, that the Raven went out and returned not againe: whereas the true reading is, that the Raven went, going forth and returning, Bellarmine would excuſe it thus; that the Latine text in ſenſe agreeth with the Hebrew: for the Raven returned to the Arke going and comming, but not into the Arke to Noah. 1. But Bellarmine might know, that there is difference betweene a Tranſlator, and an Interpreter, the one followeth the ſenſe, the other ſhould keepe the very words and ſenſe withall. 2. And as here the Latine varieth from the words, ſo verſ. 21. it leaveth the ſenſe, for whereas the Hebrew readeth, the thought of mans heart is evill, &c. the Latine doth mitigate the ſpeech, and ſaith, prone to evill, ſuch liberty that corrupt tranſlation taketh, (which they make authenticall) to chop and change the originall text: As likewiſe in the fourth verſe, for the 17. day of the moneth, the Latine readeth the 27. day.

2. Confut. God created nothing evill.

Bellar. lib. 5. de amiſſ. grat. c. 3 Originall ſinne not a ſubſtance. Verſ. 21. THe imagination of mans heart, jetſer, figmentum, the frame or faſhion of mans heart, &c. which muſt be underſtood not Paſſively, for that frame of the heart, which was created of God, for that is good: but Actively, for that which the heart of man imagineth and frameth it to it ſelfe: which is called the imagination and framing of the thoughts, chap. 6. verſ. 5. and that is evill: wherefore this place neither giveth any advantage to profane perſons, to conceive of God, as though he were Author of evill, for the heart as it is created of God is good, the ſubſtance thereof is of God, the evill quality thereof is of the corruption of our owne nature: neither doth this place ſerve to uphold Illyricus conceit, that originall ſinne ſhould be a ſubſtantiall thing.

6. Places of exhortation and morall uſe.

1. Morall. Compaſſion toward the creatures.

Verſ. 1. GOd remembred Noah and every beaſt, &c. Gods mercifull providence appeareth, that watcheth not onely over men, but over the inferiour creatures, for mans ſake: according to the

Pſalme

Psalme 36.6. Thou O Lord savest man and beast: whereby man is taught to be like to his Creator in compassion, to extend mercy even unto the bruit beasts: as the Wise man saith, a righteous man regardeth the life of his beast, Prov. 12.10. Xenocrates an Heathen Philosopher is commended for his pitifull heart, who succoured in his bosome a poore Sparrow, that came flying to him, pursued of an Hawke, and afterward let the bird goe away, saying; Se supplicem non prodidisse, that he had not betrayed his poore suppliant. Aelian. lib. 13. de varia histor.

2. Morall obser. Obedience.

Vers. 14. THen God spake to Noah: the earth was now perfectly dry, and Noah might have gone out if he would, but he waiteth upon God, that as he entred into the Arke by his appointment, so he will not goe forth without his commandement: so Ambrose noteth well: siccata erat terra, extra potuit Noe de Arca, &c. sed justus nihil sibi arrogat, se totum sed divino committit imperio; the earth was now dried, Noah might have gone forth, but the just man doth arrogate nothing to himselfe, he wholly committeth himselfe to Gods commandement. By this wee are taught obediently in all our wayes to depend upon God. Lib. de Noe & arc. c. 11.

3. Morall obser. Thanksgiving for benefits received.

Vers. 20. HE offered burnt offerings: to testifie his thankfulnesse to God, for this his great deliverance: so the godly are taught for all the benefits, which they receive, to yeeld due thanks unto God, and acknowledge him onely the author and giver of them: as David saith, What shall I render to the Lord for all his benefits? &c. I will take the cup of salvation and call upon the name of the Lord, Psal. 116.12.

CHAP. IX.

The Method and parts of the Chapter.

IN this Chapter two principall things are declared: 1. The restoring of the world, and renewing of Gods covenant, vers. 1.10. 2. The infirmitie of Noah in being drunke, and such things as accompany the same, from vers. 20. to the end.

In the first part the covenant is renewed with mankinde, from vers. 1. to 8. then with all flesh, vers. 8. 10. 20. In the covenant made with man, foure things are expressed, his multiplication, vers. 1. domination and rule over all creatures, vers. 2. sustentation and food, vers. 3. preservation, in providing that mans bloud be not shed: God will require it at the hand both of beast and man, vers. 4, 5, 6.

In the generall covenant made with all flesh: first, there is the promise, that all flesh should not bee rooted out by the waters, vers. 10, 11. then the signe and token thereof; the bow in the cloud: which shall be a signe betweene the Lord and the world, that it shall be no more destroyed by water. And this is repeated foure times, from vers. 13. to 17. for the better assurance of it.

In the second part, first Noahs infirmitie is described, with the occasion thereof, his drinking of wine, vers. 21, the effects thereof, his nakednesse, 21. Secondly, the behaviour of his sonnes: undutifull of Cham, vers. 22. reverence toward their father in the other two, vers. 23. Thirdly the verdict and sentence given by Noah by way of propheſie upon his sonnes: his cursing of Canaan of Cham, 25. his blessing of Sem chiefly, vers. 26. and of Iapheth next, vers. 27.

3. The Explanation of doubts.

QVEST. I. Of the benediction of increasing and multiplying after the flood.

1. God said to Noe and his sonnes bring forth fruit. 1. Though the Scripture make no mention of any sonnes that Noah begat after the flood, yet this benediction belongeth also to Noah, because he is increased in his sonnes, Luther. 2. This blessing doth properly and especially appertaine to lawfull marriage, though there be a kinde of obscene fecundity also in unlawfull copulations, for God speaketh to Noah and his sonnes, Calvin. 3. This increasing, though by Gods blessing is extended to other creatures, yet it is specially directed unto man, for whose cause other creatures are multiplied: 4. In that this blessing is rehearsed againe, vers.7. it sheweth the certainty of it, and the mighty increase of mankinde after the flood: for it is recorded, that within three hundred yeares, Ninus King of the Assyrians, had an army of seventeene hundred thousand footmen.

Diodorus, lib.3. extrem.

QVEST. II. How man hath yet rule and dominion over the creature.

2. And the feare of you, &c. 2. Those three privileges which were given unto man in his creation: of increasing and multiplying, *Gen.*1.28. of his rule and dominion over the creatures, ibid. of his food and sustentation, vers. 29. are here renewed in these three first verses, though not in that integrity and perfection: for the generation of man is with much difficulty and perill: his dominion over the creatures much impaired: his food more grosse, and with greater care provided. 2. Yet man retaineth still his dominion and soveraignty over the creatures, though not so absolute, as Adam had it: first we see though the savage and wilde beasts have cast off mans yoke, yet such as are more necessary for mans use, as Oxen, Horse, Sheepe, remaine in subjection still: secondly, even the wilde and unruly beasts are tamed by the wit and industry of man, *Iam.*2.8. and the hand of man worketh many engines and instruments whereby they are taken and subdued: as here fitly they are said to be delivered into the hand of man: thirdly, though God doe often punish mans disobedience by the cruell beasts (which is one of the foure great plagues, *Ezek.*14.21.) yet are they restrained by the power of God, in that they over-runne not the earth to destroy man, and partly they doe retaine a naturall feare and awe of man, whom willingly they use not to assault, but either provoked, or constrained by famine, or fearing some hurt to themselves.

QVEST. III. Whether flesh were eaten before the flood.

3. Every thing that moveth shall be meat for you. 1. Some thinke that flesh was not eaten before the flood in the families of the righteous, Mercer. 2. Some, that the eating of flesh was not at all in use before the flood: which is the opinion of Lyranus, Tostatus, Vatablus. But the liberty of eating of flesh is not here first granted, it is onely renewed. 3. Neither is their opinion to be approved, which thinke, that the eating of flesh was permitted before the flood, but yet not used among the faithfull: of which judgement seeme to be Theodoret, and Thomas Aquinas: for to what end should the faithfull restraine themselves of that liberty which God gave them? 4. Neither yet doe we thinke that the eating of flesh was their usuall food before the flood, as it is now, as seemeth to thinke Dominicus à Soto, a Popish Writer for when as yet the earth and plants were not corrupted by the flood, but retained their naturall force and vigour, they yeelded more sufficient nourishment, so that the eating of flesh was not then so necessary: and as the more delicate use of some plants, as the use of Wine by Noah was brought in afterward: so much flesh of fowles and beasts did grow in request after the flood, which was not coveted before. 5. Wherefore the sounder opinion is, that not onely the eating of flesh was permitted before the flood, but used not onely among the prophane race, but with the faithfull, though with greater moderation. Our reasons are these: 1. Because there is made no new grant, neither in this, nor in the rest, as of multiplying and bearing dominion, &c. but onely the ancient privileges granted to man, confirmed. 2. The distinction of cleane beasts, which it was lawfull for them to eat, and the uncleane, whereof they might not eat, *Levit.*13.8.3. It is evident by the oblation of Abel, who offered the first fruit of his sheepe, and the fat of them: but it had beene no praise to Abel, to offer the fatlings, if he used not to eat of them: it had beene all one to God, whether to offer leane or fat: but herein Abel is commended, because he preferred the service of God before his owne private use: and therefore Iustinus well collecteth, Si ante posuit Abel utilitati suæ Deum, non dubium quia solitus sit ex labore suo utilitatem percipere: If Abel did preferre God before his profit, certainly he did reape profit of his labour: and to the same purpose he alleageth that saying of the Apostle, Who feedeth a flocke, and eateth not of the milke thereof, 1 *Cor.*9.7. and by the same reason also of the flesh thereof. 4. In that expresse mention is here first made of eating of flesh, it is not, as one well resolveth, quantum ad usum, in respect of the use, sed quantum ad necessitatem, in regard of the necessity. The food of flesh beganne now to be more necessary, because the plants and herbs had lost the first naturall vigour and strength.

QVEST. IIII. What the meaning is of eating the flesh with the life or bloud.

4 BVt flesh with the life thereof, that is, the bloud, &c. 1. This word anima, in Hebrew nepheſh, tranſlated life, is taken foure wayes in Scripture: firſt, for man, as the ſoule that ſinneth, ſhall die, Ezek. 18. Secondly, for the reaſonable ſoule: feare not thoſe that can kill the body: but cannot kill the ſoule, Matth. 10. Thirdly, it is taken for the inferiour part of the ſoule, that is, the affection: as thou ſhalt love the Lord with all thy heart and ſoule, Matth. 22. Fourthly, it is taken for the life: as a good ſhepherd will lay downe his life for his ſheepe, Ioh. 10. and ſo it is taken in this place: for the bloud is the ſeat and chariot of the life, and vitall ſpirits.

2. Theſe words are neither figuratively taken, as Eugubinus thinketh, for the ſhedding of mans bloud: becauſe he that killeth a man, ſeemeth to devour his fleſh: for in this ſenſe the words ſhould have no coherence at all with the former verſe: and where words may be taken in their proper ſenſe without any inconvenience, a figure is not to be enforced: neither is it all one to eat fleſh with the bloud thereof, and to eat things ſtrangled, as Chryſoſtome collecteth: for the Apoſtles diſtinctly ſpeake of bloud and things ſtrangled, Act. 15. Neither is the eating of live fleſh here onely prohibited, as Cajetanus conjectureth: or of hot bloud, as Mercer. for from this bruitiſh kinde of food, the very nature of man abhorreth, and therefore it needed not ſo eſpecially to be provided for by precept. But here generally the eating of the bloud with the fleſh is forbidden: whether together with the fleſh: live or dead, or ſeparated from the fleſh, as to drinke it, or to eat it as now the uſe is in confected meats. Hom. 27. in Gen.

QVEST. V. Wherefore the eating of bloud was prohibited.

NOw whereas the eating of bloud was forbidden, both before the Law, and under the Law, Levit. 17. and after the Law in the beginning of the Goſpell, Act. 15. it ſhall be profitable to conſider the cauſes of this prohibition. Firſt, it was forbidden before the Law: 1. Not ſo much for decencie and comelineſſe, or for that bloud is a groſſe and heavy food: 2. But either that aforehand by theſe ceremoniall precepts mens minds might be prepared the better to beare the yoke of the Law, which afterward ſhould be promulgated. 3. Or rather that by this precept of abſtaining from bloud, men might be the more terrified from the ſhedding of mans bloud: ſic Chryſoſt. Hom. 27. in Gen.

Secondly this law was revived, Levit. 17. 11, 12. whereof two reaſons are given: one civill, becauſe the life of the fleſh is the bloud: that they ſhould forbeare from all ſhew of cruelty, and ſo much the more deteſt the ſhedding of mans bloud: the other religious, becauſe I have given the bloud to offer at the Altar: the bloud, the organ of life, is holy unto God the Author of life and therefore they ſhould not pollute or prophane it by devouring thereof.

Thirdly, the Apoſtles did forbid the eating of things ſtrangled, and bloud: 1. Not becauſe among the Gentiles, ſuffocated things were held to be the food of evill ſpirits, as Origen writeth: for it is not like that the Apoſtles would ground their decree upon ſuch heatheniſh fantaſies. 2. Neither by bloud is homicide forbidden, and by things ſuffocated uncleane, as ſome thinke: for the Apoſtles would not uſe obſcure and myſticall tearmes in their decree: and theſe things were already provided for by law among the Gentiles. 3. Neither did the Apoſtles forbid theſe things onely to reſtraine intemperancie: for many kinds of food are more delicate and to be deſired, than theſe. 4. But Auguſtine ſheweth the true cauſe of this prohibition: Quod ideo factum eſt, quia ei qui gere voluerunt Apoſtoli pro tempore rem facilem &c. This was decreed becauſe the Apoſtles for a while would chuſe ſome eaſie thing, not burdenſome to the obſervers, which the Gentiles might obſerve in common with the Iewes, &c. Thus Auguſtine diſputing againſt Fauſtus. This the Apoſtles did onely for a time, leſt the beleeving Jewes, who could hardly all at once be removed from the legall rites, might have beene offended at the libertie of the Gentiles: but now this cauſe being removed, and there being no ſuch feare, this decree alſo is expired. Lib. 8. cont. Fauſt. Of the Apoſtles prohibition of abſtaining from things ſtrangled.

QVEST. VI. How this prohibition dependeth of the former verſe.

Verſ. 5. FOr ſurely I will require your bloud, &c. 1. Which words are neither an expoſition of the former verſe, as Eugubinus, who by the eating of fleſh with the bloud, underſtandeth figuratively the ſhedding of mans bloud. 2. Neither is the Hebrew aeh, to be read as an adverſative, as Paulus Burgenſis readeth, verumtamen, notwithſtanding: as though the ſenſe ſhould be this; though yee are permitted to ſhed the bloud of beaſts, yet it is unlawfull for you to ſhed the bloud of man. 3. Neither is this another exception, concerning mans food, as Cajetane, that as before the bloud of beaſts is excepted, ſo here humane fleſh: that if it be not lawfull to ſhed the bloud of man, neither is it to eat his fleſh, which firſt muſt be killed before it be eaten. 4. Neither need there to be here underſtood any ſentence, as this; I will not have you to ſhed mans bloud, and then this to follow as a reaſon: for this prohibition to ſhed mans bloud, followeth directly in the next verſe. 5. But this word tranſlated (for) may be read as a cauſall: why God would have them abſtaine from all cruelty or ſavage behaviour in eating of the bloud of beaſts, that they ſhould have a greater deteſtation of the ſpilling or ſhedding of mans bloud, Perer. Mercer.

QVEST. VII. How God will require the bloud of man at the hand of beaſts.

Verſ. 5. AT the hand of every beaſt. 1. Rupertus by beaſt, underſtandeth the Devill, that ſhall anſwer for the death of mens ſoules: but Moſes here directly ſpeaketh of the bodily life, which is in the ſpirits and bloud. 2. Neither by beaſts here are underſtood cruell and beaſtiall men: for it followeth afterward, at the hands of man will I require it, &c. 3. Neither doth Moſes inſinuate the death of martyrs, which were exposed to beasts: for which the persecutors shall answer for, that did cast the Saints before the beasts. 4. But here is shadowed forth that Law, which was afterward published, that even the beast that killeth a man should be stoned, Exod. 22.

Quest. VIII. How his bloud shall be shed, that sheddeth bloud.

Vers. 6. BY man shall his bloud be shed. 1. Some reade in homine, and referre it to the first clause, He that sheddeth mans bloud in man, as they which are strangled, have their bloud shed as it were in them, sic Tostatus: but in this sense, one kinde of murther onely should be prohibited. 2. Some read in homine, against man: that is in despite of man, Cajetan. 3. But the best reading is per hominem, by man: and to referre it to the last clause, by man shall his bloud be shed: that is, by the Magistrate: as the Chalde interpreteth, by witnesse by the sentence of the Iudge: for it should seeme, that before the flood there was no law made, nor power given to man to punish murther: as Adam proceeded not against Cain, that killed his brother Abel, Mercer. 4. And this must be understood, not de facto, sed de jure & merito; not of the fact: for many times murtherers escape, but of the right and due desert of murtherers, that they are by Gods Law worthy of death: and many times where the law of man faileth, that such are not executed, Gods vengeance overtaketh them: such are either slaine in battell, or by the hands of other, or by some other meanes: as it is in the Psalme, men of bloud shall not live halfe their dates. Psalm. 55. 24. Calvin.

Quest. IX. That mans life should be preserved because of Gods image.

IN the image of God, &c. 1. Hence it followeth not, as Oleaster collecteth, that the image of God is in mans body, because the image in the soule cannot be by the killing of the body destroyed: for the reason concludeth well, though this image of God be not in the body, yet because the body is the Tabernacle of the soule, and beareth that, which beareth the image of God, it ought for that cause to be reverenced: and yet the image of God though not originally or principally, yet by the consequent and effects, is expressed and shineth in some sort in mans body: in that it is made upright and aspiring to celestiall things, and so sutable to the soule, and in regard that into the hand of man, God hath delivered the rule and dominion of the creatures, cap. 1. vers. 28. 2. Though the image, wherein man was created, be much decayed and impaired, yet some part thereof remaineth, for the which the life of man should be spared and preserved, Calvin. 3. And if for this reason the life of any man whatsoever should be regarded, much more the life of Christians in whom this image is renewed in Christ, Muscul.

Quest. X. Of the Raine-Bow.

Vers. 13. I Have set my bow in the cloud, &c. 1. Neither Ambrose conceit can be admitted, who understandeth not here the visible Raine-Bow in the clouds, but the invisible power of God, whereby he sometime intendeth, sometime remitteth his judgements, as a bow is bent, and unbent againe: But this collection is contrary to the text, which saith; The Bow shall be seene in the cloud, vers. 14. 2. Neither is their opinion sound, that thinke there was neither raine nor Raine-Bow before the flood: for how could the plants and fruits of the earth have beene so many yeares preserved without raine: so then the Raine-Bow was before the flood, but it beganne onely now to be a signe of this covenant betweene God and man: as the Lord chuseth sometime naturall things for signes, as Bread and Wine, and Water in the Sacraments, Mercer. 3. Neither is the opinion of some Hebrewes to be admitted, that thinke the Raine-Bow to have beene before the flood: but then it appeared in the cleare aire, now in a cloud: for the iris or Bow can have no existence or being, but in a dewing or stilling cloud, Mercer. 4. Neither is Thomas Aquinas judgement and Cajetanus sound, which thinke that the Raine-Bow is partly a naturall signe, that there shall be no flood: because the Raine-bow sheweth not, but when the clouds are thinne and dispersed, whereas thicke and blacke clouds ingender inundations: for the causes of the generall flood were not naturall, and God without the clouds, by the overflowing onely of the waters could drowne the world: and beside, if the Rain-bow were a naturall signe, then before the flood came it might have prognosticated so much: but then it should have beene a lying signe: for, notwithstanding the Raine-bowes often appearing before the deluge, (as it is like) the flood came. 5. Though the Raine-bow bee not a naturall signe, but voluntary, depending upon the will and institution of God: yet notwithstanding hath it some agreement with that which it is made a signe of; like as baptisme in the flesh hath some resemblance of the soule: so the Raine-bow is a fit and convenient signe to portend no inundation likely to follow, because it is ordinarily a signe either of faire weather, or of no long raine. And it hath beene observed, that a Raine-bow in the morning betokeneth showers, in the evening faire weather: Beside the Raine-bow is found to be wholesome to plants and herbs, that where it lighteth it giveth them a more pleasant, and a fragrant smell: as Aristotle and Plinie write, and therefore fitter in this behalfe to be a signe of grace and favour. 6. Further, their imagination is fond, that think there shall be no Raine-bow 40. yeares before the end and destruction of the world by fire: because the aire say they, must be a long time before prepared by a continuall drinesse for that combustion: As though God cannot at once make the world combustible, as the raine and flouds were gathered together speedily for the inundation: further, if there should bee no raine for fortie yeares before the end of the world, how should the fruits of the earth be preserved: great famine and miserie must needs follow in the world: whereas it seemeth at the comming of Christ, there shall be pleasant times and full of mirth, wherein they shall eat and drinke, marry, and bee given in marriage, as it was in the dayes of Noah, Matth. 24. 7. Lastly, Rupertus opinion wanteth sufficient ground, who applieth this covenant signified by the Raine-bow wholly unto Christ, and maketh it altogether mysticall: we deny not but that the Raine-bow being a signe of temporall benefit, may be a type and figure of Gods everlasting mercy in Christ, as Revel. 4.3. the throne of God is described having a Raine-bow round about it; yet it is evident, that God covenanteth here with Noah for this temporall benefit, and with all other creatures and living things, to whom the spirituall covenant in Christ appertaineth not. And whereas other mysticall significations are made of the Raine-bow; as that the two colours of water and fire in the Raine-bow, the one blew, the other red, doe betoken the baptisme of Christ by water and fire: and the two judgements of the world, the one already past by water, the other to come by fire, these applications and the like, are witty rather and pretty, then wise and pithy. 8. Further, whereas other covenants are made with condition of obedience, this covenant is absolute, that howsoever mens wickednesse may deserve other particular punishments, the Lord will not any more destroy the world with water. 9. This covenant the Prophet saith was made with an oath, Isay 54.9. and yet no oath is here expressed, because the word of God is as sure and stedfast as an oath, as the Lord is said to have swore to Abraham concerning the multiplying of his seed, Exod. 32.13. and yet no oath is mentioned, where that promise is made, Gen. 12. and 15.10. Ramban noteth, that the Bow being turned with the ends downward, and the backe to heaven, therein is a signe of mercy: for hee that shooteth arrowes, holdeth the backe of the Bow from him. 11. The Jewes when they see the Bow, goe forth and confesse their sinnes, and will not looke upon it with their eyes: such superstition we allow not: but it were meet, that the sight thereof would put us in minde of Gods great mercy in sparing the world. 12. This speech of the Lord concerning the heavenly Bow, was neither uttered to Noah alone, and by him to his children, as some thinke, or to Sem onely and Iapheth of his sonnes, but to Cham with the rest: whose sinne yet appeared not, and this being a temporall blessing, as wicked Cham was a partaker in it, so the covenant might bee made with him, seeing that therein even other creatures also are comprehended, ex Mercer.

Quest. XI. How Gods is said to remember.

Vers. 15. Then will I remember my covenant. 1. Not that God need to have any thing to put him in remembrance: but either thereby is meant, that God will never forget his covenant, in that it shall appeare by the effects, that God thinketh of his covenant to performe it: or rather it is referred to the faith of men, that they shall well perceive, that God is faithfull in his promises, Calvin: so that God is said to remember, because he maketh us to know and remember, Chrysostome. 2. Here it is called a covenant in a large sense, for properly a covenant is not without a contract, sine dato & accepto, a promise and a condition: but such a covenant is not here made, which is extended to the bruit beasts: it then here signifies, the absolute disposition and gracious purpose of God toward man and all flesh, for their preservation, Tremel.

Quest. XII. Whether Noah had more sonnes beside the three that are named.

Vers. 18. The sonnes of Noah going forth of the Arke, &c. Berosus Annianus thinketh, that Noah begat other sonnes after the flood, to the number of thirty, which were called Titanes, of their mother Titea, and that one Tuisco the father of the Germanes, was the fourth sonne of Noah, Muscul. But all these are fables. 1. Because it it like that Moses would have made some mention of those sons, at the least in generall, as of the other Patriarks before the flood, they begat sonnes and daughters, Genes. 5.2. The text saith, that of these three the whole earth was overspread, vers. 19. But if there had beene other sonnes, they also should have increased. 3. It need not be marvelled that Noah lived 350. yeares after the flood, and begat no children: for all this was the time of his old age, and Noah being 600. yeare old, was not so apt for generation.

Quest. XIII. Why mention is made of Canaan.

And Cham was the father of Canaan. 1. Mention is not made of Canaan the sonne of Cham, and the rest of Noahs sonnes children omitted, to note the intemperancie of Cham (as Chrysostome thinketh) because he begat him in the Arke: for that is not like, that Canaan was borne in the Arke: both because mention is made onely of Noah and his wife, and his sonnes, and their wives, that came out of the Arke, eight persons in all, Gen. 8. ver. 16. as also seeing Canaan was the youngest of Chams sonnes, Gen. 10.6. it would follow that the three elder sonnes, Cush, Misraim, Put, being borne before Canaan, and so before the flood, should haue entred into the Arke contrary to the Scripture, which remembreth but eight persons to have beene saved in the Arke. 1 Pet 3.20. 2. Neither as Ambrose conjectureth, is Canaan mentioned to exaggerate Chams disobedience, that having a sonne to whom he was father, did forget his dutie to his father, and therefore was justly punished with a wicked sonne. 3. But this seemeth to be the reason Moses appleth the story to his times, when as now the Israelites were going to possesse the land of Canaan, that they might know, that now was the time, when the curse of Canaan and his posteritie should take place: see Muscul.

Quest. XIV. Whether Noah was the first inventer of Wine.

Vers. 20. Noah planted a vineyard. 1. Noah is said to be a man of the earth, not because he was a great man, or lived in the field without Cities, as Ramban, but because he delighted in husbandry. 2. If it be asked whence Noah had these Vine-plants; either as Ambrose thinketh, they sprouted afresh out of the old roots, or as Tostatus, the earth might bring forth wilde Vines of it owne accord, which by Noahs husbandry are made fertile: some of the Hebrewes thinke, he might keepe them in the Arke. 3. And mention is made rather of Noahs planting of Vines, than sowing of Corne, wherein he no doubt was occupied also: not because the invention of things necessary he would leave unto God, and of things for pleasure unto man, as Ambrose supposeth (for there is no doubt, but that Wheat was in use before the flood) but for that it ministreth occasion to the story following. 4. Neither hath it any ground, that there was no use of the Vine before the flood, when as they were given to such sensuality and pleasure: but that Noah brought the grape to more perfection, (and therefore it is said he planted a Vineyard, not Vines) to make drinke thereof, which might be otherwise used before: and herein Berosus conceit is not much to be misliked, that Noah was called Ianus, because of the invention of Wine, which in Hebrew is called Iain.

Ambr. ibid.

Ianus whence derived.

Quest. XV. Of Noahs drunkennesse.

Vers. 21. HE was drunken, and uncovered, &c. 1. Though Noahs drunkennesse may have some excuse, as in that being an old man, and unaccustomed to this kinde of drinke, and being ignorant of the force and nature thereof, he was the sooner overcome, yet it can have no just defence. 2. For Noah was so oppressed and intoxicate, that he forgat himselfe, as a man for the time not regarding comelinesse: for he lay uncovered, not as Aben Ezra thinketh, by Canaans meanes, but by his owne negligence and oversight, and that in the middest of the tent, as it were in the floore and pavement: some Hebrewes say, that it was in his wives tent, to whom he went in: some thinke againe, that his wife was not living, because she would have covered his nakednesse: but these things are uncertaine, ex Mercer. 3. Wherefore the simplicity of the divine story appeareth, that concealeth not the infirmities of the most perfect men: that by such examples we should rather take heed: for if the strong may be thus overtaken, how much more circumspect ought the weaker sort to be.

Ab in experientia profecta est obviet as Noe, non ab intemperantia.

Theodor. qu. 65. in Gen.

Quest. XVI. Of Noahs nakednesse.

AND was uncovered. 1. Adam and Eve were naked and uncovered in Paradise, and were not ashamed, because as yet they felt not the rebellion of the members, a just recompence of mans rebellion and disobedience to his Creator. 2. But now man is ashamed of those parts, rather than any other: because whereas other parts, even in the heat of mans affections, a voluntate moventur, are not moved without the will of man, but as Augustine saith, Genitalia libido juri suo mancipavit, & potestati voluntatis eripuit lust hath subdued those members to it selfe, and taken them from the power of the will. 3. Hereof it is, that even the barbarous nations, that onely have nature to guide them, doe yet cover and hide their secret parts. It was therefore so much the greater shame for Noah, so reverend a Patriarke, so undecently to lie uncovered.

Lib. 14. de civit. dei. c. 17. 19.

Quest. XVII. Of Chams sonne.

Vers. 22. AND when Cham the father of Canaan saw, &c. 1. Theodoret noteth out of the opinion of a certaine Hebrew, that Canaan first saw Noah thus lying uncovered (and therefore he is named with his father) and told his father, who chideth not his sonne for it, but desireth to see the same sight also. This might be one step of Chams prophanenesse. 2. To let passe either the opinion of some Hebrewes, as Rabbi Levi reporteth, that Cham did cut off his fathers privie parts, as the Poets feigne of Saturne, or that of Berosus, that Cham being given to Magicke (who in stories is called Zoroaster) did impudently handle his fathers privities, and enchanted them, that he was ever after unapt for generation: we need not devise any such matters to exaggerate Chams disobedience: it was great enough, as it is here described. 3. These then were the degrees of Chams sinne: 1. that he doth not ignorantly, or by chance, but wittingly gaze upon his fathers secrets. 2. He doth it to his father, to one by whom he was not onely begotten, but for his sake preserved in the Arke: and being the youngest sonne, and so much the more beloved of his father, his disobedience was so much the greater, as Absaloms rebellion was against David, Muscul. 3. Himselfe not a childe, but now above an hundred yeare old, Calvin. 4. Neither is he content thus to disport himselfe, but he telleth his brethren, thinking to corrupt them also, to deride their father. 5. He rejoyceth in his fathers fall, and as Ambrose saith, improbe laetatur affectu, he wickedly pleaseth himselfe: as the ungodly doe rejoyce at the fall of the godly. Like as Vultures, ad malae olentia ferantur, as Basil saith, doe passe over sweet meadowes, and pleasant places, and light upon carrions; so the wicked delight in the beholding of things that are evill and uncomely. 6. Berosus writeth of Cham, that he was after this given over to all lewdnesse, corrupting mankinde with his evill manners: and taught them, by his owne example, approving the same, that it was lawfull, as the wicked use was before the flood, to lye with their mothers, sisters, daughters, with the male, and bruit beasts, and therefore was cast out from his father, and dwelt in Egypt, where he was made a God under the name of Saturne, and they built him a Citie called Chemmin, that is, the Citie of Cham, the Inhabitants whereof were called Chemmitae. Perer.

Quest. XVIII. How Noah knew Chams sinne.

Vers. 24. KNEW what his younger sonne, &c. 1. He neither needed any revelation to know this thing, as Elizaeus descried Gehezi his corrupt dealing: neither is it like that Sem and Iapheth did voluntarily declare their brothers fault to their father, for feare of grieving him. But it is most like, that that Noah espying his sonnes garment upon him, did question with his sonnes, and so learned the truth. Muscul. Mercer. 2. This younger sonne was not Chanaan, as Theodoret thinketh: not is hee called the younger, nor in yeares but in manners, as Ambrose: neither as Chrysostome, that he was indeed elder than Iapheth, but lost his eldership, because of his sinne, as Ruben did: neither is hee called the younger onely comparatively in regard of Sem, as Perer. neither is it like that Sem was the youngest, as some Hebrewes conjecture, but preferred before the rest, because of his holinesse, and great prerogatives, as of whom descended the Patriarkes, Kings, and Prophets: but Cham was indeed the youngest of the three, as shall bee further shewed in the explanation of the 10. chap. v. 21.

Quest. XIX. Why Canaan is accursed by name, rather than Cham.

Vers. Cursed be Canaan, &c. 1. It is not like that Canaan was yet unborne as Origen & Ambrose think, when this curse was pronounced. 2. Neither that hee was the eldest sonne of Cham, the rest of his sonnes being yet unborne: Rambam. 3. Neither is this an imprecation, but a prediction of that, which was to come. Theodoret: Calvin. 4. Canaan is accursed, not Cham, nor for that Canaan first saw his fathers wickednesse, Theodoret: nor because of Gods favour towards Cham in preserving him in the Arke, as some Jewes thinke: nor yet lest that, if Cham had beene named, his whole posterity should have beene under this curse, whereas Canaan only standeth under it. Perer. for the whole lineage of Cham stood accursed: But Chams sonne is noted, not the father, both to shew the greatnesse of his sinne, whereby the punishment was derived also to his posterity. Calvin. And to declare that Canaan, following his fathers ungodly steps (who was partaker with him deriding Noah. Mercer.) was also worthy of the same malediction Ambrose, ibid. As also Canaan is singled out from the rest of Chams sons, by the spirit of prophesie, whereby Noah foresaw the wickednes of that nation, and now the time was come, when the event was to answer the prophecy in expelling the Canonites, and making them servants to Sems posterity. Calvin. As also hereby we are given to understand, as Gregory well noteth, in that Cham sinning, Canaan is cursed, quod reproborum nequitia hic inulta proficiunt, sed in posterum feriuntur: that wicked mens sinnes goe a while unpunished, but they are afterwards shet withall.

Quest. XX. How Canaan became a servant to his brethren.

Servant of servants. 1. That his condition should be most slavish and servile, more vile than the loweſt degree of servants: which should be so much the more grievous because he is subjected to his brethren, whereas to be a servant to strangers is more willingly borne as Iosephus brethren thought great scorne, that their brother should be their Lord: Muscul. 2. We see, that as in Adam sinne brought forth death, so in Caine it is the beginning of slavish servitude: ecce fratrem eodem natum patre peccatum fecit servum: behold sinne maketh the brother borne of the same parent a servant. Chrysost. A profitable service, and subjection should otherwise have beene in the world: as when men for order sake, and their better preservation obey their mercifull and prudent rulers, that governe them as fathers. But the slavish life and service had the beginning in cursed Canaan: such as their state is, that are taken captives in battell, who being saved alive: servi fiebant a servando appellati: became servants, being so called, because they were saved: Augustine. 3. Though this curse did not presently take place, for the Cananites did hold the Israelites a while in subjection, yet at the length Gods judgements (which hee in his wisdome and secret counsell, for reasons best knowne to himselfe suspendeth) were executed to the full upon Canaans seed. Calvin.

Quest. XXI. How children are punished for their parents sinnes.

But here a great question will be moved, that seeing Canaan was accursed for his fathers sinne, how it standeth with Gods justice, to punish the children for the fathers transgression: for the better resolving of this doubt, these severall considerations are duly to be weighed.

1. The judgements of God are of two sorts, they are either executed in this life, or in the next: in this many times they which sinne escape unpunished, and they which are innocent, are temporally chastised: but in the next world, every man shall receive according to their workes.

2. Gods judgements in this life, are either in spirituall, or temporall things: in spirituall, which properly concerne the soule, none are punished for another: as the Lord saith by his Prophet Ezechiel, the sonne shall not beare the iniquity of the father, nor the father of the sonne, but the soule that sinneth shall dye. But in temporall things, as the losse of the commodities and pleasures of this world, yea of life it selfe, one may be punished for another.

Ezech. 18.

3. The judgements in temporall things are to be considered, either as chasticements and medicines, or as punishments: in the first sense they may fall upon innocents, as Daniel and Ezechiel went into captivity, being not guilty of the peoples Idolatry: but this was a medicine tending to their spirituall good: But as they are punishments, they are onely incident to those which have deserved them. So then God in his infinite wisdome doth lay temporall chasticements upon some, even for others sinnes. 1. That thereby we should be admonished both to detest sinne in our selves, and to dissuade others from it, seeing it enwrappeth many in the same judgement. 2. God can recompence abundantly the losse of temporall things, yea of life it selfe, with spirituall and eternall blessings. 3. Yet none are so pure and innocent, but must confesse, that howsoever, they are free from some great offences, yet for other sinnes, they may justly deserve punishment.

Divers Kinds judgements.

4. But this course to punish one for another, is onely to bee left unto God: Man must observe another rule, to punish him onely that sinned: as it is in the Law, the father shall not be put to death for the sonne;

God may punish one for another justly, so cannot man.

nor

nor the sonne for the father; Deut. 24. 16. though in other punishments which tend not to the death or affliction of the body, as in depriving of honours, liberty, goods, it standeth with justice, even among men, to punish the children for the fathers, and many for one, as is seene in the case of treason. 1 yet this privilege in general to punnish one for another, is peculiar to God, because he is both the Soueraigne Lord over man and all he hath, he only knoweth how to make such chastisements medicinall, and how otherwise abundantly to recompense those that are afflicted, which things are not in mans power, who therefore in inflicting of punishment must respect every mans desert.

How God doth visit the iniquity, &c. to the 3. and 4 generation.

5. Yet for the most part, they which are punished for other mens sinnes, are guilty of the same themselves: and therefore the Lord saith, he will visit the iniquitie of the fathers vpon the children, to the third and fourth generation of them that hate me, Exod. 20. 5. Where is to be considered, 1. That God alwayes thus punisheth not, but rather by this threatning terrifieth, than verifieth the same by his iudgements: Theodoret. yet sometime the Lord thus iudgeth the posterity of the wicked: as Gregory well saith, si nulla puniret, quis Deum res humanas curare crederet, sin cuncta puniret extremum iudicium unde vitaret: if God should punish no sinnes, who could thinke that God had any care of humane matters, and if hee punished all, no man would looke for the latter iudgement. 2. Herein the long sufferance of God appeareth, that hee deferreth his iudgement sometime to the third and fourth generation, to see if in the meane time the wicked parents, or their children may amend: if they doe not; then the Lord is said to visit their iniquities; that is, to remember them at the length, which he had a great while left unpunished: as the Prophet saith, Let the iniquity of his fathers come into remembrance in thy sight. 3. If in the meane time the wicked father beget a sonne, that seeth his fathers sins, &c. and repenteth, he shall not die in his fathers iniquity, Ezek. 18. 14. 17. As the sonnes of Core died not with their rebellious father, Numb. 26. 10. 4. And it is just, that God should visit to the third and fourth generation, because by the course of nature so long the father may live to see his sinne punished in his posterity, and the children so long may have the evill example of their parents in their eyes: for whose sins they are said to bee punished, though they have made them their owne by imitation, because their parents were authors, and by their example perswaders, and in their owne persons beginners of that sinne. 5. Neither for Idolatry onely is the iniquity of the parents visited in their children, as Rabbi Moses thinketh, but for other sinnes also, as here Chams prophanenesse and rebellion toward his father is punished in Canaan. 6. Neither are the children guilty of their parents sinnes only by imitation, in doing the like: but if they continue in other great sinnes, though not the same: as when the people were plagued, because David had numbred the people, though therein David was the greatest offender, yet they had deserved diversly by their other sinnes to bee punished: or if the children, though they committed not the same sinnes, yet doe wink at them, and suffer them by silence, and reprove them not, as Elie was accessary to his sonnes sinnes, because he held his peace: as Augustine well saith, quamvis bonis vita malorum displiceat, &c. although the life of the wicked displease the righteous, and therefore they are not eternally damned, tamen, quia peccatis eorum parcunt, iure eum eis temporaliter flagellantur: yet because they forbeare and spare their sinne, they are justly together with them whipped temporally. 7. Neither doth God prescribe vnto himselfe alwayes this rule, to punish but to the 3. or 4. generation: hee may extend his iudgements to the tenth, as here in the posteritie of Canaan; but yet the proportion alwayes holdeth, that he is more inclined continually to mercie, than justice Calvin.

This Canaan is accursed, not onely for his fathers sinne, but as being himselfe also which is most like accessarie to it, relating the matter to his father: and the posteritie also of Canaan, though they did beare the curse first denounced against their father, yet are worthily punished for their owne sinnes, Levit. 18. 28. for these abhominations the Lord spued out the people, that were before you.

Quest. XXII. Of the blessing of Sem.

Verse. 26. Blessed be the God of Sem. 1. It appeareth in that Sem hath the chiefe blessing, that he was the actor and perswader of that reverent and dutifull behaviour toward their father. Tremel. 2. In that Noah turneth himselfe to God, it sheweth the excellencie of grace, wherewith Sem was endued: which also is implyed in his name, which signifieth one famous or of renowne. Perer. 3. He prophesieth, that the true religion and Church should remaine in Sems posterity: that hee onely should worship the true God, which is to be blessed for ever. 4. And here also is included a prophesie of Christ to come of Sem, in whom all the nations of the world should be blessed. Oecolampad.

Quest. XXIII. How Iapheth was to dwell in Sems tents.

Vers. 27. God perswade, or enlarge Iapheth, &c. 1. This cannot be the meaning, that God should dwell in the tents of Sem, because there was his temple, and Christ also incarnate walked and dwelled amongst them: sic Theodoret. Lyran. Tostat. Mercer. and the Chalde paraphrast referreth it unto God: but the construction of the words following, let Canaan be his servant, will draw the sense to bee referred to Iapheth, not unto God. 2. Neither doth Noe speake here of the great increase and dilating of Iapheths posterity into all parts of the world. 3. nor yet of any civill society and league which should bee betweene the Gentiles of Iaphets stocke and the Jewes. 4. or that they should surprise the inhabitants of Sem, and thrust out the Jewes for all those things did equally befall the posterity of Cham: the Ægyptians were in league with them, and sometimes also surprised them. 5. But the word is rather to bee translated, perswade, as Iunius, then inlarge, with Mercer: or as Vatablus well readeth, blande reducat, God shall gently reduce Iapheth to Sems tents: which was fulfilled, not when the Gentiles became Jewes, Proselytes, as some Hebrewes, but when by the mild voyce of the Gospell the Gentiles, were called to the knowledge of God, and made one Church with the Gentiles. Rupertus here alſo hath a good conceit; that the Greekes and Latines comming of Iapheth, by thoſe two languages of Greeke and Latine, did open the Tabernacles of Sem, the Hebrew Scriptures, and made them knowne to the Gentiles.

Noah* lived 250. yeares after the floud, died but two yeares before Abraham was borne: for from the floud to the birth of Abraham, are counted not above 352. yeares. And Sem living 502. yeares after the floud, reached to the 50. yeare of Iſaack. This then is worthy to bee obſerved, that three Patriarkes for the ſpace of two thouſand yeares and more from the beginning of the world to Iſaack, might ſerve to propagate the true religion: Adam to Methuſelah who lived with him 242. yeares: Methuſelah to Sem, who lived almoſt an 100. yeares after Sem was borne: and Sem to Iſaack. 2. Although the Scripture make no mention of the reſt of Noahs acts, yet no doubt hee was occupied in doing good, and in planting religion. Beroſus writeth, that he taught the Armenians the skill of husbandry and planting of vines: he diſtinguiſhed the yeare into 12. moneths: inſtructed them in the true ſervice of God; and from thence he went to Italy, where he likewiſe taught Theology, and humane arts: who was honoured of them as a God, under the name of Sol and Celus, and there hee died. This record of Noahs acts, as it containeth nothing of any improbability (ſaving that Noah ſo godly a Patriarke would never ſuffer himſelfe to bee honoured as a god) ſo there is no neceſſity to receive or beleeve it, not being expreſſed in Scripture. 3. But whereas Methodius is made the author, that Noah ſhould have a certaine ſonne called Iovithas, that ſhould bee borne in the 100. yeare of the third Chiliad or thouſand, who inventeth Aſtronomy, and propheſied of the foure Monarchies: this is a meere fiction, for Noah lived not till the 100. yeare of the third Chiliad, but died in the ſixth yeare thereof: for to the floud are reckoned 1696. yeares and Noah lived after 350. And againe the text ſaith, that all the earth was overſpread of Noahs three ſonnes: there was no place then for a fourth. 4. Though it is moſt like that Noah was exerciſed in moſt excellent workes, yet Moſes omitteth to ſpeake of them, as alſo of the reſt godly ſucceeding fathers, becauſe he haſteth to the ſtory of faithfull Abraham, who was diverſly honoured of God: 1. in being ſelected to be the father of his people and viſible Church. 2. hee received the viſible ſigne of the covenant, circumciſion: whereby the people of God ſhould be diſtinguiſhed from all other. 3. to him were given moſt rich promiſes, both temporall for the poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan, and ſpirituall concerning the Meſſiah. 5. But whereas it pleaſed ſome of the fathers to turne this ſtory of Noahs drunkenneſſe to an allegory; reſembling the Jewes to the true vine that Noah planted, Chriſt to Noah, that was caſt into the ſleepe of death by his owne people: the Jewes deriding Chriſt infirmities and ſufferings upon the croſſe, to Cham ſcorning his fathers nakedneſſe: I hold it not ſafe wading without a bottome, and therefore I omit theſe allegoricall applications, as mens fancies, and ſo leave them.

Mercerus and Peretius are found here to bee in a great error, who affirme that Noah lived in the 58. yeare of Abrahams life, whereas he died two yeares before he was borne: and that Sem attained to the 50. yeare of Iacobs age, whereas he died ten yeares before him. lib. 14. in Gen. diſp. 5. Beroſ. Annian. lib. 3. hiſtor. ſcholaſt. lib. 1. c. 37. Abraham honoured of God. Noahs drunkenneſſe, whether to be allegorized. Auguſt. lib. 10. de civit. dei. c. 2.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Liberty granted to eat fleſh.

Verſ. 3. Every thing that moveth, ſhall bee meat for you] Here this liberty to eat fleſh is granted to all: wherefore for religion ſake (for we ſpeak not of the prohibition politicall) to forbid the eating of ſome meats, infringeth this liberty granted by the Lord. Calvin.

2. Doct. The prohibition of not eating of bloud not perpetuall.

Verſ. 4. Fleſh with the life thereof. Tertullian writeth, that in his time it was counted an heinous thing to taſte the bloud of beaſts: but we muſt know, that this prohibition was not perpetuall, but for thoſe times the better afore hand to inure them to beare the yoke of Legall ceremonies afterward to be given. The Apoſtles likewiſe willed for a time the forbearance from ſtrangled and bloud, only becauſe of offending the beleeving Jewes: but theſe ceremoniall obſervations, as touch not, taſte not, handle not, are now aboliſhed in Chriſt. Coloſſ. 2. 21.

3. Doct. The liberty of marriage generall.

Verſ. 7. Bring forth fruit and multiply. Here the liberty of marriage is granted to all: this bleſſing of increaſing and multiplying is given to all Noahs poſterity, of all ſorts and degrees, wherefore the Papall reſtraint of marriage in ſome callings and degrees, is contrary to the divine indulgence and permiſſion in this place. Oecolampad.

4. Doct. The word and Sacraments muſt be joyned together.

Verſ. 12. This ſhall bee the ſigne of my covenant. Here wee ſee the word and the ſigne or Sacrament goe together: firſt the Lord maketh a covenant, and then addeth a ſigne as a ſeale thereof, for better aſſurance. The Chalde paraphraſt interpreteth not amiſſe, this ſhall bee a ſigne betweene my word and the earth. Wherefore the edifying word muſt goe before, and the Sacraments concurre as ſeales.

5. Doct.

5. Doct. In the viſible Church hypocrites mingled with the faithfull.

Rom. 9. 2 Tim. 2. 21.

Verſ. 22. When Cham the father of Canaan. We ſee that in the viſible Church the wicked are mixed together with the faithfull: as in Adams family, there was a Caine with an Abel, ſo in Noahs houſe, there is a Cham for a Sem. So the Apoſtle ſaith, in a great houſe, there are veſſels of gold, and veſſels of ſilver, ſome of honour, ſome of diſhonour. The Church of God ſhall not be purged from all droſſe in this life, till it be made a glorious ſpouſe, without ſpot and wrinkle in the kingdome of heaven.

5. Places of Controverſie.

1. Confut. No wickednesse to eat fleſh.

Ad Ouuw. l. 15.

Verſ. 3. Every thing, that moveth. That which God permitteth, is lawfull: therefore Ovid was deceived that thus writ; heu quantum ſcelus eſt in viſcera condi, &c. it is a wicked thing in deed, with other fleſh our bellies to feed. How can that be counted a wicked thing which the Lord alloweth?

2. Confut. Of negative doctrine.

Whitak. 200 the Apolog. Epiſ. p. 112. Perer. in Gen. 9. explanat. v. 4.

2. Whereas it is a common objection of the Papiſts, that the Proteſtants doctrine and principles be altogether negative: if it were ſo (which to be otherwiſe, is otherwhere ſhewed at large) yet it might be warranted by this place: whereas Pererius, a man of their owne ſide, though more reaſonable than the reſt, confeſſeth, that there are two precepts given to man, and both negative: the one morall and perpetuall, not to ſhed mans blood, v. 5. the other ceremoniall and temporary, not to eat fleſh with the blood.

3. Confut. The covenant belongeth to infants, though preſently they want Faith.

Verſ. 12. Betweene me and every living thing, to perpetuall generation, &c. If God make a covenant, even with unreaſonable creatures, that have no underſtanding, it is no ſufficient reaſon to exclude infants from the covenant, as the Anabaptiſts doe, becauſe preſently they want faith. And ſeeing God made not this covenant only with that preſent age, but with the generations following: why ſhould not the covenant of grace be extended alſo unto infants, which are the ſucceeding generation? Calvin.

4. Confut. Noahs drunkennesse not without ſinne.

Perer. in cap. 9. Gen. 9. 21.

Verſ. 21. He was drunken and uncovered. &c. Pererius noteth here, ebrietatem Noe excuſandam eſſe ab omni peccato: that Noahs drunkennesse muſt be excuſed from all ſinne: becauſe it was involuntary and proceeded of ignorance, for he never is read to have beene drunke againe. But this is a very corrupt gloſſe: for admit that Noah was ignorantly overtaken of the force of wine (which yet is not ſufficiently proved) yet ignorance, excuſeth not ā toto, ſed a tanto, from all ſinne, but from a greater ſinne: the ſinne is not adnihilate, that is, made no ſinne, by ignorance, but onely extenuate, made a leſſe ſin: unleſſe they will in like manner excuſe the inceſt of Lot from all ſin, becauſe it was involuntary. 2. What though Noah committed not the like afterward, no more did Iudas lye any more with his daughter in law Thamar, Geneſ. 38. 26. yet that did not exempt his unchaſt action from ſinne, no more doth this Noahs intemperancy. 3. We are not afraid therefore to the glory of God, to confeſſe the infirmities of holy men, which the Scripture hath not concealed: and wee ſay with Ambroſe. Patriarchæ nos inſtruunt non ſolum docendo, ſed errando: the Patriarkes inſtruct us not only teaching; but erring.

De Abraham. lib. 1. c. 6.

5. Confut. Popiſh Biſhops not the fathers of the Church, and therefore may be diſcovered.

Verſ. 23. By the example of Sem and Iapheth covering their fathers nakednesse, Pererius againe noteth, that the like piety ſhould be ſhewed toward our ſpirituall fathers, the Biſhops of the Church, as Conſtantine ſaid, that if he ſhould find a Biſhop committing adultery, hee would rather cover that uncleane act with his cloake, than others ſhould be offended, &c.

Theodoret. lib. 1. Eccleſ. Hiſtor. c. 11.

Anſ. 1. True it is, that if thoſe popiſh Biſhops, which he ſpeaketh of, were the fathers indeed and ſhepherds of the Church, ſuch as Conſtantine meaneth, and not rather the Miniſters of Antichriſt, and devowrers of the flock, their infirmities ſhould be covered. Calvin. 2. If their ſins were but ſecret infirmities, they might be borne with for a time, but ſeeing they juſtifie open impieties, and their filthineſſe is manifeſt to all the world, now a cloake cannot hide them. Muſcul.

6. Confut. The Pope how a ſervant of ſervants.

Perer. in cap. 9. Geneſ. in hos verba.

Verſ. 25. A ſervant of ſervants, &c. This title Pererius ſaith the Popes doe uſurpe, as a ſigne of great humility: but we rather truſt, that as another Caiphas ſo the Pope propheſieth the ruine of his owne Kingdome, that he ſhall become one day, a ſervant of ſervants indeed, as Canaan was, and be made a ſervant to thoſe that have ſerved him.

Verſ

7. Confut. The tents of Sem, not of the Pope or Romaniſts, have the prehemínence.

Verſ. 27. TO dwell in the tents of Sem, &c. Thus we ſee that Sem hath the prerogative, and that the Gentiles receiued their light from the Jewes. But the Pope would draw this priuilege from the Jewes to the Romanes: that whereas the Apoſtle ſaith, that the Jewes beare the Gentiles as the roote the branches, and not they the Jewes, Rom. 11. 18. yet the Pope would haue the faith and profeſſion of the Romans to be the roote and foundation of all beleeuers.

6. Places of moral obſeruation.

1. Moral. Man muſt not rule ouer men, as beaſts.

Verſ. 2. THe feare of you ſhall be upon every beaſt. Gregory here hath a good note: that the feare of man muſt be not upon men but beaſts: That man ſhould not by crueltie or tyranny ſeeke to be feared of men. And yet good men ſometimes deſire to bee feared of others: but it is when the feare of God is not among them, that they which feare not the diuine iudgements, may bee by feare of men kept in ſome awe: and then, non tam hominib. quam brutis animalib. dominantur: they doe not rule ſo much ouer men, as bruit beaſts. lib. 21. Moral. c. 12.

2. Moral. Sobriety in meats commanded.

Verſ. 3. AS the greene herb: Although God yeeldeth to the uſe of man for his food all kinde of fowles, fiſhes, beaſts: yet hee would haue man to uſe them moderately and ſoberly, not to abuſe them to gluttony or exceſſe: or not contented with ſuch kinds, as are at hand, to ſearch the deep for fiſh, to aſcend the mountaines to catch fowle, to hunt up and downe the wilderneſſe onely to ſatisfie his greedy appetite. But he ought to uſe the fleſh of beaſts, as the greene herb, that is ſoberly, and without curioſity to take ſuch things as are at hand.

3. Moral. Gods great care in preſerving the life of man.

Verſ. 5. I Will ſurely require your blond: Where we ſee the great care, which the Lord hath in preſerving the life of man: he will require it at the hands of the beaſts, yea of a mans brother: neither ſhall he goe unpuniſhed: by this it appeareth, domeſticum & familiarem Deo hominis eſſe naturam, that mans nature is as domeſticall and familiar unto God: and that therefore God will not ſuffer him to be unpuniſhed: that offereth wrong as it were to his domeſticall and familiar: By this men are taught, both to take heed of bloudſhed, and ſo to fall into the iudgement of God: neither much to feare the ſword of the wicked, ſeeing the Lord himſelfe, will reuenge the death of the innocent. Lib. de Noe & arc. c. 26.

4. Moral. The bow a ſigne of Gods juſtice and mercy.

Verſ. 13. I Haue ſet my bow in the clouds, and it ſhall be a ſigne, &c. 1. The bow is a notable monument of Gods juſtice, to call to our minde the ſinne of the old world, for the which it was deſtroyed, that wee feare to offend God in the like: it is alſo a ſigne of Gods mercy, in forbearing to bring the like deſtruction upon the world againe: and if God ſhew ſuch mercy even to wicked men and bruit beaſts, how great are his mercies, that he layeth up in ſtore, for his elect. 2. We ſee alſo how farre the juſtice of God exceedeth his mercy, the rigour of his juſtice was but for a time, in once deſtroying the world by water, but his mercy is perpetuall in the continuall preſeruation thereof: ſo the Prophet Iſay ſaith, for a moment in mine anger, I hid my face from thee, &c. but with euerlaſting mercy haue I had compaſſion upon thee: This is unto me as the waters of Noe: Perer. Gods mercy exceedeth his juſtice. Iſay 54. 9.

5. Moral. The miraculous propagation of mankind.

Verſ. 19. OF them was the whole world over-ſpread, &c, here appeareth the wonderfull prouidence of God, that by three men the whole world was repleniſhed: when as they were ſubiect to the rage and inuaſion of beaſts, and wanted many neceſſary things, the earth having not yet recouered her former vigour and force decayed by the floud: the like matter is to be ſeene (ſaith Chryſoſtome) in the Chriſtian faith: that God, per duodecem piſcatores, illiteratos, &c. that God by twelue fiſhermen, unlearned, &c. hath ſubdued the whole world to himſelfe, and propagated the faith.

6. Moral. Noahs awaking out of drunkenneſſe, what it ſignifieth.

Verſ. 14. THen Noah awaked, &c. This were to bee wiſhed, ſaith Muſculus, that they which are the Patriarks, and take upon them to be the paſtors of the Church, were herein like unto Noah, to awake alſo from their drunkenneſſe, their ignorance, errour and ſuperſtition. As alſo all intemperate and riotous perſons are to learne by this preſident to awake from their ſinne, and not to continue in their licentious courſe, nor make a continuall trade and occupation of drunkenneſſe.

CHAP.

CHAP. X.

1. The Method and parts of the Chapter.

THis Chapter hath three parts, according to the severall generations of the three sonnes of Noah, Iapheth, Cham, Sem: by whom the world was repleniſhed: the generation of Iapheth is expreſſed, from v. 1. to v. 6. their names, v. 2, 3, 4. their habitation and place of dwelling. v. 5. the generation of Cham rehearſed, from v. 6. to 21. their ſeverall names together with their habitation: then followeth the generation of Sem, their names, from v. 22. to v. 30. their habitation, verſ. 30.

3. The explanation of doubtfull queſtions.

QVEST. I. Of the number of the heads of the Gentiles.

Verſ. 1. THeſe are the generations, &c. The fathers have curiouſly endevoured to bring the chiefe heads of the fathers of the Gentiles rehearſed in this Chapter, to the number of 72. and therefore Auguſtine following ſome Greeke tranſlations, maketh Eliſha to be the 8. ſonne of Iapheth, and ſo reckoneth 15. in all to come of Iapheth: whereas there are but onely 14. of Chams progeny, he counteth only 31. leaving out the Philiſtims: Epiphanius 32. of Sem Auguſtine reckoneth 27. Epiphanius but 25. accounting Peleg with Heber, and Iokтan, together with his poſterity. But the true reckoning is this: of Iapheth 14. of Cham beſide the Philiſtims, 31. of Sem, 26. are rehearſed, which makes in all 71. and with their three fathers, Iapheth, Cham, Sem, 74. and with the Philiſtims, 75. Iun. the Hebrewes make but 70. in all beſide the fathers, to anſwer to the 70. perſons, that deſcended into Ægypt of Iacob.

QVEST. II. Of the names of the Gentiles.

1. NEither are all the heads and fathers of the Gentiles here named, but thoſe which were the chiefe and moſt famous, and ſuch as were beſt knowne and neareſt ſituate to the Jewes; and therefore leaſt mention is made of Iapheths generation, which inhabited further off among the Gentiles, Calvin. 2. Concerning the names which the nations retained of their fathers, many are worne out by continuance of time: many changed by the Grecians, that gave them new names, as Ioſephus thinketh, many altered by warre and conqueſt, Oecolamp. yet the names were not ſo altered, but that in the time of the Prophets and long after, they were knowne, and ſo in Scripture mentioned by theſe appellations.

Ioſeph. 1. lib. Antiquit.

QVEST. III. Whether theſe heads made ſo many diſtinct nations.

FUrther, 1. Neither is it like, that theſe heads, and fathers here rehearſed made ſo many divers diſtinct languages and nations: for the Cananites, that contained eleven ſundry people, v. 16, 17. ſpake all but one language: and the text ſaith, they were divided according to their families, v. 5. that is, divers families concurred together according to their language to make one nation. Iunius. 2. Neither is it probable, that the whole world was at the firſt diſtributed among the three ſonnes of Noah by lot, as Epiphanius writeth, or as Beroſius, that Noah taking a view of the whole world ſayling by Sea, did appoint the three parts of the world, Europa to Iapheth, Affrica to Cham, Aſia to Sem: for in the ages ſucceeding: many countreyes were diſcovered, unknowne before. But it is moſt probable, that the coaſts and confines of the large and wide countreys, were inhabited by theſe fathers of the world, into the which afterward their poſterity was ſpread and diſperſed: and that Moſes eſpecially deſcribeth the habitation and dwelling of thoſe nations, which were neareſt and beſt knowne to the Iſraelites: and in proceſſe of time the three parts of the world were for the moſt part poſſeſſed, Europa by Iapheths poſteritie, Affica by Chams, Aſia by Sems: yet ſo, that in all theſe coaſts, ſome of each were intermingled: as the Medes in Aſia came of Madai of Iapheth, the Cananites in Aſia of Chus of Cham.

Now the reaſons, why mention is made of theſe generations may be theſe: 1. to ſhew the effect of that bleſſing, which the Lord gave to Noah and his ſonnes to multiply and increaſe. 2. to demonſtrate the judgement of God upon the poſterity of Cham, and his bleſſing upon Sem, according to Noahs propheſie. 3. to acquaint the Iſraelites with the nations of the Gentiles, from whom they were to expect their inheritance: 4. to open a way to the underſtanding of the Scripture, wherein the names of theſe nations doe often occurre.

Verſ. 2. Sonnes of Iapheth. Moſes beginneth with Iapheth, not as ſome thinke, from the younger proceeding to the elder, for it is evident, chap. 9. 24. that Cham was younger than Sem: neither for that Iapheth was the eldeſt, doth he name him firſt, for then Sem ſhould be the youngeſt, becauſe he is mentioned laſt: but Moſes beginneth where he ended in the former chapter at Iapheth, v. 27. that he might determine the ſtory in Sem, of whom and his poſterity the reſt of this booke entreateth: and becauſe Iapheths poſterity inhabited the countries furtheſt off, he beginneth there firſt. Mercer.

QVEST. V. What countries Iapheths ſonnes inhabited.

Verſ. 2. Gomer, Magog, Madai, Iavan, &c. Gomer inhabited the North parts in reſpect of Paleſtina toward the Weſt, Ezek. 38. 6. whom Ioſephus thinketh to be the Galatians, or Gallogrecians called Gomerites, the ſame which Herodotus nameth Cimmerii, or Cimbri, lib. 4. they inhabited the inward parts of Aſia, in Phrygia, neare to Troas. Wherefore Gomer cannot bee aſſigned to Africa, as Ieroſolymitan. Gomer.

2. Magog: ſome underſtand by Magog the Gothes, other the Sarmatians, Hieroſolymit. the Germans: but they are moſt like to bee the Scythians, Mercer. which before were called Magogei: and this may bee an evidence thereof, becauſe the Scythians waſting Aſia, called the chiefe City, Magog, afterward named Hierapolis, as witneſſeth Pliny, lib. 5. c. 23. Iunius. Magog.

3. Madai: this was the father of the Medes, who at the firſt were ſubject to the Aſſyrians and Chaldeans, 2 King. 17. 6. but afterward the Medes ſurpriſed Babylon, Iſa 13. 17. Behold I will ſtirre up the Medes againſt thee. Madai.

4. Iavan: from him came the Grecians, as Ioel. 3. 6. Ievanim, being the plurall of Iavan, is tranſlated by the Septuagint, Ἰωνων, of the Greekes: Hecataus in Strabo. lib. 9. ſaith, that the Jonians came out of Aſia into Grecia, from whence the Athenians had their beginning, which at the firſt were called Jones, and their countrey Jonia. Hieroſolymitan. ſaith, they were the Macedonians, which had the principality over Greece. Iavan.

5. Thubal: Epiphanius thinketh him to be the father and founder of the Theſſalians: ſome of the Hebrewes underſtand the Italians: others take Thubal for the countrey Iberia in Aſia, neere to Armenia, where Ptolomy placeth the towne Thabilaca: of thoſe Iberians Ioſephus meaneth that they were called Thubalæi, Thubalians, and not of the Iberians, that is, the Spanyards in Europe, as Pererius citeth him: ſic Iunius. But ſeeing in Scripture Thubal and Meſech are joyned together, which is taken for Arabia: as Ezek. 27. 13. and 32. 6. ſome thinke it more like to be a countrey neare to Arabia, Perer. they cannot bee the Spanyards, as Mercerus thinketh. Of all the reſt, I judge Ioſephus opinion to be moſt probable, as ſhall appeare in the next place. Thubal.

6. Meſech. 1. This is neither like to bee the Muſcovites, as ſome have thought, becauſe of the ſimilitude of the letters, Mercer. 2. Neither is Meſech neare Arabia, as Pererius would gather out of the Pſalme, 120. 5. Woe is me, that I am conſtrained to dwell in Meſech, and in the tents of Kedar: for although it bee agreed, that Cedar is here taken for part of Arabia, yet the other word is rather appellative, than proper in this place: and commeth of the Hebrew maſhach, which ſignifieth, to prolong: ſo the ſenſe is, why doe I ſojourne ſo long, as both Hieronie and Tremellius tranſlate: and the Chalde read, I have ſojourned, cum Aſidæis, &c. cum tabernaculis Arabiani: with men of Aſia, and in the tabernacles of the Arabians. 3. Wherefore it is moſt like, that Meſech was in Aſia neare to Tubals countrey, confining upon Armenia, rather than Arabia, and to be the countrey called Cappadocia. Ioſephus ſaith, that the Cappadocians were firſt called Meſochæi, Meſochians. Pliny nameth them Moſſyni, Epiphanius Moſſynæci: and Mela witneſſeth that there is a certaine hill in Armenia toward Cappadocia, called Moſchicus: and Ioſephus teſtifieth, that there was a certaine City in Cappadocia, called Moſecha, afterward Cæſarea: this therefore is that Meſech which is joyned ſo often in the Scripture with Thubal. Meſech.

7. Thiras. 1. which is neither the Turkes, as the Hieroſolymitan. 2. nor the Perſians, as Selomo Iarchi. 3. But as it is received of the moſt, this was the father of the Thracians, who inhabited neare unto Pontus Euxinus, not ſo called, Thraces, tanquam, truces, of their cruell and ſavage nature, as of the hardneſſe of the countrey, but of their firſt founder Thyras. Mercer. Ius. Thiras.

Quest. VI. Where the ſonnes of Gomer inhabited.

Aſhkenaz. Verſ. 3. The ſonnes of Gomer, Aſhkenaz, Riphath, Togarmah: 1. Some take Aſhkenaz for the Gothes or Scithians: Geneverſ. Ierom. 51.27. 2. Some for Germany, Ioſephus for the Rhegini, a people of Italy: ſic Mercer. 3. But it is moſt like they were a people inhabiting Aſia: as Ieroſolymitan gathereth, Ierem. 51. 27. where Aſhkenaz is numbred among the aſſiſtants of the Medes and Perſians that came againſt Babylon: And for the better evidence hereof, there is a lake in Bithynia called Aſcania: and certaine Ilands of the Sea Ægeum, are named Aſcania. Pliny alſo maketh mention of a famous mart towne in Phrygia called Aſcania: ex Iunio.

Plin. lib. 5. c. 23.

Riphath. 2. Riphath called alſo Diphath, 1 Chron. 1. 6. Epiphanius taketh them for the Caſpians, Ieroſolymitan for the Phrigians, Mercerus, for the Riphei. But it is moſt like they were the Paphlagonians, who Ioſephus ſaith were called Riphathæi, whereof alſo the mountaines Riphæi were ſo named.

Torgamah. 3. Togarma: this neither is like to be Turks, as the Jewes, nor the Germaine, as the Chalde paraphraſt, Eſech. 27. 13. for they had no traffick with Tirus, being ſo farre diſtant, nor yet Barbary, as the Jeroſolymitan. Paraphraſt: for Eſech. 38. 6. the Thogarmians are reckoned among thoſe nations that aſſiſted Gog, the Prince of Aſia againſt the Iſraelites: Ioſephus taketh Togarma for the Phrigians: but they are moſt like to be a people of Armenia the leſſe, whoſe Kings were called Tygranes, as derived from Togarmah. Iun.

Quest. VII. Of the ſonnes of Iavan.

Eliſha. Verſ. 4. The ſonnes of Iavan, Eliſha, &c. Eliſha, the Chalde Paraphraſt taketh for Italia: Eſech. 27. 7. ſome for the fortunate Iſlands: whereof the Poets tooke occaſion ſo much to celebrate the campi Elyſii, the Eliſian fields: tharg: Hieroſ. for Hellas, Græcia: Ioſephus for the Æolians famous for purple Exech. 27. 7. which is moſt probable: Iunius. Mercer.

Tarſhiſh. 2. Tarſhiſh: Ioſephus taketh it for India, that yeeldeth gold, lib. 8. antiquit. and ſo doth Hierome: the Septuagint Ezech. 23. for Tarſhiſh, reade Carthage: the Chalde paraphraſt, Ierem. 10. Africa: But Tarſhiſh is rather Cilicia, where was the City Tarſus, S. Pauls countrey, Iunius, Mercer. Act. 21. 39. And hereupon becauſe the Cilicians were chiefe Navigators and commanders of the Mediterranian ſea: all thoſe coaſts along were called Tarſhiſh.

Kittim. 3. Kittim: ſome underſtand the Italians and Romanes, as the Latine tranſlation and Chalde Paraphraſt, Numer. 24. 24. Ioſephus and Epiphanius the Cyprians, where was the Citie Citium, the towne of Zeno Citius, chiefe of the Stoikes: Mercer. But Kittim are rather the people called Citii, inhabiting in Aſia, neare to Cilicia: of whom that City in Cyprus might be ſo called.

Dodanim. 4. Dodanim or Rhodanim, 1 Chron. 1. v. 1. for the Hebrew daleth and reſh, may eaſily be miſtaken one for another: the Hieroſolymit. underſtandeth Dodana in Epirus, Mercer. ſome the countrey by Rodanus the river of Rhone. But the Rodians of the Iſle Rodes, are moſt like to take their beginning from hence, as the Septuagint interpret. Iun.

Quest. VIII. Of the Iſles of the Gentiles.

Verſ. 5. The Iſles of the Gentiles: that is all the ſea coaſts upon the Mediterranean ſea, not only the Iſlands, as Rhodes, Ciprus, but the countries bordering upon the Sea were inhabited by theſe ſonnes of Iavan: for as Hierome citeth out of Varro and others, the Grecians, repleniſhed the ſea coaſts from the mountaines Amanus and Taurus, almoſt to the Britiſh ſea: the other ſonnes of Iapheth inhabited the Aſian and Eaſt parts, as is before ſhewed: And as yet there was no diviſion of tongues, whereof Moſes entreateth: c. 11. but he here ſpeaketh thereof by way of anticipation.

Traditium. in Geneſ.

Quest. IX. Of the ſonnes of Cham.

Verſ. 6. The ſonnes of Ham were Chus: Ham or Cham with his poſterity diſperſed themſelves into the Meridoniall or Sotherne parts of the world, both in Aſia and Africa: whereupon the tents or Tabernacles of Cham, are taken for Ægypt, Pſal. 78 51. and Chemmis was the name of a great Citie in Thebais and of an Iſland: Chuſh is taken in Scripture both for Arabia in Aſia, and the great countrey Æthiopia in Africa: Geneſ. 2. 13. the land of Chuſh muſt needs bee underſtood to bee Arabia: Numb. 12. Zippora Moſes wife, is ſaid to bee Chuſitis, a Chuſite, or as other read an Æthiopian: and yet ſhee was a Madianite, which countrey bordered upon Arabia: ſo 2 Chron. 14. 9. Zerah King of Chuſh or Æthiopia, came againſt Aſia: which is not like to have beene King of the African Æthiopia, which was a great way diſtant from Paleſtina, neither was there cauſe of hoſtility or enmity betweene the Jewes and them, being ſo farre disjoyned: and the text ſaith, that Aſa purſued the Æthiopians to Gerar, and ſmote the Cities about it, which did belong (as ſhould ſeeme) to Zerah: But this Gerar was in the confines of Paleſtina, as may appeare by the peregrination of Abraham and Iſaack; Geneſ. 20. 26. But that in ſome places Chuſh is taken for the greater Æthiopia beyond Ægypt, is evident alſo in the Scripture: as 2 King. 19. 9. Tirhaka King of Æthiopia, came out againſt Senacherib, under whoſe dominion Arabia and the countries adjoyning in Aſia were: likewiſe Ierem. 13. 23. can the Æthiopian or Chuſhite change his skin? &c. Where Beroaldus opinion, that would have Arabia only taken for Chuſh upon the reaſon before alleaged, wanteth ſufficient ground: there was then two countries called Chuſh or Æthiopia, one in Aſia, the other in Africa, one in the Weſt, the other toward the Eaſt: which two countries were ſevered by the Arabian ſea. This diſtinction Pererius well noteth to have beene obſerved by forreine writers. Homer, Herodotus, Pliny.

Of Chus.

Two countries of Æthiopia.

Beroald. in ſua. Chronic.

Mizraim. Mizraim is by a generall conſent taken for Ægypt, which was ſo called of Ægyptus, brother to Danaus, who who there reigned, having expelled his brother: which happened, as Auguſtine following Euſebius ſaith, in Ioſua his time, more than 800. yeares after the floud: But according to the computation of Manethon an Ægyptian Chronographer cited by Ioſephus, lib. 1. cont. Appion: it was 390. yeares after Moſes leading of the Iſraelites out of Ægypt. [Phut, otherwiſe called Put. Iſac. 66. 19. from him came the Lybians, ſo the Septuagint tranſlate: Ezech. 30. 5. the inhabitants were firſt called Puthæi: and in Mauritania there was a river of that name called Phut: Ioſephus, lib. 1. antiquit. Plin. lib. 5. c. 1. Epiphanius taketh them to be the people called Axumitæ beyond Ægypt, among the Troglodites: from this name ſome conjecture Phaeton to be derived, which gave occaſion to the Poeticall fictions: So it is moſt like, that Phut and his poſterity inhabited the African coaſts: the people ſince were called Libians of Libya the daughter of Epaphus, and the country Africa, of Apher ſonne of Hercules the Lybian. Phut. Epiph. cont. Sethianes. Solin. c. 27.

Chanaan: the poſterity of this Canaan is exactly deſcribed, v. 15. theſe were all called by one generall name of Cananites, but diſtinguiſhed into divers other people; whoſe countrey was afterward given unto Abraham and his poſterity. Canaan.

QVEST. X. Of the Sabeans.

Verſ. 7. THe ſonne of Chuch, Saba, &c. Theſe Sabeans, were neither people of Æthiopia, as Ioſephus, not yet ſo called, ἀπὸ τῆς σιτίας, of worſhipping, becauſe the incenſe, which came from them was uſed in ſacrifices: But they inhabited Arabia Fælix: of theſe Sabeans the Prophet Iſay ſpeaketh, 45. 19. prophane authors alſo make mention of them: Pliny maketh them a people of Arabia, famous for incenſe, dwelling betweene the two Seas, the Perſian and Arabicke: Strabo ſaith alſo, Sabæi fœlicem Arabam incolunt, &c. they inhabited the fortunate or happy Arabia: and he further deſcribeth them by their rich commodities of incenſe, mirrh, cynamon, balme: wherof they have ſuch abundance, that they uſe cynamon and caſia, in ſtead of wood for the fire: they have their beds, tables, ſtooles, veſſels of ſilver, and gold, &c. Plin. lib. Strabo lib. 16.

2. Chavilah. Ioſephus, and Hierome following him to whom ſubſcribeth, Mercer. thinke this to be the Getulians in the remote parts of Africa: but it is moſt like to bee a countrey not farre from the Iſmalites and Amalekites in Aſia, confining upon the countrey Suſiana, in Perſia: for the Iſmalites dwelt from Havilah to Sur, Gen. 25. 18. and Saul ſmote Amaleck from Havilah to Sur, 1 Sam. 15. 7. yet this is another Chavilah from that mentioned, v. 29. Chavilah.

3. Sabthah: which cannot be the people Aſtabari in Æthiopia, ſo called of the river Aſtabarus, which runneth into Nilus, as Ioſephus thinketh, and Merc rus. But theſe people called of the Greekes Sabbatheni, inhabited a part of Arabia Fælix neare to the Perſian Sea: where Ptolomy placeth the City Sabathe: which ſeemeth to be the ſame that Pliny calleth Sabbatholes, which hath within the wals 60. temples. Lib. 1. antiq. Sabthah. Plin. lib. 6. c. 28.

4. Rahma, Hier. Regma: Epiphanius agreeing with Ioſephus, thinke this Regmah to bee the countrey Garaon, Garamantus, in Lybia: but by their merchandize of precious ſtones and ſpice, Ezech. 27. 22. they are rather thought to inhabite Arabia Fælix: where Ptolomy placeth the City Ragamah. Rahma.

5. Sabtheca, the founder of the people Sacalitæ, in Arabia Fælix, neare to the Perſian gulph: Iun. Sebteca.

QVEST. XI. Of Sheba and Dedan.

Verſ. 7. THe ſonnes of Raamah, Sheba, Dedan: This Sheban is another, from Saba before mentioned: the firſt being written with Shin, the other with Samech: and this Sheba differeth from that Sheba, which was of Abrahams poſterity. Geneſ. 25. 3. that Shebah inhabited Arabia deſerta: but this in Æthiopia. It was the Queene of this countrey that came to Salomon, 1 King. 10. 1. called the Queene of the South, Matth. 12. But Arabia is more Eaſt than South, from Paleſtina: the Queenes of this countrey were called by the name of Candaces, Act. 8. The Sabeans that drove away Iobs cattell, were not as Pererius thinketh, and Mercerus of this people, but of the other Shabeans of Arabia deſerta.

Dedan Ioſephus and Hierome, place the Dedanæans in Æthiopia, ſo alſo Mercerus: but that is not like becauſe they did trafficke with Tyrus, Ezek. 27. 20. which they could not conveniently doe, if they dwelt in the remote and farre diſtant country of Æthiopia. It is more probable, that they inhabited ſome part of Arabia Fælix, not farre from Idumea: as may appeare, Ierem 49. 8. where the name of Dedan are threatned to bee deſtroyed, together with Edom, as being their aſſiſtant and coadjutors in evill. But let this further bee noted, that there are two other of the ſame name. Dedan and Sheba, which came to Abraham by Ketura, Gen. 25. which inhabited Arabia deſerta. Dedan.

QVEST. XII. Of Nimrods cruelty.

Verſ. 8. ANd Chus begat Nimrod. 1. Auguſtine, as the Septuagint alſo tranſlate, thinketh he was a gyant in the ſtature of his body. 2. Hierome, that he firſt exerciſed tyranny and cruell dominion: whereas before there was no ſuch violent rule practiſed. 3. Wherein his ambition appeareth, to ſeeke to be Lord of all, Noah yet living. Calvin. 4. Ioſephus ſaith that he provoked men to pride and contempt of God, teaching men to aſcribe their happineſſe to themſelves, not unto God. 5. Hugo ſaith, he brought in Idolatry, teaching men to worſhip fire, that was ſo commodious to men, which errour the Chaldeans followed. 5. Hee is called a Hunter by a Metaphor, becauſe hee hunted men, as beaſts are chaſed, Ierem. 4 18. Auguſt. lib. 18. de civit. c. 3. Hier. in tradit. Gen. Hug. annotat. in Gen.

QVEST. XIII. How Nimrod is ſaid to be a mighty hunter before the Lord.

Verſ. 9. A Mighty hunter before the Lord.] 1. which words are neither to be ſo taken, as if it ſhould have been ſaid, that Nimrod was the mightieſt man under heaven, ſic Vatablus, and Mercerus following following Rambā. 2. Neither that Nimrod did offer in sacrifice to God, the beasts which he hunted for, Aben Ezra. 3. Nor yet that Nimrod did simulate, dissemblingly professe himselfe a worshipper of God, Cajetane. 4. Neither doth this clause onely serve to amplifie, as Psal. 104. 16. the Cedars are called the Cedars of God, that is, high trees: So Nimrod should here bee said to bee a hunter before the Lord, that is, a mighty hunter: as Ramban: for that is said before. 5. As for that fable of the Hebrewes, that Nimrod was cloathed with the same skinnes which Adam and Eve did weare, by vertue whereof both man and beast were obedient to him, we utterly reject it. 6. Neither need we to turne the word, before the Lord, against the Lord, as Augustine sheweth the use of the word לפני, which signifieth both, lib. 16. de Civit. cap. 4. 7. But the right meaning is, that even in the sight and presence of God, without all feare of God, Nimrod practised tyranny and cruelty: so that it grew unto a proverb, to resemble a cruell tyrant and oppressor to Nimrod.

Quest. XIII. Who that Nimrod was.

Histor. sebel. in Gen. 37.

Nimrod. 1. This Nimrod was neither the sonne of Ionithus, whom Noah should beget after the floud, who should for rule and dominion-sake associate himselfe to the stocke of Cham, as forged Methodius fableth: for the Scripture testifieth, that he was the sonne of Chush. 2. Neither was Nimrod the father of Iupiter Belus, the father of Ninus, as Berosus Annianus, lib. 4. antiquit. Chaldaic. who should beginne the Empire of the Babylonians, an. 130. yeare after the floud: for it is not like that Monarchie grew so soone to be so mighty, the world not yet being repleni shed. 3. Neither can he be Ninus, because he is said to build Ninive, vers. 11. as Meacator: for that City might be begunne by Nimrod, and enlarged by Ninus.

Mercator in Cronolog.

4. Neither can Mercators conjecture be sound, that Nimrod was not the immediate sonne of Chush, because he is reckoned after the Nephew of Chush: but this might be (to omit their conjecture, that he was begotten of an harlot) either because he was borne after his nephewes Sheba and Dedan: or else the Scripture speaketh of him alone, as the most eminent person, and to take occasion thereby to touch his tyranny:

Aug. lib. 19. de Civit. Dei, cap. 3.

sic Augustin. Mercer. 5. Neither is it like, that this Nimrod was Zoroaster, as Epiphanius. 6. But it is most like, that this Nimrod was the same, whom forren stories call Belus, whom they make the founder of the Babylonian Monarch: and both of them were the first inventors of Idolatry: So Iosephus saith of Nimrod: and it is evident, that many Idols names among the Gentiles in those East parts were derived from Belus: as Belial, Belzebub, Belphegor.

Quest. XIV. Of the Countries Arach.

Vers. 10. The beginning of his Kingdome was Babel, &c. 1. Babel was so called, because there the Lord confounded their languages: of balal, to confound. 2. Arach: it may bee Arecha, in the Province Susiana in Persia: but more like to be Edessa in Mesopotamia neere Euphrates, not that Edessa which was afterwards called Antioch: sic Hieroselym. Hieronym. Mercer. 3. Accad is Nisibis in that part of Mesopotamia, which is corruptly of Geographers called Acabene, for Accadene, Mercer. 4. Calne, which is not Selucia, as Hierome or Ctesiphon, as Hieroselomyt. and Mercer, but rather the famous Mart Towne Calliniſum, Iun. that it was a Towne of fame, may appeare, Amos 6. 2. goe unto Calneh, &c.

Sinhar.

5. Sinhar: this is the Countrey of Chaldæa and Mesopotamia, where is the mountaine Singaras, and the Towne Singara thereof called. Iun.

Quest. XV. Of the building of Babel.

Concerning the building of Babel. 1. Q. Curtius seemeth to ascribe it to Belus, lib. 5. 2. Others to Semiramis, Herodotus lib. 1. Diodor. lib. 2. 3. Berosus cited by Iosephus, to Nebuchadnazar: lib. 1. cont. Appion. 4. Berosus Annianus maketh all three builders of Babylon: Nimrod began the Tower, an. 131. after the floud: then Belus built the City, who reigned after Nimrod 62. yeares, and he himselfe reigned 56. yeares: then Semiramis, the wife of Ninus, which reigned 24. yeares, much enlarged and fortified the Citie. To this purpose Berosus Annianus. And after all this, when Assyrian kings had made Ninive, the Imperiall seate, so that Babylon was neglected, and much decayed, at the last Nebucadnazar, having conquered the Citie of Ninive, reedified and beautified Babylon, as it is in the 4. of Dan. But yet the beginning and foundation of Babylon was laid by Nimrod, as the Scripture here testifieth, the beginning of his Kingdome was Babel. Hereunto agree Iosephus. Orosius lib. 6. August. lib. 16. de Civit. Dei, cap. 4.

Quest. XVI. Of Assur.

Lib. 16. de Civit. Dei cap. 3.

Vers. 11. Out of that land came Assur, or he went to Assur. 1. Neither Assur is here taken for the proper name of Sems sonne, who as Augustine thinketh, first obtained the dominion of Nimrod, and then went and built other Cities, whereof the first was afterward called Ninive: the same also in the opinion of Iosephus and Mercerus, following Kimchi. For it is not like that Assur of godly Sem, was such another mighty hunter as Nimrod was: and if Assur obtained Nimrods Empire, he was the mighty hunter and not Nimrod. 2. Neither is it like as Hierom writeth, de terra illa pullulavit Assyriorum imperium, Hieron trad. in Gen.

Lib. 1. antiqu.

that the Empire of the Assyrians did spring out of Nimrods Countrey: for it is not probable that Sem and Chams stocke were so soone confederate together. 3. Neither was this Assur the sonne of Iapheth, as Aben Ezra, or the son of Nimrod, as Epiphanius. 4. Nor yet is Assur here taken for the King of Assyria: that Ninus King of Assur came out from the land of Sinhar to conquer other Countries, as Pererius seemeth to thinke: for it is not like that Moses would call Ninus by the proper name of Assur, the one comming of Cham, the other of Sem. 5. But the better reading is, that out of that land, he, that is Nimrod, or some of his posterity,

posterity, came into Assyria, Iun. so that Assur is here taken, neither for the King or Kingdome of Assyria, or for the proper name of Assur, but for the region and countrey of Assyria. This Iunius following Rambam, to whom consenteth Mercator; saving that hee erroneously thinketh, that Nimrod and Ninus the founder of Ninive, were all one. But it is more probable, that Nimrod first came into the countrey called Assyria, and began to build that City, which was afterward inlarged by Ninus, and called by his name. Mercator in Chronolog.

QVEST. XVII. Of the beginning and continuance of the Assyrian Monarchy.

BVt here occasion is offered, briefly to touch the beginning and continuance of the Assyrian Monarchy. 1. Ninus is held to have beene the first Monarch of the Assyrians, as Hierome saith, most historiographers consent therein: in the 43. yeere of his reigne Abraham was borne, 352. yeares after the floud: the last King of the Assyrians, was Sardanapalus. 2. The number of the Kings (comming between) is uncertaine: Velleius Paterculus reckoneth 33. Eusebius, 36. Orosius, 50. Diodorus, 30. onely: but the matter is not great: for few or none of all this number, were famous for their vertue or worthy acts: neither doth the knowledge thereof give any light to the divine stories. 3. Likewise authors disagree about the continuance of the Monarchy: 1. Some ascribe unto it too much, as the Ægyptians, 5000. yeares, as Alexander writeth in an epistle to Olympias, cited by Augustine. 2. Some give too small a time, as Herodotus, of 500. yeares, lib. 1. 3. But others yeeld a longer time: as Velleius a 1070. yeares, Iustinus a 1300. lib. 1. Eusebius, Cyril, Isidor, Beda, a 1240. yeares: Diodorus a 1230. which opinion is most probable: for from Abrahams birth to Manasses raine under the which the Assyrian Monarchy ceased, are counted yeares an 1310. adde hereunto 40. yeeres of Ninus raine before Abrahams birth, and they make a 1350. And if the Assyrian Empire were surprized in the 40. yeare of Manasses, as Pererius thinketh, the whole time will make a 1390. yeares. Perer. In 2. Osea. The number of the Assyrian Kings. Lib. 12. de civi. Dei. c. 10.

QVEST. XVIII. How long the City of Ninive stood.

Vers. 11. And builded Ninive, &c. Concerning the continuance also of this City of Ninive, and the finall overthrow thereof, many opinions there are. 1. It is not like, that this City was destroyed either in the 7. yeare of Ozias, as Eusebius thinketh, or in the reigne of Manasses, as Iosephus: either in the 14. yeare of his reigne: as Diodorus, or the 40. as Pererius: nor yet under Iosias, as Hierome: for in the last yeare of Iosias reigne, Pharao Necho went up against the King of Assur, 2 King. 23. 29. As yet then the Kingdome of Assur flourished and Ninive also the head City thereof. 2. Neither is it like that Ninive was surprized by Ciaxares King of Medes, after whom Astiages reigned 35. yeares; whom Cyrus succeeded, as Herodotus: for thus the destruction of Ninive should fall within the 70. yeares captivity of the Israelites. But whereas the Prophet Nahum prophesieth that Ninive should bee destroyed by the Chaldeans, Nahum. 3. 7. The opinion of the Hebrewes is most like, that Nabuchadnezer destroyed Ninive (and not the King of the Medes,) in the first yeare of his reigne, about the beginning of Iehoiakims reigne: for it is not like that the King of the Chaldeans could so prevaile and begin his Monarchy, till hee had conquered the King of Assur, and subdued the chiefe City the strength of his Kingdome; so then the Kingdome of Assyria, and state of Ninive continued almost 50. yeares beyond the 40. yeare of Manasses: that is 15. yeares more of Manasses reigne: and of 29. Iosias, and some part of Iehoiakims reigne: which make in all a 1440. yeares, or thereabout.

QVEST. XIX. Of Rehoboth, Calah, Resen.

Vers. 11. The City Rehoboth, and Calah, Resen. &c. This is a great City.] 1. Rehoboth is here the proper name of a City, not to be taken appellatively for the broad streets of Ninive, as Hierosolymit. and Hierome: for the addition of the word (City) sheweth it to bee a peculiar place so called: and therefore it is called Rehoboth of the river: Genes. 36. 37. likely to bee the City Oraba, which Ptolome placeth upon the river Tygris. 2. Calah, Epiphanius taketh for Thobel: Hierosolym. for the City Hariatha, which Ptolome calleth Artagicarta. But it was rather the chiefe City, of the countrey Calacina, or Calachena in Assyria: whereof Strabo maketh mention, as confining upon Ninive. Iun. 3. Resen, not as the 70. read Dase: some take it for the Towne Resama in Mesopotamia, some for Arsianes in the province Susiana: Epiphanius calleth it λόβον, Lobus: Hierosolym. Thelessarum: But it is most like to bee the City Bessartum in Assyria, according to Ptolome, sit Iunius. 4. Ninive was this great City (not Resen before spoken of, as Mercerus following. R. Levi:) not so great in the beginning, but at that time when Moses did thus write: the wals were in compasse 60. miles: the height of 102. feet: the breadth able to receive three carts one meeting another, it had an 150. towres, of the height of 200. feet. In this Citie, when Ionas preached, were an 120. thousand little children, which could not bee above the 5. part, so that the City may be supposed to have had no lesse than 600. thousand inhabitants: It is called a City of 3. dayes journey, that is, to walke about the compasse or circuit thereof, or as Pererius thinketh to take a view of the streets and parts thereof. Strabo prin. lib. 16. Diodorus li. 9. Strab. lib. 16. The largenes of the City Ninive.

QVEST. XX. Of the sonnes of Mizraim.

Vers. 13. Mizraim begat Ludim, &c. 1. Ludim are not the Lydians of Asia minor, but a people rather confining upon the Ægyptians, and confederate with them, as Ierem. 46. 9. the Prophet nameth the Æthiopians, Lybians, Lydians, as assistants to the Ægyptians: the Ludai then are the inhabitants of the countrey Meræotis in Ægypt; some take Ludim for Mauritania. Mercer. Hierosol. 2. The Hanamæi, Hananims, are the Pentapolites or Cyrenians in Ægypt. Hieros. or rather a people in Æthiopia: Mercer. Ludeans. Hananims.

Lehabims. 3. Lehabims, they are the Lybians in Africa, where alſo the people called before Phutei, inhabiting the Naphtahims inward parts. Hierom. in traditionibus Geneſ. 4. The Naphtahims, are certaine Æthiopians in the further Pathruſims part of Ægypt: where there was a City called Napatha: Plin. lib. 6. c. 29. 5. Pathruſims: not the Pelu-Caſlahims. ſians in the edge of Ægypt, as Hieroſol. or the inhabitants of Arabia Petrea, but the Pharuſians rather, as

The Caſlahims are the inhabitants of the countrey Caſſiotis, and the Capthorims of the region Sethroitis, about the mouth of Nilus, bordering upon Paleſtina. Iun.

Quest. XXI. Of the originall of the Philiſtims.

Verſ. 14. Out of whom came the Philiſtims. 1. Theſe are they whom the ſeptuagint call Allophyli, that is, aliens or ſtrangers, and the Latines Paleſtini, and their countrey Paleſtina, which contained five regions, according to five principall Cities, of Gaza, Aſcalon, Gath, Accaron, Azotus: all bordering upon the Mediterranean ſea. 2. Theſe Philiſtimes came of the Capthorims: for ſo are they called the

Whereas here
Reconciliation. the Philiſtims are ſaid to come from the Caſluhims; and in other places from the Capthorims: it may be explained thus, that the Capthorims came firſt up to the Caſluhims, which is in the way to Paleſtina, and joyning with them, (being yet the chiefe ringleaders themſelves) invaded the country Paleſtina: 4. Some thinke, that both the Philiſtims, and Capthorims, came of the Caſluhims, Mercer: but the better reading is to make this a parentheſis (of whom came the Philiſtims) ſo that the Capthorims, ſhall be the ſeventh ſonne of Mizraim. 5. Some Hebrewes will have the Philiſtims, and Capthorims, to come both of the Pathraſims, and Caſluhans: of whom marrying together, they ſay were the Philiſtims Giants, and the Capthorims dwarfes: But the Philiſtims are here ſaid to come of the Caſluhims. 5. This Paleſtina then was firſt inhabited by the Cananites, which were expelled by the Capthorims, Deut. 2. 23. and though afterward it was inhabited by the Philiſtims, yet it was part of the land of Canaan, and ſo of right belonged to the land of promiſe.

Quest. XXII. Of the progeny of the Cananites.

Verſ. 15. And Canaan, begat Zidon, &c. 1. He was the founder of Sidon, a City in Phænicia, called Iuſtin. lib. 18. great Sidon, Ioſu. 19. 28. becauſe it was a famous City, more ancient than Tirus, which the Zidon. Prophet nameth the daughter of Sidon. Iſay 23. 12. Iuſtinus thinketh it was ſo called of the abundance of fiſh, for in the Phænician language, a fiſherman is called Said; but it is more like that Sidon beareth the name of the founder to this day.

Cheth. 2. Cheth or Heth: from him came the Hethites, that dwelt about Hebron, as it may appeare by the cave, which Abraham bought of them: Geneſ. 23. 19. This was a warlike people, and of them were the gyants, men of great ſtature; of whom the Syrians were afraid, leſt the King of Iſrael had hired them. 2 King. 7. 6.

Iebuſi. 3. Iebuſi, the founder of the City Jebus, afterward called Jeruſalem, Ioſua 18. 28. from whence they could not be expelled till Davids time, 2 Sam. 5.

Emori. 4. Emori, father of the Amortheans, or Amorites: which inhabited about Baſhan and Gilead, whoſe king was Og: their country fell to the lot of Gad and Ruben, and the halfe tribe of Manaſſes, Num. 21. theſe Amorites were diſperſed into divers parts of the land of Canaan: and therefore the whole country, beareth their name, Geneſ. 15. 16. the wickedneſſe of the Amorites is not yet full: their ſtature of body was great: therefore compared to the Cedars: Amos 2. 9. But their wickedneſſe was greater: as the Prophet to ſet forth the ſinne of Iſrael ſaith, their father was an Amorite, &c. Ezech. 16. 3.

Girgaſhi. 5. Girghaſhi: of whom came the Gergaſenes: Matt. 8. by the lake Tiberias, where was the Towne of Ptolome, called Geraſa, of Ioſephus Ceſæra, of Pliny Gelaſa, hence ſome thinke the lake Geneſar had the name. Mercer

Hivi. 6. Hivi: of him came the Hivites: theſe dwelt under mount Hermon: Ioſua 11. 3. which is a part of mount Lebanon. Iud. 3. 3. toward the Eaſt, belonging to Trachonitis: Perer. ſome of the Hebrewes take the Hivites and Rephaim for all one: and for that cauſe Geneſ. 15. 20. where the nations of the Cananites are rehearſed, the Rephaim are named, and the Hivites omitted.

Arki. 7. Arki: who built the City Areas, over againſt Tripolis, under Lebanon, Hierom.

Sivi. 8. Sivi: of whom the deſart of Sin tooke the name. Perer. and the City Sin, not farre from Lebanon Hierom. of him came the inhabiters of Caparorſa, Hieroſal, a towne in Idumea, not farre from Jebus toward the ſouth: Ptolom.

Arvadi. 9. Arvadi: of whom came the Aradians, that inhabited the Iſland Aradus, famous for their skill in ſeafaring: Ezech. 27. v. 8.

Zemari. 10. Zemari: Hierom placeth the Semareans in Colo Syria, with their city Edeſſa: Hieroſol. taketh them for the Emiſſeni in Syria, whom Pliny calleth Hemiſeni: But it is moſt like that he was the author of thoſe that inhabited Zemaraim. Ioſua 18. 22. of whom alſo the mountaine Zemaraim was ſo called, 2 Chron. 13. 4.

Camathi. 11. Chamathi: two Cities of this name Chameth we read of in the Scripture, one in the land of Canaan, which which belonged unto the possession of Nephthaly, Iosua 19.35. called Hamoth Dor, one of the Cities of refuge, Iosua 21.32. The other was a chiefe Citie of Damascus, Ierem. 49.23. Tou the King of this Hamath, was in league with David, 1 Chron. 18.9. This Chamath the sonne of Canaan was the father of the Inhabitants of this Country, which Zeiglerus would have to be Ithurea: Iosephus, and Hierome, and Hierosol. thinke this Hamath to be Antiochia, the chiefe City of Syria, Iunius taketh it for the Province Camatha, which extendeth from Lebanon to Arabia deserta, the chiefe City whereof in time past was called Amathus.

Quest. XXIII. Of the Perizzites.

But whereas Genes. 15.20, 21. two other Nations are named which inhabited the promised land: the Canaanites and Perizzites, whereof no mention is made in this place. The reason hereof may bee, 1. either because those were of some of these kindreds: the one called Canaanites, as being the chiefe among them; the other might be the Samareans, as Pererius, or some other, so called, because they inhabited the plaine Country, in unwalled Townes, for so the word is taken, Esther 9.19. where the Iewes are called Perazim, that is, dwelling in Villages. 2. Or which is most like, as all these eleven sonnes of Canaan dwelled not in Canaan, as the Arvadians, and Camatheans: so some forrainers of other kindreds might inhabite amongst them which came not of Canaan, as the Kenites, Kenizites, Cadmonites, whose Country is promised to Abraham, Gen. 15.19. Such were the Philistims that came of the Capthorims, which expelled the Anims, Deut. 2.23. Iosua 13.3. There were also the Geshurites and Maachathites, Iosu. 13.13. Such also might these Perizzites be. 3. And beside these people of the Canaanites, the ancient Inhabitants being expelled and removed, might change their names, Mercer.

Quest. XXIV. Of the borders and bounds of Canaan.

Vers. 9. Then the border of the Canaanites, &c. 1. Moses doth carefully limit the Country of Canaan, because it was that land, which the Lord had promised to the Israelites. 2. The foure bounds of the Country of Canaan, are Zidon in the North, and Gaza on the South on the West side: and on the East side the five Cities Sodoma with the rest (Zoar is not named because it was but a small Towne and of no great account, Gen. 19.20.) in the North corner, and Lasha in the South: the same is Calirrhoe (as Hierome thinketh) where was a Bath of hot waters. 3. This is the description of the whole land of Canaan, which comprehended the seven Nations of the Canaanites, expelled by the Hebrewes. But that land of Canaan, which is described by Iosua, 13.3. was but one Country on the West, toward the Sea, a part of this great Country of Canaan, which was the land of the Philistims.

Quest. XXV. Iapheth the eldest sonne, Cham the youngest.

2. The brother of Iapheth the elder. It is rather thus to bee read, then the elder brother of Iapheth. 1. Some thinke that Sem was the youngest sonne of Noah, and Cham the next, and Iapheth eldest: as Lyranus, Tostatus, Genebrard. But the contrary is evident, Gen. 9.24. where Cham is called the younger sonne in respect of Sem and Iapheth. 2. Neither was Sem the eldest: as Augustine thinketh, lib. 16. de Civit. Dei, cap. 3. and Cajetanus, Vatablus, and some Hebrewes, as Kimhi, for Noah was five hundred yeare old, when he beganne to beget his children, Gen. 5.32. and when the floud came he was 600. yeare old, Gen. 7.6. Now two yeare after the floud, Sem at an hundred yeare old begat Arphacsad, Gen. 11.10. but then the eldest sonne of Noah must be an hundred and two yeare old: it remaineth then that Iapheth was the eldest, Sem the next, Cham the youngest, Mercer. Iunius. But Sem is named first, because of his prerogative, as Isaach before Ismael, and Iacob is set before Esau. Cajetanus to make his opinion good, is forced to say, that Sem might be an hundred and two years old when he bagat Arphacsad; and Pererius is also driven to this shift, to say that Noah might not be five hundred yeare old precisely, but five hundred and two, both which evasions, are manifestly contrary and repugnant to the text, as hath beene shewed.

Quest. XXVI. Of the sonnes of Sem.

Vers. 22. The sonnes of Sem, Elam, Ashur, &c. Elam from whence came the Elamites, or Persians: Iosephus, Hieron. as Susan (the head City of Persia) was in the Province of Elam, Dan. 8.2. 2. Ashur gave the name to Assyria. 3. Arphacsad, of whom the Chaldim, that is, the Chaldeans. Pererius derideth this derivation, and yet bringeth no other in stead thereof: hence was named the Country Arphaxitis in Assyria, Mercer. 4. Lud the founder of the Lydians in Asia minor, of the which Country rich Crœsus was King: there was another Lud, one of the sonnes of Misraim, father of the Lydians in Africa, as is shewed before, quest. 20. 5. Aram, of whom came the Aramites or Syrians, whereof it is that the Scythians after their returne out of Asia and Syria, were called Aramai, Arachites, Plin. lib. 6. cap. 17. This Country of Aram or Syria, was divided into sundry regions, as the Scriptures make mention of Aram of Damascus, 1 Chron. 18.6. of Aram Maharaim, that is of the floods, Aram Maachah, 1 Chron. 19.6. Quest. XXVII. The sonnes of Aram.

Vers. 23. The sonnes of Aram, &c. 1. Vz or Hus, the founder of the region Trachonitis, Iosephus, Hier. whose posterity inhabited the land of Vz, Iobs Country, Iob 1.1. which belonged to Idumæa, Ierem. Lament. 4.22. the Septuagint call it, Ausitis, 2. Chul: which Iosephus and Hierome take for Armenia: but it is rather the region Palmyrene, where Ptolimie placeth the Towne Cholle.

3. Gether;

Gether. 3. Gether: which Ioſephus taketh for the Bactrians, Hierome for the Carians, or Acarnanians: but it is moſt like to bee the middle part of Syria, about Caſſiotis, where Ptolome findeth the Towne Gindarus, whence are the people Gindareni, Plin. lib. 5. c. 23. which may very well be derived of Gether, by an epenthesis the interlacing of u. 4. Meſch, Hierome ſaith, they are the Moeones, Moenians: Ioſephus the Meſanci, now the Inhabitants of Paſinum in Suſianna: Iunius taketh it for that Countrey that lieth betweene Cilicia, and Meſopotamia, and that part of the hill Amanus, which they call Maſium: which may very well take beginning of Meſch. Luther thinketh that the region Maſſa in India, tooke denomination from hence.

Quest. XXVIII. Of Heber, whether the Hebrewes were named of him.

Verſ. 25. Vnto Heber were borne two ſonnes.] Hence it appeareth, that of this Heber were the Iſraelites called Hebrewes: and not as ſome thinke were they ſo called of Abrahams paſſage or comming over the River Euphrates, and dwelling on this ſide: becauſe the Hebrew gnabbar, ſignifieth a paſſage or going over. Hence alſo of this Heber, the Hebrew language is named, which continued in Hebers ſtocke, in the diviſion of languages, Mercer.

Quest. XXIX. Of Phaleg. Whether the diviſion of tongues happened in his time.

THe name of the one was Phaleg, for in his dayes was the earth divided. Phaleg, ſignifieth to divide. 1. Some thinke that this name was given to Phaleg at his birth, by way of propheſie: and that the diviſion of tongues happened in the end of Phalegs age, who lived 239. yeares, and was borne ann. 103. after the floud: ſo that this fell not out in their opinion, till 340. yeares after the floud, ſome ten yeares before Noahs death, who lived 350. yeares after the floud: of this opinion ſeemeth Hierome to be, Toſtatus, Lyranus, and divers other Hebrewes. But this is not like that the diviſions of tongues fell out ſo long after in the end of Pelegs dayes: for why ſhould it be ſaid, that in his dayes rather than of Reu, or Serug, or of the reſt, that the earth was divided? for all theſe, Reu, Serug, Nahor, Terah, were borne before Peleg died. And againe, whereas moſt of the Inhabitants of the world dwelt together before the building of the Tower of Babel, and all concurred to ſet forward that worke; it could not poſſible bee, if this happened 340. yeare after the floud, when the world muſt needs have beene exceedingly increaſed, that ſuch a multitude of people could either dwell together, or aſſemble into one place, to intend one worke.

2. Mercerus judgement is, that this diviſion of tongues fell not out either in the birth or end of Peleg, but about the hundred yeare or middle part of his age, ſome 200. yeares after the floud, becauſe of Iocktans ſonnes: And although Reu and Serug might be then borne, yet Moſes rehearſeth them not here, becauſe they were all of one family and language: But if this be admitted, the reaſon doth not appeare, why this diviſion ſhould be ſaid to be in Pelegs dayes, rather than of the other fathers, who were then alive, but were not at that time borne as Peleg was.

3. I rather approve therefore Auguſtines opinion, (to the which learned Iunius and Pererius ſubſcribe,) that this diviſion was made at the birth of Peleg, about 100. yeares after the floud: The onely doubt is, that becauſe Iocktan the younger brother of Peleg, had 13. ſonnes, which all are ſuppoſed to have beene men growne, and their languages divided at the building of the Tower of Babel, this ſhould ſeeme not to be done at the birth of Peleg. Auguſtines anſwer here is not ſufficient, that Iocktan was elder than Peleg: for if this were granted, yet Iocktan could not bee many yeares borne before Peleg, whom Heber begat at 30. yeares: but for Iocktan to have 13. ſons, men of years, when Peleg was a childe, would require the oddes at the leaſt of forty or fifty yeares. Wherefore the better anſwer is, that it is not neceſſary to thinke that all thoſe ſonnes of Iocktan ſhould have their tongues divided, but that moſt of them kept the tongue of Heber: as the eleven ſonnes of Canaan ſpake all the Canaanitiſh tongue: And hereof it is, that the poſterity of Heber, who conſented not to that wicked enterpriſe at Babel, were not puniſhed with diviſion of tongues, nor diſperſed into remote Countries, as the reſt, but dwelt all toward the East: Neither is it to be ſuppoſed that all Iocktans ſonnes were borne before the building of the Tower: ſeeing Moſes ſtayeth in Peleg: but he ſetteth downe all Iocktans ſonnes at once, that hee might proceed afterward in the righteous line without interruption.

Quest. XXX. Of the ſonnes of Iocktan.

Verſ. 26. THen Iocktan, &c. Concerning theſe thirteene ſonnes of Iocktan, Hierome confeſſeth, that he could not finde out their names; but thinketh they inhabited in the remote parts of India, and ſo were not ſo well knowne as the reſt. Iunius alſo, a moſt diligent ſearcher of Antiquities confeſſeth as much. 28. Sheba. We read of three of this name in Scripture: one Sheba came of Chus, verſ. 7. which inhabited in Æthiopia; another Sheba came of Abraham, which confined upon Perſia: ſee before, qu. 11. and Dionyſius reckoneth the Shabeans among the Perſians: the third Sheba is this of Iocktan; of whence came the Shabeans in India.

29. Havilah of Iocktan, is another beſide Havilah of Chuſh: for the Countrey was adjoyning to Meſopotamia, not farre from the Iſmaelites and Amalekites. But this Havilah of Iocktan, Ioſephus placeth in the Region of India, called Jeria, which is the East or Portugals Indies.

Quest. XXXI. Where Ophir is.

Ophar: Ioſephus taketh it to be Sophira, a Conntrey in India which yeeldeth gold, ſome take it for the Iſland Molucca: ſome for Taprobana: Toſtatus thinketh it is that Country, where the golden mines are kept by the Griphins and Lions, ſo that the acceſſe unto them is very hard. But this Countrey Mela placeth in Scythia, lib. 2. c. 1. if it be any where: for Plinie holdeth both to be fables, that of the Pegaſi, or winged horſe in Æthiopia, and this of the Griphins or winged Lions in Scythia. This Ophir is moſt like to be in the Weſt Indies, the ſame region which is called Peru, which ſeemeth to be derived of the Hebrew Pervaim, mentioned, 2 Chron. cap. 3. verſ. 6. Hence the gold of Ophir is tranſlated, aurum obrizum, by the Latine tranſlator, Iob 28. 16. not ſo called, as Plinie thinketh, quia rubet, becauſe it is of a red and fierie colour, or as Iſidore, quia obradiat, becauſe it gliſtereth: but rather it may be called obrizum, quaſi Opherizum, as Pererius conjecture th.

Quest. XXXII. Of Meſha and Sephara.

3. THeir dwelling was from Meſha, as thou goeſt to Sephar, &c. 1. Iunius taketh this Meſſa for the region under the hill Maſius; a part of the hill Amanus, which is an hill parting Syria from Cilicia and Sephara for a Towne of Meſopotamia ſituated upon Euphrates; and by the Mountaine of the Eaſt, he underſtandeth the hilly Countrey of Chaldea. 2. Hierome out of Ioſephus maketh Meſſia a Countrey in India: and Sephara a Mountaine there; where the ſonnes of Iocktan inhabited from the River Cophen, to the Countrey Jeria: and this ſeemeth the more probable, that the ſonnes of Iocktan were diſperſed into the regions further Eaſt: becauſe the Countries of Chaldea, Syria, Meſopotamia, and the reſt thereabout, were poſſeſſed by the children of Canaan, as hath beene ſhewed already. 3. Though that Sems iſſue were divided farre into the Eaſt, yet he himſelfe remained in the land of Canaan, which hee knew (as it was revealed to Abraham) ſhould be given to his poſterity. And he is Melchiſedech, that did meet Abraham, the King of Salem, Gen. 14. as ſhall be proved in that place againſt Pererius and others, that hold the contrary opinion.

Sem dwelt ſtill in the land of Canaan.

Quest. XXXIII. Cainan none of the ſonnes of Sem.

Verſ. 13. THeſe are the ſonnes of Sem. 1. Hence appeareth the errour of the Septuagint, that beſide the five ſonnes of Sem here expreſſed, adde a ſixth, one Cainan. 2. It is not to be thought, that every one of theſe families had a divers language, or made a divers Nation, as Mercerus thinketh it probable, is before ſhewed queſt. 3. but that they ſorted themſelves according to their diverſity of tongues, ſometimes divers families of one language concurring to make one Nation, ſometime one family dividing it ſelfe into divers Nations, as appeareth in the poſterity of Eber, in Abraham, of whom came the Iſmaelites, and Iſraelites, in Iſaach, of whom deſcended beſide the choſen ſeed, the Edomites of Eſau. 3. Hereof it is, as Auguſtine well conjectureth, that the iſſue of all the ſonnes of Iapheth, Cham, Sem, are not here named: for of Iapheths ſeven ſonnes, the Genealogie of two onely is rehearſed, and of two likewiſe of Sems five: not that it is likely, the other had no iſſue, but becauſe they were not the fathers and founders of Nations, as the reſt were, but were adjoyned and numbred with the reſt.

2. Doct. The antiquity of Moſes writings.

IN that Moſes rehearſeth the fathers and firſt founders of the Gentiles, by whom they were named: we ſee the antiquity of Moſes ſtory, more ancient than any forraine writer: who are not able to ſhew the derivations and beginning of the names and generations of the Nations.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Againſt the fained antiquity of the Egyptians.

THe errour of the Egyptians is diſcovered, that boaſt of their antiquity: that write in their Annales, of 330. Kings before Amaſis, and of their continuance for thirteene thouſand yeares. In the like errour is Mercator, that fetcheth the originall of the Egyptians from before the floud, even from the firſt age and beginning of the world. But they are both here confuted by Moſes, who ſheweth that Mizraim the father of the Ægyptians, came of Ham, Noahs ſonne.

2. Confut. The Scriptures not ſimply obſcure.

earth was of one language, Gen. 11. 1. hence he woud prove among other arguments, that the Scriptures are obscure. Whereunto we answer, 1. that this proveth not the Scriptures obscure; because sometime an hysteresis used: some things are set before in story, which were afterward done. This difficulty may easily be helped by the least direction and caveat to the Reader: and this kinde of preposterous speech is found in other forraine histories, which are notwithstanding read of all, and not laid aside for any obscurity herein pretended. 2. Though an obscurity be admitted herein, yet this proveth not an obscurity thorowout in the Scriptures: that because of some darke places, they should not at all be read of the simple. 3. Although there be many difficult places in Scriptures, yet are there also more plaine and easie: yea the most necessary matters, that concerne faith and manners, are plainly expressed in Scriptures: and what is obscurely handled, is found not to be so necessary to salvation: as Augustine well saith, In iis, quæ aperte in Scripturis posita sunt, inveniuntur ea omnia, quæ fidem continent moresque vivendi: in those places, which are plainly set downe in Scripture, are found all those things which concerne faith and manners.

3. Confut. The Pope Nimrod and Antichrist.

AS old Babylon was the beginning of the Kingdome of Nimrod, vers. 10. so Rome, the second or new Babylon, is the head of the Kingdome of Antichrist, the Nimrod of the world, that hunteth mens soules, as the other did tyrannize over their bodies. Muscul.

9. Places of Morall observations.

1. Moral. The wicked mixed among the righteous.

Vers. 1. WHere the sonnes of Noah are reckoned together, Cham is set in the middest between Sem and Iapheth: wherein is shadowed forth the state and condition of the Church, that Chamites, hypocrites, and ungodly persons, in the visible face of the Church, are mingled among the midst of the faithfull, Muscul.

2. Moral. The prosperity of the wicked continueth not long.

WHereas Nimrod of Chus, of Cham, beganne first to be Lord over his brethren: and Canaan with his sons inhabited the best parts of the world, it will be demanded, how that curse upon Canaan tooke place, that he should be a servant to his brethren. The answer is, that the ungodly may flourish for a time: we must doe as David did, Enter into Gods Sanctuary, and consider their end, Psal. 37. 17. for in the end, when the wickednesse of Canaan was ripe, they were cast out of that pleasant land, and made servants to Israel of Sem.

CHAP. XI.

1. The Method and contents of the Chapter.

THis Chapter hath two parts: 1. It entreateth of the attempt of the carnall and worldly sort, in building the tower of Babel: where is expressed, first their attempt, with the circumstances: 1. Who they were, vers. 1. 2. Where, vers. 2. 3. Of what matter, vers. 3. what they went about, to build a tower. 4. Wherefore, to get them a name, vers. 4. Secondly, the disappointing of this their purpose by the Lord: his consultation, vers. 6, 7. the execution, 8, 9.

2. The second part containeth a genealogie of the faithfull; first of Abrahams progenitors, from vers. 10. to 27. described every one, 1. by their names; 2. their age, both before they begat children, and afterward: 3. their issue, first of the righteous, then of other sonnes and daughters: secondly, of Abraham his birth, with his children, vers. 27. his marriage, vers. 29. his travell, departing with his father out of Chaldea.

2. The divers readings.

Queſt. I. Who and from whence, and for what they came that built Babel.

Verſ. 1. All of one ſpeech, verſ. 2. went from the Eaſt. 1. By this it is evident, that all the world at the firſt uſed but one language, which was the Hebrew tongue, preſerved ſtill in Hebers familie: but whether they uſed the ſame dialect, and ſtile of ſpeech, as Aben Ezra, and the ſame manner of pronouncing, as Cajetane thinke, is uncertaine. 2. Theſe that came into the Plaine, were not as Cajetane thinketh, ſome certaine men: or as Raſi, onely the poſterity of Sem, whom Ramban confuteth, but generally all: for the language of the whole world was confounded and changed at the building of the Tower: But Abraham could not be of this number, as Aben Ezra, being yet unborne: And whither Noah removed, it is uncertaine: but it is moſt ſure, that he joyned not with the unruly company in their proud enterpriſes. 3. They came from the Eaſt: that is that part of Armenia, where the Arke landed being afraid at the firſt, as Ioſephus conjectureth, becauſe of the late floud to leave the hilly Countrey: But by degrees they deſcended, firſt dwelling in the hils, afterward at the bottome and foot of the hils; then they ſought into the plaines: either to ſeeke more roome for their multitudes, that were increaſed, or of an ambitious minde, not contented with their lot, or for both. 4. They came into the land Sinhar, or Singar, not in Pontus, as the Hieroſolim: but in Meſopotamia where is the hill Singara: which Rupertus will have to ſignifie, excuſſio dentium; ſhoſmuting out of the teeth: becauſe their language was ſmitten, which is cauſed by the teeth: for ſo ſhingar may be derived of Shen, a tooth, and gaarah, to evacuate. 5. Neither is it like that they beganne to build Babel, as ſoone as they came into the Plaine, or that they were penned up an hundred yeares, in the hillie Countrey of Armenia: (for ſo long it was from the floud to the confuſion of the tongues,) but after they were deſcended into this plaine Countrey, then when they eſpied their time, they entred into this conſultation.

Queſt. II. Why they built of bricke.

Verſ. 3. Come let us make bricke, &c. The reaſon why they reſolved to build of bricke, was neither for the continuance, as Ioſephus thinketh: for though bricke buildings are very durable, as Plinie teſtifieth, there were to be ſeene at Babylon that had laſted 700. yeares: yet edifices of hewen ſtone are ſtronger: as it is, Iſay 9. 10. The brickes are fallen, but we will build with hewen ſtones. 2. Neither did they ſo, as ſome imagine, to provide againſt the ſecond deſtruction of the world by fire, as Noahs Arke was a refuge for the water: becauſe brickwork will endure the fire: for they were not ſo fooliſh to imagine, that the whole world could be preſerved in one Tower: and though the building might ſtand againſt the rage of fire, yet the men encloſed ſhould not be able to endure the heat. 3. But the cauſe of chuſing this matter for building was the neceſſity of the place, Mercer. where ſtone was not to be had: and yet the earth of that plaine being of a fat and ſlimie ſubſtance, was very fit to make bricke: which was the cauſe why Pharao built his Cities in the plaine Countrey of Egypt of brickes, Exod. 1. and beſide, that region afforded a kinde of naturall lime, of ſlimie nature like pitch, which iſſued forth of the River Is, in great abundance, as Herodotus ſaith, and out of a fountaine neere to Naptha, which in the Babylonian language ſignifieth liquid Pitch, or Brimſtone, Strabo. 4. This ſtuffe which they uſed for morter, was neither argilla, a kinde of Potters clay, as Vatablus, nor yet Creta chalke, as Oleaſter, or limum, a ſoft earth, as Pagnine: nor calx viva, lime, as Diodor. Tharſenſe. but as the Hebrew word chemer ſignifieth, which the Septuag. tranſlate aſphaltos; it was a reddiſh ſulphurious earth, clammie like pitch, which was in ſtead of cementum, as Hieron. or intritum. Tremell. morter: ſo that this chemer, ſlimie earth, was in ſtead of chomer, morter: by which meanes of bricke and bitumen Semiramis afterward enlarged the wals of Babylon. Perer.

QUEST. IV. Of the height of the tower of Babel.

Euseb. lib. 9. de prepar. Evangel. c. 9.

Lib. 1. Stadium containeth an 125. paces, whereof eight make a mile.

How long the tower of Babel continued Diodor. Lib. 3. c. 4. quest. 55. in Genes.

WHose top shall reach to heaven.] 1. It is not like, that as Augustine supposeth they indeed thought to build a tower so high, whose top should touch the clouds: quest. 21. in Gen. and so these words to be taken according to their literall sound. 2. And that report of Abydenus, cited by Eusebius, is to be held but a fable, that when they had builded almost up to heaven: it was tumbled downe by a mighty wind: and it is very like, that the Poets tooke occasion hereby to devise that fiction of the warre of the Giants, and their laying the great hils of Pelion, Ossa, Olympus, one upon another to climbe up to heaven. 2. Neither to answer the objection of the heathen, who tooke exception to this story, it being unpossible, though all the earth were laid for a foundation, to build up to heaven, need we with Philo, to make an allegory of the building of this Tower, who understandeth thereby their proud and high attempts against God. 3. Neither yet is it like as Berosus Annianus, that they reared this tower so high to make it equall to the mountaines: or that as Iosephus writeth, they imagined to bring it so high, and accordingly performed it, that it exceeded the mountaines in height, to be a defence from like generall floud: or that this tower was foure miles high, as Hierome saith he was enformed by some: in 14. Esai. much lesse 27. miles high, as some Hebrewes imagine. 4. But in these words there is an hyperbolicall speech (wherein more is expressed, than meant usuall, both in the Scriptures, and in forraine writers: as Deuter. 1. 28. Their Cities are walled up to heaven: their meaning then is, that they would build this tower exceeding high: And it is very like that it was of a very great and unwonted height, although no certainty thereof is extant in any writer: Herodotus speaketh of a Temple consecrate to Belus in Babylon, foure square, containing two stadia or furlongs in breadth, and a tower in the middest, being one furlong in height, and another above that, till it came to eight one above another: so that by this account, it should seeme to have beene an Italian mile in heighth: Diodor. saith, it was so high, that the Chaldeans made it a Sea marke: Plinie writeth, that it continued till his time: and Hierome, that it remained till his: and Theodoret also in his memorie. The Hebrewes thinke, that one third part of this tower sunke, another was burnt, the third part stood: but howsoever that were, it is like that some part of it remained as a perpetuall monument of their pride and follie, Mercer.

QUEST. V. What moved the Babylonians to build this tower.

4. THat we may get us a name, lest we be scattered, &c. 1. It is not like that they built this tower to keepe them from the like generall inundation: as Iosephus thinketh, for they could not be ignorant, that God had made a covenant with Noah never to destroy the world so againe. 2. Neither did they make this bricke tower, to be a defence against the rage of fire, wherewith they knew the world should be destroyed: for what was one tower to save the whole world. 3. But one cause might be of the building of this tower, the ambitious desire of dominion, as Hugo saith, Factum esse cupiditate regnandi: Nimrod so forwards this worke, that it might be the beginning and chiefe of his kingdome, Genes. 10. 10. 4. Another reason is here expressed, lest they should be dispersed, not as the Latine Interpreter, before they should be dispersed: for they knew it not: they built them a City and Tower, to maintaine society, that they might dwell together, and not be scattered here and there: and Iosephus thinketh that they did it of purpose to oppose themselves against the ordinance and commandement of God, who would have them dispersed into divers parts, that the world might be replenished. 5. As also another end of their purpose is here insinuated: to get them a name: as the Psalme saith, They thinke their houses shall endure for ever, and they call their lands by their names, Psal. 49. 11. as Absolon reared up a pillar, to keepe his name in remembrance, 2 Sam. 18. 18. and Philo saith, that these Babylonians did write their names also in this tower, to revive their memories with posterity.

QUEST. VI. Whether they sinned in building this Tower.

Tostatus paradox confuted.

HEnce appeareth Tostatus errour, that thinketh, it was not a sinne in them to build this tower to preserve their memory, because he thinketh that Noah was one of the chiefe builders: and that God hindred this worke, not because it was evill, but for that it hindred a greater good, namely, the peopling and replenishing of the world. But the contrary is evident, that they greatly sinned, in this their proud enterprise. 1. Their impiety toward God appeareth: Augustine saith, erigebant turrim contra dominum, they erected a tower in despite of God: as the Prophet Isay according to this paterne bringeth in the King of Babel vaunting himselfe. I will ascend above the height of the clouds, I will be like the most high, Isay 14. 14. 2. Their vanity appeareth that seek to be famous in earth, not by good works to be glorious in heaven. Calvin: vide radicem mali; saith Chrysostome, see the root of evill, they seeke to be famous, ab operibus non elemosynis, by buildings, not by almes: 3. Iosephus noteth, their disobedience, that knowing, as it is most like from Noah, that it was Gods ordinance, that by them the earth should be replenished, yet wilfully oppose themselves to the counsell of God: 4. Philo observeth their impudency: ô insignem impudentiam, that whereas, they should rather have covered their sinnes, they proclaime their pride, tyranny, voluptuousnesse to all posterity.

August. lib 4. de civit. Dei. c. 4.

Noah whether present.

It is uncertaine whether Noah were present: it is most like he was not, or that he consented not unto them: And it appeareth by the punishment, that God misliked their very act: for he saith, vers. 6. nothing can they now be stopped from whatsoever they have imagined: that is, they proceeded with a violent rage, that nothing could stay them, neither the feare of God, nor the expectation of his judgements: but whatsoever they had proudly devised, they will as wickedly prosecute.

QUEST.

Quest. VII. How the Lord is said to descend.

Vers. 5. But the Lord came downe to see the City, &c. God is not said to descend to see, 1. as though any thing hindred his sight in heaven: for all things are naked and open to his eyes. Hebr. 4.13. 2. Neither as though God went from place to place, or were absent any where: for the Lord filleth heaven and earth: heaven is my throne, earth is my footstoole, &c. what place is it that I should rest in? Act. 7. 49.

But the Lord is said to descend to see, &c. 1. In respect of the new effect, in manifesting his judgement; re ipsa patefecit: he shewed indeed, that hee was not ignorant what hee did. Augustine, Calvin. 2. Or for that he caused his Angels to descend, and so is said to descend in his Ministers. Augustine. 3. Or as Cajetane, quia extendit se cura & providentia usque ad infima: because God extendeth his care even unto the lowest things in the world: as it is in the Psalme; Who is like unto the Lord, &c. who abaseth himselfe to behold things in the heaven and earth? Psal. 112. 5. 4. God hereby also sheweth his patience, non ab initio illorum repressit insaniam, &c. he did not at the first represse their madnesse, but used lenity towards them. 5. Vult nos admoneri, ne fratres temere condemnemus, &c. God would have us taught hereby, not rashly to condemne our brethren. Chrysost. God therefore giveth a rule to man, first to examine a cause before they judge, as the Lord first seeth and knoweth before he punisheth. Muscul. 6. And by descending, here is understood the punishment which followed: as if God should have said, Non amplius dissimulemus eorum scelera, sed quam primum ea puniamus: Let us no longer winke at their sinnes, but presently punish them, Rabbi Moses: Ægyptius. Basil maketh this distinction, that God de cœlo aspicit, is said from heaven to behold the righteous: but descendendo dicitur invisere deus, &c. God is said to descend to visit the ungodly: but this distinction alwayes holdeth not; for both the Lord is said to looke downe from heaven upon the wicked. Psal. 141. and the Lord is said to descend for the deliverance of his people. Exod. 3. 8.

Deitivit. Dei. lib. 16. cap. 5.

Basil. in Psal. 32. descending taken not alwaies in evill part.

Quest. VIII. To whom God spake, saying, come let us goe downe.

Vers. 7. Come let us goe downe, &c. 1. The Lord speaketh not here to the Angels, as August. Gregory, Philo, Cajetane, with others; or to the persons of the Trinity and Angels together, Mercer. 2. But this is the consultation of the whole Trinity, as v. 8. it is said, Iehovah scattered them. This speech is answerable to that, Gen. 1. in the creation of man: Come let us make man: and those to whom God speaketh here, hee maketh as equall in the same degree, Come let us goe downe: sic Raban. Rupert. Calvin. 3. God indeed sometime useth the ministery of Angels, not that he needeth their helpe; but as Philo saith, videt quid se, quid creaturas deceat, God seeth what is meet for himselfe, what for the creatures: for God is more honoured in such Ministers, and mens infirmity thereby helped. But at this time, and in this case, God needed not the ministery of Angels: this confusion of tongues was his immediate worke, as was the gift of tongues, Acts 1. 4. Wherefore to dispute there, how God speaketh to Angels and invisible spirits, is superfluous, which may notwithstanding bee done two wayes: either, as Augustine saith, veritas incommutabilis per seipsam ineffabiliter loquitur: the unchangeable verity speaketh by it selfe after an ineffable manner, Gregory sheweth another way, Quicquid agere debent in ipsa contemplatione veritatis legunt, &c. They do as it were read in the contemplation of the verity, what they should doe. The Angels are either inspired by God to know his wil, or they behold in God, as the Schoolemen say, as in a glasse, what is to be done. But the first is the way, whereby God speaketh to Angels, the other is but a speculatiō of man.

Quest. IX. Whose language was confounded.

Vers. 7. And confound their language, &c. 1. Pride bringeth confusion of tongues, humility as in the Apostles obtained uniting of tongues, Act. 2. Greg. 2. It appeareth how hurtfull the conspiracy of the wicked is, for if now in the beginning, they abused the uniting of their tongues to so great madnesse, how outragious is it like they would have beene afterward, when their multitudes had beene more increased. Chrysost. 3. Not every mans language was confounded, for then all society would have beene taken away even in families, but the speech of certaine kindreds and companies was changed.

Greg. hom. 30. in Evangel. Hom. 30. in Genes.

Quest. X. What caused them to leave off building.

Vers. 8. They left off building, &c. 1. The confusion then of tongues made them leave off building, not any great wind or tempest that tumbled downe their worke, as Sybilla and Abidenus in Eusebius, neither were the tongues confounded by little and little, as Aben Ezra, but all at once. Mercer. 2. The building of the City was intermitted for an hundred yeares, untill Semiramis: but the Tower of Babel was not heightened, but only enclosed in the Temple of Belus, which continued till Herodotus time, an 1400. yeares. Perer.

Euseb. lib. 9. de prepar. Evangel. c. ult.

Quest. XI. Of the name of Babel.

Vers. 9. The name was called Babel. 1. It was not so called of Belus, as some have imagined, but of confusion, for so Balal signifieth. 2. Neither was it ever called σύγχυσις, which betokeneth confusion in the greeke tongue, as the Septuagint, but after the Hebrew. 3. So God disappointed them of their purpose, that where they looked to gaine credit, they found shame and confusion: vide quæ res fiant, &c. behold how many things were done, saith Chrysostome, to keepe a memory of this fact: for Phaleg had his name of this division: Babel of the confusion of tongues: and of Heber, in whom the holy tongue remained unchanged, that language tooke the name: sic Chrysost. Perer.

Hom. 30. in Gen.

Quest. XII. Why God ſaw it good to diſperſe the people.

FRom thence the Lord did ſcatter them, &c. 1. They were not then ſcattered before, as ſome thinke, but now upon this occaſion they began to be divided into all quarters. 2. Though this diviſion of tongues were impoſed upon them as a judgement: yet God turneth it to the benefit of the world, in diſperſing them, which was many wayes profitable: both becauſe, if they had continued in one place, many goodly Countries in the world ſhould have lyen deſart, waſte, and untilled. As alſo ſufficient food could not have beene provided in one place, for ſuch a multitude. And further, if they had continued together, they might have beene in greater hazard by warre or peſtilence: as alſo wicked people inhabiting together, would have beene more ſtronge to doe miſchiefe.

Quest. XIII. That the Hebrew tongue was the common language of all the world.

Lib. 16. de Civit. Dei. 11. & 18. 39.

NOw if any be deſirous to know what language this was, which before this confuſion of tongues was uſed through the world: it is agreed by the moſt learned interpreters, that it was the Hebrew. 1. Auguſtines reaſon is, Quoniam in familia Heber communis omnium lingua remanſit, becauſe the Hebrew tongue is ſo called of Heber, in whoſe family that which was the common tongue before remained: that tongue which Heber uſed before the diviſion of tongues, was the common ſpeech, but that was the Hebrew. 2. Hieromes reaſon to prove the Hebrew to bee matricem, the mother of all other languages; is becauſe every tongue hath borrowed ſome words of the Hebrew, as the Greeke φορεῖον, which is the ſame in Hebrew pherion. Cantic. 3. 9. a bed or beare: ſo the Latine hath borrowed the word nugas, which is in Hebrew nuge. Sophon. 3. 18. where Hierome in his tranſlation keepeth the ſame word: ſo ſaccus, a ſacke, is In 3. cap. Sophon. In cap. 7. Iſaia.

Oleaſter noteth, commeth of the Hebrew. Hierom likewiſe ſheweth, that gualmah ſignifieth a Virgin both in the Hebrew and Punicke language, from whence the Latine alma ſeemeth to be derived: Many words alſo are uſed in our Engliſh tongue, derived from the Hebrew, as fag which is a figge. The Grecians further ſeeme to have derived the word ὑδρὰ, hedone, pleaſure, from Heden the place where Paradiſe was: the Latines call Whales thynnos, of the Hebrew tavaim: the Italians call a thing that is light and vaine, Bay, of the Hebrew Bohu: the French of Gallia Narbonenſ. call a ſpecies or kinde, meane, of the Hebrew min. 3. Toſtatus reaſon is, becauſe theſe names, which were firſt given, as of Adam, Eve, Cain, Seth, are Hebrew words, as may appeare by their ſeverall derivations in that tongue: as the firſt ſo called of the red earth, the ſecond becauſe ſhe was mother of all living, the third a poſſeſſion, the fourth becauſe he was put in Abels place. 4. Cajetanus proveth the ſame by the word Jehova, which is an Hebrew word, uſed before the floud, and the name Babel given unto the tower in this place. 5. Oleaſter bringeth theſe reaſons: that it is moſt like, that the common language remained there, where the firſt diviſion of tongues was made, namely in Babylon, the Chalde therefore and Hebrew, betweene the which there is great affinity, are moſt like to be the moſt ancient: as alſo for that this was the language of the Eaſt: from whence they came which builded Babel.

Other tongues borrow of the Hebrew.

It appeareth then, that Philo is in an error, that thinketh the Chalde tongue to be the moſt ancient: true it is, that Nahor, Thare, Abraham, dwelt in Chaldea, but yet they ſpake the Hebrew tongue, and ſo in that reſpect it may be called the Chaldean tongue, becauſe ſome Chaldeans uſed that language: likewiſe the Syriake tongue, which the Jewes uſed in our Saviour Chriſts time, might bee called the Hebrew language, becauſe the Hebrewes uſed it, Mercer.

Quest. XIV. Whether the Hebrew or Syriake be moſt ancient.

Theodorets opinion examined.

HEnce alſo it is evident, that Theodoret was much deceived. 1. He thinketh that the Syriacke tongue was the moſt ancient, becauſe thoſe names, Adam, Cain, Abel, are Syriacke names. Anſw. The Syriake or Chaldaike, and Arabike language, were derived as Rivers out of the fountaine of the Hebrew: and therefore it is no ſtrange thing, if ſome Hebrew words are retained in thoſe languages. 2. He thinketh that the Hebrew ſpeech was not ſo called of Heber, for then all the poſterity of Heber, as the Syrians, Idumeans, Iſmaelites, Ammonites, ſhould alſo ſpeake that language. Anſ. Auguſtine giveth the reaſon hereof: that they were called Hebrewes only among whom & lingua prior & pietas conſervaretur, where both the ancient tongue, and religion were preſerved: although Heber was the father of many nations beſide, yet they beare his name, that did heire his faith. 3. Theodoret thinketh, that the Hebrew tongue was brought in by Moſes, and was not the naturall ſpeech of the Iſraelites, but ſuch as they learned: for the Jewes at this day naturally ſpeake the language of the Countrey, where they are borne: they doe learne the Hebrew by teaching. Anſw. 1. It is evident by thoſe ancient Hebrew names of Adam, Cain, Abel, that the Hebrew tongue was uſed before Moſes time. 2. While the Hebrewes lived in their owne nation and common-wealth, they naturally from their mothers breaſts ſpeake that language, but now being diſperſed into divers nations, not converſing together, they are forced to uſe that Countrey ſpeech where they dwell. 3. Auguſtine thinketh, that not onely the Hebrew tongue, but the Hebrew letters were uſed and well knowne before Moſes: and he doth gather it from that place, Deut. 31. 28. where the Septuagint tranſlate the word, ſhoterim grammaton Iſagogis, the teachers, inſtructers, or beginners in letters. But it is very like, howſoever this place giveth no ſtrength to it, in that the people were commanded to write the Law upon the poſts of their gates, that the Hebrew letters were then very well knowne, not as newly taken up, but uſed of long time.

Whether Moſes brought in the Hebrew tongue and letters. Auguſt. lib. 18. de Civit. Dei, c. 18.

Quest. XV. Of the number of languages.

COncerning the number of the tongues and languages, which were divided in the building of the tower of Babel: the common and received opinion is, of Epiphanius, Hierome, Augustine, that they were 72. according to the number of the families rehearsed, chap. 10. Arnobius goeth further, and distinctly sheweth, how many nations and languages came of Sem, Cham, and Iapheth: upon these words, Psal. 105. 8. he hath remembred his promise, that he made to a thousand generations: hee sheweth that there are in the world a thousand generations, and 72. languages; from Persia to the Indians and Bactrians of Sem, he maketh 27. languages and 406. nations: from Euphrates and Nilus, to the Gades, of Cham, 394. nations, 22. languages from Tigris west ward of Iapheth, were multiplied 200. nations, and 23. tongues. Ex Peter. But this is set downe onely by meere gesse and conjecture, that there should be divided 72. languages: for there are but 70. fathers named: 14. of Iapheth, 31. of Cham: 25. of Sem, for Heber and Peleg must be counted for one familie: & whereas tenne of the sonns of Noahs sonnes, are set forth with their issue and posteritie, two of Iapheth, sower of Cham, sower of Sem: they make not severall nations, without their sonnes, no more than Noahs three sonnes: and therefore tenne more must be detracted from the number of 70. and so there will remaine but 60. As Canaan must not be reckoned for a severall nation, beside those that came of him: and so of the rest. And if those whose generations are not expressed, whereof there are 11. five of Iapheth two of Cham, sower of Sem, did not make severall nations, as Augustine thinketh, but were incorporate to the rest, then so many more are wanting of this number, and there will remaine but 50. But admit that this last conjecture of Augustine be uncertaine, yet it is most probable that all the Cananites of Canaan, of whom came an eleven severall nations, as they are rehearsed Gen. 10. 15. spake but one language: Isa. 19. 18. they shall speake the language of Canaan: which if it be so, then could there not be 72. languages divided, in the confusion of Babel.

Epiphan. Panar. Hier. in 28. Mar. August. lib. 16. de civi. Dei. c. 3.

Whether 72. languages then tooke beginning.

Wherefore, concerning this matter, there are some things certaine, some things uncertaine: first it is certaine, that the tongues and languages were divided; then, that every particular person had not a severall language; for then there could have beene no society: but that the principall and chiefe families onely had their proper speech. Secondly, as uncertaine it is, 1. whither 72. languages, or more or lesse, tooke then beginning. 2. whether some of those nations are not now utterly perished: as Pliny out of Eratosthenes alleageth, that divers people in Asia, as of the Solymans, Lelegians, Bebrycians, Calycantrians, are extinguished. 3. Neither is it certaine whether every particular language now used, was then founded: or only the mother & originall tongues, out of the which other since have bin derived, which is most like. Mercer.

Quest. XVI. Where Cainan first added to the genealogie reconciled.

Vers. 12. THe Septuagint betweene Arphaesad, and Sale, place Cainan, and so doth S. Luke in his Gospell, ca. 3. according to most copies, but Cainan is not found in the Hebrew: to reconcile this doubt: 1. We neither allow Cajetanes solution, that the septuagint have set downe the true genealogie, and that the Hebrew copies are imperfect, and have beene corrupted by the Jewes: for the Jewes had no reason to corrupt the genealogie, which giveth the Christians no advantage, neither maketh against them: and beside the Chalde Paraphrast, which is most ancient, leaveth out Cainan. 2. Neither is it like as Eugubinus saith, that the Septuagint erred herein, and that S. Luke followeth their error: for although an error may be admitted in the Septuagint, in this place, as in many other: yet the holy Evangelist was farre from approving their error, being directed by the spirit of God. 3. Neither doth the answer of Ioannes Lucidus, and before him, Nauclerus satisfie; that Cainan and Sale were one and the same; and that the place in Luke should be read; which was of Sala, which was of Cainan, Luke 3. 36. But this cannot be; for beside that, that there was no cause why Luke should set down e two names, only of Sala, and of none of the rest beside; in the Septuagint, Cainan is made the father and begetter of Sala. Genes. 11. 4. Lippoman, and Canus answere, that as Matthewe omitteth three of the kings in his genealogie, betweene Ioram and Ozias, to make the line of 14. generations equall from Abraham to David, from David to the captivitie, and from thence to Christ, so Moses, to make tenne generations from Sem to Abraham, correspondent, to the ten patriarkes before the floud, might omit Cainan.

The place, Luke 3. 93.

Caten. in 11. Gen. Can. lib 2 de loc. Theolog. c. 18

But the reason is not alike. 1. For those three Kings, Ahaziah, Ioas, Amaziah, are thought by some to to bee omitted for another cause, because they were killed for evill government. Concent. 2. And againe Moses summeth the yeeres of these Fathers, which Matthewe doth not, and therefore if Moses should of purpose leave out Cainan, a great error would fall out in the Chronologie and computation of yeares. 3. If Moses had left out Cainan to make the genealogie equall: yet if there had beene any such: hee should not have beene omitted in that catalogie of their names. 1 Chro. 1. 18. where was no such cause of omission.

Ianſen. in c. 14. Canis. Evang. Genebrard in Chron.

5. Some thinke that the Septuagint erred in adding of Cainan, and that Luke followed that text, not approoving that error, but giving way to the time, because the Septuagint was then well knowne among the Gentiles: least if he had departed from that translation, it might have hindred the credit of his Gospell. Thus Iansenius and Genebrard among the pontificall writers: and learned Iunius, among the Protestants; who saith, that it was not μνημονικὸν ἁμάρτημα, but σφαλερὸν ἀναμάρτητον, a slip or fault of memory, but a faultlesse confession in respect of the time: so also Mercerus, who thinketh that this being but a matter of genealogie, is not much to be stood vpon, which Paul calleth ἀπεράντους, endlesse, 1. Tim. 1. 4.

6. But I approove rather Beza his answere, that Cainan was put into the text in Luke, by the ignorance of ſome that tooke upon them to correct it according to the Septuagint: for in that ancient manuſcript which he followed, Cainan was not to be found: and therefore Beza in his tranſlation upon good ground left it out, and ſo doth the great Engliſh Bible.

Beroaldus. Ioſeph. lib. 1. antiquit. Epiphan. 55. hæreſ.

Other thinke further, that the tranſlation of the ſeptuagint was alſo herein corrupted by ſome: that at the firſt theſe Greeke interpreters put not in Cainan; for neither Ioſephus, nor Epiphanius which follow the ſeptuagint, rehearſing the fathers before Abraham, make mention of this Cainan: and in the beſt Greeke copies, it is left out. 1 Chronic. 1.

QVEST. XVII. When Arphaxad was borne.

Verſ. 10. BEgat Arphachſad two yeare after the floud: the queſtion is, whereas Elam and Aſſhur; the ſonnes of Sem are named before Arphacſad the third ſonne, how Sem could have theſe three in two yeares; I anſwer, 1. Neither with Aben Ezra, that Sems wife might bee with childe in the Arke, when the waters began to decreaſe; for I thinke rather, that was a time of abſtinency. 2. Neither, as ſome that for the more ſpeedy increaſe of the world, children were borne in a ſhorter time, as at 7. moneths: 3. Nor yet that Elam and Aſſur might bee twins, both borne at a birth. 4. But I rather thinke that Arphacſad might be either the eldeſt of all, or the ſecond of Sems ſonnes; for the ſcripture obſerveth not the order of time in ſetting downe names, as we ſaw before in rehearſing of Sem, Ham, and Iapheth.

QVEST. XVIII. Why it is here omitted in the genealog. of theſe fathers. and he died.

FVrther, whereas in the Patriarkes lives before the floud, it is added, and hee died, which is omitted here; 1. Some thinke it is, to ſhew that Henoch died not a common death as the reſt did. 2. Some to ſignifie, that none of them periſhed in the floud. 3. Some yet are more curious, as Bahai, who thinketh, this clauſe, and he died, to bee here omitted, becauſe Meſſiah was to come of this line: whom they hold to be immortall: and further he preſcribeth Meſſiah his age, that hee ſhould live 837. yeares before the end of the ſixt millenary or thouſand yeare: which hee would gather by the letters of the word Lemarbaty uſed by the Prophet Iſay 9. 7. which is, of the increaſe of his government, there ſhall bee no end: where the firſt letter, lamed ſignifieth 30. men, 600. reſh, 200. beth 2. he, 5. which maketh together 837. But it is evident to all the world how they are deceived: for the ſix thouſand yeare is expired within leſſe than 400. yeares, and yet their ſuppoſed Meſſiah commeth not: and againe Meſſiah came as well of the line of the fathers before the floud, as of them after the floud. 4. Wherefore this is more like to bee the reaſon: becauſe then after Adams tranſgreſſion, Moſes would ſhew how the curſe tooke place: thou ſhalt dye the death, in thoſe long lived patriarkes: that although they lived divers hundred yeares, yet in the end they dyed. Mercerus.

The Rabbines conceit of the Meſſiah.

QVEST. XIX. At what age of Terah Abraham was borne.

Verſ. 26. TErah lived 70. yeares and begat Abraham, &c. Terah lived 205. yeares, and died in Charran, at what time Abraham was 75. yeares old: Geneſ. 12. 5. Abraham then was borne when his father was an 130. yeare old, not in his 70. yeare: for the reconciliation then of theſe places. 1. We need not with Hierome, that followeth therein the Hebrewes, to ſay, that Abrahams age of 75. yeares is not counced from his birth, but from his departure from Vr. of the Chaldes, and his miraculous deliverance out of the fire wherein they caſt him, becauſe he would not worſhip their Idols: for beſide that, this tradition of Abrahams deliverance hath no ſufficient ground to warrant it; a great inconvenience will follow it, if it bee admitted that Abraham was an 130. yeare old at this time, when he is ſaid to bee but 75. which muſt of neceſſitie followe, if Abraham were borne in the 70. yeare of Therah: then it would follow: that Iſaack borne when Abraham was an 100. yeare old, was borne 30. yeare before hee came into the land of Canaan, which is contrarie to the Scripture, or if they will count thoſe hundred yeares alſo from Abrahams departure out of Chaldea: and that he was indeed an 160. yeares old, when Iſaack was borne, and Iſaack was 40. yeare old, his father yet living, when he tooke Rebeccah to wife, Geneſ. 25. 20. Abraham ſhould have lived above 200. yeares, whereas the Scripture ſaith, he lived but an 175. Geneſ. 25. 7.

Hier. tradit. in Geneſ.

2 Neither is it a ſufficent anſwer that Abraham went out of Charran at 75. yeares of his age, long before his fathers death, and that Moſes doth recapitulate the ſtory afterward as Aben Ezra, for Steven ſaith, that God brought him out after his father was dead, Act. 7. 4. And to ſay his father was ſpiritually dead, not naturally becauſe he ſtaied ſtill, and refuſed to goe into Canaan, living in idolatrie (which is the deviſe of one Andreas Maſius, cited by Pererius) is a forcing of Stephens words, which in an hiſtoricall narration muſt be taken properly.

3. And with Auguſtine to make two departures of Abraham into the land of Canaan: the one when Terah was yet living, being an 105. yeare old, and Abraham 75. ſojourning there 60. yeares, while his father lived in Charran, and another after Therahs death, whome Abraham might viſite before, going and comming into Canaan: but now he came from thence, his father being dead, and returned no more; that is the firſt departure, his bodie remooved, but his affection was toward that place where his father was, but now his affection and all was removed: This imagination of two departures into Canaan, diſſenteth from Stephens narration: Act. 7. where indeed he ſpeaketh of two journeyes of Abraham, one out of Meſopotamia, the other out of Charan: But into Canaan the Lord brought him after his father was dead, v. 4. and not before.

Queſt. 25. in Gen. lib. 16. & de civit. Dei. c. 15.

4. That alſo is a meere fancy, that the reſt of Abrahams age is concealed, who ſhould be an 130. when he hee is said to be but 75. to this intent, because God would keepe secret the end of the world: Calvin. for this would nothing have helped to the knowledge of that secret: the account of yeares past will not tell us what yeares are to come, and our Saviour saith, the Angels know not of that day, and yet they knew very well the age of Abraham.

5. Wherefore the best solution is, that Abraham though he be named first, because of the privilege and preeminencie of his faith, yet was not the first borne; Terah at 70. yeares began to haye sonnes, but Abraham was not borne till the 130. yeare of his fathers age: for he was but 75. at his fathers death, who was then 205. So Noah is said to be 500. yeare old when he begat Sem, Cham, and Iapheth: yet was not Sem borne till two yeares after. Gen. 11. 10. beside, Sarah is held to have beene Abrahams brothers daughter: Abraham then could not be the eldest brother, for Sara was but 10. yeares younger than Abraham. Gen. 17. 17. Iun.

Abraham was borne when Terah was an 130. yeare old.

Quest. XX. Sarai not sister but neece to Abraham.

Vers. 29. The father of Milcha, and of Iscah, &c. 1. Some thinke that this Iscah was not Sarai Abrahams wife, but that shee was rather the daughter of Thare, and Abrahams owne sister by the fathers side, than the daughter of his brother Aran: and that it was lawfull then for the halfe brother by the fathers side to marrie his sister, sic Clement. Alexand. Lippoman. Cajetan. Scotus. 2. Others thinke that Sarai was not the naturall, but the adopted daughter of Thare. 3. But the truer opinion is, that Sarai was the daughter of Haran, sister to Lot and Milcah, and the same that is called Iscah: as may appeare by these reasons: thus thinke Iosephus and Augustine. Iunius. 1. It is like that as Nachor married the one sister, so Abraham married the other: because it was their great care, not to take them wives abroad, from among the Idolaters. 2. v. 31. Sarai is said to bee Thare his daughter in law, but if shee had beene his naturall daughter, shee should have beene so called. 3. It was alwaies unlawfull, saving in the beginning of the world upon necessitie, for brethren or sisters, of halfe or whole bloud to marrie together: as Augustine saith, Abraham lived in those times, when it was unlawfull for brethren, ex utroq; vel altero parente natos nelli conjugio: of one or both parents to bee coupled in marriage: as it may appeare also by this, because Abraham to perswade Abimelech, shee was not his wife, said she was his sister: she could not then be both his sister and his wife. Indeed, among some barbarous Gentiles, as the Egyptians, it was permitted to marry their sisters, as Ptolomeus Philadelphus did take to wife Arsinoe his sister: which is condemned by Pausanius but among the faithfull it was never suffered, nor practised. Thamar saying to incestuous Ammon, speake to the King, for he will not deny thee, 2 Sam. 13. 13. sought but a delay, to put off his wicked act: not as though shee thought the King might or would grant any such thing. 4. Abraham calleth Sarai his sister, as he did call Lot her brothers sonne his brother. chap. 13. 8. for so the Hebrewes use to call their neare kinsmen by the name of brethren: and he saith, she was the daughter of his father, not of his mother: because her father Haran, who might be 50. yeare elder than Abraham, was the sonne of Thare by another woman, and not by Abrahams mother. 5. So then this Iscah, is also Sarai: for to what end else should Iscah here be mentioned as a stranger, and not pertinent to the storie. 6. It is most likely then that Sarai was the daughter of Haran, elder brother to Abraham: who and not Abraham, was borne in the seventie yeare of Thare, not as Pererius supposeth that Abraham was borne in the seventie yeare, and Aran many yeares before: for it is evident by the text, that Thare had no children before he was 70. yeare olde. Gen. 11. 26. R. Sel. affirmeth also that this Iscah, was Sarai, and he noteth, that they are both of one signification: for Iscah or Iacah, is a name of principalitie, as Sarai is: yet Aben Ezra thinketh otherwise, that if Sarai had beene Harans daughter, Moses would have called her the daughter of Haran, as Lot is said to be the sonne of Haran, v. 31. but that is no reason, for in stead thereof, shee is called the wife of Abraham, of whom she now was rather to take denomination, than of her father. Mercerus also thinketh that this Iscah was not Sarai, because in the same verse there would not bee so sudden a change and mutation of the name: but I thinke the first opinion more probable, that Iscah is Sarai, for the reasons before alleaged. 1. because it had not beene pertinent to make mention of Iscah, if she had not belonged to this story. 2. It is like that as Nahor married the one sister, so Abraham did the other. 3. that they might take them wives out of their owne kindred, and not marry into the idolatrous stockes of the Chaldeans.

Sarai and Iscah the same.

Quest. XXII. Why mention is made of Sarai her barrennesse.

Vers. 30. But Sarai was barren, &c. Sarai her barrennesse is noted, 1. not as some Hebrewes imagine, that she should be reserved for the birth of Isaak, and not bee polluted with other births: for the birth is no pollution of the wombe: and if this were the reason, Isaack might have beene the first borne. 2. neither was Sarai barren, that by this meanes Ismael should be borne of Agar, to bee a plague afterwards to the Israelites, as some Hebrewes thinke. 3. But this was the cause, that Gods power might afterward appeare, in giving her a sonne in her old age.

Quest. XXIII. Abraham whether cast into the fire, and then delivered by his faith.

Vers. 31. They departed together from Vr of the Chaldeans. It seemeth to bee an old tradition among the Hebrewes, that Abraham was complained of by Thare his father in the dayes of Nimrod, for refusing to worship the fire, which the Chaldeans adored as God, and therefore he was cast into the fire, but was delivered by his faith: and that this was the Ur, that is, the fire of the Chaldees, out of the which Abraham was brought: and they adde further, that Aran seeing his brother delivered, refuſed likewiſe to worſhip that Idoll, and was caſt into the fire, wherein becauſe hee had but a weake faith, he periſhed; and therefore it is ſaid he died before his father, that is, in his preſence. This tradition Hierome ſeemeth in part to allow of, and Lyranus alſo, and Paulus Burg. But it is a meere fable, as may thus appeare: 1. becauſe Abraham, as moſt Chronographers agree, was not as yet borne in Nimrods time, but in the 43. of Ninus, that ſucceeded Nimrod or Belus. 2. If Abraham had beene ſo miraculouſly delivered, it is like that either Moſes would have remembred it in this ſtory, or the Apoſtle, Heb. 11. where he commendeth the faith of Abraham: or Eccleſiaſticus, chap. 45. would not have omitted, where of purpoſe he ſetteth forth the praiſe of Abraham, Ioſephus alſo lib. 1. antiquit. and Philo that wrote two bookes of Abraham, remember no ſuch thing. 3. This Ur was the name of a City in Chaldea, which Eupolimus in Euſebius, calleth Camerinis: Ammianus Ur, lib. 25. Plinie Orchoen, the Septuagint tranſlate it, the regton of the Chaldeans. And here not onely Abraham, but Thare, Lot, and Sarai, all depart from Ur: then it ſhould ſeeme they were all caſt into the fire. Ioſephus ſaith, that in his time the Sepulcher of Haran was to be ſeene in Ur of the Chaldeans: Haran then was not burned, but buried. Aben Ezra taketh Ur for the name of a place, and Abrahams Countrey, though Ramban would have Cuthena in Meſopotamia rather his Countrey.

Euſeb. lib. 9. de prepar. Evang. cap. 4. Plin. lib. 6. c. 26. lib. 1. antiquit.

Quest. XXIII. Whether Nachor went out with Terah from Chaldea.

Verſ. 31. And Terah tooke Abraham. 1. It is certaine, that God was the author of this journey, who ſpake to Abraham, before he dwelt in Canaan, Act. 7. 2. and that Terah was made acquainted with Gods oracle by his ſonne, and obeyed the ſame, Calvin. 2. Terah is ſaid to take Abraham, &c. becauſe he was the chiefe, and maſter of the family, Muſcul. 3. No mention is made of Nachor, who choſe rather to remaine in his Countrey, and obey not Gods calling: who afterwards notwithſtanding followed, and left his Countrey, but went no further than Meſopotamia, Gen. 24. 10. and dwelt alſo in Charran, Gen. 28. 1. Mercer.

Quest. XXIV. Whether Terah Abrahams father were an Idolater.

Concerning Terah, whether he were given to the Idolatry of the Chaldeans, becauſe he departed from Ur, is a great queſtion, which may thus be decided. 1. It is neither probable, that (as Suidas ſaith) Sarug the grandfather of Terah brought in Idolatry, commanding holy men departed, to bee worſhipped: both Noah and Sem being yet living to direct the righteous ſeed. 2. Neither is it to be thought, that Terah was ſo groſſe an Idolater, that he made images of clay to be worſhipped, as Epiphanius. 3. Neither is it probable, that Terah was altogether free from the Idolatry of the Chaldeans, and that he was caſt out thence and conſtrained to flee into Meſopotamia, as it is in the ſtory of Iudith, chap. 5. verſ. 7, 8. for the contrary is affirmed, Ioſu. 24. 2. that Terah ſerved other Gods. 4. Neither is it to be ſuppoſed, that Terah and his family, as Auguſtine thinketh, were perſecuted of the Chaldeans for the true worſhip of God: for herein Abrahams faith had not beene ſo commendable in obeying the calling of God, as the Apoſtle noteth, Heb. 11. 8. if he were driven out before, and forced to flee his Countrey. 5. And to thinke that Terah was firſt a worſhipper of God, and afterward fell to Idolatry in Charran, it is not like, ſeeing Abraham left not his father till he died, as Tyſtatus and Pererius imagine. But it is more like, that Terah was at the firſt an Idolater, when he dwelt beyond the River in Chaldea, as is expreſſed by Ioſua. 24. 2 who afterward obeying Gods calling, left his Countrey, with the Idolatry and ſuperſtition thereof, and came out with his ſonne to Haran, thinking to goe to Canaan, but being ſtricken in yeares, he there ſtayed, and after ſome few yeares died, Mercer.

Quest. XXV. Whether Abraham at any time inclined to ſuperſtition.

As touching Abraham alſo, whether he were at any time infected with the ſuperſtition of the Chaldees, there are divers opinions, as they are cited by Pererius. 1. Suidas thinketh that Abraham at fourteene yeares reproved his father for his Idolatry. But it is not like, that Abraham being brought up under ſuperſtitious parents, not yet acquainted with Gods voice, and wanting other meanes, was ſo ſoone called. 2 Neither doe I thinke with Philo, that Abraham knew not God: but poſtquam ſolum vertit, after he had changed his Countrey, when he was welnie 70. yeares old: that Abraham was ſo long nuſled up in ſuperſtition. 3. Neither doe I conſent to Ioſephus, that Abraham, ex ſiderum obſervatione, &c. that Abraham by the obſervation of the ſtarres, the earth, and Sea, beganne firſt to acknowledge the true God. But Abrahams firſt calling was from God, the Lord ſaith, I tooke your father Abraham from beyond the flood, Ioſua 24. 2. God called him both from that Countrey, and the Idolatry thereof. 4. The opinion of ſome Hebrewes, is more probable, that Abraham at forty eight yeares beganne to acknowledge the true God, ex Perer. But at what time of his life Abraham was called, it is uncertaine: yet as certaine it is, that he at the firſt, before God called him, was tainted with ſuperſtition. 1. That place in Ioſua ſeemeth directly to prove it: Your fathers dwelt beyond the flood in old time, Terah the father of Abraham, and father of Nachor, and ſerved ſtrange Gods, Ioſua 24. 2. All thoſe that dwelt beyond the River, were at the firſt Idolaters, even the whole family of Terah, ſic Lutherus. 2. Gods mercie more notably appeareth, in that hee called Abraham firſt before he knew God: that not Abrahams ſincerity, but Gods love was the beginning of his calling: as Moſes ſaith, becauſe God loved your fathers, he choſe their ſeed, Deut. 37. 3. It is not like but that Abraham being brought up in a ſuperſtitious family, did alſo at the firſt favour of their ſuperſtition, and therefore is bid to come out of his fathers houſe, Gen. 12. 1: And ſeeing Terah Abrahams father, as is ſhewed before, and as Chryſoſtome thinketh, hom. 13. in Geneſ. was addicted to Idolatry till till he obeyed the calling of God, to goe out of that countrey, it is more like, that Abraham alſo, did ſleep in the ſame ſinne, till God rouſed him, and called him away, then that he was never inclined to Idolatry, as Pererius thinketh. Perer. l. 16. in Gen. diſput. 17.

Philo in lib. qui inſcribitur. Abraham in lib. antiquit.

Verſ. 7. LEt us goe downe and confound, &c. This is the ſpeech of the whole Trinity, whereby may bee prooved the diſtinction of perſons: and whereas verſ. 9. it is ſaid in the ſingular number, the Lord confounded, &c. thence is gathered the unity of ſubſtance: ſic Calvin. Rupert. lib. 4. comment. in Gen. c. 42.

3. Doct. Conditionall preſcience in God.

Verſ. 6. THey cannot now be ſtopped, from whatſoever they have imagined, &c. God did foreſee that they would by no meanes give over their enterpriſe, if they were not letted of their purpoſe: ſo that by this it is evident, that God foreſeeth not only what ſhall be certainly done in the world, but what might be conditionally done, if there were no let: as the Lord telleth David, that the men of Keilah would deliver him, if he ſtaied there, 1 Sam. 23. 12. So our Saviour ſaith, that if the great workes, which were done in Corazin and Bethſaida, had beene done in Tyrus and Sidon, they had repented, Matth. 11. 12. foretelling what was likely to have beene done, that condition preſuppoſed. Where we ſee a manifeſt difference betweene Gods power, his preſcience, and decree or predeſtination: God in reſpect of his omnipotent power can abſolutely doe more, than he doth or will doe: in reſpect of his all-ſeeing preſcience, he doth foreſee not only ſimply what ſhall be done, but conditionally what is likely to bee done, if other conditions and circumſtances concurred. But God decreeth no more but what ſhall come to paſſe, his counſell muſt ſtand, his decree is alwayes abſolute, not conditionall: as the Lord ſaith by his Prophet: As I have purpoſed, it ſhall come to paſſe, as I have conſulted, it ſhall ſtand. Iſay, 14. 24.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Againſt Iulian that there is but one God.

Verſ. 7. COme let us goe downe. Wicked Iulian urged this place to prove his impious polythian, a multiplicity of Gods: for here not one ſaith hee, but many of like authority come downe to confound their languages, ex Muſcul. But if this wicked Apoſtata had looked a little further into the ninth verſe; there he might have found, that the Lord, Iehovah (not many, but one) did confound their languages: they were then divers, not Gods, but perſons, yet one Godhead and divine power.

2. Confut. Againſt Origen, that the Lord, not the Angels confounded tongues.

SEcondly Origen thought that the Angels confounded thoſe languages. And according to the number of thoſe nations, ſo were there ſeverall Angels preſidents over them, that gave them their ſeveral tongues hom. 11. in Numb. But the text it ſelfe overthroweth this opinion, v. 9. The Lord Iehovah did confound their languages.

3. Confut. Againſt Celſus, that ſaith Moſes borrowed of other writers.

THirdly, Celſus objected, that Moſes borrowed this ſtory, of the towre of Babel, of thoſe that write of the Gyants, called Aloides, how they caſt downe a great towre. But Origen anſwereth, that the writers of that hiſtory were after Homer, who was after Moſes, ſo that he could not take any thing from them, lib. 4. com. Celſ. It is more like, that they corrupted the true ſtory of Moſes, with the Poeticall fictions.

4. Confut. Againſt the Pagans, that fable of the beaſts, that they had ſometimes one language.

4 CErtaine Pagans, not beleeving, that the world was not any time of one language: compare this narration of Moſes, to that fable of the beaſts: that ſometime they had all one language, and one underſtood another, till ſuch time as they ſent an embaſſage to the Gods, that they might bee alwayes in their flouriſhing youth, and never be old; and for this their proud requeſt, their ſpeech was confounded, that now one underſtandeth not another. The like truth (ſay they) is in this narration of Moſes. For how is it like, that they could in that inſtant, every man forget his former ſpeech: ex Philone. But this is a doltiſh compariſon, betweene reaſonable men, and unreaſonable beaſts: thoſe being no more capable of ſpeech, than they are of reaſon. And ſeeing all the world tooke beginning from one man, before the floud from from Adam, after the floud from Noah, why should it seeme incredible, that the world used one language. And why should it seeme unpossible, that God to whom all things are possible, in that instant could make them forget their language; seeing that some diseases, as the Lethargy, doe bring such forgetfulnesse, as that the patient knoweth not how to call things by their names: and Pliny writeth of Corvinus Messala, that he forgot his owne name.

5. Confut. Against Philastrius, that all the world was of one language not divers, before.

Philastrius, contra haeres. ca. 106.

5. Philastrius counteth it an hereticall opinion, that all the world was of one language before the tower of Babel: they are said so to be (saith he) that although they spake divers languages, yet they one understood another, and so in effect it was but as one. But the text is contrary, that the whole earth was of one language and one speech, not of one understanding, but of one lip, as it is in the hebrew, that is, they framed their words and language after the same manner. And how could every man understand so many languages, (which are held of most to have beene not so few as seventy) without a miraculous gift, such as the Apostles had: and whereas Moses maketh mention of divers languages in the 10. chap. v. 5. 20. 31. there that is spoken by way of anticipation. And here Moses setteth forth the beginning and occasion of the diversity of languages, by a certaine figure, called hysteroſis, which declareth that last, that was done first, setting the effect before the cause.

6. Confut. Against Philo, that this division of tongues, is to bee understood historically, not in allegory.

6. Fourthly: Philo draweth this story of the confusion of tongues to an allegory, to signifie the confusion of vices, Hoc est nunc propositum sub figura confusionis linguarum dijcere constipatum vitiorum cuneum: This is Moses purpose under this figure of confusion of tongues to cast downe the conjoyned muster of vices: for to speake properly, this parting of one language into many, is a separation, rather than a confusion. Contra. 1. After this manner the whole story of Genesis, may bee allegorized, so that we should have neither creation of the world, nor inundation of the same in true history, but in devised allegory. 2. This division of tongues is called a confusion, not in respect of the divers speech, which was indeed divided, not united, or confounded, but of the speakers, who were confounded in their affection, in being astonished at so suddaine an alteration: in their memory, in forgetting their accustomed speech: in their understanding, because they one understood not another in their worke, which was confused: the server bringing one thing, when the builder called for another.

7. Confut. Against Plato and Aristotle.

In Cratyla. God the author of languages.

7. Plato his opinion is, that words have their force and meaning from nature, Aristotle, that they were first framed, as it pleased man: But here wee learne, that God gave unto man speech: and he infused into men at once diversity of languages.

8. Confut. Against the Lutherans, that make an omnipresence of Christs body.

8 Vers. 5. The Lord came downe: the Lutheranes Vbiquitaries, that maintaine an omnipresence and ubiquity, that is an every-where presence of Christs flesh, being pressed by this argument, that Christs body doth move from place to place, therefore it is not every where: doe answer out of this place, that God is said to move and descend, and yet he is every where: But the reason is not alike, for to ascend and descend, is spoken of Christs body truly, and properly, but of the God-head only metaphorically, and figuratively.

9. Confut. Against the latine service in popery.

9. Vers. 9. Therefore the name was called Babel: because their language was so confounded, that they one understood not another: so what is the Church of Rome to bee counted, but another Babel and synagogue of confusion, where the people understand not the Priest, nor one another in their latine service and prayers. Muscul.

10. Confut. Against Pererius: the marrying of the uncle and neece unlawfull.

10. Vers. 29. The name of Abrahams wife was Sarai: who is held to be the daughter of Haran Abrahams brother: which marriages were not then forbidden by any law, but afterwards they were: where the errour of the papists and namely of Bellarmine and Pererius may be noted: who affirme, that it was not forbidden by Moses law, for the uncle to marry his neece; for Othoniel the younger brother of Caleb, married Achsa Calebs daughter. Iud. 1. 13. Contra. 1. To marry in this degree is forbidden in Leviticus, by necessary collection. Levit. 18. 12. Thou shalt not uncover the shame of thy fathers sister, for she is thy fathers kinswoman: doth not the same reason hold for the other sex: thou shalt not uncover the shame of thy fathers brother, for hee is thy fathers kinsman. Where the degree is prohibited in the male, it holdeth also in the female sex, unlesse they will say; because the law saith, thou shalt not covet thy neighbours wife, and expresseth not thy neighbours husband, that therefore the one should bee lawfull and not the other. 1. Othoniel was not the brother of Caleb, but either his nephew, as the Septuagint read; Othoniel the sonne of Kenez adelphon, the brother of Caleb, namely Kenez, for so is the construction in the greek; or else, as Iunius collecteth, Othoniel and Caleb were brothers children, Caleb of Iephunne; Othoniel of Seraiah which Iephunne and Seraiah were the sons of Kenaz, for Caleb was not the son of Kenaz, but Perer. disput. 14. in 11. Genes. art. 208.

Othoniel proved not to be the brother of Caleb.

but of Iephunne. 1 Chron. 4. 15. yet it ſeemeth that he was of the ſtocke of Kenaz, as grand-child unto him; becauſe he is called a Kenazite: Num. 32. 12. and yet the ſonne of Iephunneh. Othaniel then is called the brother of Caleb, not properly, but in a large ſenſe, as Lot is called Abrahams brother, being indeed his brothers ſonne. Wherefore Pererius in following the blind latine text, was much deceived. Iun. 11. Chro. c. 4. lib 3.

6. Morall obſervations.

1. Obſerv. Againſt diſcontentment.

Verſ. 2. AS they went from the Eaſt, &c. Chryſoſtome hereupon noteth, that as theſe men not contented with their ſtate ſought out a new countrey: ſo mankind, ſaith hee, non poteſt intra ſuos limites conſiſtere, can never keepe it ſelfe within the bounds, but alwayes coveteth more. Chryſoſt. hom. 18. in Geneſ.

2. Obſerv. Againſt continuing in ſinne.

AND there they abode: Philo noteth here, that as theſe men having found a pleaſant field, did not paſſe thorow, but continued there: ſo ſinners doe delight to continue and dwell in ſinne: ejus malum fuiſſet, ſi poſtquam in peccata inciderant, pro alienis non pro domeſticis habuiſſent, &c. it had beene a leſſe evill, after they had fallen into ſinne, if they had uſed it not as a domeſticall, but as a ſtranger.

3. Obſerv. Againſt vaine and momentary pleaſure.

Verſ. 3. COme let us make bricke: Like as theſe, that dwelt in Shiner build of bricke: ſic qui voluptatib. carnis inſerviunt, de fragili materia, &c. ſo they that are the ſervants of pleaſure, doe build with brittle matter, that cannot continue, but they which follow vertue; lateres in lapides mutant, doe turne brickes into hewed ſtones: Gregor. This appeareth in the parable of the rich man. Luke 16. whoſe pleaſure was ſoone over, but Lazarus joy was everlaſting. Greg. in 4. Pſal. penitential.

4. Obſerv. Difficulty ſhould not hinder vertuous workes.

SO they had bricke for ſtone, &c. Many times the difficulty that occurreth, doth cauſe men to ceaſe off from their enterpriſe. But nothing could hinder theſe men: though they had neither ſtone nor mortar, yet they will build a tower, ſuch as was never ſeene in the world before, or after. Calvin. We learne hereby, that nothing ſhould diſcourage us, or make us give over in a good worke, ſeeing theſe were ſo laborious in compaſſing this their proud and ungodly enterpriſe.

5. Obſerv. Againſt building for oſtentation.

Verſ. 4. THat we may get us a name, &c. Chryſoſtome here well noteth the vanity of worldly men, that build houſes, and make great workes, ut immortalem nominis memoriam relinquant: to leave an immortall memory of their name; whereas both they faile of their purpoſe: hodie domus dicitur hujus, cras alterius: to day it is called one mans houſe, to morrow another: and ſo their name is extinguiſhed: and they might take a more ſure way to preſerve their name, by doing of good, while they live, as it is in the Pſalme 112. 9. he hath diſtributed and given to the poore, his righteouſneſſe remaineth for ever. But worldly men doe as Abſolon did, becauſe he had no children left to keepe his name, he built him a pillar: 2 Sam. 18. 18. So they wanting good workes, which are the true fruits of the ſpirituall men, ſeeke to make themſelves famous by ſumptuous buildings.

6. Obſerv. Wicked men proud before their fall.

Verſ. 4. LEſt wee be ſcattered: Philo readeth before we be ſcattered: and thereupon obſerveth, that ſuch is the obſtinacy of the wicked, though they ſee that great judgements are hanging over their heads, yet they will goe on in their wickedneſſe, as the conſcience of theſe proud men gave them, that they ſhould not goe unpuniſhed, yet for all that they proceed in their purpoſe. Thus we ſee verified that ſaying of the wiſe man, Prov. 16. 18. pride goeth before deſtruction: as theſe men when they were in the height of their pride, were diſperſed and ſcattered: like as Saul made a goodly place for himſelfe, as triumphing for the late victory obtained againſt Amelech, even then when he was caſt off from being King: 1 Sam. 15. 13. Oecolampad; in hunc locum.

7. Obſerv. Not to condemne any raſhly.

Verſ. 5. THe Lord came downe to ſee, &c. Chryſoſtome noteth: vult erudiri nos, ne unquam fratres temerè condemnemus: In that God commeth downe to ſee and examine, hee would have us learne never without due examination to condemne our brethren raſhly: And it is eſpecially a rule for magiſtrates, not to condemne any their cauſe unheard, as Putiphar did Ioſeph, Gen. 39. 20. Muſcul.

8. Obſerv. The diviſion of the wicked profitable.

Verſ. 8. SO the Lord ſcattered them, &c. Hence Gregory well obſerveth, that the unity of the wicked is pernicious, their diviſion profitable: So Paul eſcaped, while his enemies were divided. Act. 23. eripiuntur juſti, dum dividuntur injuſti, the righteous are delivered, while the unrighteous are divided: like as the Iſraelites by the dividing of the waters, had a ready paſſage thorow the red Sea: ſo here this proud and vaine-glorious enterpriſe, by the diviſion of tongues was diſappointed.

CHAP.

Chap. XII.

1. The Argument and parts.

THis Chapter hath two parts: the first sheweth the occasion of Abrahams comming into the Land of Canaan, v. 1. to 6. the second containeth such things, as hapned to him there: from v. 6. to the end.

In the first part. 1. Gods calling is set forth, v. 1. with his large and ample promises both temporall to Abraham himselfe, that his name should be great: to his posterity, that a great nation should rise of him: v. 2. and spirituall: to Abraham, I will bless thee, to his posterity, all the families of the earth should be blessed in him. v. 3. namely in Christ. 2. Abrahams obedience is set forth, with the circumstances of his age: v. 4. of his company that came with him into the land of Canaan, v. 5.

In the second part is described. 1. Abrahams travell and journeying in Canaan: toward Shechem, where Abraham built an altar, and the Lord appeared to him, vers. 6. 7. toward Bethel, vers. 8. the South, vers. 9. 2. his going downe into Ægypt: 1. The occasion, by reason of the famine, vers. 10. 2. His consultation with Sara, to say she was his sister to save his life, vers. 11, 12, 13. 3. Pharaohs presumption in taking Abrahams wife, to vers. 17. 4. Gods revenge or punishment, vers. 17. which brought forth these three effects. 1. Abrahams admonition by Phare, vers. 18. 2. the restitution of his wife, vers. 19. 3. his safe deliverance and dimission, vers. 20.

2. The grammaticall construction, or sense.

3. The Exegesis or Theologicall Explication.

Quest. I. Where and how the Lord spake to Abraham.

Vers. 1. FOr the Lord had said, &c. 1. God thus spake to Abraham, not after his fathers death, but while he was yet in Mesopotamia, Act. 7. 2. for to what end should the Lord have thus said, Get thee out of the country, &c. if hee had beene come out thence already? Calvin. 2. Wee read that God spake unto Abraham eight times, Gen. 12. 1. againe, v. 7. and c. 13. 14. and c. 15. 4. and 17. 1. also c. 18. 9. and c. 21. 9. and 22. 1. It is like that divers other times, the Lord spake unto him: but these are expressed. 2. And how God spake unto Abraham, Basil thinketh it was citra ullam corporis vocem, without any corporall or outward voyce, but by the illumination of his minde: Ramban thinketh it was by dreame: some, that God spake to him by Sem, or some other Prophet: but in this place it is like that God spake to Abraham either by himselfe, or his Angels; when he spake by dreame in sleepe, or by vision, when he was waking: it is so expressed in the text, as c. 15. 1. In c. 7. Isa.

Quest. II. Whether God named it a country to Abraham, whither he called him,

TO the land, that I will shew thee, &c. 1. When the Lord thus called to Abraham, hee named no certaine countrey, whither hee should goe, for the better triall of his faith: for the Apostle saith, He knew not whither hee went, Hebr. 11. 8. and Stephen, Act. 7. 3. nameth no countrey whither hee was called. 2. Whereas Canaan is named in the former chapter, vers. 31. either Moses setteth downe the name of the countrey, by way of anticipation, or God might afterward shew unto Abraham, as he went, whither he would have him to goe, Calvin. R. Isaach Carus thinketh, that at the first Abraham understood countrey to the which hee was called, to be Canaan, because of the curse, that hee should be a servant, &c. but that is not like.

QVEST. III. Wherefore Abraham was called out of Chaldea into Canaan.

AND the Lord called Abraham out of Chaldea into Canaan. 1. Because Chaldea was given to abominable Idolatry, and other great corruptions of life, where Abraham could not remaine without great danger. 2. That Gods blessing in the multiplying of Abrahams seede might better appeare abroad in a strange countrey. Perer. 3. But the greatest cause was, not as some thinke to converse with Sem, who is held to be Melchizedek; but that Abraham might take possession of that countrey, and by faith and hope enioy that, which was promised to be given to his seede. Calvin.

QVEST. IIII. Where Abraham was, when the Lord first called him.

WHere Abraham should be, when as God first called him, there are divers opinions. 1. It can neither be, as Augustine thinketh, that Abraham was called, after he was departed out of Chaldea, before he came to Charran, beeing yet in Mesopotamia: for to what end should the Lord have bidden Abraham to goe out of his countrey, if he had beene removed alreadie? To say with Augustine and Encherius, that now he is commanded to leave his countrey in affection, as he had alreadie done in bodie, hath no probabilitie: for both Abraham should have beene disobedient to Gods Vocation, beeing wedded still in desire to his countrie, and it is not like that he had a minde to returne to an idolatrous countrey, where he was to expect nothing but persecution. Steven indeed saith, he was in Mesopotamia, when God called him: but Mesopotamia is there taken largely as it comprehendeth Siria and Chaldea: and so Steven saith, that he came out of the land of the Chaldeans. Act. 7. 4. Mercer. Augustin. lib. 16. de civit. Dei, c. 15.

2. Neither was Abraham twice called, once in Chaldea, and againe in Charran, as Rupertus and Tostatus thinke upon this place: for this had argued Abrahams sloth and negligence, if hee had made no more haste to obey the calling of God. Steven also, Act. 7. maketh mention but of one calling.

3. To say further, that Steven beeing occupied with other matters might forget himselfe, and not well remember the circumstance of time: or that he was contented to follow the vulgar account, is to doe wrong to so holie a man, being directed by the spirit of God to speake: neither doth Encherius answer satisfie, that expoundeth Steven thus, that Abraham was placed in the land of Canaan after the death of Terah: he might depart from Charran his father yet living, but all that while hee was a sojourner in Canaan, & had no certaine place till after his fathers death: Contra. But this sense is contrarie to the text, that God after his fathers death μετῴκισεν, translated or brought Abraham into Canaan: this must be understood not of Abrahams setling in Canaan, but his first remove thither.

4. Neither is Lyranus opinion sound, who therein followeth Rasi and Mizrahi, that the calling, which Moses here speaketh of, was that in Charran: for Abraham is bidden to come out of his countrey: but Charran was not his countrey: and the Lord saith, hee brought him out of Vr of the Chaldeans, chap. 15. 7. not out of Charran But Paulus Burgensis opinion is farre wide that Charran was Abrahams countrie, not Chaldea: for Vr of the Chaldees is called the land of his brother Arans nativitie: now whereas Abraham calleth it his countrie where Nahor dwelt in Charran in Aram Naharahim, or Mesopotamia, Gen. 24. 8. 4. 10. there Mesopotamia or Naharaim, the countrie betweene the rivers, is taken in a large sense, as it containeth both Siria and Chaldea as is before shewed: or for that all his kindred were now remooved thither. Mercer. Reconciliation of places.

5. Wherefore the truth is, that Abraham was in Chaldea, when the Lord called him: so Aben Ezra, Mercer. for so the Lord saith, cap. 15. 7. and although he is bid to leave his kindred, who came with him, as Terah, and Lot, yet for all this his calling was in Chaldea: for Abraham was ready to have left his kindred, if they had refused to goe with him. And Terah is made the Author of this journey, not as though they went forth without Gods calling, but for that hee was willing to goe with Abraham, whether for griefe of his sonnes death, as Iosephus, or for that though hee was somewhat superstitiously bent, hee was desirous to goe out of that Idolatrous countrey: therefore Terah Abrahams father being the head of the family, is named as the chiefe. Why Terah is named as the chiefe in the journey.

QVEST. V. Of divers kinds of calling and renouncing the world.

THere are divers kinds of callings: some are called immediately of God, either by manifest revelation as Abraham, or secret inspiration: some are called by men, as the Israelites by the Prophets: some are called by affliction, as Psal. 88. 34. When hee slew them, they sought and returned. And three wayes doe men forsake the world; 1. by actuall leaving and forsaking all they had, as Abraham here, and the Apostles under Christ. 2. by mortifying their affections, as David was like a weaned childe, Psal. 131. 2. 3. by sequestring their thoughts to the contemplation of heavenly things: which S. Paul calleth the having of our conversation in heaven. Phil. 3. 20.

QVEST. VI. Seven great blessings upon Abraham.

Vers. 2. I will make of thee a great nation, &c. 1. God calling Abraham from his countrey, leaveth him not destitute, but promiseth a great recompence: for his countrey, hee is brought into a better: for a small kinred, a great nation shall come out of him: he is called from his fathers house, but God will make him a father of many nations. 2. The Lord bestoweth upon Abraham seven great blessings. Peter.

Peter. ex Cajetan. 1. I will make thee a great nation: either because many and populous nations came of Abraham, by Hagar, and Ketura, Gen. 25. or in respect of the people of Israel, which was great, not so much in number, as renowne, because of the Kings, Prophets, wise and vertuous men, that came of them.

How Abrahams name was great.

2. I will blesse thee. This blessing was able to make his barren wife Sara fruitfull, Vatablus. I will make thee rich, prosperous, Musculus. Or I will blesse thee spiritually, Rupertus.

3. I will make thy name great. 1. Abrahams name was reverenced even among the heathen, as Iosephus sheweth, lib. 1. antiquit. 2. It was great, in respect of the faithfull, that are called the children of Abraham. 3. Great, because the Lord vouchsafeth to call himselfe the God of Abraham, Isaak, and Iacob. 4. Great in respect of Christ, that came of Abraham, Matth. 1. 1. Peter.

4. Thou shalt bee a blessing. 1. It signifieth the certainty of this blessing: whom man blesseth, they are not alway blessed: but he that God blesseth, shall surely bee blessed. 2. The excellency of this blessing: he shall not only bee blessed, but a blessing it selfe. 3. And he should be a forme of blessing: as they should say, the God of Abraham, Isaac, &c. blesse thee. Calvin.

5. I will blesse them that blesse thee, &c. Abrahams friends should bee blessed for his sake: as Lot. Gen. 14. Ismael, 25. therefore Abimelech being a King, did desire to make a league with Abraham, because he saw God was with him.

6. I will curse them, &c. So perished Pharao, Og, Sehon, the Assyrians, Chaldeans, were punished for their enmity against the people of God: Luther. Therefore Balaam durst not curse the people of God, because the Lord had not cursed them, Numb. 23.

How all nations are blessed in Abraham.

7. All the families of the earth shall be blessed in thee. 1. Not only because they shall take up a forme of blessing, as the Hebrewes interpret, the Lord blesse thee like Abraham, for this forme among all the families of the earth, was not used: the Romanes in the coronation of their Emperours were wont to say, felicior Augusto, melior Trajano, be more happy than Augustus, better than Trajane. 2. Neither so only, because all Gentiles should be blessed for imitating the example of faithfull Abraham. 3. Non tantum significat ipsum fore exemplar, sed causam benedictionis: it signifieth he should not only be an example or patterne, but a cause of blessing: because in Christ the seed of Abraham, as the Apostle expoundeth, Gal. 3. 16. all the nations in the world were blessed. Calvin.

Quest. VII. Of the computation of the 430. yeare mentioned by S. Paul, Gal. 3. 17.

FRom this promise made to Abraham, are we to account the 430. yeares, which S. Paul saith were betweene the promise and the law, Galath. 3. 17. 1. Hereunto agreeth the computation of Moses, that the Israelites dwelt in Ægypt foure hundred and thirty yeares, Exod. 12. 40. not in Ægypt onely, but in Ægypt and Canaan, as the Septuagint doe interpret that place; for so long it was since Abraham first began to sojourne in Canaan, at what time also by reason of the famine hee went into Ægypt: so Iosephus maketh his computation; to the building of Salomons temple, from the departure of the Israelites out of Ægypt, 592. yeares, and from Abrahams comming into Canaan, a thousand and twentie: so that there shall be betweene Abrahams arrivall in Canaan, and the deliverance of the Israelites out of Ægypt, by this account foure hundred twenty eight. 2. Genebrard then is greatly deceived, that counteth six hundred yeares from Abrahams comming into Canaan, to the Israelites going out of Ægypt: for both Saint Paul directly against him, who (as Genebrard would enforce) hath no relation in that number to the time of the Israelites dwelling in Ægypt: neither doth the computation of the yeares agree: for from Abrahams comming to Canaan till Iacobs going into Ægypt, are but yeers 215. which are gathered thus: from the promise to the birth of Isaak, 25. from thence to the birth of Iacob, 60. from thence till hee went into Ægypt 130. and the time from thence till the Israelites going out, though it cannot bee so certainely gathered, is thought not to exceed two hundred and fifteene yeare more: as shall bee shewed, when wee come to that place of the fifteenth chapter. 3. Though Saint Paul make mention of that promise, which was made to Abraham and his seed, which seemeth to bee that, Gen. 22. 18. yet by the account of the yeeres, it must bee referred to this promise: for the other renewed, when Isaak should have beene offered, was fifty yeeres, if Isaak were then 25. as Iosephus, or if hee were 37. as some other Hebrewes think, it was 62. yeeres after: and so many yeeres should we want of foure hundred and thirty. And then the same word, seed, is not here used; yet there is the same sense: for the Lord in saying, in thee shall all the families of the earth bee blessed, meaneth his seed. 4. Further, whereas Abraham is said to bee seventy five yeares old at his departure out of Charran, and the promise was made before hee came out of Chaldea: the time of abode could not bee long there, not five yeares, as Iunius supposeth, but I rather thinke with Augustine and Eucherius, that all was done in a yeare or two at the most. Mercer. his going out of Chaldea, staying at Charran, and departure from thence: for it is not like but that Abraham made all haste to obey Gods call.

Quest. VIII. Why Lot accompanied Abraham.

Vers. 5. Abraham tooke Sarai, &c. and Lot. 1. Lot followed not Abraham, because he was his adopted son, as Iosephus thinketh, for then he would not have suffered him to goe apart from him, Gen. 13. and he called him his brother, not his sonne. ibid. But Lot, as one set apart also to be a worshipper of God, is content to leave his other kindred, and accompany righteous Abraham. 2. Where mention is made of the soules, which they had gotten in Charran, it is neither like that Lots two daughters were there borne, but rather at Sodome: neither by soules (with some) doe wee understand cattell, for Ioseph. lib. 1. antiquit.

What soules Abraham got in Charran.

were improper: neither need we referre it to the winning and converting of ſoules, as the Chalde text ſeemeth to interpret, alleaged before: but it is taken for the ſervants which Abraham had purchaſed there, Muſcul. And ſuch as were borne of thoſe ſervants. 3. But as for that opinion of Nicolaus Damaſcenus, and Iuſtinus, that Abraham before he came into Canaan was King of Damaſcus: I leave it as a fancie; for the text ſheweth that Abraham came forthwith from Charran to Canaan: and it had ſhewed ſome diſobedience in Abraham in foreſlaking the time to follow the calling of God: yea wee finde not that Abraham had any certaine dwelling place, but removed from place to place, and was as a pilgrime and ſtranger, therefore not like to have beene a King.

QVEST. IX. What place Sechem was, and the valley of Moreh.

Verſ. 6. ABraham paſſed thorow the land, to the place of Sechem, and to the Plaine of Moreh. 1. This Sechem was not on the Eaſt ſide of Canaan, as Perer. but rather toward the Weſt where the Sunne goeth downe, Deut. 11.30. 2. It is called the place rather than Citie of Sechem, becauſe afterward there was built the City Sechem, Gen. 33.18. ſo called of Sechem the ſonne of Hemor. 3. Euſebius maketh two Sechems, this, which in his time was called Neapolis, deſtroyed by Abimelech, Iud. 9. re-edified by Ieroboam, 1 King. 12.25. and another in Mount Ephraim, which pertained to the lot of the Prieſts, Ioſu. 21.21. but it is evident that theſe were all one: for Ieroboams Sechem was alſo in Mount Ephraim, 1 King. 12.25. Neither doe we finde mention made of two Sechems in the Scripture: not farre from this City was the Mountaine that had two tops, Hebal and Garrizim, Deut. 11.30. from whence the bleſſings and curſes were delivered: this is the ſame City which is called Sychar, Ioh. 4. neare unto which was Iacobs Well, Mercer. 4. Not farre from Sechem was the Plaine of Moreh, (ſo called of More the poſſeſſor thereof, as the Plaine of Mamre was named of the owner, Mercer.) which the Septuag. tranſlate the high Oak: the truth is, that it was both a Plaine and ſet with Oakes, Deut. 11.30. another word is uſed, Gnerabah, which ſignifieth a Plaine: there Iacob under an Oake buried the images which were in his houſe, Gen. 35. 4. He hid them under an Oake that was by Sechem: Ioſua made a covenant with the people in this Sechem, and pitched a ſtone under an Oake, in witneſſe thereof, Ioſua 24.26. In this Plaine was Abimelech made king by the men of Sechem, Iud. 9. 6. Some thinke that in this Plaine were ſituated the fiue Cities, Sodome, Gomortha, Adama, Seboim, Zoar, Lyran. Toſtat.

QVEST. X. Why it is added the Canaanites were in the land.

THe Canaanite was in the land. 1. Theſe Canaanites were not they, which gave denomination to the whole Countrey and land of Canaan: but theſe were ſome one people of Canaans poſterity, which were eſpecially called by that name, who inhabited in the Weſt part of Canaan, by the Sea and the coaſt of Jordan, Num. 13.30. 2. This is expreſſed that the Canaanites dwelt in the land, not to ſhew Abrahams right, becauſe he came of Sem, to whoſe ſeed this Countrey appertained, which was uſurped by the Canaanites; for it appeareth not, that Sems poſterity ever inhabited this Countrey: and if it had beene Abrahams right, God ſhould have given him but his owne: whereas it was Gods love toward Abraham, that brought him to this Countrey, Deut. 4.37. and theſe people were caſt out for their wickedneſſe, Abrahams ſeed did not poſſeſſe it for their righteouſneſſe, Deut. 9.6. Neither had they any right unto it, but of Gods favour. 3. But this is added, to ſhew that Abraham was a ſtranger in Canaan, to whom God gave not ſo much as the breadth of a foot, as Saint Stephen ſaith, Act. 7.5. that his faith hereby might bee exerciſed, in beleeving God, who promiſed it to his ſeed, Iun. as alſo ſeeing Abraham was called to a land where the wicked dwelt, wherein he had no certaine poſſeſſion given him, the Lord would have him thereby to be put in minde of his celeſtiall countrey, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, Heb. 11.16. Calvin.

QVEST. XI. How God appeared to Abraham.

Verſ. 7. THe Lord appeared to Abraham. 1. God is not ſaid before to have appeared to Abraham: and how he appeared, it is not expreſſed, whether in a dreame, in viſion, or face to face, that is, manifeſtly, not darkly, for theſe are the three wayes wherby God appeareth, Num. 12.6.8. it is not like, that God ſhewed himſelfe by a dreame, as Cajetane thinketh, for the Scripture uſeth to expreſſe that kind of apparition by name: as Matth. 1. The Angell of the Lord appeared to Ioſeph by dreame: but after ſome other manner. 2. God promiſeth to Abraham two unlikely things: that he ſhould have ſeed, whereas his wife was barren, that his ſeed ſhould have that land wherein the Canaanites yet dwelt, that was a mighty nation: that Abraham ſhould wholly depend upon God. 3. And the Lord deferreth his promiſe, both that Abraham and his ſeed ſhould be tryed by affliction in Canaan and Egypt, that they might acknowledge Gods free gift, and he ſtayeth till the wickedneſſe of the Canaanites was come to the full, Geneſ. 15. 16. 4. Hee buildeth an Altar to teſtifie his thankfulneſſe. Perer. not without Gods warrant, for the Lord in that place appeared, Muſcul. and Abraham doth teſtifie his inward faith, by his outward profeſſion. Calvin.

Wherefore God deferred his promiſe.

Why he built an Altar.

QVEST. XII. Why Abraham ſo oft removed.

Verſ. 8. HE removed thence to a Mountaine, &c. 1. He removed, becauſe his building of Altars was offenſive to the Inhabitants, and it was a wonder that hee was not ſtoned of them for the ſame. Calvin. As alſo it pleaſed God hereby to trie Abrahams faith, being toſſed thus from poſt to pil-, and that thereby hee might bee a meane by his godly life and religion to call that people to repentance, Pererius. 2. Hee is ſaid to pitch his tents, being ready as ſouldiers are, to remove their campe, Chryſoſt. 3. This Bethel was at this time called Luz, *Gen.*28. 19. It is called Bethel by way of anticipation, by that name which it had afterward: and it was removed from Hai, here named, by the ſpace of a mile. This Hai was that City which Ioſuah deſtroyed, cap.8. there was another City of the ſame name among the Ammonites, *Ierem.*49.5. this Hai was three miles ſituate from Jericho, and as farre from Eliseus fountaine neare to Jerico, 2 *King.*2. Perer. ex Andr. Maſ. & Borchard. 4. This hill wherein Abraham built an Altar, was the ſame wherein Ioſua alſo reared an Altar, in Mount-Ebal, neare to Hai, *Ioſ.*8.30. this hill had two tops or heads, Hebal and Garizim, where was built a temple in diſgrace of that at Jeruſalem: and this is the hill which the Samaritane woman meaneth, *Ioh.*4. which hill is not neare to Jerico and Gilgal, as Mercator collecteth out of Euſebius booke de loc. Hebraic. tranſlated by Hieront. but neare to Sechem, and not neare Gilgal, as the Septuag. read, which might deceive Euſeb. but over againſt it, Pererius.

Quest. XIII. Of Abrahams going downe into Egypt.

Verſ.10. Then there came a famine in the land, therefore Abraham went downe into Egypt, &c. 1. Abraham falleth into three great tentations at once. 1. He is pinched with famine. 2. In danger of his life among the Ægyptians. 3. And his wives chaſtity put in great hazard. 2. Abraham goeth downe into Ægypt, conſtrained thereto by the famine, being not able to releeve himſelfe in Canaan, where he poſſeſſed not one foot: he would not tempt God, to refuſe the meanes which was offered. 3. For God is tempted two wayes, when men are either addicted altogether to the meanes, as Thomas would not beleeve unleſſe he ſaw: others tempted God, when they immediately depended upon his providence, rejecting the meanes, as Ahaz refuſed to have a ſigne given him, Iſay 7. 4. God ſuffered Abraham to be thus tempted. 1. For the triall of his faith, Calvin. 2. That Gods mercy might the better appeare in his deliverance from ſo many dangers. 3. To be an example and comfort to poſterity how to behave themſelves in the like dangers. Pererius. 4. Vt lucem doctrinæ & virtutis ſuæ impertiret Ægyptiis; to impart unto the Ægyptians the light of his doctrine and vertue, Chryſ. 5. Abraham ſinned not in going downe to Ægypt, as Ramban, Moſes Gerundenſ. collecteth, becauſe he forſooke the land of Canaan, as though he could not have beene provided for there: and therefore he thinketh that Abrahams poſterity was afterward afflicted in Egypt: For 1. Abraham ſhould rather have offended, if he had refuſed the meanes offered for his releefe. 2. He had no commandement not to goe into Egypt, as afterward Iſaak had, chap. 26.23. he went but to ſojourne there, as the text ſaith, in minde and in heart, his deſire and affection was ſtill to the promiſed Canaan, Muſculus.

God tempted two wayes.

*Mom.*30. in Gen. Abraham ſinned not in going downe to Egypt.

Quest. XIV. The feare of Abraham concerning Sarai her beauty.

Verſ.11,12. I know thou art a faire woman, &c. they will kill me, and ſave thee alive, &c. 1. Sarai though ſtricken in yeares, retained her excellent favour and beauty ſtill, either becauſe in thoſe dayes the vigour of the body ſo ſoone decayed not, or her not bearing of her children might be a meanes to preſerve her ſtrength and beauty, or God might give her that ſpeciall gift, to exerciſe Abraham in that feare, Calvin. 2. And Abraham feareth what might happen to him in Egypt, rather than in Canaan, becauſe the Canaanites were generally better coloured and fairer than the Egyptians, among whom Sarai, though not regarded in Canaan, might be deſired in Egypt, Iunius, Perer. 3. The Hebrewes fondly imagine, that Abraham knew not his wife to be faire till now, having hitherto abſtained from her company: but that is untrue: for what reaſon had Abraham ſo long to refraine in lawfull marriage? neither if it were ſo, could it have beene knowne, that Sarai was barren: therefore Abrahams words, I know, &c. muſt not be referred onely to the next clauſe, that thou art faire, but to the whole ſentence following, verſ.12. that the Ægyptians when they ſee thee, &c. will kill me. 4. We may ſee what a dangerous thing beauty is in a woman not vertuouſly given, ſeeing even in Sarai ſo godly a matrone, it put Abraham in ſuch feare. Muſcul. 5. Likewiſe in the Egyptians, is noted both their raging affection, that made no conſcience of murther to enjoy their luſt, and their blindneſſe of judgement, that made leſſe account of murther than adultery: for they would kill Abraham firſt, before they violate his wife. Perer.

Quest. XV. Whether Abraham and Sarai diſſembled in ſaying ſhe was his ſiſter.

Verſ.13. Say thou art my ſiſter, &c. 1. Both their impudent mouthes are to be ſtopped that altogether exclaime againſt this fact of Abraham, making him by his diſſimulation as a bawd of his own wife. 2. Neither yet can this fact be altogether excuſed, as Auguſtine doth, Vxorem tacuit non negauit. He denieth her not his wife, but concealeth her: Nihil mentitus erat, quia proquinqua erat ſanguine; He lied not at all, becauſe ſhe was his kinſwoman in blood, and ſo his ſiſter, as Lot is called his brother: for in affirming her to be his ſiſter, they inferred ſhe was not his wife, and ſo the truth was not onely concealed, but diſſembled. 3. Wherefore as Calvin ſaith, Videtur aliquid mendacii admixtum, It ſeemeth that ſome untruth was ſprinkled or mixed herein: for Sara is noted to have beene for this her diſſimulation reproved. Gen. 20.16.

Quest. XVI. Whether Abraham did well in bringing Sarai into danger for her chaſtity.

Origen hom. in Gen. Hier. trad. in Gen. cont. Fauſt. lib.22.cap.26.

That my life may be preſerved by thee. 1. Neither was this fact of Abraham ſo hainous as Origen ſeemeth to thinke, that Sara was expoſita contaminationibus per conveniendam maritalem: was expoſed to pollution by the connivence or ſufferance of her husband, and therefore he runneth here to allegories. Hierome alſo calleth it fœdam neceſſitatem, an uncleane neceſſity.

2. Neither can this fact be altogether excuſed, ſeeing his wives chaſtity was thereby brought into danger

2. Neither

1. Neither can Augustines excuse suffice, Uxorem Deo credidit, ne polluceretur, He committed his wife to God, that he should keepe her from being polluted: for this had beene to presume. 2. Nor Rupertus fully giveth satisfaction, Quam potuit periculi partem sustulit, cætera Deo commendavit: that he prevented part of the danger himselfe, in providing for his life: the rest he committed to God. For no man must doe evill that good may come thereof. Abraham to save his life should not hazard her chastity. 3. Neither yet doth Cajetane sufficiently answer the matter, That without Sara her consent he knew she could not be coupled in marriage to any: for violence might have beene offered to her, though she consented not. 4. Neither is it like that Abraham did thus by any instinct from God, as Pererius thinketh: no such thing being expressed.

3. Wherefore this proceeded of Abrahams infirmitie rather, who should have committed the preservation of his life rather to the providence of God, than any such deuice of his owne. Vatablus: and although Abrahams intent were good, to preserve his life in regard of Gods promise made to his seede, yet he failed in the meanes: and though he had rather have died, than hazard his wives chastitie, yet being wholly intent how to provide for his life he forgetteth all other things, and casteth what perill might come one way, and not another. Calvin.

Quest. XVII. Of the taking of Sarai into Pharaos house.

Vers. 15. The woman was taken into Pharaos house, 17. but the Lord plagued Pharao and his house. 1. It was an usuall thing among the heathen Princes, (whose will stood for a law) to take with violence at their pleasure such women as they liked: so the Egyptians did steale away Isis, the daughter of Inachus, King of Argives, and caried her into Egypt. The Grecians carried away Europa, daughter of Agenor, out of Phenicia into Creta. Iason brought Medea from Colchis into Grecia: Paris did the like to Helena Menelaus wife: so doth Pharao here to Sarai. 2. Pharao was plagued some thinke with a flux of bloud, some, in that the wombs of their women were shut up, as it is in the like story, Gen. 20. Iosephus thinketh it was the plague: Philo a torment both of bodie and minde: it is most like it was such a plague as Pharao felt in himselfe. 3. His house also was smitten with the same plague: not onely the Princes that commended Sarai her beauty, and so were accessary to this fact, as Chrysostome thinketh: but the whole house generally: who though they all were not agents in this matter, yet God, whose judgements, though secret, yet are alwayes just, was able to finde sufficient cause of punishment among them, Calvin.

The violent taking of women used among the Gentiles.

How Pharao was plagued.

Why his house was punished.

Quest. XVIII. How Pharao did know that Sara was Abrahams wife.

Vers. 18. What is this thing thou hast done unto mee, &c. By this wee see, that even among the heathen, adultery was counted an hainous sinne, Et regi ipsi cavendum, and even to be shunned of the King, Ambr. lib. de Abrah. c. 2. 2. Pharao taketh it grievously, that hee was thus deceived of a stranger, and if God had not protected Abraham, it might have cost him his life, Luther. 3. This was knowne to Pharao, not by the Egyptian Priests, whom Pharao should consult withall, as Iosephus thinketh, though sometime it may please God, that such may gesse at the truth, as Balaam did: but either it was made manifest by divine revelation, as the like was to Abimelech, Gen. 20. Chrysostom. or else by the confession of Sara, Oecolampad. after that Pharao being feared by these plagues, beganne to examine what might be the cause. 4. Pharao layeth all the fault upon Abraham, not considering, that God saw his unchaste thought, and his inhumanity towards strangers, Iun.

Sara was Abrahams wife.

Quest. XIX. How Sarah was preserved from Pharaos lust.

Vers. 19. Behold thy wife, take her, &c. 1. Sarai was kept by Gods providence from the violent lust of Pharao: as she was likewise preserved from Abimilech, Genes. 20. if God shewed that mercy to Abraham againe offending in the like, it cannot be otherwise thought, but he found that mercy with God before: and the preservation of Sarai the second time, sheweth that she was not corrupted before, Calvin. 2. The cause hereof, was neither any moderate disposition in Pharao, nor yet because the use was among those Easterne Princes (as we reade of the Kings of Persia) Est. 12. 12. to prepare and purifie with sweet oyles and odours some while before such women as entred into the King. Hieron. But it is most like, that Pharao was hindred by this sudden disease, that he could not accomplish his lust, Iun. and therein Chrysostome noteth the like miraculous deliverance of Sara from Pharaos raging lust, as of Daniel from the Lions. 3. The reason why here it is not expressed, in like manner, as Gen. 20. that Pharao came not neare Sarai, Theodoret maketh to be this: because, Per id tempus Sarai paritura erat Isaach: about that time Sarai was to beare Isaach: and therefore it is expressed, Ne suspectum illud semen esset: lest he might bee thought be not of Abrahams seed. 4. Rupertus well noteth in this story of Abraham, a type and figure of those things that hapned to his posterity. 1. As a famine brought Abraham into Egypt, so did it Iacob and his familie. 2. As Abraham was afflicted by the taking away of his wife, so was his seed oppressed. 3. As Pharao was plagued for Abraham and Sarai, so Pharao and Egypt were punished with ten plagues because of the Israelites. 4. As Abraham was enriched by Pharao, so the Israelites received great gifts of the Egyptians, when they went out.

Abrahams being in Egypt a type of his posterity.

Quest. XX. How long Abraham stayed in Egypt.

Concerning the time of Abrahams being in Egypt. 1. Neither is it true, as Eusebius citeth out of one Atrabanus, that he abode there twenty yeares: seeing Abraham had dwelt but ten yeares in Canaan, when Hagar was given him, and Ismael borne, Gen. 16. 2. Neither was Abraham so long conversant in Egypt, and that by the leave of Pharao, as that he did teach them the liberall sciences, as Astrologie, Euseb. lib. 9. de prepar. Evang. 1. ult.

and such like, as Iosephus thinketh, lib. 1. antiquit. But it is most like they learned it afterward by Iacob, that lived there seventeene yeares: or of Ioseph, that was their governour 80. yeares. 3. Wherefore at this time it is probable that Abraham stayed not long in Egypt, no not a yeare: for presently after that Pharao was plagued of God, he delivered Sarai, and sent away Abraham, giving him guides to see him safely conveyed.

QUEST. XXII. How the Kings of Egypt came to be called Pharaos.

Lodovic. Vives in August. de Civ Dei. lib. 10. ca. 43.

Vers. 20. Pharao gave commandement, &c. 1. It appeareth, that the name of Pharao was common to all the Kings of Egypt, and no proper name: for the Kings of Egypt were so called above a thousand yeares from Abraham, till the destruction of the Temple: and they had other proper names beside, as we reade of Pharao Necho, 2 King. 23. of Pharao Ophra, Ierem. 44. 30. 2. It is not like they were so called, as Vives thinketh, of Pharus an obscure Island, of the which there was no reason to name their Kings. 3. But rather as Iosephus conjectureth of one of their first Kings, that was so called: as the Kings of Syria were called Antiochi, the Kings of Egypt after Alexander, Ptolomie: the Emperours of Rome, Cæsars and Augustine. 4. But whereas Iosephus thinketh, that after Pharao Salomons father in law, none of the Kings of Egypt were named Pharaos, it is a manifest errour, for 400. yeares after Salomon, in Iosias time, mention is made of Pharao Necho, 2 King. 23.

Iosephus errour.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the free grace of election.

Vers. 1. THe Lord had said, get thee out of thy Country, &c. This calling of Abraham from among the Chaldeans, without any merit or desert in Abraham, who lay drowned in the dregges of superstition, is an argument of our free and gracious election in Christ, without respect of any worthinesse in us; as the Apostle saith, We are saved by grace through faith, Ephes. 2. 8. Calvin, Perer.

2. Doct. Vocation of the Gentiles.

Lib. 3. cont. Iulian.

CYrill also well noteth, Ex vocatione Abrahæ præsignata est vocatio Iudæorum & Gentium, &c. By the vocation of Abraham, is signified the calling of the Iewes and Gentiles, who was the father of the faithfull and beleevers.

3. Doct. Canaanites in the Church.

Vers. 6. THe Canaanite was in the land, &c. As there were Canaanites in the promised land; so there are Canaanites in the Church, such as challenge to themselves the name and profession of the Church, being but Usurpers and Canaanites, whom God shall one day cast out, as Iosua did the Canaanites, Marloret.

4. Doct. Abrahams faith in Christ.

Vers. 8. HE built an Altar to the Lord, &c. Abraham knew well enough, that God was not pleased with the bloud of beasts: his faith therefore directeth him to the bloud of Christ, whose day Abraham saw and rejoyced, Iob. 8. 56. Calvin.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Against the Iewes: the Messiah shall not erect a temporall Kingdome.

Verse. 3. IN thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed, &c. The Messias then promised to Abraham shall not come to conquer the nations by the sword, or to erect a temporall Kingdome, as the Jewes imagine; but he shall be the cause of their spirituall blessing, to deliver them from the wrath and curse of God, Luther.

2. Confut. Against Monkes that pretend Abrahams example.

Vers. 4. SO Abraham departed, &c. The example of Abraham leaving his Country, is unfitly alleaged by the Papists, as a ground of Monasticall life. 1. Abraham had the expresse commandement of God so to doe, but they can shew no warrant out of Gods word. 2. Abraham went from Idolaters, but Monkes goe unto Idolaters, and the profession of Idolatry. 3. Abraham went he knew not whither, but the Monkes know very well whither they goe, to ease, pleasure, riches, Musculus.

3. Confut. Against the invocation of Saints.

Vers. 8. HE built an Altar, and called upon the name, &c. This manner of invocation used by the fathers of the old Testament, should be a patterne unto true worshippers of God under the new. They onely invocated and called upon the name of God: we read not of any other of the holy men their predecessors, whom they made their advocates. Wherefore it is a superstitious and new doctrine to call upon any in prayer but the Lord.

4. Confut.

4. Confut. Againſt naked ceremonies, without the ſpirituall ſubſtance.

FUrther, the building of the Altar was but the outward forme and ceremonie: the ſubſtance, was the invocation of the name of God. We learne, that ceremonies are but vaine obſervations, if they be not referred to the ſpirituall worſhip. Wherefore hypocrites relying upon outward rites, doe but worſhip God in vaine. Calvin.

5. Confut. Againſt pilgrimage.

Abraham came into the land of Canaan. 1. Neither of an unſtable minde, which maketh many to change Countreyes. 2. Nor of a thirſting deſire to ſee ſtrange faſhions, and learne curious Arts, as Pythagoras, Empedocles, Plato, among the heathen travelled. 3. Nor yet of a covetous minde, to enrich himſelfe, as Merchants uſe. 4. Nor yet of a ſuperſtitious devotion, to viſit the Sepulchers of holy men, and to goe in pilgrimage to holy places, (which cauſe Pererius alloweth) for he came from Meſopotamia, where Paradiſe was, and by likelihood Adam, and Melchiſedech, and other holy Patriarkes buried. Perer. in. v. 10. 5. But he travelleth both to be delivered from the perillous ſociety of Idolaters, where he lived, as alſo with a purpoſe to draw others to the knowledge of God.

6. Confut. Againſt them that meaſure religion by plenty.

Verſ. 10. THen there came a famine in the land. Before Abraham came into Canaan, we read of no famine, as ſoone as he is entred a famine followed him. Wherefore it is a frivolous objection againſt the Goſpell, if where it is profeſſed, famine ſometime be ſent, and ſcarcity of things: for ſo in the time of Elias and Elizeus, there hapned famines, and in Saint Pauls time under Claudius: Luther. This was the fooliſh argument of the idolatrous women, who to juſtifie their ſuperſtition thus alleaged: When we burnt incenſe to the Queene of heaven, we had all things plenty, &c. Ierem. 44. 17.

7. Confut. Hebrewes come not of the Egyptians.

Abraham went downe to Egypt. 1. Hence appeareth the errour of Poſſidonius, Appion, with others, that thinke the Hebrewes tooke firſt their originall from the Egyptians. 2. They alſo are here confuted, who thinke that Egypt before Homers time, was a navigable Sea, or fennie ground, not habitable, which in continuance of time was gained from the water. Herodotus calleth it acceſſionem terræ, & fluminis donum, an addition to the land, and a gift of the floud: for we ſee that Egypt was an habitable Countrey in Abrahams time, nine hundred yeares before Homer: who lived (as moſt hold) an hundred yeare after the Trojane warre, which fell out about the ſame time that Heli was Judge in Iſrael; ſo that Homer flouriſhed under Salomon; nine hundred yeares and more from Abraham: from the 75. yeare of Abrahams age, to the going of the Iſraelites out of Egypt, are foure hundred and thirty: from thence to the building of the Temple under Salomon, foure hundred eighty. 3. As thoſe that doe make the land of Egypt too young, ſo Ioſephus maketh it too ancient, that affirmeth that there were Kings in Egypt for the ſpace of 1300. yeares and more, before Salomon, whereas from the floud untill Salomon, there are not accounted above 1335. yeares in all: and it is not like, that within 35. yeares after the floud, Egypt could be inhabited, much leſſe have a King.

Ioſeph. adverſ. Appion. Herod. l. 2. Plin. l. 2.

Homer in what time he lived. Lib. 8. antiquit. Egypt not ſo ancient as Ioſephus maketh it.

6. Morall obſervations.

1. Morall Obſerv. To forſake all, and follow Chriſt.

Verſ. 1. GEt thee out of thy Countrey, &c. By the example of Abraham, that left his Countrey and kindred to obey the calling of God, we learne to forſake father and mother, and whatſoever elſe we have in the world to follow Chriſt: for our Saviour ſaith; He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me, Matth. 10. 37. Marlor.

2. Morall Obſerv. A good name the gift of God.

Verſ. 2. I will make thy name great, &c. As men ought not ambitiouſly to hunt after the praiſe of men, as the Phariſies did, Matth. 6. ſo we ought not to neglect a good name in the world: we ſee here it is the bleſſing of God, and promiſed to Abraham, Perer. The Apoſtle alſo ſaith, Procure things honeſt in the ſight of all men, Rom. 12. 17.

3. Morall Obſerv. Good men have their enemies.

Verſ. 3. I will curſe them that curſe thee, &c. Abraham though a juſt and upright man, yet he ſhould finde evill willers in the world, ſuch as would curſe and not bleſſe him: ſo we learne, that good men, though they give no juſt occaſion of offence, ſhall not want their enemies: Vatabl. As our Saviour Chriſt full of all goodneſſe, found many enemies in the world, and few friends.

4. Morall Obſerv. Many bleſſed for good mens ſakes.

I will bleſſe them that bleſſe thee, &c. We ſee that many are bleſſed for good mens ſakes, and Laban fared well for Iacob. Egypt bleſſed for Iaſephs ſake. Philo concludeth well, Oremus igitur ut tanquam columna in domo, &c. vir juſtus permaneat ac calamitatum remedium: Let us pray that as the pillar in the houſe, a good man may continue, to be a remedy againſt calamity. Phil. 1. de migrat. Abraham.

5. Morall Observ. The obedience and love of wives toward their husbands.

Vers. 5. Abraham tooke Sarai his wife, &c. Chryſoſtome noteth in Sarai her great obedience, quæ tanta facilitate cum viro peregrinaretur, which ſo readily travelled and tooke paines to go with her husband: hom. 32. in Geneſ. Ambroſe ſetteth forth her love, quæ contenta periclitari pudore potius, quam virum ſalute: which did chuſe rather to hazard her chaſtity, than her husband his life and ſafety. And Saint Peter ſetteth forth Sarai, an example of loving obedience to all wives, 1 Pet. 3.

6. Morall Obſerv. God comforteth his children in their affliction.

Verſe. 7. The Lord appeared to Abraham: God leaveth not Abraham comfortleſſe in the midſt of his afflictions: but he doth refreſh him, both by appearing to him, and renewing his promiſes concerning Canaan: ſo the Lord doth viſit his children in mercy, both by the ſecret inſpiration of his ſpirit, and by the inward revelation of the joyes to come: as Saint Paul expreſſeth both, Rom. 8. the firſt, verſ. 15. We have received the ſpirit of adoption, whereby we cry Abba, father: the ſecond, verſ. 18. I account that the afflictions of this life are not worthy the joy which ſhall be revealed.

7. Morall Obſerv. Murther followeth unlawfull luſt.

Verſ. 12. They will kill me, &c. Such is the force of unlawfull luſt and deſire, that they will not ſpare to kill, to fulfill their minde and pleaſures: as David did Vriah to enjoy his wife, Ahab, Naboth for his Vineyard, Muſculus.

8. Morall Obſer. Of flattering Courtiers.

Verſ. 15. The Princes of Pharao ſaw her and commended her: We ſee the property of flattering Courtiers, that ſeeke to pleaſe the Princes humour, and to feed his fancie, and deviſe how to ſerve his delight, Calvin. As the Wiſe man ſaith, Of a prince that hearkneth to lies, all his ſervants are wicked, Pro. 29. 12. ſo here as Pharao gave his minde to luſt and concupiſcence, his ſervants were likewiſe addicted.

9. Morall Obſerv. The great care the Lord hath over the righteous.

Verſ. 17. The Lord plagued Pharao: We ſee what great care God hath of his children: he for Abrahams ſake puniſhed the King: as it is ſaid in the Pſalmes, Hee rebuked Kings for their ſakes: ſo here we ſee verified that ſaying, Pſal. 34. 30. Many are the tribulations of the righteous, but the Lord deliverreth them out of all: Wherefore happy are they which truſt in the Lord: hee will never faile them.

10. Morall Obſerv. God the revenger of wedlocke-breakers.

Lib. de Abrahamo cap. 1.

Because of Sarai Abrahams wife: Thus it is evident, that God is the revenger of all wedlocke-breakers: for he will maintaine his owne ordinance: Ambroſe ſaith excellently, Nemo alienum affectet rorum, &c. let no man affect anothers bed, nor be enticed thereunto, inſcitia, vel ſtultitia mariti, vel longinqua abſentia: by the ignorance, ſimplicity, or abſence of the husband: adeſt præſul conjugii Deus, vicem abſentis mariti tuetur, obſervat excubias; God the Patron of marriage is preſent, he ſupplieth the roome of the husband being abſent, he keepeth watch, &c. ſo the Apoſtle alſo ſaith: whoremongers and adulterers God will judge, &c. Heb. 13. 4.

Chap. XIII.

1. The Method and Contents.

THere are three parts of this Chapter. 1. The bleſſing of God upon Abraham after his departure from Egypt, verſ. 1. to verſ. 7. 2. The departure of Lot from Abraham with the cauſe thereof, verſ. 7. to verſ. 12. 3. The renewing of Gods promiſe to Abraham, after that Lot was departed, verſ. 14. to the end.

In the firſt part theſe things are more particularly rehearſed. 1. Abrahams returne out of Egypt, verſ. 1. 2. His wealth, verſ. 2. 3. His thankfulneſſe to God, verſ. 3, 4. 4. The reward of thankfulneſſe, Lot is alſo made rich for Abrahams ſake, verſ. 5. They both in wealth ſo increaſed, that the land was not ſufficient for them, 6.

In the ſecond is ſet forth. 1. The diſſention betweene Abraham and Lots ſervants, verſ. 7. Abrahams reconciliation in friendly admonition, verſ. 8. and oblation of choice to Lot, verſ. 9. Lots election of his place, verſ. 10. his diſceſſion or departure, verſ. 11. a deſcription of the Countrey where Lot dwelt, by the quality of the ground, pleaſant and fruitfull, verſ. 10. of the people, they were wicked, verſ. 13.

In the third part theſe things are contained. 1. The place of Abrahams dwelling when Lot was departed, v. 12. 2. The renewing of the promiſe, both for the poſſeſſion of that Country, with the ratifying thereof, Abraham is bid to lift up his eyes, ver. 14. walke through the Country, and ſo as it were to take ſeiſin thereof, verſ. 17. as alſo concerning the multiplying of his ſeed, verſ. 6. 3. Abrahams thankfulneſſe, in building an Altar unto God, verſ. 18.

The Theologicall explication of doubts.

Quest. I. How and wherefore Abraham was rich.

Vers. 2. Abraham was very rich, &c. 1. Abraham became rich, partly by the goods left him by his father, partly by the gift of Pharao, cap. 12. 16. 2. Thus Gods promise begamne to be performed, chap. 12.2. I will blesse thee. yea Lot also is blessed with riches for Abrahams sake, as the Lord promised, I will blesse them that blesse thee, Iun. 3. Thus temporall blessings more abounded under the Law, when as yet the rich blessings of heavenly things in Christ were not manifestly revealed. 4. This returning of Abraham rich out of Egypt, was a type and figure of the rich estate of the Israelites at their returne out of Egypt, Mercer.

Quest. II. The cause of contention betweene Abraham and Lots servants.

Vers. 7. There was debate, &c. 1. This debate falleth out, that it might be as a bridle to Abraham, not to set his minde too much upon his wealth and prosperity, Calvin. 2. The cause of their falling out, Philo thinketh to be the insolencie of Lots servants, that were borne out by their master: the Latine text readeth as though Abraham and Lots flockes were all one and kept together; betweene the shepherd of the flocks of Abraham and Lot, but in the Hebrew the word is repeated; betweene the shepherds of Abraham and the shepherd of Lot: Neither was the cause, as the Hebrewes imagine, for that Abrahams servants being more righteous, reproved Lots servants for feeding the corne fields, and invading other mens grounds. It is like therefore they contended for want of pasture, because the land was not sufficient for them both, vers. 6, Oecolamp. Iunius: as also for their watering places, which in that drie Country were very scant: so we reade that Isaacks servants and the Philistims contended about the Wels which they digged, Genes. 26. Perer. 3. It is added, the Cananite was in the land, not for that Abraham feared, lest if their flocks kept together, their wealth should appeare the more, or for that Abraham should be forced to make them Umpires and Arbitrators of this contention: but to shew, that by reason that the Cananites possessed the better grounds, Abraham and Lot were driven to a strait for their cattell: as also it is a reason that moved Abraham to breake off strife, lest it might have beene an offence to the heathen.

Quest. III. How Abraham giveth Lot his choice.

Vers. 9. If thou wilt take the left hand, &c. 1. Abraham being the elder and more worthy person, departeth from his right for peace sake, and offereth the choice to Lot, Muscul. from whence as Rupertus thinketh, this custome did grow, that in parting of inheritance, major dividat, minor eligat, the elder should divide, the younger chuse. 2. For the left hand the Chalde readeth the North: for it should seeme, that Abraham having pitched his tents toward the East, had the North on his left hand, the South on the right. 3. And the meaning also may be this, that they would not goe farre asunder, but be still helpfull one to another, as the right hand to the left, Perer.

Quest. IV. Of the situation of Sodome and Gomorrha.

Vers. 10. Lot lift up his eyes and saw all the Plaine, &c. 1. He could not see all the Plaine of Iordan at once, but that part of it, where the pentapolis, i. these five Cities stood. 2. Sodome and Gomorrha are named as the principall, because they exceeded in all iniquity, whereas there are five Cities in all: their Country was pleasant before they were destroyed, by reason of the overflowing of the sweet waters of Jordan: at this time when Moses did write, it was inhabitable by reason of the pestilent and stinking smell: but at Lots first comming thither, which was twenty yeares before the destruction, it was a fruitfull Countrey. 3. Like unto the Paradise wherein Adam was created, which though never any mortall man saw, but Adam and Eve, yet it might appeare, what it was by Moses description. This pleasant Vallie then was watered with Jordan as Paradise with Euphrates, and Egypt with Nilus: though Egypt were watered with much more labour, Deut 11.10. 4. The words are not so to be read, as though it were like like that part of Egypt, as one goeth to Zoar, for there were many more Townes and Cities, situate betweene Egypt and Zoar, at this time called Bela, Gen. 14. 2. which is one of the five Cities, as Vatablus readeth, and Lyranus: but rather this is the right construction: to joyne the last clause, as one goeth to Zoar, to the first part of the sentence, so that the sense is this; that that part of the Plaine as one goeth to Zoar, as more fruitfull than the rest, was like to Paradise and Egypt: sic Muscul. Iun. Mercer. Per.

Quest. V. Of the River Iordan, the beginning and end thereof.

IOrdan. 1. This floud taking beginning from the Mountaine Libanus, ariseth out of two fountaines, called Dan and Jor, which joyned together, make the name Jordan. 2. Plinie and Solinus derive Jordan from the fountaine Paneas, but Ioseph fetcheth it further off, from a round fountaine or spring head, called Phiale: from whence it runneth under the ground to the fountaine Paneas, and that Philip Tetrach of Trachonitis, found it by this experiment, by casting into the spring Phiale, certaine light stuffe, which came out againe in the other spring head, Paneas. 3. This River Jordan after it hath runne some fifteene mile, falleth into the Lake or Fenne Samechonitis, which is the same that is called the waters of Merom, where Iosua encountred with King Iabin and his fellowes, Iosu. 11. 7. then passing along by Corazin and Capernaum, it falleth into the Lake Genezereth: and so having continued a current of an hundred miles in length, it falleth into the dead or salt Sea. 4. After Jordan is entred into this Lake, it loseth the sweetnesse of the waters, being mixed with the salt Sea, and loseth also the name Jordan: so that they seeme to be in a great errour, that affirme Jordan to runne into the ground, before it come at this dead Sea, called the Lake Asphaltitis, or of brimstone: for the Scripture testifieth the contrary, Iosu. 3. 16. where the nether waters of Jordan are said to runne into the salt Sea. 5. It may be that before Sodome and Gomorrha were destroyed, when there was no salt Lake, but a Plaine, Jordan had some other current: but now it is swallowed up of that Lake, and hath no issue forth againe, but passeth by a gulph into the earth. 6. This Jordan is the noblest of all Rivers, because of that miracle in the passing over of the Israelites: the parting of the waters againe by the Prophets Elias and Elizeus, the healing of Naamans leprosie: the baptisme of our blessed Saviour: ex Perer.

Ioseph. lib. 5. ad Bel. Iudaic. Jordan famous for the miracles there wrought.

Quest. VI. Of Lots departure from Abraham.

Vers. 11. THen Lot chose unto him all the Plaine, &c. 1. As Abrahams humility appeareth in offering Lot his choice; so in Lot appeareth some want of duty, in that he would choose first, Calvin. 2. He maketh an inconsiderate choice, preferring the goodnesse of the ground, before the badnesse of the people: and afterward Lot did smart for his choice, being carried away captive. 3. Thus God turneth this division and separation of Abraham and Lot to good. 1. That hereby Lot by his good example and admonitions might preach to the Sodomites. 2. That Abraham might have occasion to shew his valour in redeeming Lot from his enemies. 3. That hereby might be signified, the separation of Abrahams posterity in the Israelites, and of Lots in the Moabites and Ammonites. 4. That Lot might see by experience, the difference betweene dwelling with good men and evill. 5. Lot though he lived among the evill, consented not to their sinnes, as some of the Hebrewes thinke, but was grieved with their unjust conversation, as Saint Peter saith, 2 Epist. 2. 7. Therefore the Hebrewes are injurious to Lot, to thinke that of purpose he chose to dwell among the Sodomites, because they were evill, and like to himselfe: for Lot was ignorant of the manners of that place, as it seemeth Abraham also was, by his prayer which he made for Sodome, supposing that there were many righteous there: onely here was Lots oversight, that he made choice of the Countrey by his eye, not enquiring after the Inhabitants; ex Mercer.

Quest. VII. Whether Lot went from Abraham from the East, or toward the East.

Vers. 11. HE tooke his journey from the East: Thus most translators doe read, and hereof ariseth a great question, how Lot is said to goe from the East, when indeed he went toward the East: for Bethel, where Abraham now was, from whom Lot departed, is West-ward in respect of Sodome, whither Lot went. 1. R. Sel. is deceived, who thinketh that Lot indeed went toward the West, for Sodome is situated Eastward in respect of Bethel, as the Maps doe shew. 2. Neither did Lot depart from Abraham before he went downe to Egypt, as some thinke, when Abraham pitched his tents in a Mountaine Eastward from Bethel, Gen. 12. 8. for Lot came up with Abraham out of Egypt, Gen. 13. 1. 3. Neither yet with Onkelos whom Fagius followeth: it is a proper reading to say Lot departed from Abraham first, as the Chalde Paraphrast interpreteth. 4. Nor yet need we with some Hebrewes to flie unto Allegories, that Lot departed from the East, that is from the place of light, unto a place of corruption and unhappinesse, to his owne destruction. 5. Therefore the true reading is, that Abraham went not from the East, but toward the East: for so the word here used, Micchedem, is taken, Gen. 2. 8. God planted a Garden, Michedem, toward the East, not from the East, Iun. Mercer.

Quest. VIII. Of the sinne and wickednesse of Sodome.

Vers. 13. THe men of Sodome were exceeding wicked against the Lord. 1. Some reade, before the Lord, as the Sept. and Chalde Paraphrast: whereby Tostatus thinketh, that their unnaturall sinne (which still retaineth the name of Sodome, is signified) which is one of the three crying sinnes: murther is one, as the bloud of Abel is said to cry out of the earth: oppression is another, Exod. 2. the cry of the Israelites came up before the Lord: and the uncleannesse of Sodome is the third, Gen. 18. 21. Some thinke, that they sinned against their conscience, and so in the sight of God: Pererius, that the greatnesse of their sinne sinne is thereby expressed: as the Hebrewes use to adde the name of God, as a note of excellency, as they say the Cedars of God, or the Mountaines of God, for great and high Cedars or Mountaines: but by this phrase is expressed their impudencie and obstinacie, that sinned without feare of God or man: as appeareth *Gen.*19. when they furiously beset Lots house, to obtaine their filthy pleasure: so cap.6.11. the earth was said to be corrupt before God, Iun. 2. Iosephus writing of the sinnes of Sodome, saith, they were In homines contumeliosi, erga Deum impii, contumelious toward men, and impious toward God. So the Prophet Ezekiel saith, The sinnes of Sodome were pride, fulnesse of bread, abundance of idlenesse, they stretched not the hand to the poore: and among other sinnes, that sinne against nature did reigne amongst them: which Saint Paul sheweth to have beene familiar among the heathen, *Rom.*1. 27. The men burned in their lust one toward another: yea the Philosophers and wise men among the heathen were Patroons of this sinne, as Cicero complaineth of Plato. Further, this pollution of their bodies, sheweth they were corrupt also in their religion, and given to Idolatry, as Saint Paul sheweth one to bee the consequent of the other, *Rom.*1.26.

*Ioseph.*1. antiq. Ezech. 16. 49.

Quest. IX. Whether Abraham saw all the land of Canaan.

Vers.14. Lift up thine eyes, &c. 1. Abraham neither could see the whole land of Canaan at once, that was promised him: 2. Neither was it shewed unto him in vision, as Oecolampad. 3. Neither was an image or idea of the Countrey represented unto him: as Pererius thinketh, the like was exhibited to *Moses, Deut.*34. and *Matth.*4. to our Saviour Christ, which were nothing else but to turne a true storie into an imagined fantasie: and to make this more probable, he brought in a forged tale, out of a forged Author, the Dialogues that goe under Gregories his name, how Benedict saw the soule of Germanus inclosed in a firie speare: which represented the world: it seemeth strange, that so learned and judicious a man, would foist in such frierly tales, among other necessary matter. 4. But Augustines solution is here sufficient: that God doth not onely promise Abraham so much as hee seeth, but that also which hee is bid to walke thorow, vers.17. so they must bee put both together: Abraham might from some high place, as out of Mount Ebal or Garizim, as Tostatus thinketh, see a great part of the Countrey, Mascul. and the rest he walked thorow, Iunius.

Quest. X. How the land of Canaan was given to Abraham.

Vers.15. I will give unto thee. Yet Abraham had not so much as the breadth of a foot. Chrysostome sheweth well how this may be: Multa in aliis dicuntur, in aliis implentur: in the Scriptures many things are said of some, and fulfilled in others: as Noah saith of Canaan, that he should be a servant to his brethren, which was not fulfilled in him, but in his posterity, the Gibeonites; so Iacob saith concerning Levi, I will divide him in Iacob, &c. which came to passe in the Levites, which were of his seed: so that which is here promised to Abraham, was accomplished in his posterity.

*Hom.*8. in Matth.

Quest. XI. How the Israelites were said to be in number as the dust of the earth.

Vers.16. I will make thy seed as the dust, &c. 1. Hereby is signified the great increase both of Abrahams carnall and spirituall kindred, that should be in number as the dust of the earth. 2. Some of the Hebrewes, as Rabbi Salomon taketh this to be spoken of the reprobate, which are compared to the dust, because they are not had in any remembrance or number before God: True it is, that the elect are numbred with God, and he knoweth also the numbers of the wicked, but regardeth them nor. Like as he that buildeth an house, numbreth not the stones that goe to the building, yet the principall parts and divisions in the house, he keepeth an account of: yet this is not the meaning here. 3. But it is an hyperbolicall speech, which is often used in Scripture, whereby it signified, not indeed that they should bee in number as the dust, for all the people in the earth put together, cannot compare with the dust in number: but they should be a very great people: not compared with others, for so many people were greater than they, *Deut.*7.1. but considered in themselves, Quest. XII. Of the divers readings of this word gnolam ever in Scripture.

Vers.15. To thy seed for ever. 1. This word in the Hebrew, gnolam, which the Septuagint translateth by the word haion, ever: doth not alwayes in Scripture signifie an everlasting time without end: as *Exod.*15.18. The Lord shall reigne for ever and ever. The first word is gnolam, the other ged, this latter signifieth true eternity, as the Lord is said to dwell in eternity, Isay 57.15. the other seemeth to imply the age of this world: the Lord shall reigne then for ever during this world and the next: thus the Greeke aion, is taken by forren writers. Aristotle defineth it to be, periodus durationis cujusque rei, the period or time of continuance of any thing, *lib.*1. de cœlo. So Horace useth the word aternum, Serviet aternum, qui parvo nescit uti. He shall ever be a slave or servant, that cannot tell how to make much of a little, as hee is alleaged by Augustine.

*quæst in Gen.*33.

2. Yet Hieromes observations doe not alwayes hold, that gnolam is with vau, signifieth eternity, without vau, the yeare of the Jubile: for *Deut.*15.17. gnolam is with vau: and yet it betokeneth the Jubile: he shall be thy servant for ever.

Hier. in 1. c. 2. ad Galat.

3. Wherefore this word is diversly taken in Scripture, beside that it signifieth an everlasting time without end. 1. It is used for the duration or continuance of the world, as the Rain-bow was a signe of Gods everlasting covenant, that is, so long as the world continueth. 2. It signifieth the whole time of a mans life, *Psal.*89.1. I will sing the mercies of the Lord for ever, that is, as long as I live. So Anna promised that that Samuel ſhould abide before the Lord for ever, 1 Sam. 1, 22. 3. It ſignifieth a long indefinite time, though not infinite without end, as Gen. 6. 4. which of old time were men of renowne. 4. It was uſed to ſignifie the yeare of Jubile, which was the ſpace of fifty yeares. 5. That is called eternall, whoſe time is not prefixed with man, though it be with God: as circumciſion is called an everlaſting covenant, becauſe it was not to be altered by man. 6. Some thing is called eternall, not in reſpect of it ſelfe, but that which it ſignifieth: as ſome thinke the land of Canaan is called an everlaſting poſſeſſion, Gen. 17. 8. becauſe it was a figure of the celeſtiall Canaan, Pererius.

Quest. XIII. How the land Canaan was given for ever to Abraham and his ſeed.

NOw in that the Lord ſaith, The land which thou ſeeſt, I will give to thee and thy ſeed for ever: Theſe words are taken by ſome literally, by others ſpiritually, by others partly literally, partly ſpiritually.

Lib. 16. de Civ. Dei. cap. 12. 1. Auguſtine thinketh, that it may be underſtood ſimply, becauſe the Jewes dwelt in ſome Cities of Canaan ſtill, though they were expulſed Jeruſalem: but though it were ſo, yet the Jewes were not Lords, or poſſeſſors of all that land: and howſoever it was in Auguſtines time, that Countrey is not poſſeſſed of them now: and indeed long before Auguſtines time, the Jewes were expelled by Adrian the Emperour.

2. Some doe take theſe words literally; but with a condition, that the land of Canaan ſhould be ſo long their poſſeſſion, as they walked in obedience before God, as Deut. 4. 25. If yee corrupt your ſelves, &c. ye ſhall periſh from the land. Iun. Mercer. Cajetane to this purpoſe hath a good conceit, as if the Lord ſhould ſay, quamdiu erit ſemen tuum, &c. as long as they ſhall be thy ſeed, I will give them this land: therefore when they beganne to degenerate from Abraham, and were not his right children, God was no longer tied to his promiſe.

3. Some further, that like beſt of the literall ſenſe, doe by ever underſtand a long continuance of time: for ſo the Iſraelites, the ſeed of Abraham poſſeſſed Canaan 1640. yeares, Perer. But this doth not fully ſatisfie: that the ſpace of leſſe than two thouſand yeares ſhould be counted an everlaſting time.

4. Others by ever, doe take all the time of the law till the Meſſiah come, that ſhould renew the world by his comming: as Samuel ſaith, that God would have eſtabliſhed Sauls Kingdome for ever, 1 Sam. 13. 13. Muſculus, Oecolampad. This ſenſe may very well ſtand concerning the ceremonies, that were to give place unto Chriſts doctrine, but the poſſeſſion of Canaan, if the Jewes had beleeved, ſhould have beene no impediment to Chriſts Kingdome.

5. Some doe underſtand here the ſpirituall ſeed of Abraham, and the ſpirituall or celeſtiall Canaan, which the faithfull ſhall poſſeſſe for ever: but this were to turne an hiſtory into an allegory.

Lib. 16. Civ. Dei. cap. 11. 6. They which interpret theſe words partly ſpiritually, partly literally, ſome take the land of Canaan for that Countrey which was ſhewed Abraham, but by the ſeed they would have underſtood the faithfull, the ſpirituall kindred of Abraham: and ſo Auguſtine ſaith, that the Chriſtians inhabited that Countrey after the Jewes; but the Chriſtians inhabit it not now, for Saracens and Turks have ſubdued it, therefore it was not their poſſeſſion for ever.

7. Others underſtand, the land promiſed ſpiritually, but the ſeed literally for Chriſt, who was truly deſcended of Abraham, Matth. 1. 1. and ſo Saint Paul by ſeed inſinuateth Chriſt, Galat. 3. 16. ſo unto Chriſt & his members the promiſe of the heavenly Canaan belongeth, Iunius. This ſenſe is confirmed by the Prophet Ezechiel, 37. 24. David my ſervant ſhall be King over them, &c. & they ſhall dwell in the land that I have given unto Iacob my ſervant, where your fathers have dwelt, and they ſhall dwell therein, they and their ſons, and their ſons ſons for ever. Saint Paul alſo by ſeed underſtandeth Chriſt, Gal. 3. 16. Thus we ſee that not only the land of Canaan, but the whole earth is inhabited by the Chriſtians, the ſpirituall ſeed of Chriſt the ſon of David and King: and to them appertaine the promiſes of the celeſtiall Canaan, whereof the terreſtriall was a type and figure, Mercer. This ſenſe together with the ſecond before alleaged, of the hypothetical, that is, conditionall promiſes, ſeeme to be moſt fit and proper, and before the reſt to be preferred.

Quest. XIV. Whether Abraham walked thorow the land as the Lord bid him.

Verſ. 18. THen Abraham removed his tent, and came and dwelt in the Plaine of Mamre: Abraham did not preſently, as ſome Hebrewes thinke, goe over all the land of Canaan, neither is it like as Toſtatus collecteth, becauſe Abraham dwelt in this Plaine, that he did not walke thorow the land, as the Lord bid him, verſ. 17. and therefore he ſaith it is not imperium, but motivum ad gaudium, it was no commandement, but a motive to Abraham to his farther joy, &c. for Abraham had walked thorow a good part already, and no doubt did alſo take a view of the reſt to his farther comfort, as time and opportunity ſerved. Calvin. Muſculus. Mercer. it is not like he would neglect any thing, that might either increaſe his joy, or confirme his faith. 2. This Plaine of Mamre neare Hebron was not out of that Countrey, called Canaan, as Cajetane thinketh: for Hebron was in Canaan, Geneſ. 23. 2. and this abode of Abraham in Hebron, is that dwelling of Abraham in the land of Canaan mentioned, verſ. 12. 3. This Plaine or Valley, in Hebrew Eelon, which ſignifieth an Oake, as the Septuagint tranſlate, was beſet and planted with Oakes and other trees, Geneſ. 18. 8. 4. It was called of Mamre the Amorite, either the planter of the trees, or poſſeſſor of the ground, who had two other brothers, Eſchol, and Aner, confederate with Abraham, Geneſ. 14. 13. 24.

Quest. XV. Of the ſituation, antiquity, and name of Hebron.

COncerning Hebron, three things briefly ſhall be declared. 1. The deſcription and ſituation of it. 2. The antiquity. 3. Of the name.

1. Hebron

1. Hebron was situate in the land of Canaan: there was the habitation of Abraham, and there first reigned David: two famous monuments this City had, the tree that Abraham entertained the Angels under, *Gen.*18.8. for the tree, Iosephus saith it was a Turpentine tree; Torebinthus thought to have continued from the beginning of the world till his time: Hierome saith it was an Oake that lasted till Constantines reigne; Borchardus saith it was Ulmus, an Elme tree, which was to be seene till his time, who lived some 300. yeare since: yet not the same tree, but another, which did spring out of the root of the old, and that is most like: there also is the double cave, which Abraham bought for buriall: where Iosephus saith in his time were to bee seene Abraham and the other Patriarks monuments of marble: Borchardus saith in his time there was built a Church. Hierome that Abrahams Mausoleum or tombe remained there till his time: ex Perer.

Lib.5. de bell. Iudic.c.7. Liber. de locis Hebraicis.

Borchard. Monuments of the Patriarks in Hebron.

Borchard maketh mention of two other monuments in Hebron: of a certaine cave not farre off in a roche, where it is said that Adam and Eve continued 100. yeares mourning for their sonne Abel: as also of a certaine field, that hath soft red earth, pliable like wax, whereout they say Adam was made: but these are but conjectures of no certainty.

And so is also that of Hierome, that Adam was buried in Hebron; because the Latine text readeth thus, *Iosu.*14.15. Ibi Adam maximus inter Enacim situs est: There Adam the greatest of the Anakims is placed, which words are otherwise in the Hebrew: He, that is Arba, was a great man among the Anakims: Adam is not here a name proper, but appellative: and Adam by the most of the ancient Writers is held to have beene buried not in Hebron, but in Mount Calvarie, as Origen, Cyprian, Athanasius, Ambrose, with others.

Adam whether buried in Hebron.

2. For the antiqrity of Hebron. 1. It cannot be so old as some thinke, that it was the first City which was built in the world by Adam, and there Noah to have beene borne: Ioan. Annius: for Henoch builded by Cain, is the first City named in Scripture. 2. Neither is it so ancient as some Hebrewes conjecture, to have beene built by Cham, as Rabbi Salomon: or within 90. yeares after the floud: as Iosephus, who maketh it 2300. yeares elder than his time: for the tower and City of Babel, which were built somewhat above 100. yeare after the floud, are thought to be the first after the floud. 3. And whether Hebron bee more ancient than Memphis is uncertaine, as Iosephus saith it was: but it is evident that it was built seven yeares before Zoan in Egypt, *Num.*13.23. which is not Memphis, but Tanis in Egypt, as both the Chald. and Greeke Interpreters read in that place.

Hebron how ancient.

3. This Hebron was first called the City of Arba, *Genes.*23.2. Iosua 14.15. Arbe signifieth foure: it was not so named either because the foure Patriarks, Adam, Abraham, Isaach, Iacob, and the foure Matrons, Eua, Sara, Rebecca, Lea, were there buried: as the Hebrewes thinke: for whether Adam and Eva were there buried, is uncertaine: nor yet because it was tetrapolis, a City consisting of foure parts, Ioan. Annius: but it was so called of Arba the father or founder of the great Anakims, Iosua 14.15.

It was afterward called Chebron, not of Chebron the sonne of Mareschah, the sonne of Caleb, mentioned 1 *Chro.*2.42. as Hierome and Musculus thinke; for it had that name long before that Chebron was borne: but I rather approve Origens conjecture; who alludeth to the signification of the word, which betoketh a conjunction or joyning together of the root chabar: because there saith he, conjugia patrum, & reliquiæ jacent, the bodies of those married couples, Abraham with Sara, Isaach with Rebecca, Iacob with Lea, are there buried.

Whence Hebron was so called.

*Greg.hom.*18. in Iosuah.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Faith is of things not seene, but hoped for.

Vers.15. ALL the land which thou seest, &c. Here that saying of the Apostle is verified; faith is the evidence of things which are not seene, *Heb.*11.1. for Abraham had not yet the breadth of a foot in all this Countrey which is promised him, but by faith he seeth farre off, and beleeveth it should be given to his seed.

2. Doct. God alloweth of no will-worship.

Vers.18. IN that Abraham built an Altar; he did it not of himselfe, but as he was directed by God: whereby we are taught, that nothing should be brought into the worship of God without his warrant, Calvin: all such worship is called by the Apostle, ἐθελοθρησκεία, will-worship.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Riches not to be cast away.

Vers.2. ABraham was very rich in cattell, silver, and gold, &c. Hence appeareth the superstition of Monks and Friers, that thinke that perfection consisteth in poverty, riches are not then to be cast away, Abraham enjoyed them: rich men may please God in their rich estate, so they set not their heart upon their wealth: Augustine well sheweth it in that parable, Luk. 16. Lazarus pauper in sinum divitis Abrahami receptus est: poore Lazarus was received into rich Abrahams bosome; both rich and poore then, if they be faithfull may enter into heaven, Calvin.

2. Confut.

2. Conſect. The vulgar Latine text not of Hieromes tranſlation.

Verſ. 13. WHereas the Septuagint tranſlate, exceeding ſinners in the ſight of God. Herome findeth fault with that tranſlation: and ſaith, it is ſuperfluouſly added, for the Sodomites were ſinners alſo before men: But whereas the Latine text to the ſame ſenſe, readeth, coram Domino, before the Lord: hence it is evident, that it is not Hieromes tranſlation, though it commonly beare his name: for it is not like he would reprove his owne worke.

6. Place of Morall obſervation.

1. Obſerv. That riches be no let unto our vocation.

Verſ. 2. ABraham was very rich, and yet his riches were no impediment to him; let rich men learne by his example, that they be not entangled and hindred by their riches from going forward in their vocation, Calvin: and as the Apoſtle ſaith, that they be not high minded, nor truſt in uncertaine riches, &c. 1 *Timoth.*6.17, that they be rich in good works, as Abraham was.

2. Obſerv. The inconvenience of riches.

Verſ. 6. A*Braham* and Lot, before their riches did ſo mightily increaſe, were inſeparable companions: but being growne now to be rich, they can no longer dwell together: ſo they whom neither poverty, nor want, nor weary journies, nor ſtrange Countries could part, riches and proſperity divide: if in theſe holy men riches brought forth this inconvenience, how much harder is it for rich men to keepe them within bounds? Mer. Muſculus. for as the Apoſtle ſaith, They that be rich, fall into temptation and ſnare, 1 *Timoth.*6.9.

3. Obſerv. Of humility towards our inferiours.

Verſ. 7. THen Abraham ſaid to Lot, &c. Chryſoſtome well noteth here, Cogita quemadmodum ſenior juniori ceſſerit, patruus nepoti, &c. Conſider how the elder giveth place to the younger, the uncle to the nephew, he that had received great grace of God, to him that yet had ſhewed no proofe of his vertue. We learne hereby, not onely to honour our ſuperiours, but to be humble toward our inferiours, as the Apoſtle ſaith, *In giving of honour goe one before another, make your ſelves equall to them of the lower ſort, Rom.*12.10.16.

4. Obſerv. Gods patience in ſuffering the wicked.

Verſ. 13. THe men of Sodome were wicked, &c. God ſometime beareth with the wicked, yea, and ſuffereth them to enjoy temporall bleſſings: as here the Sodomites inhabited the moſt fruitfull Vallies: but they, as the Apoſtle ſaith, *deſpiſed the riches of his bountifulneſſe, &c. not knowing that the bounty of God leadeth them to repentance, Rom.*2.4. Calvin.

5. Obſerv. God will not ſhew himſelfe where diſſenſion is.

Verſ. 14. THen the Lord ſaid to Abraham, &c. When Lot was now departed, and the occaſion of diſſenſion cut off, then the Lord appeared to Abraham: ſo that God will not ſhew himſelfe, nor the ſpirit of peace there dwell, where is contention. Perer. As Saint Peter ſheweth, that by diſſention prayers are interrupted, 1 *Pet.*3.7.

6. Obſerv. It is dangerous to love preeminence.

Verſ. 15. ALL the land which thou ſeeſt. Chryſoſtome noteth, quantum malum ſit amare primatum, what an hurtfull thing it is to love to have preeminence: becauſe Lot, that tooke upon him to chuſe firſt, and as he thought, the beſt ground, yet gained nothing by it: for not long after he was carried away captive. Likewiſe we ſee, what a rich thing a contented minde is, Abraham that was content to take the worſt lot, hath the whole Countrey given unto him: ſo the Lord to Salomon, that onely craved wiſdome, gave honour, and riches beſide in great abundance, 1 *King.*3. Marlorat.

A contented minde a rich gift.

CHAP. XIV.

1. The parts and contents.

THis Chapter hath two parts. In the firſt is ſet forth the overthrow of Sodome, and taking of Lot priſoner. In the ſecond, the victory of Abraham

In the firſt are expreſſed. 1. Betweene whom the battell was verſ.1.2. 2. The occaſion, verſ.4. 3. The order: firſt they fight againſt the lands of the tyrants, verſ.5. then againſt the five Kings of the Plaine, verſ.8. 4. The ſucceſſe of the battell, the Kings are diſcomfited, verſ.10. their ſubſtance carried away, verſ.11. Lot taken priſoner, verſ.13.

In the ſecond: 1. There is the battell of Abraham, his preparation, verſ.13. the order of it, verſ.14. the ſucceſſe, verſ.15. 2. Abrahams triumph deſcribed by the perſons that met him, and by Abrahams behaviour behaviour: the persons that came to meet him were two Kings, Melchisedeck that blessed God, and blessed Abraham, vers. 19, 20. and confronted him with bread and wine, vers. 18. the King of Sodome, that would onely have rewarded Abraham temporally with the goods that he had received, vers. 21. In Abrahams behaviour is set forth his godlinesse toward Melchisedeck, in paying tithe of all in token of his thankfulnesse, vers. 20. to ward the King of Sodome his wisdome, in refusing to be made rich by him, vers. 22, 23. his justice, in not depriving his confederates of their right, vers. 24.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. Of what Country these foure Kings were that fought against Sodome.

Vers. 1. THese Kings here named, were neither Armenians, as Eupolemus in Eusebius, which was a Country too remote from Sodome. 2. Nor yet Persians, which was the opinion of one Diodorus Tarsens. for as yet the Persians had no dominion, but were in subjection to others. 3. Neither is Mercator reason good, that these were not under the Assyrians, because they are called Kings: for the King of Assur had other Kings under him: as he saith, Are not my Princes altogether Kings, Isay 10. 8. as the Romans had divers Kings tributary to them. 4. But Iosephus opinion is more probable: that the Assyrians at this time were the chiefe commanders, and that these foure were the captaines of the King of Assurs armies. And this may appeare, because the five Kings of the valley had beene subject twelve yeares, vers. 4. but in those dayes all the East Countries were in subjection to the King of Assur. 5. The Hebrewes make these foure, understand the foure Monarchies: by Semeer, the Monarchie of the Chaldeans: by Ellasar the Persians: by Elam the Grecians: by the Nations the Romans: that as these foure did fight against Canaan, but were overcome of Abraham, so the foure Monarchies should afflict Israel, but at the last should be subdued by their Messiah, whom they imagine shall be a temporall King: wherein they are in error and blinded to this day. 6. Some make an allegory of this story, understanding by the foure Kings, the foure affections, affections, by the five Kings of Canaan, the five senses subject to the affections, which shall be freed by Christ: but it is best thus to convert historicall narrations, into allegoricall collections, ex Mercer.

Quest. II. Of the particular Countries of these foure Kings.

Amraphel, not Nimrod.

Vers. 1. Amraphel. This could not be Nimrod, as Lyranus and Tostatus thinke, for if Nimrod were Belus, the father of Ninus, he was dead above an hundred yeares before: for Abraham is held by Eusebius and others, to have beene borne in the 43. yeare of Ninus reigne, who reigned 89. yeares longer, and Abraham was now about 80. yeare old. It is more like that this Amraphel was Ninus the sonne of Semiramis, that reigned after her: Semiramis reigned 42. yeares after Ninus, and Ninias after her 38. yeares: so that Abrahams fourescore yeare fell out in the 28. of Ninus reigne, Perer.

Arioch King of Ellasar.

Arioch could not be King of Pontus, being a Countrey so farre distant, as Hierome readeth, and toward the West: nor yet of Hellespontus, as Tostatus: but this Ellasar was a part of the Province Susiane, belonging to Assiria: there is mention made also of one Arioch King of the Elameans, Judith 1. 6. but that was Dejoces King of the Medes: sic Iunius.

King of Elam.

Chedorlaomer King of Elam, that is, of the Elymeans, or Elamites, as Iosephus called them in the upper part of Persia.

Tidal King of the Nations.

Tidal King of the Nations: not so called because of his large Dominion, but both because he was King of the neare Countries Northward, which was inhabited, by reason of merchandise, of people of divers Countries, where was Galilea called of the Gentiles, Iun. Perer. also because he had in his armie people of divers nations, Calvin. a learned man maketh it a proper name, calling Tidal King of Goiim. Consent. Mercer.

Quest. III. Of the Vale of Siddim, of the salt or dead Sea.

Vers. 3. These joyned together in the vale of Siddim. 1. That it was a salt Valley, as the Septuagint read, it is like, because it was full of pits of brimstone, vers. 10. also it is probable, that it was full of tilled and field grounds, as the Chalde translateth, and the word Siddim signifieth: it was not then a desart and untilled valley, as Eugubinus readeth: neither yet full of wood, as the vulgar Latine hath: for then it had beene an unfit place for them to joyne battell in. 2. That which was the Vale of Siddim, is now the salt Sea, called the dead Sea, or Lake. Asphaltite, of the store of brimstone: which Lake was not there before the destruction of Sodome and Gomorrha, as Cajetane and Oleaster thinke, but caused by the overthrow of those Cities. For though it be a great Lake, 1680. furlongs in length, and 150. in breadth, as Iosephus writeth, yet considering the extraordinary worke of God, in the destruction of those Cities, it might be gathered together, and partly breake out of the earth by Gods speciall worke, to be a perpetuall monument of Gods judgements upon those wicked Cities, Perer.

Quest. IV. Of the Rephaims.

Vers. 5. Smote the Rephaims, &c. 1. Moses maketh mention of the overthrow of those Gyants, that Gods power might be knowne, in giving victory to Abrahams small company against them, that were too strong for Gyants, Chrysostome. 2. Raphaim is sometime taken for strong men, such as Gyants are, as Deut. 2. 20. the Zamzummims are said to be Rephaim, Gyants: but here they are taken for a certaine people of the Canaanites, as appeareth, Gen. 15. 20. which might be so called of the Gyant Harraphah, 1 Chron. 20. 4.

Ashtaroth Carnaita.

3. Ashtaroth Carnaim. 1. It is also called Ashtaroth simply without any addition, Iosu. 13. 31. 2. Carnaim signifieth having two hornes: wherein Nehemanus is deceived, that thought Ashtaroth to be an hill with two tops: for Eusebius testifieth, that there was a City not farre from Sodome, called Carnea. 3. Ashtaroth, Augustine saith, in the Punick language signifieth Iuno, the goddesse Iuno: some thinke that it came of Astante, which was the name of Venus. Cicer. lib. 3. de Natur. Deor. Perer. ex Muse. but it is most like to come of Ashterah, the Idoll of the Sidonians, which was made like a sheepe.

Zuzim

4. Zuzims are the same, which are called Zamzummis, Deut. 2. 19. where mention also is made of the Emims, vers. 10.

Hier. de loc. Hebraic. Shaveh.

5. Shaveh: Hierome saith there was a City of that name, not farre from the Countrey of the Sodomites, and Mercerus taketh it to be the name of a City here: but seeing another City is named with it, Kiriathaim, which was also called Kiriath Baal, and Kiriath Jarim, the City of woods: it is more probable, as Iunius, Tostatus, Oleaster, read, that Saveh rather signifieth the Plaine of Kiriathaim: for to joyne two Cities together, being much distant, hath no great shew of reason.

Seir.

6. The Horites, are the Horims, that dwelt in Mount Seir, before the children of Esau chased them thence, Deut. 1. 11. Borchardus saith, there were five Mountaines called by the name of Seir, 1. per Abnumer. 8. It was called Seir, that is, hairie, of Esau. Hierome.

Quest. V. Of the Plaine of Paran.

7. THe Plaine of Paran, &c. This was the name both of a City, and of that great vast desart, &c. wherein the children of Israel sojourned thirty eight yeares, being of eleven dayes journey to passe thorow: barren, without water, neither inhabited of man or beast, and full of rocks, and covered with deepe sand, Perer.

Mispat.

Vers. 7. They returned and came to En Mispat, which is interpreted the fountaine of judgement, so called, because there the Lord judged the Israelites for their murmuring, Hierome. As also gave sentence against Moses and Aaron, for their weakenesse and want of faith, Numb. 20. 12. Iun.

Quest.

QVEST. V. Kadeſh Barnea, whether the ſame with Kadeſh where Moſes murmured.

KAdeſh: This is that place, which is famous for Miriam, Moſes ſiſters buriall there, Num. 20. 1. whoſe monument Hierome ſaith, remained till his time: it was in the utmoſt borders of Edom, ibid. verſ. 16. ſuppoſed to be the ſame with Kadeſh Barne, Peter. Afterwards it was called Rechem, as Onkelos the Chalde Paraphraſt readeth, Num. 13. 27. Iunius. Great queſtion there is among the Hebrewes, whether Kadeſh Barnea, mentioned, Deut. 1. 2. were the ſame with that Kadeſh where Miriam died, Num. 20. 1. Ramban thinketh that there were two places of that name: Kadeſh Barnea was in the wilderneſſe of Paran, from whence the ſpies were ſent, Num. 13. 26. the other Kadeſh was in the wilderneſſe of Sin, Num. 33. 36. But Raſi, and Elias Orientall, take them to be all one, and make the deſart of Sin to bee part of the great vaſt wilderneſſe of Paran: to the firſt ſubſcribeth Mercerus, to the other ſeemeth Iunius to incline; the latter I thinke more probable: for the Kadeſh where Miriam was buried, and Moſes murmured, was in the confines of Edom, Num. 20. 16. ſo alſo Kadeſh Barnea was not farre from Mount Seir, Deut. 1. 12. which was in the Countrey of Edom. And in this place Kadeſh is the ſame with En Miſphat, ſo called, not becauſe of the judgement of the Kings in that place, as Mercerus conjectureth: but of the judging of the Iſraelites, becauſe there they murmured: this Kadeſh is here deſcribed not to be farre from Mount Seir, and the Plaine of Pharan. Kadeſh.

The Amalekites were ſo called afterward of Amaleke, the nephew of Eſau, Gen. 36. 12. theſe were they which fought againſt Iſrael, Exod. 17. and were deſtroyed by Saul, 1 Sam. 15. Amalekites.

Hazezon Tamer: the City of Palmes, for ſo tamar ſignifieth, which was named afterward En gaddi, Hierom, Iunius. Hazezon.

QVEST. VI. How the King of Sodome and Gomorrhe fell into the ſlimie pits.

Verſ. 10. THe Kings of Sodome and Gomorrhe fell there, &c. 1. Theſe were not empty pits, as ſome Hebrewes thinke, out of the which they uſed to digge ſlimie earth, but they were full of ſlime and brimſtone, for otherwiſe it had beene no danger to fall into them. 2. Theſe two Kings did not fall in by chance, as they fled away, for they could not be ignorant of the ground. 3. Neither did they willingly caſt themſelves in, as Ramban thinketh, to decline the force of the battell: but they were forced as they were chaſed, to fall into them. 4. Neither were theſe two Kings preſerved by miracle there, and afterward taken out by Abraham, as the Hebrewes imagine: for the King of Sodome came forth to meet Abraham, verſ. 17. he ſtayed not till he tooke him out. 5. Neither is it like that the King of Gomorrhe, as Ramban thinketh, died there, ſeeing the King of Sodome, that was in the ſame danger eſcaped. 6. Nor yet need we to ſay, that theſe Kings armies there fell, but they themſelves fled away. For this is contrary to the text. 7. But it is moſt like, that theſe ſlimie pits were not full of water, but of that kinde of earth, ſo that they which fell into them, might eſcape with their life. The other three Kings, which are not mentioned, might bee of that number, that fled to the mountaines, and ſo were reſerved to a greater judgement, Mercer.

QVEST. VII. Of the meſſenger that brought Abraham word.

Verſ. 13. THen came one that had eſcaped, &c. 1. The Jewes doe but trifle, in ſaying that this was Og King of Baſhan that eſcaped, when the Amorites were ſlaine. 2. Neither is it evident, whether this meſſenger were a godly and faithfull man, Calvin. 3. It is like he might be ſome of Lots domeſticall ſervants, or one that was acquainted with Abraham and Lots kindred, becauſe he onely reported the newes concerning Lot, Muſcul. 4. Some Hebrewes thinke, that the enemies which had taken Lot, ſent this meſſenger of purpoſe, that Abraham alſo comming to reſcue Lot, might bee taken, but that is unlike.

QVEST. VIII. Whence Abraham was called the Hebrew.

TO Abraham the Hebrew. 1. The Hebrewes were not ſo called of Abraham, as Artapanus thinketh in Euſebius: for how could Abraham give a name to himſelfe: and Abraham beginneth with Aleph; Hebrew with Anin. Euſeb. lib. 9. de prepar. Evang. cap. ulti. hom. 35. in Gen.

2. Neither was Abraham ſo called of Haber, or gnabar, becauſe he did firſt come over the river: which name was therefore, as Chryſoſtome thinketh, by prohecie given to Abraham, foreſeeing that hee ſhould goe over Euphrates to Paleſtina. Of this opinion alſo are the Septuagint, Origen, Rupertus, that Abraham was ſo called, à tranſitu, of his going over.

3. But the Hebrewes were ſo called of Heber: of which opinion are Hierom, Ioſephus, Euſebius, Auguſtine, with others: the reaſons thereof are theſe. 1. If Hebrew came of Haber rather than Heber, the word ſhould have beene Habrew, rather than Hebrew. 2. The Hebrewes doe end their names of Nations and kindreds in Jod, as Iuhudi, Amaleci: therefore this name Hibri, which ſignifieth an Hebrew, is moſt like to be derived of the proper name Heber, ſic Eugubinus. 3. But Auguſtines reaſon is beſt, who thinketh that Sem is ſaid to be the father of all the ſonnes of Heber. Gen. 10. 21. becauſe the elect people of the Hebrewes came of him. 4. This alſo may be added, that ſeeing the Hebrew language was named of Heber, becauſe it was preſerved in his family, when other tongues were divided, that from thence alſo the Nation ſhould be ſo called. Lib. 18. de Civit. Dei, cap. 3.

4. But where it is objected, that many nations beſide came of Heber, that are not called Hebrewes: they only kept the name of Heber, that continued in Hebers faith: and though Abraham be not called Hebrew before he came over the river into Paleſtina, ſo neither is he called ſo immediately upon his paſſage, and the reason hereof may be, because till Abraham was called, the Scripture maketh no mention of his former acts, Perer.

Quest. IX. Of Abrahams confederacie with men of a divers faith.

Vers. 13. Which were confederate with Abraham. The question here is, whether it were lawfull for Abraham to make league with these Amorites, being of a divers faith. The answer is, 1. They sought it of Abraham, as did also Abimelech, because they saw that the Lord was with him, and therefore they desired his friendship, Abraham sued not to them. 2. The time was not yet come for the expelling of the Canaanites, for then it was unlawfull for them to make league with them, as the Israelites answer the Gibeonites, Iosua 9.7. wherefore the times must be distinguished, Muscul. 3. All this was done not without Gods speciall direction, who moved these confederates to assist Abraham, being a stranger in the land, and of no great power, Calvin. 4. The Hebrewes also thinke, that those three were of Abrahams faith, and worshippers of God, and that Abraham therefore made a league with them.

Quest. X. By what authority Abraham waged battell.

Vers. 14. When Abraham heard that his brother was taken, &c. The question is, by what authority Abraham addresseth him to battell. 1. Neither was the authority of Mamre Eshol and Aver, Lords of the Ammorites, sufficient, for they were all subjects to the King of Elam, vers. 4. Neither did the King of Elam take unjust warre in hand, as some thinke, for he came to suppresse rebels, vers. 3. But wheras there are three things required to make just warre, a good cause, a good affection in following it, and lawfull authority: Abraham had all these: his cause was good, to redeeme his brother Lot, whom the enemie had unlawfully taken captive, being a stranger, and not accessary to the Sodomites rebellion: thus the Wise man saith, Wilt thou not preserve those that are laid to be slaine? Prov. 24.11. Againe, Abrahams affection was good, he sought not to make himselfe rich, neither did he seeke himselfe in this businesse, vers. 22. but the glory of God: his authority was also from God, as Melchisedeck saith, The God delivered his enemies into his hand, vers. 20. And Abraham was now in right, though not in possession, the King and Lord of this Countrey; whereof the Lord would aforehand give some testimonie, as Moses by slaying the Egyptian did manifest his calling, Exod. 2. Muscul. 4. And whereas he recovered not onely Lot, but the rest of the Sodomites: this also was done by the Lords direction, because he had reserved them to a greater punishment, Muscul. but these particular actions are not to be drawne into example, but must be discerned from the generall duties of Christians.

3. Conditions required in lawfull warre.

Quest. XI. Of the City Dan.

He pursued them to Dan, &c. 1. For the situation: Dan bounded the land of Palestina on the North as Bersabe on the South: it was planted at the foot of Libanus, where was the spring head of the floud Jordan, Iunius: it is distant from Sidon 55. miles, and therefore it is said to bee farre from Sidon, Iud. 18.28. 2. It is famous for many acts and exploits there done: both good and bad: there Ieroboam set up his golden calfe, 1 King. 12. there Peter uttered that excellent confession of Christ, Matth. 16. and the woman was healed of her bloudy issue, Perer. 3. It was first called Leshem, Ios. 19.47. or Laish, Iud. 18.28. then Paneas, after that, Cæsaria Philippi, by the Tetrarch Philippus, and lastly, Neronia, by Agrippa, in the honour of Nero. 4. But whereas this place was called Dan long after Moses time, Iud. 18.18. I thinke it probable, that Ezra, or some other of the Prophets inspired of God, that did digest the Scriptures into order, did insert these names into the story, which were not knowne to Moses, for the better evidence thereof: But that Ezra did write the Scriptures anew which should be burned, when the City was taken, as thinke some of the fathers, Irenæus, Tertullian, Clem. Alexandrinus seemeth to be false otherwise: and but a fable borrowed from counterfeit Ezra, lib. 2. cap. 14.44. For Daniel being in captivity, maketh mention of his reading of Ieremies prophecie, Dan. 9. which then was not perished: and our Savjour saith, Moses writ of him, Ioh. 5. But if Moses works were utterly perished, and Ezra had renewed them, Ezra not Moses had written of him: Ezra might restore the holy bookes defaced in continuance of time, to their former perfection: but wholly write and compose them againe he did not.

Moses, how he mentioneth names not knowne in his time.

Quest. XII. What number Abraham taketh with him.

Vers. 15. He and his servants divided themselves, &c. 1. Abraham armeth his owne servants, and such as were borne in his house, which would be more trusty and faithfull to him, Eugubin. 2. He taketh 318. persons, which were not the chiefe captaines onely, and under them a great number of Souldiers beside, as Iosephus, but these were the whole number which he tooke with him, yet were these not all his house: for there were women, and children, and aged persons beside. 3. Rupertus allusion here to the 318. fathers in the councell of Nice assembled against Arrius is farre fetcht: and his application of the Greek numerall letters T.I.H. the first to betoken the Crosse, the other two the name Iesu, is also impertinent, seeing Moses did write in Hebrew, not in Greeke. 4. The Hebrewes conceit also is vaine, that Abraham had none but Eleazar his servant with him, the letters of whose name make 318.

Superstitious collections for the signe of the Crosse.

Quest. XIII. Abrahams policie in battell.

Vers. 15. Divided themselves by night. 1. Abraham, who was before in Egypt so timorous, that fearing to be killed, he desired his wife to dissemble her selfe, yet now is so emboldned that he [illegible] with a small company set upon foure Kings: so that Abraham might here say with David, that God [illegible] teach his fingers to fight, *Pſal.*144.1. Calvin. 2. Abraham againe ſheweth here the practice of that ſaying of the Wiſe man, *by counſell make warre, Prov.*20.18. for he both divideth his company, and ſetteth upon them in the night: ſo did *Gideon, Iud.*7.16. and Ioſua 10.9. ſo David came upon Saul in the night: 1 *Sam.*26.11. Muſcul. 3. He taketh his owne ſervants, and the ſervants of his confederates, Iunius: and overtaketh the enemie the fifth night and ſurpriſeth them, being weary of their journey, ſecure, unarmed, and like enough alſo drunken, Ioſephus.

Quest. XIV. Of Hoba.

Verſ.15. Hoba: It was the proper name of a place, not an Epithite given to Dan, as R. Salomon thinketh; (it ſignifieth culpa, a fault; becauſe Dan afterward was faulty in idolatrous worſhip) for here this Choba is deſcribed to be on the left hand of Damaſcus. 2. Hierome ſaith that this Choba in his time was a village, where certaine Hebrewes dwelt of the hereſie of Ebion, which retaine all the precepts of the law. 3. But it is moſt like to be Opotoon in Phenicia: Iunius, and ſo ſome Latine texts for Choba read Phenice. Lib. 1. Antiquit.

Quest. XV. Of the Valley of Sheveth.

Verſ.17. The valley of Shaveh, &c. 1. This is not that Shaveth mentioned, verſ.5. that was beyond Jordan, this on the hither ſide not farre from Sodom, Mercer. 2. Hierome thinketh it was a Vally ſo named of the City Shaveh, which was ſituate in a Plaine not farre from Sodome, where the Emims dwelt, verſ.5. which name it retained ſtill in his time. 3. Betehardon thinketh it was the ſame Valley where Sodome and Gomorrhe were. 4. Iunius placeth it neare unto Jeruſalem, being the ſame Valley where Abſalon reared his Pillar, 2. *Sam.*18.18. and hereunto the Septuagint agree, which interpret in the Valley of Melchiſedeck: And it ſeemeth indeed, not to be farre off from Salem, which is Jeruſalem, where Melchiſedeck was King, becauſe he met Abraham there with bread and wine. 5. It was not at this time, but afterward called the Kings Dale, Vatab. not becauſe the Kings uſed there to exerciſe and diſport themſelves, Chald. neither was it ſo named of ſome King, Calvin; but rather it was called the Kings Dale, for the excellency of it, and therefore is thought to be the ſame which was called, Vallis illuſtris, the famous Valley, Perer.

Quest. XVI. Who Melchiſedeck was.

Verſ.18. Melchiſedeck, &c. 1. Origen and Dydimus thinke that Melchiſedeck was an Angell, but the text is contrary that maketh him King of Salem.

2. Some thinke that this Melchiſedeck was the Holy Ghoſt; which opinion is defended by the Author of the queſtions of the old and new Teſtament, cha.109. which goe under Auguſtines name, but it is none of Auguſtines worke; for he numbreth the Melchſedechians among the Heretikes, *heref.*34. and it is an erroneous opinion. 1. For this Melchiſedeck is ſaid to be a Prieſt to the moſt high God, but every Prieſt is taken from among men, *Heb.*5.1. 2. If the Holy Ghoſt was a Prieſt unto God, he therein ſhould be inferiour unto God, and ſo not God; for in the God-head there is equality. 3. Neither did the Holy Ghoſt ever deſcend from heaven to be incarnate, but onely the ſonne of God, *Ioh.*3.13. 4. And whereas the Apoſtle ſaith, that *Melchiſedeck was without father or mother, and without beginning of dayes, or end of life, Heb.*7.3. whence they would enforce that Melchiſedeck was not a mortall man, but of an immortall nature; the Apoſtle hath there relation onely to the ſtory in this place; Melchiſedeck is not ſet forth in ſtory by his kindred, his birth and death; he had both father and mother, was borne, and died, but there is no mention made of it, and ſo Hierome expoundeth that word uſed by the Apoſtle, ἀγενεαλόγητος, genealogie is not expreſſed or mentioned. Melchiſedeck not the holy Ghoſt.

3. A third opinion there is, that Melchiſedeck was a King of Canaan, and not of Abrahams line; of which opinion were Irenaus, Euſebius, Caſarion, Apollinarius, Euſtathius, as Hierome teſtifieth, and among the new Writers, Calvin. Iunius, Muſculus, Mercerus, Pererius, with others. 1. Pererius urgeth that place, *Heb.*7.6. He whoſe kindred is not counted among them, which proveth not that Melchiſedeck ſimply was not of Abrahams kindred, but that it was not ſo expreſſed in ſtory; κατὰ τὸ ρητόν, as Epiphanius ſaith; ſo that μὴ γενεαλογούμενος, not rehearſed in genealogie, here uſed by the Apoſtle, is the ſame that ἀγενεαλόγητος, without kindred, verſ.3. 2. And ſeeing Canaan was under Gods curſe, and Sem had the chiefe bleſſing, how it is like that one of Canaan ſhould bleſſe Abraham of Sem. 3. And the Apoſtle conſideth, that Melchiſedeck was greater than Abraham, becauſe he bleſſed him; but none of the Canaanites, which were the curſed ſeed, could be greater than Abraham the father of the faithfull, of bleſſed ſeed. 4. The fourth opinion of the reſt moſt probable, is, that this Melchiſedeck was Sem; which opinion is ſtrengthned with many arguments. Melchiſedeck not a Cananite.

1. Sem onely of all men living, was greater than Abraham; as Syracides ſaith; Sem and Seth were in great honour among the children of men: 49.16. though Arphaxad, Selah, and Heber, yet lived, yet Sem was the moſt honourable, in reſpect of his yeares, his knowledge, who ſaw the old world, his prerogative, in Noahs bleſſing: and whereas Abrahams predeceſſors were Idolaters, none of Sems progenitors are noted that way, therefore ſeeing Melchiſedeck was greater than Abraham, and none then living was greater than Sem, he is moſt like to be the Melchiſedeck. Sem proved Melchiſedeck.

2. That was the place of Sems dwelling, whence in time Iapheths ſonnes ſhould learne to dwell in the tabernacle of God: ſo reaſoneth Midras: but from Sion came forth the law, and word from Jeruſalem, *Iſa.*2.3. at Salem therefore were the tents of Sem. Alleaged in the treatiſe of Melchiſedeck.

3. Hierome alleageth this reason used by some, that Melchisedeck brought forth bread and wine to Abraham for his repast: seeing he owed this duty to his grand-childe, Evagr. tom.4.

4. Melancthon thus argueth, therefore God brought Abraham to Sem the father of his ancestors, to joyne together a notable company of the Church.

5. Some use this reason: A Kingdome is more ancient than a tyranny, but unlesse we make Sem to be Melchisedeck, we cannot plainly prove that a King reigned before Nimrod, treat. of Melchis.

6. Melchisedeck is interpreted a King of righteousnesse: this Melchisedeck had the knowledge of the true justice and righteousnesse by faith in Christ: but in all the Scripture shall we read of none called to the faith, but men acquainted with Abrahams house, with himselfe, or Isaacks line, or the children of the East, the sonnes of Keturah in the booke of Iob.

7. That this Melchisedeck a King of Canaan, should bee Sem, agreeth to the prophesie, Gen.9.27. Let Canaan be his servant.

8. Also in that he is called a Priest of the most high God; This also agreeth to Sem, who had that prerogative of Priest-hood, (not as some Hebrewes thinke, by his birth-right, for Iapheth was elder) but by his fathers blessing: Blessed be the God of Sem: who was more like to be this great high Priest of Sems God, than Sem himselfe.

9. Melchisedeck was King of Salem, which signifieth peace: and indeed this Salem had a speciall prerogative of peace: for when the foure Kings smote other parts of the Countrey of Canaan, as is set forth in this chapter: it is not like, that Salem should have beene spared, if the King thereof had beene a Canaanite: if there had not beene great respect to the person of aged Melchisedeck or Sem.

10. Where Melchisedeck is set forth without father or mother, beginning of life, or end of dayes; this also most fitly agreeth to Sem, who was borne before the floud, whose father Noah was now dead, who lived 600. yeares: so that no man living at that time could remember his birth, or death, or parents.

11. Seeing also that Hebers language was preserved in Salem, as may appeare by the interpretation of the name of Melchisedeck. It is most probable that this King of Salem was of that line, who together with the true faith, retained that holy language.

12. Lastly, seeing Melchisedeck was a type of Christ, Psal. 10. that came of Sem, and no type or figure of Christ is expressed in Scripture but of Sems line, none is more like to be this representer and foreshewer of Christs everlasting Priesthood, than Sem himselfe then living. It is most unlike, that any Priest not of Sem, should shadow forth the high Priest Christ of Sem; and not the high Priest Sem, the father of Christ after the flesh. By these and other probable reasons, some learned perswade, that Sem was Melchisedeck: neither are the contrary objections of any great weight.

Objections proving Sem not to be Melchisedeck, answered.

1. First, it is objected, that this Countrey was possessed by the Canaanites, and it is not like, that Sem would returne out of the East into Judea, Perer. Answ. 1. It is said that the posterity of Iocktan of Sem inhabited toward the East, *Gen.*10.30. but of Sems dwelling there is no expresse mention. 2. Iarchius Epiphanius in Ancherato are of opinion, that many of Sems posterity that had not their tongues altered kept about Jerusalem, though they were thence expelled afterward by the Canaanites. 3. And this might bee somecause of the warres of the Easterne Kings against the Canaanites, for encroaching upon Sems possessions, treat. Melchis.

2. Ob. Seeing Abraham returned from the slaughter of Chedorlaomers people of Elam, which must needs be of Sem: how commeth it to passe that Sems heart was not rather stirred against Abraham for killing his children? Answ. Sem being a Prophet, and knowing that Abraham was appointed of God to be the father of the faithfull people, preferreth him, being not onely of his carnall kindred, but heire of his faith, before the rest of his kindred that were degenerate.

Sem not dead before Melchisedeck met Abraham.

3. Ob. Epiphanius proveth that Sem could not be Melchisedeck, because he was long dead before Melchisedeck met Abraham, who was then 80. yeare old: for saith he, by one Chronicle there are from Sems birth to Abrahams 80. yeare, accounted yeares 1130. by another 629. yeares; but Sem lived onely 600. yeare.

Answ. 1. In the first account Epiphanius followeth the corrupt computation of the Septuagint, who doe adde divers hundred yeares to the ages of the fathers after the floud: as is shewed before, *quæst.*11. in *chap.*11. 2. Neither was Sem after the second computation at that time, 629. yeares old, but onely 529. so that he lived after this time 70. yeares: and as a learned man well conjectureth, it might well be that in the Greeke copie, which Epiphanius followeth, χ, chi, which standeth for 600. was put for ϙ, phi, which is 500. And this difference in computation might have given occasion to Epiphanius further to have searched the truth, and to have preferred the originall before the Greeke translations.

4. Ob. If Sem were Melchisedeck, then had he two names, which cannot be proved out of the Scripture, Perer. Answ. 1. Chytræus thinketh, that Melchisedeck is here not a name proper, but appellative, signifying that he was a righteous & just King. 2. Cajetanus holdeth it to be an Epithite not proper to Sem, but common to the Kings of Salem, as Cæsar and Augustus were to the Emperour of Rome: and so we read of another King of Jerusalem called Adoni-zedek, Lord of justice, which is all one in sense with Melchisedeck, *Iosu.*10.3. 3. But I approve rather the judgement of Selnecerus, that Melchisedeck was a proper name unto Sem, in respect of his office, because he onely excelled among the rest, as a just King, and thereof had that name.

5. Ob. If Sem had beene Melchisedeck, it is like that Abraham comming into Canaan, would first have sought out his great grand-father, and joyned himselfe unto him: neither would S. Paul have omitted it purposely treating of purpose of Melchisedeck, Perer. Ans. 1. Melancthon thinketh that Abraham was brought out of Bethel

Bethel to Sem: his words are theſe; Now when Abraham was brought out of Babel to Sem, what a goodly College had Sem, &c. 2. Neither Moſes nor yet the Apoſtle directly ſet downe Abrahams acquaintance with Sem, or that he was Melchiſedeck, that the compariſon might be more fit betweene Melchiſedeck and Chriſt: in that he is ſet downe without father, without mother, without genealogie, Heb. 7. 3. as the Prophet ſaith of Chriſt, who ſhall declare his generation? Pſal. 51. 8. 3. For matter of fact, it is no good argument to conclude negatively out of Scripture: for as many things were done by Chriſt, not expreſſed in Scripture, Ioh. 20. 30. ſo alſo by Abraham and the reſt of the Patriarks: but for a point of faith and doctrine, the argument holdeth well, there is no ſuch thing taught in Scripture, therefore wee are not to believe it.

Negative arguments from the Scripture in matter of doctrine good.

Ob. Melchiſedeck is ſaid to be without father and mother, becauſe they are not mentioned in Scripture: but it is knowne who Sems father was, and mention likewiſe made of his birth and beginning of dayes.

Anſw. 1. It is not to be doubted, but that Melchiſedeck had both father and mother, though neither I thinke can be named: Epiphanius ſaith, ſome Writers affirme, that his fathers name was Eraclas, his mothers Aſteria: neither is Suidas conceit to be approved, that Melchiſedecks parentage is therefore not declared, becauſe he was borne of an harlot. 2. Though Sems genealogie be expreſſed in other places, yet in the ſtory, to the which the Apoſtle hath relation, it is not: neither is his kindred ſet downe under that name of Melchiſedeck, as Lyranus and Toſtatus well anſwer.

Why Melchiſedecks kindred is not expreſſed.

7. Ob. Suidas ſaith that Melchiſedeck reigned in Salem 113. yeares, and lived a virgin: but Sem had a wife which was in the Arke with him. Anſw. Of the ſame opinion alſo is Ignatius, Epiſt. ad Philadel. that Melchiſedeck was a perpetuall virgin: but this being a bare conjecture, may more eaſily bee denied than proved.

Ob. Ioſephus and Philo, men thorowly acquainted with the antiquities of the Hebrewes, where they make mention of Melchiſedeck, bring him in as a ſtranger from the kindred of Abraham, Perer.

Anſw. For theſe two, there are alleaged two and twenty Rabbines, and principall writers among the Jewes, as Aben Ezra, Baal Hatturim, Levi Ben Gerſon, David Kimchi, with others, that make up that number, which all with one conſent, hold Sem to be Melchiſedeck.

Treatiſe of Melchiſedech in fine.

Thus have I ſet downe the reaſons on both ſides concerning this queſtion, which I referre to the Readers judgement. It is no matter of faith, which way any taketh, either to hold Sem to bee Melchiſedeck, or otherwiſe. But I rather for mine owne part incline to thinke, being moved with the force of the former reaſons, that it was Sem, though I will not preciſely determine it, but ſay with Hierome upon theſe words of the Apoſtle; Of whom (that is Melchiſedeck) we have many things to ſay, which are hard to be uttered, Heb. 5. 11. Si vas electionis ſtupet ad myſterium, & in effabile fatetur, quanto magis nos: if the veſſell of election be aſtoniſhed at this myſterie, and confeſſeth it hard to be uttered, how much more we, &c.

Quest. XVII. Salem proved to be Ieruſalem.

King of Shalem, Hierome, (to whom alſo ſubſcribeth Mercerus) thinketh that this Shalem was not Jeruſalem, but another towne in the region of Sichem, which he would prove by foure arguments.

1. This Salem in Sichem is mentioned, Gen. 33. 18. and Ioh 3. 23. Iohn batized in Enon beſide Salim. Anſw. Firſt, Gen. 33. 18. the true reading is, that Iacob came Shalem ſafe to the City. Sichem, as the Chalde interpreteth, not to Shalem a City of Sichem. Secondly, that Salim where Iohn baptized, is the ſame City which is called Shaalim, or Schalem, belonging to the tribe of Benjamin, 1 Sam. 9. 4. wherefore this Shalem in Sichem hath no ground out of Scripture.

2. Hierome ſaith, that there was a towne neare to Scythopolis, called Salem in his time, where the ruines of Melchiſedecks pallace were to be ſeene. Anſw. But whence ſhall it be knowne that Melchiſedecks pallace ſometime ſtood in that place: this is warranted onely by an uncertaine report: neither is it like that Melchiſedeck being a King of one ſmall City, did build himſelfe ſuch a ſumptuous and great Pallace, whoſe foundation ſhould continue ſo long, above two thouſand yeares.

3. The City of Jeruſalem was much out of Abrahams way, as he returned from Dan, but the other Salem was in his way, Hierom. Anſw. As though a ſmall diſtance of way could hinder Gods purpoſe in cauſing Melchiſedeck and Abraham to meet: which might be either in drawing Melchiſedech ſomewhat from home to ſalute the Patriarke, or in moving Abraham to viſit the City Salem, famous for the true worſhip and ſervice of God.

4. But Hieruſalem cannot come of Salem, for ſo two words of divers languages ſhould be mixed together: the firſt name being Greeke, the other Hebrew. Anſw. Hierome imagineth, that the firſt part of this name ſhould come of the Greeke Hieros, holy, for ſo Jeruſalem was called the holy City.

But the Hebrewes doe better derive the name of Jeruſalem, they ſay Sem called it Salem, and Abraham Jireh, there the Lord will be ſeene, Gen. 22. 14. which both put together make Jeruſalem, which ſignifies the viſion of peace: ſo Midras in Pſal. 76. This derivation of Jeruſalem is more probable than from the Greeke Ireh, as Hierome, or from Jebus and Salem, which make Jebuſalem, and for better ſound to be Jeruſalem, as Paræus.

The derivation of the name Jeruſalem.

Wherefore I preferre rather the opinion of Ioſephus, that this Salem was the ſame City which was called afterward Jeruſalem: for theſe reaſons.

Ioſeph. lib. 1. antiquit.

1. Becauſe there is no evident mention in Scripture of any other City called Salem, but this converted into the name of Jeruſalem: two Salems we read not of; one was Jeruſalem.

This

Moses ben. Maimon. lib. 6.

2. This is evident, Psal. 76. 2. In Shalem is his Tabernacle, his dwelling in Sion: Sion then and Shalem were both in one place.

3. The Jewes also hold this tradition, that the place where David and Salomon built the Temple in the floure of Araunah, is the same place where Abraham built an Altar, and would have sacrificed Isaack: where Noah first built when he came out of the Arke: where Cain and Abel offered, &c. This place then being consecrate with so many Altars and sacrifices, is like to be the place, where the greater sacrificer and high Priest Melchisedeck dwelt.

4. The type also better answereth to the body: that Melchisedeck a figure of the high priest Iesus should there dwell, where Christ afterward performed that great and divine act of his Priesthood, in offering himselfe up in sacrifice upon the Crosse at Jerusalem.

QVEST. XVIII. How Abraham is blessed of Melchisedeck.

Vers. 19. HE blessed him, &c. 1. It is like that Melchisedeck used a more ample forme and manner of blessing, which is here onely abridged by Moses, Luther.

2. Though Melchisedeck blesse Abraham first, and then God: herein hee offended not, as the Hebrewes affirme, and for that cause they say his Priesthood was translated to the posterity of Abraham: for beside that the servants of God in their prayers being carried with zeale, forget to observe order: even this blessing pronounced upon Abraham, is referred to the praise of God. As also the Apostle otherwise collecteth that Melchisedeck was greater than Abraham, in that he blessed him: and that his Priesthood was not translated to Aaron, but to Christ: ex Mercer.

3. Abraham is blessed, and God is blessed: but God is blessed Benedictione laudis, with the blessing of praise, Abraham Benedictione opitulationis, with the blessing of Gods helpe or assistance, Cajetane.

4. Neither is Abraham pronounced blessed onely herein, because hee had obtained this victorie: but aterni foederis respectu, in respect of the eternall covenant, which God made with him and his seed, Vatablus.

5. And this is more than an ordinary blessing: it is a Priestly benediction, and it is set forth as an act of Melchisedecks Priesthood, whereby he ratifieth the promise made to Abraham, Calvin.

6. Melchisedeck is found to be the first, that giveth this title unto God in Scripture to be possessor of heaven and earth, Testatus: whereby the true God is distinguished from all false gods.

QVEST. XIX. How Abraham payed tithes.

Vers. 20. AND he gave him tithes of all, &c. 1. Although it bee not expressed in the text, whether Melchisedeck or Abraham gave tithes, yet the Apostle cleareth this doubt, that he received tithes of Abraham, Heb. 7. 6. and the text also giveth this sense: for seeing Melchisedeck is named to be a Priest, he was more fit to receive than give tithes. 2. Some thinke that Abraham gave not tithes of all the goods recovered, seeing he after refused to take so much as a shooe threed of that which belonged to the King of Sodome, vers. 25. He then gave tithes onely of his owne substance, Calvin, Mercer. But though Abraham refused to touch any part of the Sodomites substance, in himselfe, for his owne use, yet he might even of that offer the tithe unto God: 1. Because it was his by common right, and the law of Nations: 2. Because he giveth reason, lest he should say, that he had made Abraham rich: which reason served onely against the private and proper use, not the publike and religious use of those goods. 3. If Abraham had not prevented them in giving the honour of the victory unto God, the Sodomites would have offered the same things in sacrifice to their Idols.

Neither is the opinion of Cajetane to be allowed, that Abraham gave not the just tenth part, as afterward was appointed by the Law, but a certaine portion in the name of the tenth: for the Apostle sheweth that Abraham paid tithes properly, and Levi in Abraham was tithed, as the Levites received tithes afterwards, Heb. 7. 5, 6. 4. Whereas Levi is said to pay tithes in Abraham, being yet in his loynes, and thereby proveth the Priesthood of Melchisedeck to be greater, than of Levi, that is so said, because the Priesthood went then by carnall generation, not by spirituall election, as now under the Gospell. 5. And though Christ were also in Abrahams loynes, secundum substantiam corporalem, in respect of his corporall substance, yet he was not there, secundum rationem conceptionis, in regard of the manner of his conception, because he was conceived by the holy Ghost. But Levi was in Abrahams loynes both wayes: and therefore the argument for superiority in Melchisedeck, concludeth well against Levi, but not against Christ.

How Christ was in Abrahams loynes. Augustin. lib. 1. de Genes. ad liter. cap. 10.

QVEST. XX. Of the lifting up of the hand, how diversly it is taken in Scripture.

Vers. 22. I Have lift up my hand, &c. The learned have observed divers significations of this phrase in Scripture, 1. It betokeneth prayer generally, 1 Tim. 2. 8. Saint Paul would have men lift up pure hands, &c. 2. It signifieth speciall suit and request for helpe, Lament. 2. 19. Lift up thy hands for the life of the young children. 3. It is a gesture expressing thankfulnesse, Nehem. 8. 6. Esra praised the Lord, &c. and the people lift up their hands, &c. and worshipped. 4. It is used when any thing is done with a willing mind and glad heart, Psa. 119. I have lift up my hand to the commandements which I have loved. 5. As also it is a token and signe of calling, Isay 49. 22. I have lift and stretched my hands to the Gentiles. 6. It betokeneth helpe and deliverance, Ezech. 20. 5. I lift up my hand upon the seed of Iacob, and was knowne unto them in the land of Egypt. 7. To lift up the hand is to rise against one to vex and oppresse him, Iob. 31. 22. If I have lift up my hand against the fatherlesse, &c. Perer. 8. They used also to lift up their hands in giving of voyces, which the Greekes call χειροτονία, Calvin. 9. It was a gesture used in taking of an oath: and therefore

therefore the Lord saith, Num. 14.30. They shall not come into the land, over the which I lift up my hand, to make them dwell in it. This signification it hath here, for Abraham before he went to battell, had vowed unto God in his prayer, as the Chalde interpret, that if God would deliver the enemies into his hand, he would not seeke to make himselfe rich thereby, but give the praise to God.

Quest. XXI. Wherefore Abraham tooke an oath.

Abraham therefore tooke an oath swearing by the true God, to professe his faith and religion, that he onely worshipped the true God, Perer. 2. That he might take occasion hereby to reprove the superstitious use of the King of Sodome in swearing by their Idols, and instruct him concerning the worship of the true God, Calvin. 3. As also that they might know that Abraham did not this suddenly, or of vaine-glory, but of a religious minde, having bound himselfe by an oath, Muscul. 4. That by this oath as with a shield Abraham might be preserved from the baits of covetousnesse, wherewith the King of Sodome might have tempted him, if he had not beene firme, Calvin.

Quest. XXII. Why Abraham refuseth to take ought of the King of Sodome.

Vers. 23. I will not take of all that is thine so much as a threed or a shoo latchet. 1. Abraham refuseth not to take of those things which belonged to the foure Kings, whom he had conquered, which now were his, by reason of his just victory, but not of any thing which was the Kings of Sodome. 2. Which Abraham calleth his, not as Ambrose thinketh, because the spoyles of the enemie belong to the King: for he was not Abrahams King: but for that they had beene before appertaining to the King. 3. Though Abraham might have challenged them by the right of his victory, yet he would not take so much as a threed. 1. Least he might have beene thought for his owne lucre to have waged that battell. 2. He would doe justice, to restore the goods to the first owners. 3. That the heathen King should have no advantage, to thinke Abraham bound unto him: Neither would Abraham, that any should have the honour and praise of enriching him, but onely God, of whose blessing hee onely depended, Peterius. 4. Abraham refused not the gifts which Pharao bestowed upon him, Gen. 12.8.16. but he will take nothing of the King of Sodome: the reasons may be yeelded to be these. 1. There the King gave of his liberality, and Abraham could not refuse without suspition: here nothing was given, but recovered in battell. 2. There the King gave of his owne, but these goods belonged to all the Sodomites, Mercer. 3. By that meanes it pleased God that Abraham should be then enriched: but Abraham was now rich enough, he needed no such helps. 4. Here Abraham might have beene thought, if he had taken any thing to himselfe, of a covetous minde to have pursued the enemies, and so God should not have had the honour of the victorie, but here was no such feare. 5. The King of Sodome and his people were ordained for a greater destruction, and therefore God would not that Abraham should take any thing which was accursed: But Pharao received mercy of God: thus the case was much different, betweene the gifts of the one and the other. 6. Abraham excepteth those things which the young men had eaten, making no mention of the tithe, which he had given before, because that was taken, not out of the King of Sodomes substance, but his owne: neither doth he prejudice the other three by his example, but that they notwithstanding might take their parts, Muscul.

Why Abraham tooke of the King of Egypt Corne, but not of the King of Sodome.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the custome of paying of tithes.

Vers. 20. Gave him tithe, &c. We see how ancient this custome of paying tithe to the Priests and Ministers is. It was practised before the Law, as appeareth here by the example of Abraham, and the vow of Iacob, Genes. 28. yea, such was the equity of it, that from the Hebrewes the Gentiles borrowed that use: the Romans paid tithes of their goods to Hercules: Plinie writeth that the Arabians pay tithe of their incense to their God Sabis, and that it is not lawfull before that be done, to buy or sell. Xenophon also sheweth, that they which had gotten the victory, did use to pay tithes to their Gods of the spoile of their enemie, Perer.

Cicer. lib. 2. de officiis. Plin. lib. 12. c. 14.

2. Doct. Of the lawfulnesse of an Oath.

Vers. 21. I have lift up my hand, &c. In that Abraham doubted not to take an oath, wee see the lawfulnesse thereof: that it is not denied unto a Christian to sweare, when he is lawfully called thereunto: contrary to the phantasticall doctrine of the Anabaptists, that simply condemne the use of an oath: but Moses saith, Thou shalt feare the Lord thy God, and sweare by his name, Deut. 6.13. Muscul.

Lib. 3. de Cyri.

3. Doct. God onely the possessor and true owner of the earth.

Vers. 22. Possessor of heaven and earth, &c. Philo noteth hereupon, that no mortall man is properly possessor or true Lord of the earth. But that both the heaven and earth are the Lords possession, and we are but tenants at the Lords pleasure, as the Lord himselfe saith, The land shall not be sold for ever: for the land is mine, and ye are but sojourners and strangers with me, Levit. 25.23. Whereupon he inforceth, Ius possessionis omnium rerum ad Deum pertinere, usum solum ad creaturam: that the right of possession of all things belongeth to God, the use onely to the creature.

– 3. Places

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Against the vulgar Latine translation.

Vers. 18. And hee was a Priest, &c. The Latine text readeth here corruptly, for hee was: as the bringing forth of bread and wine had beene an act of his Priesthood: Indeed this copulative Vau, sometime is used as a causall, but then the sense apparantly giveth it: as Genes. 20. 3. Thou art but dead because of the woman which thou hast taken; for she is a mans wife: in Hebrew, and she is; Bu here there is no such cause to annexe this clause as a reason of the former: but rather it is to be joyned to that which followeth, as the same copulative sheweth. And he blessed him saying, v. 19. wherefore not the producing of bread & wine, but the blessing of Abraham was the proper act of Melchisedecks Priesthood.

2. Confut. Melchisedeck brought not out the bread and wine to sacrifice them.

Brought forth bread and wine, &c. 1. Whether Melchisedeck had before slaine sacrifices, and made a feast, not only of bread and wine, but of flesh, as Philo saith, mactatis victimis splendidum epulum ei omnibus dedit; to Abraham and his company the text saith nothing, and therefore I leave it as an uncertaine guesse: sure I am, that mactare victimas, to slay sacrifices can in no sense be understood of sacrificing or offering of bread: as Pererius goeth about to wrest it: disput. 5. in. 14. Genes. 2. Neither did he bring forth bread and wine to represent, as Rabbi Moses thinketh, sacrificia farinacea, the sacrifices in the law of meale and floure. 3. Much lesse did he offer them in sacrifice to God, as Bellarmine and Pererius doe urge this place; for the word jatsah here used, is never taken to signifie to offer in sacrifice: where Bellarmine and Pererius object that place, Iud. 6. 19. where Gideon is said, to bring forth his gift and present it (where the same word is found) it is evident that Gideon brought it forth, the flesh and broth, for the Angell to eat of, whom he supposed to be a man, for they used not to make potage or broth to offer, and the Angell bid him to offer it upon the stone, which sheweth that Gideon had no such purpose before. 4. Wherefore, as Iosephus well noteth, Melchisedeck milites Abraham hospitaliter accepit nihil ad victum deesse passus: he entertained Abrahams souldiers with great hospitality, suffering them to want no victuals: Melchisedeck then brought forth the bread and wine for no other end but to refresh Abrahams company. 1. For Melchisedeck is set forth both as a King and a Priest, the producing of bread and wine was a princely gift, the blessing of Abraham a priestly act. 2. It was the use and manner to meet them that returned from battell with bread to refresh them; therefore Moab and Ammon are accursed, because they met not the Israelites with bread and water, when they came out of Egypt, Deut. 23. 4. Iohannes Jetane a chiefe pillar of the popish Church, saith, Nihil hic scribitur de oblatione, sed de prolatione panis & vini: Nothing is written of the oblation, but of the prolation or producing of bread and wine. 4. Where Lyranus, Tostatus, and Bellarmine answer, that Melchisedeck needed not to have brought forth bread and wine for their refreshing, seeing they had sufficient already: as Abraham saith, vers. 24. saving that which the young men had eaten: Pererius one of their owne friends doth easily remove this answer; that this was unknowne to Melchisedeck, what provision was in Abrahams campe, and though hee had knowne it, yet to shew his love, and testifie his gladnesse, he would notwithstanding have performed this friendly and liberall part, Mercerus.

Bellar. de Milli. lib. 1. cap. 6.

Ioseph. lib. 1. Antiquitat.

3. Confut. Melchisedecks Priesthood consisted not in the sacrificing of bread and wine.

Now it followeth to be declared wherein the priesthood of Melchisedeck consisted, and in what principallity he represented the everlasting Priesthood of Christ. 1. It consisted not in that Melchisedeck was a perpetuall virgin, Perer. for if Sem were Melchisedeck, which is most probable, as before is declared, he had a wife. 2. Neither was he a figure of Christ, because he sacrificed in bread and wine, and so represented, as the Papists imagine, the unbloudy sacrifice of the Masse, for these reasons. 1. Because the Scripture maketh no mention of sacrificing, but onely bringing forth bread and wine for Abrahams refreshing. 2. That wherein Melchisedecks priesthood consisted, must bee divers from the offering and sacrifices of Aaron; but Aarons priests offered bread and wine; Ergo, herein consisted not Milchisedecks priesthood. 3. There is a great unlikelinesse betweene Melchisedecks offering and the sacrifice of the Masse: for hee offered bread and wine in substance, but the papists imagine that in the Masse there remaineth nothing but the formes, not the substance of bread and wine. 4. If Melchisedecks priesthood did stand in the oblation of bread and wine, then every bald Masse-priest that sacrificeth in the Masse, should be a Priest after Melchisedecks order, whereas it is peculiar to Christ onely, Psal. 110. 4. Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedeck. 5. Neither would the Apostle have omitted this speciall act of Melchisedecks priesthood, wherein he represented Christ, of purpose setting forth the comparison betweene Melchisedeck and Abraham: for neither were the faithfull Hebrewes uncapable of the doctrine of the Eucharist, as Bellarmine imagineth, seeing he treateth of as high mysteries, as of baptisme, and the resurrection, chap. 6. 2. and why should they be more uncapable than the Corinthians among the Gentiles whom Saint Paul instructeth concerning the Eucharist, chap. 11. Neither as Pererius answereth, was it impertinent, to make mention of Melchisedecks sacrifice of bread and wine, if there had beene such thing: seeing the Apostle toucheth all other points of similitude and agreement betweene Christ and Melchisedeck, and therefore would not have omitted this wherein they were most like. 6. Whereas the fathers are objected that doe apply Melchisedecks bringing forth bread and wine to the Eucharist. 1. The Apostle herein ought to prevaile more than all the fathers beside, who maketh no such application. 2. The fathers

Fathers doe not thereby shadow forth the Sacrament of the Eucharist, as Ambrose saith, Constat sacrificium cessisse, &c. & manere Melchisedeki institutum quod toto orbe terrarum in sacramentorum erogatione celebratur, that is, The sacrifices of beasts are ceased, and the institution of Melchisedeck remaineth, which is celebrated in the dispensation of the Sacraments. The Fathers conclude a Sacrament, not a sacrifice of bread and wine; and so their testimonies make little for the popish sacrifice of the Masse. 4. Many things are unlike betweene Melchisedecks producing bread and wine, and the Masse Priests sacrificing: He 1. presenteth them unto Abraham, they offer them to God. 2. Abraham and his company eat of Melchisedecks provision, in the Masse the Priest doth all, there is no eating or drinking. 3. Melchisedeck blesseth Abraham, and blesseth God, he blesseth neither bread nor wine: the Priest blesseth and hallowoth the cup. 4. He bringeth forth bread and wine to Abraham, the Priest onely delivereth bread to the people, and keepeth under the cup. 5. Melchisedeck brought bread and wine in substance, as is touched before; the Masse-priest saith their substance is changed. 6. Melchisedeck worshipped God, not the bread and wine: the Masse-priest adoreth both. So that in truth, this example of Melchisedeck, if they will stand to their meaning, maketh altogether against the popish Masse sacrifice, and nothing for it.

Ambr. in c. 5. ad liter.

No similitude betweene Melchisedecks bringing forth of bread and wine, and the Masse sacrifice.

4. Confut. Wherein Melchisedecks Priesthood consisted.

Wherein then the comparison holdeth betweene Christ and Melchisedeck, the Apostle sheweth, Heb. 7. 1. As Melchisedeck is interpreted a King of righteousnesse, so our blessed Saviour was called a King of righteousnesse, Isay. 32. Behold a King shall reigne in righteousnesse, & shall be judge the poore. 2. Melchisedeck was King of Salem, that is of peace, Heb. 7. 2. so the Messias is a Prince of peace, Isa. 9. 6. 3. Melchisedeck was without father or mother, that is, they are not mentioned in the story, but Christ was truly without father, as he was man, and without mother as God. 4. Melchisedeck was ἀγενεαλόγητος, without genealogie: some use to declare Christs generation as he is God, Vsh. 53. 8. 5. Melchisedeck had no beginning of his life, or end of his dayes, that is expressed in the Scripture: but Christ the word is truly without beginning, being from all eternity, neither shall he have any end: He is Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, Revel. 1. 8. 6. As Melchisedeck was both a King and a Priest, so our Saviour is Prince of all the Kings of the earth, Revel. 1. 5. and he is our great high Priest, Heb. 4. 14. 7. But especially in these three points following did Melchisedeck resemble our Saviour: as Melchisedeck was not a Priest anointed with any materiall oyle, as Aaron, but declared so to be by Gods owne mouth, and the testimony of the spirit: so Christ was anointed by the spirit of God, Luke 4. 18. and made a Priest by an oath: The Lord hath sworne and will not repent, thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedeck, Heb. 7. 21. 8. As Melchisedeck was greater than Abraham, for he blessed him, and than Levi, that payed riches in Abrahams loynes, Heb. 7. 4. 9, 10. so the Priesthood of Christ is greater than the Priesthood of Aaron. 9. But heere most of all is Melchisedeck likened to the sonne of God, because he received his Priesthood from none, nor passed it over to any other: in like manner as Christ succeeded none, so neither doe any succeed him, but he endureth ever, and hath everlasting Priesthood, Heb. 7. 24.

Obiect. As Christs Priesthood is everlasting, so it was necessary, that he should have a sacrifice, which should continue for ever. 1. Which cannot bee the sacrifice upon the Crosse, for that was but once done. 2. Therefore it can be no other than the sacrifice of the Eucharist. 3. neither doth it suffice to say, that the efficacie or vertue of his sacrifice upon the Crosse, continueth for ever: for in this sense Noahs sacrifice might be said to be eternall, because the efficacie of it remaineth still, in keeping the world from being destroyed by water, Perer. disp. 7. in 14. Genes.

Of the everlasting sacrifice of Christ.

Answ. 1. But the Apostle sheweth the contrary, that the once oblation of Christs body, is that everlasting sacrifice of our high Priest, Heb. 10. 14. With one offering hath he consecrated for ever them that are sanctified. 2. But the dayly sacrifice of the Masse cannot be: the Apostle saith, which need not daily, as those high Priests, to offer up sacrifice, Heb. 7. 27. that cannot be an everlasting sacrifice, which is dayly renewed: and the sacrifice offered in the Church shall determine with the militant state thereof on earth, and therefore cannot be everlasting. 3. Noahs sacrifice procured no eternall or spirituall, but a temporall effect, though to continue while this world lasteth: and Christs sacrifice gave that durable force, to Noahs sacrifice, which was a figure thereof: therefore Noahs sacrifice cannot be called everlasting, or him an everlasting Priest; seeing that efficacie was not in himself or his sacrifice, but in Christ, the everliving Redeemer and Priest.

The sacrifice of the Masse not Christs everlasting Sacrifice.

6. Places of Moral observation.

1. Observ. Light afflictions goe before heavy judgements.

Here made warre with Bala King of Sodom, &c. The Lord before he purposeth to bring an utter destruction upon any, doth first admonish them with light punishments: so he dealeth with some: first, they are scourged by these foure Kings of the East, but seeing they received no warning thereby, afterward the Lord rained upon them fire and brimstone. Vse. We learne then that we should not neglect the gentle corrections of God, lest they draw on heavy judgements: thus God dealt with the wicked people, who were chastised sometime by a famine, by the sword, by the pestilence: but when none of these would leave, they were swept away and carried into captivity.

2. Observ.

2. Observ. To dwell among the wicked is dangerous.

Further, in that Lot was carried away with the Sodomites, we see that good men may together with the wicked taste of temporall judgements, and what a dangerous thing it is, to have any habitation or dwelling among the ungodly, Marlorat. therefore the Scripture saith, Goe out of her my people, that ye be not partakers in her sinnes, that ye receive not of her plagues, Revel. 18.4.

3. Observ. Rebellion, no not against hard governours, is to be attempted.

Vers.4. Twelve yeares were they subject, &c. but in the thirteenth they rebelled. first, we see the justice of God in punishing the wicked life of the Sodomites, with a tyrannicall government: so the Prophet pronounceth this a curse upon the ungodly: Set thou a wicked man over him, Psal. 109. 6. Besides God punisheth the Sodomites for their rebellion: where then a government is established, though it be hard and unjust, nothing is unadvisedly to be attempted against it: as the Lord commandeth, that the King of Babylon, who was but an hard Lord, should be feared and obeyed, Ier. 27.8. Calvin.

4. Observ. Riches evill gotten commeth to an evill end.

Vers.12. They tooke all the substance of Sodome, &c. They which used not their wealth to the good and comfort of the poore (as the Sodomites did not, Ezech. 16.49.) doe heape it up to bee a prey for the enemie. Calvin. so the King of Babel boasteth, Thou hast not be had found the riches of the people, Isa. 10.14. which they had first wrongfully scraped together.

5. Observ. Gods enemies, and the enemies of our Church our enemies.

Vers.20. Which hath delivered thine enemies, &c. Lots enemies are called Abrahams enemies: and so indeed wee should account the enemies of Gods people and Church, our enemies, though in particular they have not hurt us. Luther. So the Prophet saith, Do not I hate them, that hate thee? &c. I hate them with an unfained hatred, as though they were mine enemies, Psal. 139.21,22.

6. Observ. A good Prince preferreth his subjects lives before wealth.

Vers.21. Give me the persons, take the goods, &c. Herein appeareth first the gratitude of the King of Sodome to Abraham, that is contented to leave unto him the goods for his great travell. Calvin. as also this heathen King sheweth one good part of a just Prince, that preferreth the life of his subjects before the substance: whereas contrariwise a tyrant esteemeth nothing of mens lives, in respect of his covetous desire, Parer. as Ahab contrived Naboths death, to have his Vineyard.

CHAP. XV.

1. The Method.

THis Chapter hath two parts, containing two ample and large promises made by the Lord unto Abraham: the first is, as touching his seed, vers.1. to vers.6. The second, the inheritance of his seed, vers.7. to the end.

In the first part there is set forth, 1. on Gods behalfe, the promise. 2. On Abrahams behalfe, beleefe, vers.6. In the first there is the cause, Gods goodnesse towards Abraham, vers.1. Then the promise of his seed, both to bee of his body, which is amplified by the contrary, that not Eleazer, but one of his owne bowels should be his heire, vers.2,3,4. then the number thereof to be as the starres in multitude.

In the second part, 1. there is the promise, in generall for the inheriting of the land, vers.7. in particular after what time, namely, 400. yeares captivity, 13. to 17. what Countrey, vers.18. to 21. 2. The confirming of the promise by certaine symbols: wherein we have the prescription of the signes and ceremonies to be used, vers.9. the preparing of them by Abraham, vers.10,11,12. the application or confirmation of them, vers.17. God causeth a smoking furnace to passe betweene the peeces, &c.

3. The Explanation of doubts.

Quest. I. How God appeared in vision.

Vers. 1. The word of the Lord came to Abraham in a vision, &c. 1. This vision was neither in the night, as the Sept. in some translations read: for Abrahams faith is here approved, v. 6. but men being asleepe cannot shew their faith. Cajetan. 2. neither was it by secret inspiration, as the interlineary glosse: for here divers speeches passe betweene God and Abraham. 3. Neither was this vision by an Angell: as Oleaster, Tostatus: for he is called Jehova, which name is not given to Angels. 4. But this vision was in the day, as the Lord used to speake to the Prophets. Ramban. Chald. and the Lord did produce his conference untill the evening. vers. 17. when the starres appeared. Iun. And God for the better strengthening of Abrahams faith, did to his word adjoyne some visible signe of his glory. Oecolam. 5. And this is the fourth time, that God had appeared to Abraham: twice in the 12. chapter, v. 1. 7. againe, c. 13, 14. and now in this place.

Quest. II. How God is said to be Abrahams reward.

I Am thy buckler, &c. 1. Two things doe cause feare: when either wee are afraid of some evill to happen to vs, or that some good which wee desire should bee with-holden from us. God biddeth Abraham to feare none of these, for hee was both his buckler to keepe him from evill, and his great reward to give him all good things. Por. 2. Some thinke that Abraham feared lest he had committed some sinne in shedding of bloud in the late battell: some lest the enemies might gather their strength againe, and come upon him afresh: some lest the Cananites might envy him because of his strength: some, lest this victorie might stand for his reward, which God promised: But it appeareth, that none of these things were the cause of Abrahams feare, but he was solicitous and carefull for his succession, and might somewhat waver concerning the promise made to his seed, because hee had yet no childe, Mercer. 3. Where he saith, I am thy reward: it is not to be understood causally, and to be referred onely to those temporall rewards, which are promised afterward as Cajetane and Mercerus consenting to the hebrewes: but substantially, of the reward also of everlasting felicitie, which was laid up for Abraham with God. Iun. 4. So that here God promiseth the two greatest blessings that can bee, one in this life of perseverance, in that God saith, he will be his buckler to protect and preserve him to the end, and of eternall felicity, in saying I am thine exceeding great reward. Perer.

Quest. III. Abraham neither was doubtfull or forgetfull of Gods promise.

Vers. 2. Abraham said. 1 Cajetane well noteth, that in other visions Abraham was onely an hearer, God the speaker: but here Abraham maketh answere to God, whereby it appeareth that Abraham did grow in confidence and familiaritie with God. 2. Neither doth Abraham complaine that he went childlesse, as though he had set light by the Lords liberal offer, that he would be his reward: but because the spirituall blessing depended of his seed, he craveth this, as the meanes whereby Gods promise toward him concerning the great reward, should be effected. Calvin. 2. Neither did Abraham doubt, or was forgetfull of Gods promise, that he would give him seed, and unto his seed that land. Gen. 13. 15. But as yet it was not expressed unto him, whether his seed should come out of his owne bowels, as here the Lord first promiseth, or it might bee a seed or sonne adopted, as here hee supposeth, that this Eleazer should be his heire: sic Eucher. Rupert. 4. Or that Abraham as impatient of delay, that God had not yet given him a seed, according to his promise, is bold to poure out his griefe before God, that the Lord would hasten to accomplish his desire. Calvin.

Quest. IV. Of the divers acceptions of the word Mesbek.

The steward of my house: according to divers interpretations of the word Meseeh, there are as many expositions. 1. The Septuagint take it for a proper name, as though Mesech should bee the name of Eleazers mother: for so they read the sonne of Mesech borne in my house. 2. Some derive it of the word sabah, that signifieth to beare or minister the cup: and so read the son of my cup-bearer or butler, Aquila. 3. Some of the word shakek, that is, to run up and downe: and so Eleazer should bee as the steward or skiffe that run up and downe the house. Oleaster. Mercer. 4. Mesbek signifieth an overseer: so some read that he was the steward or overseer. Chald. or the sonne of the steward. Theodoret. Hieronm. 5. Mesbek also signifieth a leaving or dereliction; and so Eleazer is called the sonne of the leavings: not for that hee only was left of Abrahams ancient familie, as Cajetane: or because he had left to him the care of his house Paulus. But that he purposed to leave unto him the inheritance of all. Iunius. And this seemeth to bee the most proper sense.

QVEST. V. Wherefore Eleazer is called of Damascus.

ELeazar of Damascus. 1. This Dameseck, or Damascus, was not the name of his mother, as some think ex Calvin. 2. Neither was it his proper name, as Hierome and the Septu. translate: of whom the City Damascus should be named. Tostat: for Damascus is held to have beene builded by Hus the sonne of Aram, and to be a name more ancient than Abraham. Genes. 14. 15. 3. But Eleazer by his father was of that countrey, though borne in Abrahams house: and therefore hee is called Damascenus of Damascus: sic Chald. Ius. Calv.

QVEST. VI. Whether Abraham saw the starres only in vision.

5. HE brought him forth, and said looke up now to heaven, &c. 1. This was not done in vision only, as Cajetane thinketh: but as the words import, Abraham having spent a good part of the day in prayer within, now is bid to goe forth in the evening, and is shewed the starres for his confirmation. Iun. 2. Neither is this an allegory, as Philo applieth it, who saith, that the soule of a wise man should beelift unto heaven: But it is an history so verily done as it is rehearsed.

QVEST. VII. What seed of Abraham is understood, carnall or spirituall.

Lib. 16. de civit. dei. c. 22.

SO shall thy seed be. 1. We neither thinke with Augustine that this is meant of Abrahams spirituall seed only: magis videtur promissa posteritas felicitate sublimis: that posterity seemeth to bee promised, which is blessed in heaven. 2. Neither with Lyranus, that there are here two literall senses, the one of his carnall seed, the other of his spirituall: for of one place there can be but one literall sense. 3. Neither with Pererius that the literall sense concerneth Abrahams carnall seed, the mysticall, his spirituall. 4. But these words have one whole and generall sense: which comprehendeth both Abrahams kindreds: for that is the proper and literall sense which is intended by the spirit: now in these words the spirit intendeth both the carnall off-spring of Abraham, as Moses expoundeth, the Lord God hath made thee as the starres of heaven in multitude: Deut. 10. 22. as also the spirituall seed of the faithfull, as Saint Paul interpreteth: so shall thy seed be. Rom. 4. 17. and hence concludeth, that Abraham is the father of us all, that is, of the faithfull.

Whether one place of scripture hath divers ends.

QVEST. VIII. Wherein the Israelites represented the people of God.

YEt we deny not, but that in other places spirituall things are implyed by temporall, by way of mystery and allegory; as the Apostle saith, the law had a shadow of good things to come: as Abraham's carnall generation did divers wayes represent the spirituall; 1. In their number. 2. In their afflictions. 3. In their passage thorow the red sea, figuring baptisme, 4. In being fed with manna, a type of Gods word. 5. In drinking of the water out of the rocke, a figure of Christ. 6. In looking toward the brasen serpent. 7. In their pilgrimage in the desert, a lively patterne of our pilgrimage in this life. 8. In their entrance into the land of Canaan under Iosua; which signifieth our conducting by Christ to the heavenly Canaan.

Lib. 10. de Trinit. Lib. 5. de Abraham. c. 3.

QVEST. IX. Wherein Abrahams faith consisted.

Vers. 6. ABraham beleeved the Lord, &c. 1. Hilarie noteth, that this was singular in Abrahams faith because he doubted not of his omnipotency. 2. Ambrose reputatum est illi ad justitiam, quia rationem non quæsivit, this was counted to him for righteousnesse, because he beleeved, and required no reason. 3. But there was more in Abrahams faith, than onely to beleeve God and his promises to bee true, for he did trust in God, Cajetan, as the word bajehovah, signifieth, he beleeved in Iehovah, Mercer. and embraced God as his father. Calvin. 4. Abraham therefore did not count this to himselfe as a just thing to beleeve God, as some interpret; neither is it to be referred to Abraham, that he counted it a just thing in God thus to recompence him as R. Levi and Ramban corruptly expound; but God counted it to him, or as the Septuag. it was counted unto him, for true justice before God, because he stedfastly beleeved Gods promises: and thus expoundeth Elias Orientall, confuting Ramban.

QVEST. X. Why faith was imputed for righteousnesse to Abraham.

IT was counted to him for righteousnesse; Not that Abraham beleeved not before, or that his former beleefe was not also counted to him for righteousnesse. But these reasons may bee alleaged, why in this place first mention is made of the imputation of righteousnesse. 1. Because in this place first one is promised to come out of Abrahams owne bowels: hee considered not his owne body which was now dead (as the Apostle saith) nor the deadnesse of Sarahs wombe: Rom. 4. 19. 2. Because although Abraham had faith before, yet it waxed stronger and stronger: hee was strengthened in the faith. Rom. 4. 20. 3. At this time Abraham made answer unto God; and so it followeth in the same place, he gave glory to God. Rom. 4. 4. The scripture doth not thus testifie of Abraham in the beginning of his conversion, but even at the time when Abraham was full of good workes, even then notwithstanding his righteousnesse should be imputed to his workes, but to faith, Calvin neither this testimony of Abrahams righteousnesse is referred till he had received circumcision, lest he might have beene thought thereby to have beene justified. Them. Anglic. in cap. 15. Genes. and therefore the Apostle of purpose observeth, that righteousnesse was imputed to Abraham, when he was yet uncircumcised, Rom. 4. 10.

QVEST. XI. That the asking of a signe proceeded not of any doubtfulnesse in Abraham.

Vers. 8. VVHereby shall I know, &c. This question proceeded not from the doubtfulnesse or weakenesse of Abrahams faith, as some Hebrewes which thinke that Abrahams posterity was punished with captivity because of doubting. 1. For the Apostle saith, he was not weak in faith. Rom 4.19. 2. And seeing hee beleeved without doubting an harder matter concerning one to come out of his owne bowels, it is not like hee doubted of the lesse, namely, of possessing that countrey. 3. Neither would the spirit of God have given such a commendation of Abrahams faith, that it was imputed for righteousnesse, if he had wavered or doubted. 1. Some therefore thinke that Abraham asked a signe, not for himselfe but in regard of his posterity, that they might have some assurance of the inheriting of that land: sic Rupertus, Cajetan. 2. Some thinke that Abraham doubted not of the promise, but of the manner, whether it were absolute or conditionall: for it was both: to possesse the land was an absolute promise, but to inherit it for ever was tied to the condition of obedience. 3. Rasi thinketh that Abraham asked by whose merit hee should possesse the land: as though the merit of his sacrifice brought him thither. 4. But others doe better touch this point: that Abraham only for the better confirmation of his faith, desireth to be instructed concerning the manner, and of the time when it should be fulfilled: as Mary moved the like question, how shall this be? Luke 1. Augustine: and so accordingly the Lord afterward setteth downe the time, after 400. yeares. Theodoret: And this is rather a signe of Abrahams faith, then a note of incredulity, in asking this question: for the wicked and unbeleevers at the first reject Gods promises: the faithfull desire more to be confirmed. Calvin. 5. Farther we must observe, that there were speciall motions in the Saints, which are not now to be drawne into example: as Gedeon, and Ezechias asked signes, Iud. 6.37. 2 King. 20.18. Calvin: and so Aquinas saith well; Abraham petiit signum ex instinctu divino: Abraham asked a signe of a divine instinct.

Augustl lib. 16. de civ. dei c. 24. Theod. qu. 64. in Genes.

QVEST. XII. Why Abraham tooke of three kinds of beasts.

Vers. 9. TAke me an heifer of three yeere old, &c. So it is to be read rather with Aben Ezra, than three heifers, as the Chalde readeth. I will let passe the allegories and mysticall significations, which are diversly gathered upon these words. 1. Some by the beasts which were divided understand the evils and afflictions, which happened to Abrahams posterity, by the birds not divided, their deliverance and prosperity. 2. Philo thinketh that these three kindes are taken for sacrifice, the heifer, goat, ramme, because of their meeknesse and tamenesse, which suffer themselves in great heards to be driven by a child: and for that they are profitable, for labour, for food, for clothing. 3. Lyranus thinketh that by these beasts and fowles are signified Christs vertues: by the heifer his labour and patience, by the sheepe his innocency, by the turtle his continency, by the dove his meeknesse. 4. In that three sorts of beasts were taken: some understand the three generations, while the people were oppressed, by the turtle the fourth generation, when they came forth into the wildernesse: Theodoret: some the renewing of the covenant with the three Patriarkes, Abraham, Isaak, Iacob: or the three kinds of government among the Israelites, of Judges, Kings, High-priests. Perer. Some the three seasons from Adam to Noah, from Noah to Abraham, from Abraham to David. Augustine: 5. By the dividing of the beasts, and the not dividing of the fowles: some understand by the first, the afflictions of the people, when the children should be separated from their parents, by the other their deliverance, some by the first insinuate such, as were carnall among the people, by the other such as were spirituall, Augustine. 6. By the lighting of the fowles upon the dead carcases, which Abraham drove away, some doe decypher the attempts of the Ægyptians against the Israelites to devoure and destroy them, but that God disappointed them, some the assaults of evill spirits upon carnall men: Augustine: some the wandring thoughts that seaze upon our praiers & spirituall sacrifices, Gregorie. 7. By the setting of the sunne v. 17. some vnderstand the death of Ioseph, when the affliction of the Hebrewes began; some the end of the world when the greatest persecution should be: and by the smoaking fire brand the end of the world and fierie iudgement, Augustine.

Diuers allegoricall senses given of this place.

But wee need not thus hunt for allegories, which are not only mens devises, as it may appeare by the uncertainty and variety thereof. Sundry men, as their fancies lead them, doe invent sundry allegories, It shall only suffice us to know, that God appointeth these kinds, to be offred partly for sacrifice, as Iosephus: partly to be as signes of the covenant, which the Lord maketh with Abraham: and as Chrysostome well noteth, because it was the manner of men, when they made a solemne covenant; to cut a calfe in twaine, and to walke betweene the parts thereof. Ierem. 34. 18. wishing the like to themselves if they breake the covenant, the Lord vouchsafeth to observe the same manner.

Chrysost. hom. 36. in Genes.

QVEST. XIII. Of the divers kinds of trances.

Vers. 12. AN heavy sleepe, or trance. Philo noteth foure kinds of trances, or ecstasis in the Scripture. 1. Madnesse or phrensie, that commeth of some distemperature, Deut. 28. 28. The Lord shall smite thee with madnesse, and blindnesse, and astonishing of heart. 2. Astonishment of the minde upon some sudden and strange accident, as Isaak was astonished at Esaus comming in after Iacob, Gen. 27. 33. 3 The sweet rest and contemplation of the soule: as when the Lord cast Adam into a sleepe, Gen. 2. 4. When as the soule is ravished with some divine inspiration and revelation, as Peter was Act. 10.

QVEST. XIV. The time of the dwelling of Israel in Ægypt.

Vers. 13. THey shall bee a stranger in a land not theirs foure hundred yeares. 1. First, it is untrue that the Israelites dwelled in Ægypt full foure hundred yeares, of which opinion is Genebrard. For from Caath who went downe into Ægypt with Iacob, Gen. 47. and lived in all 133. Exod. 6. who begat Amram, who lived ann. 137. the father of Moses, who was 80. yeare old, when Israel came out of Ægypt, there are not above 350. yeares: from which some must bee detracted wherein the fathers and their children lived together. 2. Neither did they dwell in Ægypt lesse than 200. as Chrysostome, or 210. as Lyranus but 215. yeares, as it may be thus gathered: S. Paul from the promise first made to Abraham, to the giving of the law, in the first yeare of the going forth of Israel out of Ægypt, reckoneth 430. yeares, Galat. 3. 17. of this summe 215. yeares were run when Iacob went downe into Ægypt: from the time of the promise in the 75. yeare of Abrahams age, till Isaaks birth, in the 100. yeare, Gen. 22. 22. 5. are 25. yeares: from Isaaks birth to Iacobs, are 60. yeares, Gen. 25. 26. and Iacob was an 130. when hee went into Ægypt, Gen. 47. 9. which all make 215. yeares: the other 215. yeares, may be accounted thus: Caath the sonne of Levi went downe with Iacob into Ægypt, who as Eusebius thinketh, begat Amram at 70. yeares: Amram also at 70. might beget Moses, who lived 80. yeares before the departure of the Israelites out of Ægypt: the whole summe maketh 220. yeares: from the which we must detract five yeares of the age of Caath, when he came downe with Iacob into Ægypt: so there remaineth 215. yeares, which is the time of the sojourning of Israel in Ægypt: ex Mercer.

The time of their affliction in Egypt.

3. Though the Israelites dwelt in Ægypt 215. yeares, yet they were not kept in thraldome and affliction above an 130. nor yet so much: for all the time of Iosephs government, after Iacob came into Ægypt, must be accepted, which was 71. yeares: for Ioseph was then 36. yeare old: 30. yeere old hee was when he stood before Pharaoh, and expounded his dreame, Genes. 41. 49. and the seven plentifull yeares were past, and two of famine. Gen. 45. 11. And Ioseph lived in all 110. yeares: if then 39. bee deducted from 110. there will remaine 71. yeares: all this while, Israel was not afflicted. Beside, whereas their affliction began not till Ioseph and all his brethren were dead, Exod. 1. 6. and Levi supposed to bee 44. yeare old when he came into Ægypt, lived 137. yeare, Exod. 5. 16. was 39. yeares in Ægypt: which being subtracted, from 215. yeares the time of their dwelling in Ægypt, there will remaine not above 122. yeares, which was the time of their thraldome and bondage in Ægypt.

How the foure hundred yeares must be reconted.

4. Their foure hundred yeares of servitude in a land not theirs; 1. must not be counted from Abrahams first comming into the land of Canaan, as Chrysostome: for from thence the 430. yeares mentioned, Exod. 12. 40. must take beginning: and the text is, thy seed shall be a stranger: we must then begin to count from the birth of Isaak Abrahams seed. 2. Neither is it like, that God afterward seeing their extreme affliction, shortned this time of 400. yeares: which also is Chrysostomes conjecture: for Gods word altereth not, and S. Steven, Act. 7. 6. abridging this story, setteth the same time of 400. yeares, not of 430. as some latine copies have, wherein the translation is corrupted. 3. Neither is the land of Canaan here to be excluded, as Oleaster thinketh, for although it was promised to Abraham for an inheritance, they were as yet strangers therin: for Abraham had not so much as a breadth of a foot, Act. 7. 5. and Iacob counted himselfe a pilgrime and stranger there. Gen. 47. 9. 4. Neither to make up these foure hundred yeares, need we with Iosephus to count 170. yeares betweene Iosephs death and Moses birth, which was not above 64. yeares: Iosephus confuting Cheremons errour, that would have Ioseph and Moses both of one time, falleth into another himselfe. 5. Wherefore this time of 400. yeares must begin at Isaaks birth, though precisely they were 405. yeares: which few odde yeares in so great a summe maketh no great difference. Againe this land not theirs, is not only Ægypt, but Canaan: and where the text rehearseth these three, they shall be strangers, serve, and be entreated evill: wee must joyntly, not severally, apply all these to the time limited of 400. yeares: that this whole time they were either strangers, or served, or were afflicted, and so Augustine well understandeth, qu. 47. in Exod. Mercer.

QVEST. XV. How diversly a generation is taken.

Vers. 16. IN the fourth generation they shall come hither, &c. A generation is sometime taken for the whole life of man, and continuance of an age: as Matth. 24. 34. this generation shall not passe, till all these things be fulfilled: that is, some now alive, may live to see it: sometime it is taken for the succession of persons, as Matth. 1. 17. sometime for a certaine number of yeeres: as for the space of ten yeares, Ieruch. 6. 2. the time of the captivity in Babylon, which was 70. yeares, is limited to seven generations: for 20. yeares, Euseb. lib. de prepar. 10. c. ult. for 33. yeares, Herod. lib. 2. for 30. Diodor. lib. 3. c. 13. for an 100. Dyonis. Halicar. lib. 1. Rom. antiquit. According to these divers acceptions. 1. Some doe understand here a generation, for an 100. yeares: but that cannot be, for the Israelites came not out in the fourth hundred yeare, but in the beginning of the fifth. Iun. 2. Some take it for the space of seventy yeares, out of Psal. 90. 10. and so after the Israelites had dwelt three generations, that is, thrice 70. yeares, 220. yeares in Ægypt, then in the fourth 70. yeare, they entred the land of Canaan: sic Iunius. But the best computation of these generations, is from the succession of persons: yet we must neither begin from the eldest person that entred into Ægypt, as Cajetanus and Lyranus reckon these foure generations from Iacob to Iudas, from Iudas to Pharez, Pharez to Ezron, Ezron to Caleb: so also Mercerus: which make foure generations, which computation is a great errour: for that Caleb, which entred to Canaan, was not the sonne of Ezron, but of Iephunne, Ios. 14. 6. long after the other Caleb: for we reade of three Calebs: the first, the sonne of Ezron, 1 Chron. 2. 9. the second, the sonne of Hur, ibid. v. 50. the third, the sonne of Iephunne, 1 Chron. 4. 15. from Iudah to this Caleb, were six or seven generations: neither could Ezron bee the father of this Caleb: for Ezron came downe with Iacob into Ægypt, Gen. 46. 12. and Caleb was about 40. yeare old when the Israelites came out of Ægypt, Iosu. 14. 7. and the time of the Israelites abode in Ægypt was 215. yeares: take from that, the 40. yeares of Calebs age, and suppose Ezron to have beene but five yeare old

The fourth generation, wherein the Israelites returned, how to be taken.

Caleb, divers of that name.

old, at his comming to Ægypt, by this account he ſhould be 170. yeare old before he begat Caleb: whereas Caleb the ſonne of Ezron was borne long before his father was 60. yeares old, 1 Chron. 2. 21. wherefore that Caleb which lived with Ioſua, was not the ſonne of Ezron.

Neither muſt we account only thoſe generations, that were borne in Ægypt, as Perer. for ſo wee ſhall have but three generations: Caath begat Amram in Ægypt, Amram Aaron, Aaron Eleazer, who divided the land: but the right reckoning is to begin from the youngeſt of thoſe generations, that went downe to Ægypt: and ſo from Kohath to Eleazer, are foure generations. Cohath begat Amram, Amram begat Aaron, Aaron, Eleazer.

4. But Philo his allegoricall conceit I let paſſe, who by the fourth generation, underſtandeth the fourth age of mans life, when after the ſimplicity of his childhood, the riot of his youth, the inſtruction of his middle age, he commeth to yeares of gravity and judgement: for who ſeeth not how unproper and diſagreeing to this hiſtoricall prophetie, ſuch myſticall collections are?

Quest. XVI. Why God ſpared the wickedneſſe of the Amorites.

Verſ. 16. The wickedneſſe of the Amorites is not yet full, &c. 1. The Amorites are named, whereas there were other people of the Canaanites; becauſe they were the moſt mighty among the reſt, both in power and ſtature of body, whoſe height was like the height of Cedars. Amos 2. 9. and they excelled in wickedneſſe: and therefore the Prophet ſetting forth the wickedneſſe of Iſrael, ſaith, their father was an Amorite, Ezech. 16. 2. 2. Neither did the puniſhment of this people depend upon any fatall neceſſity, before the which they could not be puniſhed, but upon Gods will and purpoſe, who would not cut them off at the firſt, but in his juſt judgement permitted them, till they came to the height of iniquity. 3. Some by ſinnes, here underſtand the puniſhment of ſinne, which God ſuſpended for a time: but the other ſenſe is better to take the word properly for the wickedneſſe of that people, which was not yet ripe: which God deferreth to puniſh, both to make them excuſable that deſpiſe ſo long a time of repentance, and to juſtifie his owne judgements, which he ſendeth not without juſt cauſe. 4. And there are foure arguments or marks of the ripeneſſe of ſinne, and the neareneſſe of Gods judgements. 1. the quality of the ſinnes themſelves, when they are ſuch as are directly againſt God, as ſuperſtition, Idolatry, the offering up of their owne children in the fire: againſt the law of nature, as in unnatural uncleanneſſe, ſuch as reigned among the Sodomites againſt humane ſociety, as in cruelty and oppreſſion, as in the old world. Gen. 6. 11. 2. The generality of ſin, when not a few, but the whole multitude are corrupt: ſo in Sodome were not to bee found ten righteous men. 3. The impudency of ſinners, that are not aſhamed openly to tranſgreſſe, and to boaſt of their ſinne: as the Prophet complaineth of the Iſraelites, they have declared their ſinne as Sodome, they hide them not: Iſa. 3. 9. 4. When they are incorrigible and paſt amendment: as Pharaoh and the Ægyptians, when they were not humbled with thoſe ten grievous plagues, the Lord overthrew them in the red ſea, Perer.

Quest. XVII. Why Euphrates is called the great river.

Verſ. 18. From the river of Ægypt to the great river of Euphrates. 1. Euphrates is called the great river, not as the Talmudiſts thinke, becauſe it confined the holy land; but either for that it was the greateſt river in Aſia, as Danubius is in Europe, Nilus in Africa, in India Ganges and Indus: or for that it was one of the rivers, that came through Paradiſe: as for the ſame cauſe Tigris, or Hiddekel, is called the great river, Dan. 10. 4. 2. The river of Ægypt is not Nilus (as R. Salomon. and Mercer.) for the bound of Paleſtina never extended ſo farre: but it is a river which runneth out of Nilus, betweene Peluſium and Paleſtina, thorow a great deſart, and falleth into the Mediterranean ſea: this river is called Sichor. (as Aben Ezra,) of the troubled and blacke water, Ioſuah 13. 3. which it borroweth of Nilus, which for the ſame cauſe is called melas, black: it is termed alſo the river of the wilderneſſe, Amos 6. 14. the ſame which the Septuagint call Rinocolura, Iſa. 27. 12. becauſe it did run along by that city, ſo called of the cutting or ſlitting of noſes: which puniſhment King Artiſanes inflicted upon malefactors, and ſent them to inhabite that city. Diodorus Siculus, lib. 2. and of this opinion is Epiphanius, that this river of Ægypt, is the river Rinocolura, to whom Iunius aſſenteth, Ioſu. 13. 3. It ſeemeth to bee an arme of the river Nilus, commonly called Carabus, which is diſtant ſome five dayes journey from Gaza toward Ægypt, Peter. ex Maſoin Ioſua. 13.

Of the river of Ægypt which bounded Paleſtina.

Quest. XVIII. How the land of Canaan is ſaid to be given to Abraham.

Verſ. 18. Vnto thy ſeed, &c. But v. 7. the Lord ſaid, to give thee this land to inherit it: and cap. 13. 15. both are joyned together, I will give it unto thee, and thy ſeed for ever, &c. Now ſeeing Abraham had not ſo much as the breadth of a foot, Act. 7. 4. how was this land given to Abraham? 1. Some thinke it was given to Abraham in right, to his ſeed in poſſeſſion: or to him, becauſe it was given to his ſeed; for as the ſonne belongeth to the father, ſo what is given or promiſed to the ſon, concerneth the father: 3. but therefore is this land ſaid to be given to Abraham, (though hee never had poſſeſſion thereof, but his ſeed) becauſe for his ſake, and the love of God toward him, it was given to his ſeed: as Moſes ſaith, becauſe he loved thy fathers, therefore hath he choſe their ſeed after them, Deut. 4. 37.

Quest. XIX. Whether the Iſraelites ever enjoyed the whole country Euphrates.

From the river of Ægypt, to the river Euphrates. &c. But whereas the land of Canaan is otherwiſe confined, Numb. 34. 8. where it is not extended beyond Hamath, which is a great way on this ſide Euphrates: and the uſuall limitation and border, was from Dan to Beerſheba, 1 King. 4. 25. which as in length not above 160. miles; and in breadth, from Joppe to Bethlem, not above 46. miles, as Hierome witnesseth, epist. 129. ad Dardan. a great question is here moved, how their borders could reach to Euphrates: 1. Some thinke, that there were two countries promised to Abrahams seede, the lesse of Canaan, which they possessed; and a larger extending to Euphrates, upon condition if they walked in obedience: which condition because they performed not, they never injoyed that countrey: sic Hier. like as in the Gospell (saith he,) the Kingdome of heaven is promised to the obedient: but if they performe not obedience, they shall misse of the reward: nequaquam erit culpa in promittente, sed in me, qui promissa accepere non merui: and yet the fault shall not be in him that promiseth, but in mee that am not worthy to receive the promise. Hieron. ibid. to whom subscribeth Andreas Masius, in c. 1. Iosue.

2. Augustine is of another opinion, that the promised land was of two sorts, the lesse which comprehended the land of Canaan, which the Israelites possessed under Iosua: the other which reached to Euphrates, which was not under their dominion, till David and Salomons time, who reigned over all Kingdomes, from the river, that is, Euphrates, and from Tipsack, which was a City upon that river, afterward called Amphipolis, even unto Azzah, or Gaza, 1. King. 4. 21. 24. August. qu. 21. in Iosue: to whom agree Cajetane and Oleaster, and Iunius upon this place, and this seemeth to bee the better opinion: for wee are not to thinke, but that this promise made so solemnely to Abraham, accordingly tooke effect.

3. Whereas it is objected, that all the country to the river Euphrates was never given unto Israel, no not in Salomons time, because they did not expell thence the inhabitants, and plant the Israelites there as they had done in Canaan. First Augustine answereth, that concerning the Cities which were a farre off they were commanded, if they would make peace, not to smite them, or roote out the inhabitants, but onely to make them tributary: but they were charged that in the nearer Cities, they should save none alive, Deut. 20. 11. 16. and this might be the cause, why in these remote countries they expelled not the inhabitants. Againe, because this large dominion, by reason of the peoples sinnes, continued not long, this might be a reason, why these countries were not inhabited of the Israelites: who if they had obeyed the Lord, he would have made it a firme possession unto them, as the other of Canaan.

Quest. XX. Of the country of the Kenites and Kenezites.

Vers. 19. The Kenites, Kenezites, &c. Here are ten sundry nations rehearsed, whose countries are promised to Abraham: whereas in other places there are but six named, Exod. 3. 8. in other seven. Deut. 7. 1. The reason thereof is not, 1. either because, here the countreyes were named given to all Abrahams posterity, as to the Ismaelites, Idumeans, in other places those, which onely belonged to the Hebrewes: as Tostatus thinketh. For every where under the name of Abrahams seed, the faithful people are only comprehended, that should come of Isaack. 2. Neither is it to be thought, that the names of these nations knowne in Abrahams time, were after extinguished. Perer. 3. Or as Augustine, that these nations inhabited the large Land of promise, which reached to the river, the seven usuall, the lesser countrey of Canaan: for many moe nations inhabited on this side Euphrates, than are here named. 4. But I preferre rather Iunius opinion, that three were the borderers upon the Land of promise, which the other seven then possessed, the Kenites on the South, the Kenezites on the North, the Kadmonites toward the East; so that in this verse the Land of promise is bounded and limited. 5. Therefore the Hebrewes are deceived, that thinke these three the Kenites, Kenezites, Kadmonites, to be the Idumeans, Ammonites, Moabites, because Kenaz was the sonne of Eliphaz of Esau: who though they were not subdued by Iosua, should at the length be vanquished by the Messiah. For 1. the Lord gave not a foot of any of these countreyes possessed by the children of Esau and Lot to the Israelites, Deut. 2. 5. 9. 2. they dreame of their Messiah to be a temporall Prince and conquerour, which is their errour. 3. these nations might be subdued by Iosua among the rest, though they are not named. 4. Whereas the Cananites are here otherwise named, then Gen. 10. their names might bee changed in processe of time, or one might have two names. Aben Ezra. Mercer.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Of beleeving God and in God.

Vers. 6. Abraham beleeved the Lord, &c. in the Hebrew (in the Lord) yet that common distinction, of beleeving God, and in God, though there be a difference betweene them, is not grounded upon the phrase of Scripture, which indifferently useth both these for one, especially in the new Testament: as Ioh. 5. 14. He that beleeveth him that sent me, hath eternall life, 1 Ioh. 5. 10. He that beleeveth in the sonne of God, &c.

2. Doct. That the starres cannot be numbred.

Vers. 5. Tell the starres if thou be able to number them, &c. Hence then it may well be enforced, that the starres cannot be numbred: as the Prophet Ieremy saith, 33. 22. as the army of heaven cannot be numbred, nor the sand of the sea measured, so will I multiply the seed of David: the starres then can be no more numbred, than the sand of the sea measured: and therefore this is set forth as a worke peculiar unto God, which counteth the number of starres, Psal. 147. 4. Wherefore Aratus and Eudoxus were deceived, which thought they did comprehend the number of the starres: and the common Astronomers, that hold there there are not above a 1022. starres to bee seene in the sky: for if it were so, it had beene an unfit comparison, to liken the multitude of Israel, which amounted to more than 600. thousand, Exod. 12. 37. to the starrs. Deut. 10. 22. August. lib. 16. de civit. dei c. 23. R. Levi thinketh, that in Abrahams time the starres were not numbred, but afterwards they were by Astronomers: but neither then nor since could they ever bee numbred as hath beene shewed.

3. Doct. Word and Sacraments must be joyned together.

Vers. 18. IN that same day the Lord made a covenant. &c. Here the word and promises is annexed to the signe preceding: whereby we learne that the word and sacraments should bee joyned together: Calvin.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Faith justifieth not meritoriously. but by way of apprehension and application of the righteousnesse of Christ.

Vers. 6. ABraham beleeved God, and hee counted that unto him for righteousnesse, &c. First from hence that popish doctrine is confuted, that faith justifieth not as it apprehendeth, and applieth the righteousnesse of Christ, but as it is a meritorious worke by the worthinesse and dignity thereof. Remist. annot. in Rom. 3. Sect. 3. But the Apostle concludeth otherwise: that to him that worketh not, but beleeveth, &c. his faith is counted for righteousnesse. Rom. 4. 5. where righteousnesse then is imputed and accounted, there is not wrought or obtained by workes: faith then justifieth not as it is a worke or meritorious, but as an instrument in apprehending the justice of Christ which is imputed by faith.

2. Confut. Faith a speciall application of the promises of God.

SEcondly: Bellarmine collecteth out of this place, that a justifying faith, is not a speciall application of the promises of God in Christ, but a generall beleefe only, that whatsoever God saith is true: as Abraham saith in this place, was his giving of credit to Gods speeches, that hee should bee the father of many nations, lib. 1. de justif. c. 8. Contra: But it is otherwise evident out of the scripture, that Abraham beleeved not onely Gods promises concerning his carnall seed, but his faith reached also to the spirituall seed, which was Christ, as the Apostle applieth it Galath. 3. 16. yea Abraham rejoyced to see Christs day, Iohn 8. 16. as having a particular interest in him, as his Saviour.

3. Confut. That faith only justifieth.

THirdly: this place strongly proveth against the Papists, that faith only justifieth: for whereas Abraham had shewed before this, many excellent workes: of piety in building altars in many places, and calling upon the name of God: of charity in seeking reconciliation betweene Lot and him, c. 13. of mercy in redeeming Lot being taken prisoner, c. 14. contempt of riches in refusing to take of the King of Sodomes goods, yet none of all these workes are reckoned or imputed unto Abraham for righteousnesse but onely his faith. Now whereas Perer. objecteth that place, Psal. 106. 31. that Phinehes worke in executing judgement upon the adulterer and adulteresse, was likewise imputed to him for righteousnesse: and so would prove that faith only is not imputed for righteousnesse but workes also. Perer. in 15. Genes. v. 6. Our answer is further this: that the Prophet in the Psalme speaketh not of that righteousnesse whereby Phinehes was originally counted just before God for that was by faith, because that without faith it is impossible to please God, Heb. 11. 6. but of that righteousnesse, whereby Phinehes faith was declared and testified: and so this his zealous fact, because of his faith was counted a righteous worke; But Moses here speaketh of that originall justice whereby Abraham was justified before God: Like as S. Paul denying that Abraham was justified by workes, Rom. 4. 2. and Saint Iames affirming that hee was justified through workes: Iam. 2. 21. the first speaketh of justification properly before God, the other of the same testified and declared by workes: so Moses treateth of justice imputed by faith before God by an originall collation from God, the other Prophet of justice imputed by a zealous worke, by way of effectuall declaration before men: And therefore Moses saith he (that is God) imputed Abrahams beleefe to him for righteousnesse: But the other Prophet saith: it was imputed to him for righteousnesse from generation to generation; that is hereby, Phinehes in all ages was knowne to be reputed and taken just before God: the Lord rewarding the zeale of Phinehes with the perpetuall inheritance of the Priesthood: Numb. 25. 13.

How Phinehes zealous act was imputed to him for righteousnesse.

Justification two wayes taken.

4. Confut. Faith not the beginning only of justification.

FOurthly another point of popish doctrine is here overthrowen: that a man is said to bee justified by faith: because it is the beginning of salvation and, idonea praparatio hominis: a fit preparation of a man unto justification: Perer. in 15. Genes. disput. 3. numer. 42. But Abraham was not now only prepared, or beginning to be justified: for he had done already many excellent workes of righteousnesse, acceptable unto God: and yet being not now onely entred, but set in the middest of his godly course, hee is counted righteous by faith: faith then is not the beginning only but the perfection and consummation of righteousnesse.

3. Confut.

5. Confut. S. Paul and S. Iames cannot be reconciled by popish doctrine.

FIfthly whereas Saint Paul proving Abraham to have beene justified by faith without workes, Rom. 4. 2.5. and S. Iames saying that Abraham was justified through workes, seeme at the first shew to bee contrary each to other: the Popish writers goe about three wayes to reconcile these places, first the Rhemists note, that Saint Paul excludeth Abrahams morall workes before faith: annot. 1. in Rom. 4. and by such workes, they grant a man is not justified, but by such as follow and proceed of faith.

Contra. Abraham before this time, when God imputed unto him righteousnesse by faith, had done divers faithfull workes: as the Apostle sheweth, that by faith hee when he was called, obeyed God, &c. and by faith abode in the land of promise. Hebr. 11.8,9. therefore the Apostle speaking of Abrahams justification by faith after he had done these faithfull workes, excludeth even such workes also from justification: And againe he saith: to him that worketh the wages is not counted by favour but by debt: but to workes done before or without faith, no wages is due, because without faith, nothing is pleasing to God, therefore he meaneth not such workes.

Secondly Bellarmine saith, that Saint Paul speaketh de fide charitate formata, of a faith formed with charity, and furnished with good workes: lib. 1. de justificat. c. 23. and such a faith truly justifieth.

Answer. True it is, that Abrahams faith, which Saint Paul so much commendeth, was a lively and working faith, yet it did not justifie him, as it was active in bringing forth good workes, but as it was passive, in apprehending and laying on hold of the righteousnesse of God: As the Apostle sheweth, that Abrahams manner of justifying and Davids was all one, but David declareth that man blessed, to whom God imputeth righteousnesse without workes, Rom. 4 6. further Saint Paul thus reasoneth: being fully assured, that he which had promised was able to doe it, and therefore it was imputed to him for righteousnesse, &c. v.21,22. It was not imputed for the working of his faith, but for his beleeving.

Thirdly, Pererius useth a distinction of first and second justification: the first is, when a man of a sinner is made just, the second, when a just man becommeth more just: disput. 3. in 15. Genes. numer. 48. of the first they say Saint Paul speaketh, of the second, S. Iames. Bellar. de justif. lib. 4. c. 18.

Contra: 1. The Scripture knoweth no such distinction of first and second justification: that which they call the second justification, is no other but sanctification, which is an increasing and going forward in the fruits and further assurance of justification: the Prophet saying, blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, speaketh of that justification, when a man of a sinner is become just before God, which they call the first justification, but to that blessednesse is promised, and where happinesse or blessednesse is obtained, no other justification is necessary: wherefore the first and one justification sufficeth, there need not a second. 2. Further this distinction admitted, Saint Paul rather should intreat of the second justification, because he alleageth the example of Abraham who was called already, and had done many righteous workes before the Scripture maketh mention of the imputation of righteousnesse unto him by faith: and S. Iames of the first, who bringeth in the example of Rahab the harlot, now first called, which had done no worthy workes before.

How Saint Paul and Saint Iames are truly reconciled.

Wherefore thus Saint Paul and Saint Iames are reconciled, if wee say that S. Paul understandeth that justification whereby Abraham was made just before God: for he saith, if Abraham were justified by workes he hath wherein to rejoyce, but not with God, Rom. 4. 2. he meaneth then that justification wherein a man may rejoyce with God, which is by faith. But S. Iames speaketh of that justification whereby a man is declared to be just before men, whereby our faith is justified to bee a true faith: as hee saith, shew me thy faith out of thy workes, v.18. he urgeth the shewing and approving of faith: so hee saith, Abraham was justified thorow faith, when he offred his sonne Isaak, v.21. yet before God Abraham was justified before by faith: but by this his obedience, his faith was approved unto God, and made knowne to men: Neither is it usuall in Scripture thus to take the word justified; as wisdome is said to bee justified of her children, Matth. 11. 13. that is declared or approved to bee just: Christ was justified in the spirit: 1 Timoth. 3.16. that is as the Apostle elsewhere interpreteth: declared mightily to be the sonne of God touching the spirit of sanctification. Rom. 2.4.

6. Morall observations.

1. Observ. God amply rewardeth them that contemne things present.

Vers. 1. I Am thy exceeding great reward. &c. Because Abraham contemned the rich gifts of the King of Sodome, the Lord doth promise more abundantly to recompence him therefore, as Ambrose well noteth, ne infirmos animos ob dilationem mercedis subeat penitentia contempsisse presentia, &c. because the reward is deferred, let no man in his weakenesse repent, that hee hath despised things present, &c. lib. 1. de Abrah. c. 3. For God will be their exceeding great reward: as our Saviour promised to his Disciples, there is none that hath forsaken house or brethren, &c. for my sake and the Gospels, but he shall receive an hundredfold, &c. Mark. 11. 29, 30.

2. Observ. Honest marriage to be desired to have lawfull heyres.

Vers. 2. WHat wilt thou give me, seeing I goe childlesse, &c. Abraham desireth not riches, or long life for his reward, but only that he might have one to heire & inherit his labour: Ambrose note hereupon is very apt: that men should joyne themselves in honest mariage: ne hujusmodi susceptum labore liberos, quos heredes habere non possunt, &c. lest they beget such children whom they cannot have to bee their heires: lib. 1. de Abraham. c. 3. for the law saith, a bastard cannot enter into the congregation to the tenth generation: Deuter. 23. 2. Men therefore if not for shame, yet because of their inheritance and succession should give themselves to honest life, not to live in adultery and filthy lust: who might better goe childlesse, than to beget children: which should be monuments of their shame.

3. Observ. God imparteth his promises not all at once, but by degrees to his children.

Vers. 4. ONe that commeth out of thine owne bowels, &c. First God promised that Abraham should have an innumerable seed, as the dust of the earth, Genes. 13. 17. but yet Abraham knew not, whether it should be his naturall or adopted seed: now the Lord cleareth that doubt in this place, and telleth him, it shall be out of his owne bowels: yet Abraham was uncertaine, whether his seed should bee given him by Sara his wife, or some other: herein also the Lord resolveth Abraham afterward, Genes. 17. 16. And thus we see that God revealeth not his will at once to his children, but by degrees acquainteth them with his gracious promises: Perer. and thus is that saying of the wise man fulfilled: that the way of the righteous shineth as the light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day: Proverbs, 4. 18.

4. Observ. The experience of Gods former mercies confirmeth his servants.

Vers. 7. I Am the Lord that brought thee out of the, &c. by past experience of Gods deliverance the Lord giveth Abraham assurance of his protection afterward: Thus the remembrance of former benefits received from God should confirme us in the hope of the continuance of his mercies. Muscul. As David because he slew the lion and the beare, doubteth not but that hee should overcome the uncircumcised Philistine. 1 Sam. 17. 36.

5. Observ. Gods patience abused, bringeth a greater destruction in the end.

Vers. 16. THe wickednesse of the Amorites is not yet full, &c. Herein appeareth the great long suffering of God, that spareth the wicked, to see if they will be brought to repentance. But by this example also is made manifest, what they are to expect, that abuse Gods patience and goe on in their wickednesse, that their destruction shall be the more fearefull when it commeth: as the Apostle saith, that such, as despise the patience and long sufferance of God, doe heape unto themselves wrath against the day of wrath. Rom. 2. 4. 5. Calvin.

6. Observ. Vnjust complaint of persecution in England.

BUt here I cannot let passe a malicious note of Pererius upon this place, wherein he glanceth at the present state of England: his words translated stand thus: If any man shall chance to marvell why God suffereth the cruell persecution of the Catholikes in England, and the power of the English regiment so long to continue: hee may leave off marvelling if hee consider what the Lord here saith, that the iniquities of the Amorites are not yet full: at the length, the English shall be complete, and then shall come the time of the divine revenge, which may seeme late unto us, but in respect of the secret reason of Gods providence, timely enough: which season if any man thinke now not to be far off (the persecution of that nation being now growne unto such rage and cruelty) he shall not (in mine opinion) misse the truth: Thus farre this Ignatian sectary, in 15. Genes. Numer. 96.

Answ. 1. This complaint of persecution and cruelty exercised against the popish Catholikes is most untrue: if it be persecution, for men to enjoy their lands, to grow rich, to fare of the best, to purchase lands: then are the Recusants in England persecuted: if some rebellious and traiterous popish Priests and Judasines have worthily suffered for their practising against the Prince and state, this is no persecution, but a just execution upon such evill members, which no state in the world would endure. The Protestants in Queene Maries dayes, would have thought it happy, if they might upon like conditions have redeemed their conscience, as Popish Recusants hitherto have done.

2. This frierly exclamation and out-cry, might with greater reason bee returned upon their owne head: for it is hard to say whether the Church of God have indured greater persecution under the unchristian Romane Emperours, or Antichristian Popes: they have so racked, burned, slaughtered, whipped, woried, tormented, both young and old, as else where I have shewed, that as Moses describeth, the cruelty of the enemies of the Jewes, so it hath beene true of them, they will not regard the person of the old, nor have compassion on the young: Deut. 28. 50. for thus have they not spared to put to the sword women great with child, and to make their mothers wombs the infants sepulchres: thus were the women of Merindol served: the mothers slaine, the infants tumbled forth of their mothers bellies, and were trampled upon: Fox. p. 952. And thus, as Hierome complaineth of the barbarous Hunnes, the cruell Papists practised: non ætati parcebant, non vagientis miserebantur infantiæ, egebantur meri, qui nondum vivere cœperunt, they spared not tender age, nor pitied crying infants, they were forced to die, which had not begunne yet to live. Hierom. ad Ocean.

The cruelty of the Church of Rome. Preface to Catholicon.

3. Wherefore we doe trust, as the Apostle propheseth; They shall prevaile no longer, for their madnesse shall be made manifest to all men, 2 Tim. 3. 9. that the iniquities of new Babylon have filled up their number, and the time of their judgement cannot be farre off, when that saying in the Revelation shall be accomplished; O heaven rejoyce of her, and ye holy Apostles and Prophets, for God hath given your judgement on her, Revel. 18. 20.

But against the Church of England, this Frier, with the rest of that brood, that have long looked for the overthrow, and promised themselves a vaine hope of their popish Kingdome in this land (thanks bee alwayes

Pererius found to be a false Prophet against Englād.

alwayes given to God) are found false Prophets: God hath disappointed them; whereas they expected a change in the next change, we in this change I trust shall see no change, unlesse for the better (for our sinnes let not,) and I hope (to use the saying of Moses) that their eyes shall looke till they fall out of their heads, Deuter. 28.32. before that shall befall us, which they have so long desired. True it is that this land aboundeth with many sins, which God grant may be purged from among us: but we trust, that God will chastise us as a loving father with his owne hands, and not give us over to bee punished of a nation more wicked than our selves, though we are great offenders, yet not as the Amorites an uncircumcised nation, but as the Israelites the Lords owne people: It is therefore great presumption in this popish writer to set in Gods place, to make them Amorites, that are no Amorites, and to threaten judgement, where the Lord purposeth to blesse: Ambrose upon those words in the Psalme 119. 106. I have sworne and will perform, thus writeth: Noli usurpare exemplum sacramenti, qui implendi sacramenti non habes potestatem, &c. let not example bee no warrant unto thee to take an oath, unlesse you had power to keepe an oath: so this prophecy against the Amorites can be no ground to the Frier of such false application, unlesse he were appointed to be Gods Minister for the execution.

CHAP. XVI.

1. The Method and parts.

THis Chapter hath two parts, the giving of Hagar by Sarai to Abraham, from v. 1. to 5. the sequele thereof, from thence to the end.

In the first part. 1. There is the cause that moved Sarai to give Hagar, on her part, because she had no children, v. 1. on Hagars part, shee hoped to have a childe by her, v. 2. 2. The manner is expressed how Hagar was given, and when, v. 3. 3. The effects and fruits; Hagar is conceived with childe, v. 4.

Secondly, the sequele of this marriage, is first the departure and flying away of Hagar. v. 5. to 7. then her returne with the occasion thereof. Hagar flyeth, because Sarai corrected her: this she did by Abrahams leave, Abraham gave leave because Sarai complained because Hagar despised her, v. 4, 5.

In Hagars returne: 1. the Angell biddeth her goe, and humble her selfe to her mistresse, v. 8, 9. 2. the Angell prophesieth of the number of her seed, v. 10. of the name of her sonne, v. 11. his quality and condition, v. 12. 3. Agars thankfulnesse and obedience is expressed, ver. 13, 14. 4. the accomplishment of the prophecie, concerning the birth and name of her sonne.

2. The difference of translations.

H. detr. v. 3. she tooke Agar the Egyptian. H. then Sarai Abrahams wife tooke Hagar. cat.

v. 5. thou doest me wrong. H. S. B. G. I have judgement against you. C. the injury done to me, be upon you, Tr. mine injury is upon thee. P. heb. It is more like that Sarai maketh Abraham the cause of her wrong, because he corrected not Hagars malepertnesse, than that she wished evill unto him.

T. s. C. c. v. 7. which is in the way toward Sur, in the wildernesse. H. which is in the way Agara. C. which is in the way to Sur. cat. the Sept. have not this clause.

S. de. H. ad. C. c. v. 11. The Lord hath received thy prayer. C. marked thine affliction. T. P. heard thy tribulation, cat.

12. His hand against every man, and every mans hand against him. cat. but the Chalde hath. he shall stand in need of all men, and all men of him.

T. r. 13. I have seene the things behind him, that seeth me. H. P. I have seene him face to face that seeth me. S. I have looked after him that seeth me. B. G. I doe see after him that seeth me. Tr. that is, I have seene God and live.

3. The explanation of doubts.

QVEST. I. Whether Sarai gave Agar to Abraham by Gods instinct.

Vers. 2. I Pray thee goe in unto my maid. &c. 1. It is most like that this Agar, as Philo noteth, though by nation an Egyptian, yet in religion was of Abrahams faith: for he would not be unequally yoked with one of a divers faith. 2. It is also probable, that seeing Abraham did goe in unto her only for procreation, that after she conceived, hee did no more company with her, as Philo also observeth, lib. Abraham. 3. But it is unlike that Sarai gave this counsell to Abraham, to take her maid by Gods instinct, as Iosephus thinketh: for God would not goe against his owne ordinance, they two shall bee one flesh, Gen. 2.4. Neither did Sarai this so much for desire of procreation, and to try, as Chrysostome conjectureth, whether the cause of sterility were in her or her husband, but chiefly in regard of the blessing which was promised to Abrahams seed: in which respect her fault is somewhat excused, yet it cannot be defended, because she faileth in the meanes. 5. Neither is it like that this Hagar was Pharao his daughter (as some of the Hebrewes,) but some of the maids rather of Pharao his house, that were given to Sarai, Gen. 12.16.

QVEST.

QVEST. II. Why ten yeares of Abrahams dwelling are mentioned.

3. THen Sarai tooke Hagar, &c. after Abraham had dwelled ten yeares. &c. 1. Plutarke hath the like ſtory of Stratonica, that being barren, gave unto Dejotarus her husband Electra, by whom he had children: thus the heathen were readie to imitate the infirmities of holy men and women, but not to follow their vertues. 2. Mention is here made of tenne yeares, not becauſe this time is ſet, as the Hebrewes imagine, for the triall whether the wife is like to be barren or fruitfull: for Rebecca was twentie yeares barren: neither, as Cajetan, to ſhew, that Sarai was paſt hope of children who was now 75. yeare old, tenne yeare younger than Abraham: but rather, as Chryſoſtome noteth both to ſhew Abrahams conſtant and chaſte love toward his wife, that notwithſtanding this experience of her barrenneſſe, did contem himſelfe with her: and his faith toward God, that ſtaying thus long after the promiſe, yet deſpaired not of the performance thereof. Perer.

Plutar. de virtut. mulier.

Chryſoſt. hom. 38. in Gen.

QVEST. III. Of Hagars ſinnes, Sarais faults, and Abrahams infirmity.

Vers. 6. SArai dealt roughly. 1. In Hagar divers faults are diſcovered, firſt her unthankfulneſſe and contempt toward her miſtreſſe, that had ſo much honoured her: ſecondly, her obſtinacy in refuſing to be corrected, but flying away: then her froward mind in taking the way by Sur into Ægypt, thinking never to returne, Oecolamp. and ſo to play the Apoſtata from her faith, which ſhe learned in Abrahams houſe. 2. Sarai alſo diverſly ſheweth her infirmity, firſt her patience, in being ſo much moved at the inſolency of her maid: then her raſhneſſe in charging Abraham without cauſe, and wiſhing God to bee judge againſt her ſelfe. Muſculus: thirdly, her too great ſharpneſſe and ſeverity againſt Hagar, as Ambroſe noteth, which was conſtrained to eſcape her hands by flying away: immoderatius permiſſa ultione utitur, &c. Sarai in her anger doth intemperately uſe the power committed to her: lib. 1. de Abrah. c. 4. ſo alſo Calvin. for though the Angels afterward bid Hagar humble her ſelfe to her miſtreſſe, that doth not juſtifie Sarais rough dealing, (though I confeſſe Hagar was more in fault) for there is no place of reſiſtance or contumacy againſt ſuperiors, though they incline too much to ſeverity: the Hebrewes alſo note that afterward the Iſmaelites and Agarens afflicted the Iſraelites, becauſe Sarai uſed Hagar ſo hardly. 3. As Abraham ſheweth his love to Sarai, in preferring a barren wife before a fruitfull maid. Luther: yet hee bewrayeth his forgetfulneſſe, in committing Hagar to the power of his angry wife, being with childe (as hee did imagine) with the promiſed ſeed: ſo it falleth out, when any thing is attempted beſide Gods word, as this marriage with Hagar was, our minds are amazed upon every accident, and find no ſtability. Calvin.

QVEST. IV. How the Angell ſpeaketh in the perſon of God.

Vers. 10. I will greatly increaſe thy ſeed, &c. 1. This was not ſome Prophet, as Sem, as R. Levi thinketh, but an Angell. 2. The Angell ſpeaketh in the perſon and authority of God, by whom he was ſent, as it is uſuall in ſcripture for the meſſenger to uſe the name of the ſender: and it may well bee, that Chriſt was the chiefe in all ſuch embaſſages, and therefore it is no marvell, if the Angels ſpeake in the perſon of the divine Majeſty. Calvin. 2. Iſmael is called Agars ſeed, not Abrahams, though hee came out of his loynes, becauſe the promiſe of bleſſing was not made concerning the ſonne of the bond-woman, but of the free.

Iſmael, Why called Agars ſeed not Abrahams.

QVEST. V. Of the populous nations of the Iſmaelites and Saracens.

IT ſhall not be numbred for multitude, &c. 1. This we ſee accompliſhed, Gen. 25. where Moſes rehearſeth twelve Princes of Iſmael, according to the promiſe of God, Gen. 17. 20. 3. but yet it more abundantly now appeareth, in the populous nations of the Saracens, firſt called Agarenes, then Arabians, but called Saracens, not of Saraca a region in Arabia, as Stephanus thinketh, lib. urbib. but of Sara: for they hiding the obſcureneſſe of their birth and beginning from Agar a bond-woman, doe challenge to bee the right heires of Abraham. Luther.

QVEST. VI. Iſmael the firſt in ſcripture called by his name before his birth.

Vers. 11. THou ſhalt beare a ſonne and call his name Iſmael, &c. 1. Shee knew that ſhe was with childe, but ſhe was not ſure before, that ſhe went with childe of a ſonne. Muſculus. 2. That fable of the Hebrewes, that Hagar did miſcarry of her childe in the wilderneſſe, and was conceived againe, is worthy no credit: for the Angell ſaith, thou art with childe, and mention is made of her conception before. 3. Cajetan. noteth that Iſmael was the firſt in Scripture, whoſe name was foretold before birth: but it is further obſerved by a learned man, (in his Concent) that Iſmael is the onely evill [illegible] deſcribed by his name, before hee was borne: the reſt were Iſaak, and Joſias in the old teſtament: our bleſſed Saviour and Iohn Baptiſt in the new: But in or before the birth of theſe foure, whoſe names were foretold, there was ſome miracle ſhewed: Iſaak borne of Sara, at 90. yeares of her age: when [illegible] was named the altar clave aſunder: when Iohn Baptiſt was promiſed, his father was ſtricken dumbe: the bleſſed Saviour was borne of a virgin: but in the foretelling of Iſmaels name, no miracle, that wee [illegible] of, was wrought.

QVEST.

QVEST. VII. Of Hagars tribulation, what it was, and how she was heard.

Vers. 11. THe Lord hath heard thy tribulation, &c. 1. Hagars affliction and tribulation was not onely in being throughly handled of her Mistresse, but in wandring up and downe in the wildernesse in hunger and thirst. Perer. 2. God heard her tribulation, that is, pitied her trouble: the Chalde paraphrast thinketh that shee prayed to God, and so the Lord heard her prayer: but there being no remembrance in this place of her prayer, it is more like, that God of his great mercy had compassion on her misery: her afflictions spake, though she held her peace. Calvin. 3. For such is the Lords mercy, that hee hath pity on those, which are worthily punished, as Hagar was for her stubbornesse. Muscul. and the Lord respected her for his servant Abrahams sake, by whom she was with child.

QVEST. VIII. How Ismael is called a Wild man.

Vers. 12. HE shall be a wilde man, his hand against every man. 1. The Chalde readeth verbatim according to the Hebrew, he shall be onager homo, a man like a wilde asse. 1. a wilde man: rather than a fruitfull man, as Oleaster deriveth the word.

2. And so have Ismaels posterity shewed themselves, namely the Saracens, as savage men living by robbing and stealing, as they which have written of them doe testifie. Ammian. Marcel. lib. 14. de moribus Saracen.

3. Though it be no blessing simply, to be enemies to all men, and all men to them, yet in respect of servitude and bondage, this is a benefit of the middle sort, not to bee overcome of enemies, but to live in despite of them. Mercer.

QVEST. IX. How he shall dwell in the presence of his brethren.

SHall dwell in the presence of his brethren, &c. 1. Some interpret in despite of his brethren, as not afraid of them. 2. Some contrariwise that hee shall amongst his enemies have some friends and brethren. 3. Others note his cruelty, that he shall not spare to afflict his brethren. 4. Others, that he shall be a person by himselfe not mixed with his brethren. 5. But the best interpretation is, that hee should enlarge his coasts round about bordering upon his brethren, the Idumeans, Madianites, Moabites, Ammonites, &c. Junius. 6. But where as Hierome translateth, he shall pitch his tents, though it fitly expresse the manner of the dwelling of the Arabians in tents, yet so much is not implied by the originall word, (shacan) which signifieth only to dwell.

QVEST. X. How Hagar is said to see after him that seeth.

Vers. 13. HAve I not here also looked after him that seeth me, &c. 1. the meaning is not that she once saw the backe parts of the Angell appearing to her in humane shape, as the latine translator readeth. 2. Neither as Lyranus, because she saw the Angell of God after and againe, having seene him formerly in her masters house. 3. Neither as Vatablus and Cajetane following Kimhi, are these words to be read with an interrogation, have I seene afterward him? and so the answer to be negative, that she saw him not, but the Angell suddenly vanished away, as in the 12. of Judges, when hee appeared to Samsons parents. 4. Neither doth Hagar reprove her dulnesse, because she began not sooner to looke after and attend upon God that was present with her. 5. R. Isaak thus expoundeth: that at the last shee began more and perceive, that it was best for her to returne unto her dame, which she considered not before. 6. Some place the emphasis or force in this word heere, that even in that place in the wildernesse, she had seene the Angell. Mercer. 7. But the right and proper meaning is, that she seeth, that is, liveth, after shee had seene God, for they thought no man could see God and live, and therefore Iacob also said, I have seene God face to face, and my life is preserved, Gen. 32. 30.

QVEST. XI. Who is understood by the living and seeing.

Vers. 14. THe well of him that liveth and seeth. 1. Some referre both unto God. 2. some to the Angell who as Gods Minister, though not as God, liveth and seeth. 3. Some, living, understand Ismael that lived. 4. But Hagar saying the well of the living and seeing: by living understandeth her self that lived after this glorious sight, by seeing God, which seeth our afflictions.

QVEST. XII. Of Cades and Sur.

BEtweene Cadesh and Bered. 1. These were two places in the wildernesse of Sur, which extended to the red sea. 2. Cadesh is that place where the water gushed out of the Rocke, and the people murmured against God, Numb. 20. 3. It is called a well, and before a fountaine, because it was a deepe fountaine: for as Augustine saith: omnis puteus fons, non omnis fons puteus, Every well may be called a fountaine, but not every fountaine a well.

QVEST. XIII. Why Abraham not Hagar gave the name to Ismael.

Vers. 15. ABraham called his name Ismael, &c. 1. Before it is said, thou shalt call: and here Abraham giveth the name, as he had learned of Hagar, and so in effect she gave it. Perer. 2. For the Lord would not by his oracle diminish the right of the father, to whom it belonged to give the name. Muscul. as Eva is said to have given Seth his name, Genes. 4. 25. yet Adam first called him so. Gen. 5. 3.

4.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Evill must not be done, that good may come thereof.

Vers. 2. I Pray thee goe in unto my maid, it may be I shall be builded by her, &c. Sara though shee had a good intent, that Gods promise concerning Abrahams seed might be accomplished, yet shee doth not well to use unlawfull meanes, that Abraham may have this seed by a concubine, for according to Saint Pauls rule, we must not doe evill, that good may come thereof, Rom. 3.8. And this device of Sara prospered not, she being so farre from being builded and increased hereby, that the posterity of the seed of Ismael, the Ismaelites and Hagarenes became enemies afterward to her owne seed, Masenius.

2. Doct. They that punish justly are not persecutors.

Vers. 6. Sarai dealt roughly with her. Augustine from this example collecteth, that they alwayes which inflict punishment, are not persecutors, and that discipline may be administred justly against the obstinate, as Sarai dealt with Hagar: Hagar passa est persecutionem a Sara, hac tamen sancta erat, quæ faciebat illa iniqua, quæ patiebatur. Hagar suffered persecution of Sara, and yet she was holy that did it, the other evill that suffered it, Epist. 50.

3. Doct. Religion no enemie to politicke order.

Vers. 9. H Vmble thy selfe under her hands. Hagar was a bond-servant, whose condition then was very hard: yet the Lord commandeth her to returne to her mistresse: we see then that religion dissolveth not politicke order, neither is the doctrine of faith, a doctrine of licentious liberty. Hagar though now come to herselfe, and called of God, yet is not to renounce her condition and state of life: according to Saint Pauls rule, Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he is called, &c. 1 Cor. 7.10. Luther.

4. Doct. The office of Angels.

THe Angell of the Lord said to her, &c. This is the first place that maketh mention of the apparition of Angels. This Angel is sent to call home againe Hager to her station and calling: so the Angels chiefe office is to protect the servants of God, and to bring home againe those that erre: so as the Apostle saith, They are all ministring spirits sent forth to minister for their sakes that shall be heires of salvation, Heb. 1.14.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Polygamie of the fathers, never lawfull or dispensed with.

Vers. 3. THen Sarai Abrahams wife tooke Agar. 1. Some thinke that Abrahams marriage (or copulation rather) with Hagar was lawfull: and that Sarai was moved of God to perswade this marriage to Abraham, Ioseph. lib. 1. antiquit. But this no where appeareth, for though God approved Sarai her advice for the casting out of the bond-woman with her sonne, Gen. 21. 8. yet it followeth not that God liked of her counsell in Abrahams taking her to be his wife.

2. Some thinke that adultery was not yet forbidden by any law: Ambrose, because Abraham was both before the Law and the Gospell, he thinketh him to have beene blamelesse. Durandus also and Toletus are of opinion, that polygamie was lawfull before it was forbidden by the positive law of the Gospell. But the saying of our Saviour, a principio non fuit sic: from the beginning it was not so, sufficiently confuteth these assertions, seeing God in Paradise made unto Adam but one Eva, one wife for one husband.

Lib. 1. de Abraham. cap. 4. Adultery and Polygamie alwayes unlawfull. Durand. in sent. 4 cap. 33. Tolet. in. 19. Mat. 19. Polygamie never dispensed with.

3. Some simply allowed not the polygamie of the fathers, but hold that it was permitted by some speciall dispensation for those times: and so though they will not simply justifie it, yet they qualifie and excuse it by these reasons.

1. Theodoret saith, neque natura, neque lex ulla tunc scripta, &c. Neither nature, nor any written law did forbid then the having of many wives, Cont. Though no law were yet written that made any such prohibition, yet they had the law of the creation, they two shall be one flesh, Matth. 19.5. which was confirmed by faithfull tradition, and the lively examples of the Patriarks. Que. 66. in Gen.

2. This marriage proceeded not of any intemperate lust, but was done, studio quærendæ posteritatis, of desire to increase posterity, Ambr. Cont. The Apostle for this hath given us a rule, not to doe evill, that good may come thereon, Rom. 3.8. Abrahams good intention doth not excuse an unlawfull action. Lib. 1. ad Abrah. cap. 4.

3. Abraham did it not of himselfe: Augustine saith, Voluntatem illius non voluptatem suam implevisse, accepisse non petisse: that he fulfilled not his owne lust, but his wives desire, he asked her not but received her. And he to this purpose urgeth the Apostle words, that the man hath not power over his owne body, but the woman, 1 Cor. 7. Lib. 16. de Civit. Dei. cap. 25.

Contra. If this were a good defence, then Adams excuse also might have served, because the woman gave him the apple, and he did eat. The Apostle giveth the woman power over her husbands body, and the man likewiſe over the womans, to performe mutually the matrimoniall duties: but the woman can no more give liberty to the husband to joyne unto ſtrange fleſh, than the husband can unto the woman. As the Apoſtle in the ſame place reſtraineth that liberty, Let every man have his wife, let every woman have her husband, 1. *Cor.*7.3. they muſt be the one addicted and obliged only to the other.

Lib. 1. *de Abrah. cap.*4.

4. Ambroſe againe excuſeth this marriage of Abraham with Hagar, by the myſtery in it, as it is expounded by S. Paul, *Galat.*4. quod ergo putabas eſſe peccatum, advertis eſſe myſterium: that which you thought was iniquitie, appeareth to be a myſterie.

Abrahams mariage with Hagar not excuſed, becauſe of the myſtery.

Contra. A myſterie we admit, according to the Apoſtles collection, in Abrahams marriage with Hagar, but that giveth no liberty or immunity unto it: for ſo theefe might be excuſed, becauſe the ſuddennesſe of Chriſts comming to judgement, is likened to the comming of a theefe in the night: neither is it therefore a thing excuſable to play an unrighteous ſteward, becauſe Chriſt draweth a parable from thence, *Luk.*16.

5. Auguſtine further ſaith, ſufficiendæ prolis cauſa erat uxorum plurium ſimul uni viro habendarum inculpabilis conſuetudo: he calleth it an inculpable cuſtome for one man in thoſe dayes for procreation ſake to have many wives. He excuſeth the multiplicity of wives by the cuſtome of thoſe dayes, though the uſe bee now otherwiſe: like as ſometime among the Romans it was counted a hainous thing, tunicas habere talares vel manicatas, to weare ſleeved, or ſide gownes, but now for a man of honeſt condicion not to have ſuch, is counted a ſhame &c.

Lib 3. *de Doctri. Chriſt. cap.*12.

Polygamie not juſtified by cuſtome.

Contra. Indeede indifferent things, ſuch as are the formes and faſhions of apparell, may be changed, and ſometimes held lawfull, ſometimes uncomely, according to the divers cuſtomes of times: but that which is ſimply unlawfull, by no cuſtome can be made lawfull: that which is evill, whatſoever the cuſtome is, ought not to be followed: the Scripture herein giveth us a rule, not to follow a multitude to doe evill, *Exod.*23.2. 2. Neither doth it yet appeare, that there was any ſuch cuſtome among the faithfull in Abrahams time, to couple themſelves to more than to one wife. 3. Chryſoſtome of this very cuſtome of having many wives, thus excellently writeth; Vides quomodo non oportet conſuetudinem prætexere, ſed quod juſtum eſt inquirere: ecce quoniam mala erat conſuetudo, explioſa eſt, &c. You ſee then, that we muſt not pretend cuſtome, but intend that which is juſt: becauſe it was an evill cuſtome, it is left.

*Hom.*56. in Gen.

Polygamie not lawfull for procreation.

6. Chryſoſtome in the ſame place alleageth another excuſe: Permiſſum eſt cum duabus vel tribus miſceri, ut humanum genus propagaretur, &c. It was then permitted to be coupled with two or three, that mankinde might be increaſed. Contra. If this were a ſufficient reaſon for polygamie, it had beene more needfull, that in the creation many women ſhould have beene made: and ſo likewiſe that more than one wife a piece, for Noah and his ſonnes ſhould have entred into the Arke: for then there was greater need of all meanes for procreation.

Wherefore all theſe reaſons and excuſes, doe not ſerve to exempt the Patriarks from all blemiſh and blame, in their multiplying of wives.

Noah not diſpenſed withall for polygamie.

4. A fourth opinion there is, that God gave a diſpenſation for polygamie to the fathers, and as it is moſt like to Noah, when he ſaid to him, Increaſe and multiply: *ſic Perer. in Gen.*16. *diſp.*1.

Contra. 1. Againſt a precept written, diſpenſation unwritten hath no place: ſeeing then the commandment is expreſſed; For this cauſe ſhall a man leave father and mother, and cleave to his wife, *Gen.*2.24. (he ſaith not wives, but wife, as ſpeaking of one) but ſuch diſpenſation is no where mentioned, we hold it to be a meere humane conjecture. 2. If God had given Noah ſuch an indulgence, it is like that he and his ſonnes would have uſed it, there being then greateſt cauſe in the renewing of the world. 3. And though they are bleſſed with increaſe, yet only the lawfull meanes of increaſing and multiplying are permitted: for otherwiſe this might be an excuſe for adulterous copulations.

Polygamie an infirmitie in the fathers.

5. Wherefore the ſafer and ſounder opinion is, that polygamie, that is, the marriage of many wives, was neither ſimply lawfull, nor for a time diſpenſed with, but that it was an humane infirmity even in thoſe holy Patriarks. 1. Becauſe it degenerateth from the firſt inſtitution in Paradiſe, to the which Chriſt ſendeth us; From the beginning it was not ſo. 2. The firſt that brought in the doubling of wives was Lamech, of the curſed ſeed: neither doe we read of any of the Patriarks, from Adam to Abraham, for the ſpace well-nigh, of two thouſand yeares, that had more wives than one. 3. And whereas the text ſaith, that Sarai gave her to Abraham, for, or inſtead of his wife; the meaning is not that Hagar became properly Abrahams wife, but that ſhe was in the place, and ſtead of his wife: for as Sarai ſaith, It may be I ſhall receive a childe by her, *Gen.*16.2. but if ſhe had indeede beene his wife, and ſo manumitted, and not Saraies bond-woman ſtill, the childe ſhould have beene counted hers, and not her miſtreſſes: and *Gen.*25.6. mention is made of Abrahams concubines Pelagſhim, whereof Hagar muſt be one.

Morall observations.

1. Observ. Affliction and punishment commeth from God.

Vers. 2. THe Lord hath restrained me from childe-bearing. Sarai as a godly woman imputeth her sterility and barrennesse to none other cause originally but to the will of God: Thus godly men, doe both acknowledge God the author of all good things, which they enjoy, as also the inflicter of all such punishments, which befall them: as Iob confesseth, The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken it, Iob 1. 22. Perer.

2. Observ. Not to yeald unto temation.

Vers. 4. ANd he went in unto Hagar, &c. Abraham who as a mighty and invincible champion, had stood out hitherto against the temptations and baits of Satan: is overcome of his wife, and yeeldeth to her motion, to goe in unto Hagar: which proceded from want of due consideration of Gods power; who though Sarai hitherto had beene barren, yet was able, (and so accordingly did) to make her fruitfull. Thus David who withstood many tentations, yeelded to the pleasure of the flesh: therefore as the Apostle saith, He that thinketh he standeth, let him take heed lest he fall, 1 Cor. 10. 10. Muscul.

3. Observ. Not to be proud of Gods gifts.

Vers. 4. HEr dame was despised. Hagar waxeth insolent and proud of this blessing bestowed upon her: whereby Gregory well noteth such as are puffed up and swell with pride in respect of their gifts: as also it is a great example of ingratitude, in despising her, which was the first occasion of this benefit. Calvin.

4. Observ. Domesticall contention.

Vers. 5. THou doest me wrong, &c. We see that even the houses of the faithfull, such as this of Abraham was, have sometime their domesticall contentions, Calvin. But as Abraham by his wisdome and discretion qualifieth the intemperate heat of Sarai: so men are taught to beare with the infirmities of their wives; and as the Apostle saith, To dwell with them as men of knowledge, and to give honour to them as to the weaker vessell, 1 Pet. 3. 7.

5. Observ. Affliction maketh admonition to be regarded.

Vers. 8. SArais maid whence commest thou? &c. The Angels speech was so much the more seasonable to Hagar, being now in some distresse in the wildernesse, and feeling some smart for her folly and disobedience; So after men have beene afflicted, they will more diligently apply their care to instruction, as the Prophet David saith; It is good for me that I have beene afflicted, that I may learne thy statutes, Psal. 119. 71. his afflictions brought him to learne more perfectly the statutes of God. Muscul. And in this present example it appeareth how fruitfull affliction was; for Hagar that before was so proud and lifted up, that she knew not her selfe, and despised her mistresse, is now humbled, and calleth upon the name of the Lord, vers. 13.

6. Observ. Temporall blessings are signes of election.

Vers. 10. I will increase thy seed, &c. Ismael, though he were not the chosen seed, yet receiveth a goodly temporall blessing to multiply and increase, whereby we see, that the outward benefits of this life, are no signes of Gods speciall favour, and eternall election, Muscul. As the Preacher saith, No man knoweth either love or hatred of all that is before them, Eccles. 9. 1. that is, whether he be loved of God, or otherwise, no man knoweth by his outward state in the world.

7. Observ. The Law must be preached before the Gospell.

Vers. 9. IN that Hagar is bid first to humble her selfe, before the promise is made unto her, wee learne, that the order of doctrine is to beginne with repentance, and then followeth the promise of grace, Mercer. which order the Prophet observeth, Isa. 1. 16, 18.

Chap. XVIII.

The Method.

IN this Chapter is set forth Gods covenant with Abraham, which containeth on God's behalfe promise of grace and protection, on Abrahams obedience: The covenant on Gods behalfe is propounded generally containing both the promise of God, and the foundation thereof, Gods sufficiency, and the obedience of Abraham in walking uprightly, vers.1,2. Then followeth the particular promises, which are either offered of God unasked, or craved by Abraham: The promises offered are three, with their severall signes: first, hee promiseth he should be a father of many Nations, yea, of Kings, and the signe thereof is the change of Abrahams name, vers.4. to 7. The second is, the promise of the land of Canaan, with perpetuall protection of him, and his seed, vers.7,8. the signe thereof is circumcision: where the law and right of circumcision is expressed, where they shall be circumcised, vers.11. when, vers.12. who, all males, both home-borne and strangers, vers.13. wherefore, to be a signe of the covenant: vers.11. then the perill in neglecting of this covenant is signified, vers.14. The third promise offered, as concerning the birth of Isaack, and the signe thereof, the changing of Sarai her name, ver.15. to 19.

Then followeth the promise craved of Abraham concerning Ismael.

Lastly, Abrahams obedience is declared, in circumcising himselfe, and Ismael, and all the males of his house, vers.23. to the end.

The Explanation of doubts.

Quest. I. Whether this apparition were visible.

Vers.1. THe Lord appeared.] The Angell of God was sent to Agar, but the Lord himselfe appeared to Abraham, Mercer. This was not a secret revelation made to Abraham, but a manifest vision, Calvin. which was shewed unto Abraham not being in a trance, but in some sensible and visible manner, as though an Angell in humane shape talked with him: this may be gathered both by Abrahams gesture, in falling twice upon his face, vers.3.17. as though he had seene some divine presence: as in that Abraham laughed: he was then waking, and in the use of his sense, not rapt in a trance: and further, vers.33. God is said to goe up from Abraham: that visible Majesty was taken out of his sight, Cajetane.

Quest. II. Of the meaning of the word Shaddai.

GOd almighty or all sufficient.] 1. Some derive the word Shaddai, here used for dai, that signifieth sufficiencie sic Genevens. 2. Some from Shad, that signifieth a breast or plenty, Oleaster. 3. Other from Shadad, which is interpreted to spoile, conquer, or overcome, and so they say that God did here invert or overcome the order of nature, in causing the barren to beare. But Oukelos Hieronie, Pagnine, Iunius, doe better translate, Omnipotent: God then is called Shaddai, that is omnipotent, and all-sufficient, for his omnipotencie includeth also all-sufficiencie.

Quest. III. Of the change of the name of Abram to Abraham.

Vers.5. NEither shall thy name any more bee called Abram, but Abraham. 1. Hieronie thinketh, that the Hebrew letter he, is borrowed from the name of God, Iehovah, & added to Abrams name. ho. 39. in Gen. tradit. in Genes. 2. Ferus maketh this mysticall signification of it; that God by giving Abraham a letter of his name, doth thereby give even himselfe unto him: as also thereby is signified, that God should also be borne of the seed of Abraham: and this should bee in the fourth millenary or thousand yeare after the beginning of the world, as this letter was added in the fourth place. 3. Chrysostome thinketh, that Abram signifieth one that passeth over (because hee passed over the river) mistaking the name Abram and Hebrew for the same, whereas the first beginneth with aleph, the other with ain. 4. Philo interpreteth Phil. lib. de Abraham.

Abram

Abram, an high father: Abraham the high father of the voice: and so divideth Ham, the syllable added, from Hamah, that signifieth to make a sound or noise: thereby insinuating, that Abram of an high father who was given to the contemplation of the starres and high things, was now become a perfect wise man: for hee is a wise man, that is, a master of words, and guideth his tongue. 5. But all these are mens conjectures: the Lord himselfe sheweth the reason of this change, because the Lord had made him, Abh hamon, a father of a multitude: so that Ham, the last syllable of Abrahams name is the first of the word Hamon, that signifieth a multitude: sic Eugubinus, Munster, Iun. and hereupon the Hebrewes well observe, that God to those which he loved, added a letter of his owne name Iehova, as the letter He to Abrahams and Sarahs name: the letter jod, to the name of Iehoshuah, who was called Hoshea before.

6. But yet it appeareth not, why the letter Resh remaineth still in the name of Abraham. 1. Ab. Ezra thinketh, that it is borrowed from abir, which signifieth strong; and so Abraham, betokeneth a strong or mighty father of a multitude. 2. Rasi thinketh it is inserted, to shew him to bee father of Aram his owne Countrey. 3. Some of the Hebrewes thinke, that Resh is not taken away, though He be added, because God doth not use to take from names, but to put to them: which observation is not true: for the Lord taketh away one letter from the name of Sarai, namely jod, and putteth to He. 4. Mercerus thinketh that Resh is of rabh, which signifieth much or great, and so maketh this to be the sense of Abrahams name; a father of a great multitude. 5. But I preferre the common opinion: that Resh remaineth of Abram, and nothing is changed, but only He added: and so Abraham signifieth an high father of a multitude. Now whereas it is the opinion of the Hebrewes, that it is a sinne and transgression of Gods commandement, to call Abraham any more by the name of Abram: it appeareth to be otherwise, for Nehem. 9.7. he is called Abram: therefore where the Lord saith, thy name shall be no more called Abram, it is not so much a commandement, as an honourable favour vouchsafed to Abraham in the charge of his name, Mercer.

Wherefore the letter resh is retained still in Abrahams name

Quest. IV. The reasons why circumcision was instituted.

Vers. 10. Let every manchilde among you be circumcised. Of this institution of circumcision, divers reasons are alleaged. 1. Philo alleageth foure: the fore-skinne was commanded to be cut off, for the better preventing of the disease called the carbuncle: that the whole body might be kept more pure or cleane, and that no soile or filth should be hid under the fore-skinne: that they might be more apt to generation: that the part circumcised might better expresse the similitude of the heart. 2. Moses Ægyptius saith, that circumcision helpeth to bridle and restraine inordinate lust and concupiscence of the flesh: but the contrary appeareth, for no Nation is more given over to carnall lust, than the Egyptians, Saracens, Turks, that are circumcised. 3. Some thinke circumcision in that part was prescribed, for the greater detestation of the superstition of the Egyptians and other Nations, that did adore that part, and make an Idoll of it under the name of Priapus, and did carry it about in open shew in their wicked Idolatrous solemnities.

But there are better reasons for the institution of circumcision, and more fruitfull signification. The use then of circumcision is partly politicall, partly morall, partly theologicall. The politicall consisted herein, that circumcision at the first was a note of difference and distinction betweene the holy people, and all other Nations: (though afterward other Nations, as the Idumeans, Arabians, Ægyptians, tooke up the same rite, to be circumcised. Thus David called in disdaine Goliah the uncircumcised Philistim, as thereby discerned from the people of God, 1 Sam. 17.36. Beside by circumcision they were admonished to separate themselves from all other Nations, neither to joyne with them in marriage, nor to learne their manners. Thus the sons of Iacob said to the Sichemites, we cannot give our sister to an uncircumcised man, Gen. 34.14. For this cause Theodoret noteth, that circumcision was neglected all the time of the sojourning of the Israelites in the desart, because there was then no feare of conversing with other Nations in those solitary places.

The politicall use of circumcision.

Theodoret. q. 67. in Genes.

The morall use of circumcision was to teach the inward mortifying and circumcising of the heart, as Irenæus well observeth out of Deuteronomie, chap. 10. vers. 16. Circumcise the foreskinne of your heart. Ambrose noteth another morall point: Vt pudaret unumquemque provectioris ætatis labori, vel doloris cedere puerum utrumque tenera infantia vicissent: that men of yeares should be ashamed to give place to labour or griefe, which they overcame in their infancie.

Lib. 4. adverf. hæref. cap. 4.

The morall use of circumcision.

Am. 1. Epist. 77.

The Theologicall use of circumcision, was partly commemorative of the covenant which God made with Abraham and his seed, which served as a sure bond to keepe them in obedience, to walke uprightly before God, Gen. 17.10. Partly demonstrative, in expressing by the part circumcised, the instrument of generation, that originall contagion, which is derived by naturall propagation. And so Augustine and Bede doe understand those words, vers. 14. the uncircumcised man childe shall be cut off, because he hath broken my covenant: Illud significatur pactum, quod cum primo homine iniit Deus: that covenant is meant, which was made with the first man: which transgression even Infants by their originall corruption are guilty of. Partly it is figurative, both typicall in shadowing forth faith in Christ for remission of sinnes, wherefore is called by the Apostle, The seale of the righteousnesse of faith, Rom. 4.11. as also anabolicall, in representing the Sacrament of Baptisme, that should come in the place thereof. So the Apostle speaketh, In whom ye are circumcised with circumcision not made with hands, &c. in that ye are buried with him through baptisme, Coloss. 2.11, 12. he maketh circumcision and baptisme one to answer another.

Theologicall use.

Beda in 2. cap. Luk.

the man likewiſe over the womans, to performe mutually the matrimoniall duties: but the woman can no more give liberty to the husband to joyne unto ſtrange fleſh, than the husband can unto the woman. As the Apoſtle in the ſame place reſtraineth that liberty, Let every man have his wife, let every woman have her husband, 1. *Cor.*7.3. they muſt be the one addicted and obliged only to the other.

Lib. 1. *de Abrah. cap.*4.

4. Ambroſe againe excuſeth this marriage of Abraham with Hagar, by the myſtery in it, as it is expounded by S. Paul, *Galat.*4. quod ergo putabas eſſe peccatum, advertis eſſe myſterium: that which you thought was iniquitie, appeareth to be a myſterie.

Abrahams mariage with Hagar not excuſed, becauſe of the myſtery.

Contra. A myſterie we admit, according to the Apoſtles collection, in Abrahams marriage with Hagar, but that giveth no liberty or immunity unto it: for ſo theefe might be excuſed, becauſe the ſuddenneſſe of Chriſts comming to judgement, is likened to the comming of a theefe in the night: neither is it therefore a thing excuſable to play an unrighteous ſteward, becauſe Chriſt draweth a parable from thence, *Luk.*16.

Lib 3. *de Doctri. Chriſt. cap.*12.

5. Auguſtine further ſaith, ſufficiendæ prolis cauſa erat uxorum plurium ſimul uni viro habendarum inculpabilis conſuetudo: he calleth it an inculpable cuſtome for one man in thoſe dayes for procreation ſake to have many wives. He excuſeth the multiplicity of wives by the cuſtome of thoſe dayes, though the uſe bee now otherwiſe: like as ſometime among the Romans it was counted a hainous thing, tunicas habere talares vel manicatas, to weare ſleeved, or ſide gownes, but now for a man of honeſt condition not to have ſuch, is counted a ſhame &c.

Polygamie not juſtified by cuſtome.

Contra. Indeede indifferent things, ſuch as are the formes and faſhions of apparell, may be changed, and ſometimes held lawfull, ſometimes uncomely, according to the divers cuſtomes of times: but that which is ſimply unlawfull, by no cuſtome can be made lawfull: that which is evill, whatſoever the cuſtome is, ought not to be followed: the Scripture herein giveth us a rule, not to follow a multitude to doe evill, *Exod.*23.2. 2. Neither doth it yet appeare, that there was any ſuch cuſtome among the faithfull in Abrahams time, to couple themſelves to more than to one wife. 3. Chryſoſtome of this very cuſtome of having many wives, thus excellently writeth; Vides quomodo non oportet conſuetudinem prætexere, ſed quod juſtum eſt inquirere: ecce quoniam mala erat conſuetudo, explioſa eſt, &c. You ſee then, that we muſt not pretend cuſtome, but intend that which is juſt: becauſe it was an evill cuſtome, it is left.

*Hom.*56. in Gen.

Polygamie not lawfull for procreation.

6. Chryſoſtome in the ſame place alleageth another excuſe: Permiſſum eſt cum duabus vel tribus miſceri, ut humanum genus propagaretur, &c. It was then permitted to be coupled with two or three, that mankinde might be increaſed. Contra. If this were a ſufficient reaſon for polygamie, it had beene more needfull, that in the creation many women ſhould have beene made: and ſo likewiſe that more than one wife apiece, for Noah and his ſonnes ſhould have entred into the Arke: for then there was greater need of all meanes for procreation.

Wherefore all theſe reaſons and excuſes, doe not ſerve to exempt the Patriarks from all blemiſh and blame, in their multiplying of wives.

Noah not diſpenſed withall for polygamie.

4. A fourth opinion there is, that God gave a diſpenſation for polygamie to the fathers, and as is moſt like to Noah, when he ſaid to him, Increaſe and multiply: *ſic Perer. in Gen.*16. *diſp.*1.

Contra. 1. Againſt a precept written, diſpenſation unwritten hath no place: ſeeing then the commandment is expreſſed; For this cauſe ſhall a man leave father and mother, and cleave to his wife, *Gen.*2.24. (he ſaith not wives, but wife, as ſpeaking of one) but ſuch diſpenſation is no where mentioned, we hold it to be a meere humane conjecture. 2. If God had given Noah ſuch an indulgence, it is like that he and his ſonnes would have uſed it, there being then greateſt cauſe in the renewing of the world. 3. And though they are bleſſed with increaſe, yet only the lawfull meanes of increaſing and multiplying are permitted: for otherwiſe this might be an excuſe for adulterous copulations.

Polygamie an infirmitie in the fathers.

5. Wherefore the ſafer and ſounder opinion is, that polygamie, that is, the marriage of many wives, was neither ſimply lawfull, nor for a time diſpenſed with, but that it was an humane infirmity even in thoſe holy Patriarks. 1. Becauſe it degenerateth from the firſt inſtitution in Paradiſe, to the which Chriſt ſendeth us; From the beginning it was not ſo. 2. The firſt that brought in the doubling of wives was Lamech, of the curſed ſeed: neither doe we read of any of the Patriarks, from Adam to Abraham, for the ſpace well-nigh, of two thouſand yeares, that had more wives than one. 3. If there had beene at any time a needfull uſe of polygamie, it is moſt like, that in the beginning, when the world was not yet repleniſhed, as in Adam and Noahs time, it ſhould have beene permitted. 4. To have a concubine together with a wife, was never lawfull: but ſuch an one was Hagar: for Abraham did caſt her out with her ſonne: ſhe was alſo a bond-woman, and therefore not fit to be a wife to ſo great a Patriarke: and a wife is defined by the Apoſtle, to be ſuch an one, as is taken to avoid fornication, 1 *Cor.*7.2. but to that end did not Abraham take Hagar, having Sarai beſide. And whereas the text ſaith, that Sarai gave her to Abraham, for, or inſtead of his wife; the meaning is not that Hagar became properly Abrahams wife, but that ſhe was in the place, and ſtead of his wife: for as Sarai ſaith, It may be I ſhall receive a childe by her, *Gen.*16.2. but if ſhe had indeede beene his wife, and ſo manumitted, and not Saraies bond-woman ſtill, the childe ſhould have beene counted hers, and not her miſtreſſes: and *Gen.*25.6. mention is made of Abrahams concubines Pelagſhim, whereof Hagar muſt be one.

Lib 22. *cont. Fauſt. Minich. cap.*20.

6. But yet this being admitted, that the Patriarks erred in multiplying their wives, yet ſome caution muſt be received withall. 1. That herein they ſinned not againſt their conſcience, but of ignorance and infirmity, as in other things, this being not yet revealed unto them. 2. Ismael*, though he were not the chosen seed, yet receiveth a goodly temporall blessing to multiply and increase, whereby we see, that the outward benefits of this life, are no signes of Gods speciall favour, and eternall election, Muscul. As the Preacher saith, No man knoweth either love or hatred of all that is before them, Eccles. 9. 1. that is, whether he be loved of God, or otherwise, no man knoweth by his outward state in the world.

7. Observ. The Law must be preached before the Gospell.

Vers. 9. IN that Hagar is bid first to humble her selfe, before the promise is made unto her, wee learne, that the order of doctrine is to beginne with repentance, and then followeth the promise of grace, Mercer. which order the Prophet observeth, Isa. 1. 16, 18.

Chap. XVIII.

The Method.

IN this Chapter is set forth Gods covenant with Abraham, which containeth on Gods behalfe promise of grace and protection, on Abrahams obedience: The covenant on Gods behalfe is propounded generally containing both the promise of God, and the foundation thereof, Gods sufficiency, and the obedience of Abraham in walking uprightly, vers. 1, 2. Then followeth the particular promises, which are either offered of God unasked, or craved by Abraham: The promises offered are three, with their severall signes: first, hee promiseth he should be a father of many Nations, yea, of Kings, and the signe thereof is the change of Abrahams name, vers. 4. to 7. The second is, the promise of the land of Canaan, with perpetuall protection of him, and his seed, vers. 7, 8. the signe thereof is circumcision: where the law and right of circumcision is expressed, where they shall be circumcised, vers. 11. when, vers. 12. who, all males, both home-borne and strangers, vers. 13. wherefore, to be a signe of the covenant: vers. 11. then the perill in neglecting of this covenant is signified, vers. 14. The third promise offered, as concerning the birth of Isaack, and the signe thereof, the changing of Sarai her name, vers. 15. to

Then followeth the promise craved of Abraham concerning Ismael.

Lastly, Abrahams obedience is declared, in circumcising himselfe, and Ismael, and all the males of his house, vers. 23. to the end.

The Explanation of doubts.

Quest. I. Whether this apparition were visible.

Vers. 1. THE Lord appeared.] The Angell of God was sent to Agar, but the Lord himselfe appeared to Abraham, Mercer. This was not a secret revelation made to Abraham, but a manifest vision, Calvin. which was shewed unto Abraham not being in a trance, but in some sensible and visible manner, as though an Angell in humane shape talked with him: this may be gathered both by Abrahams posture, in falling twice upon his face, vers. 3. 17. as though he had seene some divine presence: as in that Abraham laughed: he was then waking, and in the use of his sense, not rapt in a trance: and further, vers. God is said to goe up from Abraham: that visible Majesty was taken out of his sight, Cajetane.

Quest. II. Of the meaning of the word Shaddai.

GOd almighty or all sufficient. 1. Some derive the word Shaddai, here used for dai, that signifieth sufficiencie sic Genevenſ. 2. Some from Shad, that signifieth a breast or plenty, Oleaster. 3. Other from Shadad, which is interpreted to spoile, conquer, or overcome, and so they say that God did here invert or overcome the order of nature, in causing the barren to beare. But Oukelos Hieronm. Pagnine. Iunius, doe better translate, Omnipotent: God then is called Shaddai, that is omnipotent, and all-sufficient, for his omnipotencie includeth also all-sufficiencie.

Quest. III. Of the change of the name of Abram to Abraham.

Vers. 5. NEither shall thy name any more bee called Abram, but Abraham. 1. Hieronm thinketh, that the Hebrew letter he, is borrowed from the name of God, Iehovah, & added to Abrams name, in traditi. in Genes. 2. Ferus maketh this mysticall signification of it; that God by giving Abraham a letter of his name, doth thereby give even himselfe unto him: as also thereby is signified, that God should also be borne of the seed of Abraham: and this should bee in the fourth millenary or thousand yeare after the beginning of the world, as this letter was added in the fourth place. 3. Chryſoſtome thinketh, that Abram signifieth one that passeth over (because hee passed over the river) mistaking the name Abram and Hebrew for the same, whereas the first beginneth with aleph, the other with ain. 4. Philo interpreteth be. 39. in Gen.

Phil. lib. de Abraham.

Abra-

Abram, an high father: Abraham the high father of the voice: and so divideth Ham, the syllable added, from Hamah, that signifieth to make a sound or noise: thereby insinuating, that Abram of an high father who was given to the contemplation of the starres and high things, was now become a perfect wise man: for hee is a wise man, that is, a master of words, and guideth his tongue. 5. But all these are mens conjectures: the Lord himselfe sheweth the reason of this change, because the Lord had made him, Abh, hamon, a father of a multitude: so that Ham, the last syllable of Abrahams name is the first of the word Hamon, that signifieth a multitude: sic Eugubinus, Munster, Iun. and hereupon the Hebrewes well observe, that God to those which he loved, added a letter of his owne name Iehova, as the letter He to Abrahams and Sarahs name: the letter Iod, to the name of Iehoshuah, who was called Hoshea before.

6. But yet it appeareth not, why the letter Resh remaineth still in the name of Abraham. 1. Ab. Ezra thinketh, that it is borrowed from abir, which signifieth strong; and so Abraham, betokeneth a strong or mighty father of a multitude. 2. Rasi thinketh it is inserted, to shew him to bee father of Aram his owne Country. 3. Some of the Hebrewes thinke, that Resh is not taken away, though He be added, because God doth not use to take from names, but to put to them: which observation is not true: for the Lord taketh away one letter from the name of Sarai, namely Iod, and putteth to He. 4. Mercerus thinketh that Resh is of rabb, which signifieth much or great, and so maketh this to be the sense of Abrahams name, a father of a great multitude. 5. But I preferre the common opinion: that Resh remaineth of Abram, and nothing is changed, but only He added: and so Abraham signifieth an high father of a multitude. Now whereas it is the opinion of the Hebrewes, that it is a sinne and transgression of Gods commandement, to call Abraham any more by the name of Abram: it appeareth to be otherwise, for Nehem. 9. 7. he is called Abram: therefore where the Lord saith, thy name shall be no more called Abram, it is not so much a commandement, as an honourable favour vouchsafed to Abraham in the charge of his name, Mercer.

Wherefore the letter resh is retained still in Abrahams name

Quest. IV. The reasons why circumcision was instituted.

Vers. 10. Et every manchilde among you be circumcised. Of this institution of circumcision, divers reasons are alleaged. 1. Philo alleageth foure: the fore-skinne was commanded to be cut off, for the better preventing of the disease called the carbuncle: that the whole body might be kept more pure or cleane, and that no soile or filth should be hid under the fore-skinne: that they might be more apt to generation: that the part circumcised might better expresse the similitude of the heart. 2. Moses Ægyptius saith, that circumcision helpeth to bridle and restraine inordinate lust and concupiscence of the flesh: but the contrary appeareth, for no Nation is more given over to carnall lust, than the Egyptians, Saracens, Turks, that are circumcised. 3. Some thinke circumcision in that part was prescribed, for the greater detestation of the superstition of the Egyptians and other Nations, that did adore that part, and make an Idoll of it under the name of Priapus, and did carry it about in open shew in their wicked Idolatrous solemnities.

But there are better reasons for the institution of circumcision, and more fruitfull signification. The use then of circumcision is partly politicall, partly morall, partly theologicall. The politicall consisted herein, that circumcision at the first was a note of difference and distinction betweene the holy people, and all other Nations: (though afterward other Nations, as the Idumeans, Arabians, Ægyptians, tooke up the same rite, to be circumcised. Thus David called in disdaine Goliah the uncircumcised Philistim, as hereby discerned from the people of God, 1 Sam. 17. 36. Beside by circumcision they were admonished to separate themselves from all other Nations, neither to joyne with them in marriage, nor to learne their manners. Thus the sons of Iacob said to the Sichemites, we cannot give our sister to an uncircumcised man, Gen. 34. 14. For this cause Theodoret noteth, that circumcision was neglected all the time of the sojourning of the Israelites in the desart, because there was then no feare of conversing with other Nations in those solitary places.

The politicall use of circumcision.

Theodoret. quæst. 67. in Genes.

The morall use of circumcision, was to teach the inward mortifying and circumcising of the heart, as Moses well observeth out of Deuteronomie, chap. 10. vers. 16. Circumcise the foreskinne of your heart. Ambrose noteth another morall point: Vt pudoret unumquemque proiectioris ætatis labori, vel dolori cedere, quum utrumque tenera infantia vicisset: that men of yeares should be ashamed to give place to labour or griefe, which they overcame in their infancie.

Lib. 4. adversus hæres. cap. 4.

The morall use of circumcision.

The Theologicall use of circumcision, was partly commemorative of the covenant which God made with Abraham and his seed, which served as a sure bond to keepe them in obedience, to walke uprightly before God, Gen. 17. 10. Partly demonstrative, in expressing by the part circumcised, the instrument of generation, that originall contagion, which is derived by naturall propagation. And so Augustine and Bede doe understand those words, vers. 14. the uncircumcised manchilde shall be cut off, because he hath broken my covenant: Illud significatur peccatum, quod cum primo homine iniit Deus: that covenant is meant, which was made with the first man: which transgression even Infants by their originall corruption are guilty of. Partly it is figurative, both typicall in shadowing forth faith in Christ for remission of sinnes, and therefore is called by the Apostle, The seale of the righteousnesse of faith, Rom. 4. 11. as also emblematicall, in representing the Sacrament of Baptisme, that should come in the place thereof. So the Apostle speaketh, In whom ye are circumcised with circumcision not made with hands, &c. in that ye are buried with him through baptisme, Coloss. 2. 11, 12. he maketh circumcision and baptisme one to answer another.

QVEST. V. How circumcision is said to be eternall.

Vers. 13. My covenant shall be in your flesh for an everlasting covenant, &c. It is called everlasting, not because simply this signe was to endure for ever, as some thinke, that for this cause circumcision yet remaineth among the Jewes, who are now usurpers of this ceremonie, which by right is extinguished in Christ. But it is said to be eternall, 1. conditionally, and according to the nature of the subject; that so long as the covenant indured, whereof it was a signe, so long the signe should remaine, but the first covenant or testament being determined in Christ, the date also of the signe is expired. 2. It is eternall in respect of that which it signified, which is indeed eternall, the grace of God in Christ, Calvin. 3. It may be said to be eternall in respect of the perpetuall supply thereof, namely baptisme, which shall continue while the Church hath a being on earth, Mercer.

QVEST. VI. Why circumcision was to determine in Christ.

Hom. 39. in Gen. NOw further, whereas the Jewes calumniate the Christians, because they have abrogated circumcision, it shall appeare by these reasons, that at the comming of Christ, circumcision in right was to cease. 1. Chrysostome yeeldeth this reason, that circumcision being given to the Israelites, as a marke of separation and distinction from other Nations, this marke was no longer to bee in use, than while the separation continued. But now in Christ, as the Apostle saith, There is neither Iew nor Grecian, Galat. 3. the wall of partition is taken away, therefore the badge of this separation should likewise be removed. 2. The signe was to endure no longer, than the covenant whereof it was a signe: but the covenant is abrogated, as the Apostle alleageth out of the Prophet, Behold the dayes will come, saith the Lord, that I will make with the house of Israel a new testament, &c. Heb. 8. vers. 8. and so he concludeth, vers. 13. In that he saith a new testament, he hath abrogated the old. 3. The Apostle thus reasoneth, if the Priesthood be changed of necessity then must be a change of the Law, Heb. 7. 12. If all the ceremonies of the Law at the change of the Priesthood must be altered, then circumcision also among the rest: for if circumcision remained, the whole Law should still be in force, Galat. 5. 3. He that is circumcised is bound to keepe the whole Law. 4. The carnall circumcision of the flesh, was a type of the internall circumcision of the heart, wrought in us by Christ the bodie now being come, (the spirituall circumcision) the shadow, that is the carnall should cease: Ambrose saith, oportuit circumcisione ex parte fieri ante ejus adventum, qui totum hominem circumcidit post cessare: It was meet that circumcision in part should be kept before he came, which should circumcise the whole man, and then to cease, Epist. 77. 5. Lastly, the same Ambrose giveth this reason; Donec pretium pro omnib. hominib. dominici sanguinis effusione solveretur, opus fuit singulorum sanguine, &c. till the price in shedding of Christs blood was payed for all men, it was fit that every mans blood should be shed to fulfill the ceremoniall customs of the Law: but after Christ had suffered, there was no more need of circumcision in every mans bloud; Cum in Christi sanguine circumcisio universorum celebrata sit; When in Christs blood the circumcision of all men once for all was celebrated.

QVEST. VII. Why the fore-skinne was commanded to be circumcised.

Vers. 11. Ye shall circumcise the fore-skinne of your flesh. 1. Two speciall reasons may be alleaged, why that part which was the instrument of generation, was commanded to be circumcised. 1. because the promise was made to Abraham, that in his seed all Nations should be blessed: the Messias promised to come out of Abrahams loynes, Calvin: Secondly, the signe was there placed, to shew the corruption and contagion of mans nature: that there the remedy should be ministred, where the disease reigned, Muscul. Ambrose addeth a third reason; Vt ibi, qua ignobiliora membra putarentur, majoris honestatis eam circundarent: That upon those parts which seemed more base, or vile, more comelinesse should be put. Epist. 77. 2. Some might be borne circumcised by nature; as the Hebrewes doe affirme of Sem, that hee was so borne; but of this assertion there is no ground: the other is naturall, yet but rare. 3. Likewise when the foreskinne was circumcised once, it might by art be drawne over againe; as Epiphanius collecteth out of Saint Paul, 1 Cor. 7. 18. If any man be called being circumcised, let him not gather uncircumcision: and mention is made of some, 1 Maccab. 1. 16. that renounced circumcision, and made themselves uncircumcised. It was also an usuall thing, as Epiphanius witnesseth, for the Samaritans to circumcise againe, those that came from the Jewes, and Jewes such as came from the Samaritans: this practice of drawing again the fore-skinne, that was circumcised, is thought by Epiphanius, to have beene invented by Esau, to deny his profession, and to raze out his circumcision: ex Pereria.

QVEST. VIII. Why circumcision was tyed to the eighth day.

Vers. 12. Every man childe of eight dayes old, &c. Why circumcision was tyed to the eighth day, reasons are yeelded. 1. Chrysostome alleageth these two, because that circumcision in their bodies being not yet come to the growth, might be better endured, and with lesse danger: and to shew that the circumcision of the body did not profit the soule, seeing infants had no understanding of it which was done, but was a signe onely of grace, hom. 39. Genes. 2. Others doe make a mystery of it referring this eighth day to the resurrection of Christ, who rose upon the eighth day, by whom we are circumcised: sic Augustine. lib. 16. de Civit. Dei, cap. 26. 3. But the best reason is this, because the child before the eighth day, was not of sufficient strength to endure that paine: and therefore it was provided that young cattell should be seven dayes with the damme before they were offered, Levit. 22. 27. because they were yet but tender. And againe, it was not fit to deferre circumcision longer, because the body the infant waxing ſtronger, ſhould be put to the more paine, Perer. Calvin. 4. Circumciſion was not upon any occaſion then to be miniſtred before the eighth day; but infants dying without circumciſion, might have inwardly ſupplyed, that which was outwardly wanting, by the grace of election, and force of Gods covenant made to the faithfull and their ſeed. 5. Yet neceſſity ſo urging, circumciſion might be deferred like as the eating of the Paſſeover might bee put off to the ſecond moneth upon extraordinary occaſion, as if a man were uncleane, or in his journey, Num. 9.10. This alſo appeareth, in that for the ſpace of forty yeares, all the while that the Iſraelites ſojourned in the wilderneſſe, their children were not circumciſed till Ioſua his time, Ioſua 5.5. and the reaſon is given, verſ. 7. They did not circumciſe them by the way; they were continually in their journey to remove from place to place, and therefore could not conveniently be circumciſed. But if Moſes example be objected, whom God would have killed, becauſe his ſonne was not circumciſed; the anſwer is ready; that the caſe is not alike, for Moſes might either have circumciſed his childe before he came forth: or he had not ſuch great haſte of his way, but might have ſtayed to performe ſo neceſſary a worke. 6. But whereas the Lord preſcribeth the eighth day, both ſome Hebrewes are deceived that thinke, the ſonnes of bond-ſervants might be circumciſed before, and the Iſmaelites that circumciſed at the age of thirteene yeares.

Circumciſion might be deferred paſt the eighth day upon neceſſary occaſion.

QVEST. IX. Circumciſion found among thoſe which belonged not to the covenant.

Verſ. 13. HE that is borne in thy houſe, and bought with thy money, &c. All which belonged to the covenant, or would have any part among the people of God, were circumciſed; but on the other part it followeth not, that all which were circumciſed, did belong to the covenant, as the Iſmaelites, Egyptians, Ammonites, Moabites, and other people inhabiting neare to Paleſtina, were circumciſed, as Hierome ſheweth, upon the 9. chap. of Ieremie, verſ. 26. Theſe people retained circumciſion as a rite and tradition of their fathers, but not as a ſigne of the covenant, or profeſſion of their faith and obedience.

QVEST. X. Circumciſion not impoſed upon ſtrangers.

FVrther it is here queſtioned, whether the Hebrewes were to compell their ſervants that were ſtrangers, to take upon them the profeſſion of their faith, and to be circumciſed. 1. Toſtatus thinketh, that their ſervants might be compelled, but not other ſtrangers that dwelt among them: but that it is not like, for ſeeing he that was circumciſed was a debter of the whole Law, Galat. 5. and circumciſion was a badge of their profeſſion, it was not fit to force any man to take upon him a profeſſion of religion againſt his deſire. 2. Cajetane thinketh, that ſervants might be forced to take the outward marke of circumciſion, though not the ſpirituall profeſſion thereunto annexed; in 12. chap. Exod. But theſe two cannot be ſevered, as whoſoever is now baptized muſt needs alſo enter into the profeſſion of Chriſtianity. 3. Pererius thinketh aright, that the neceſſity of circumciſion was not impoſed upon any beſide the poſterity of Abraham: neither that the Hebrewes might force their ſervants to take circumciſion: yet he ſaith, that it was lawfull for them to uſe the miniſtery of ſervants uncircumciſed, as now Chriſtians have Moores and Turks to ſerve them, Perer. diſput. 5. But herein Pererius is deceived, and I preferre the opinion of Thomas Anglicus, which he miſliketh, that it was dangerous for the Hebrewes to be ſerved with men of a divers religion, leſt they alſo by them might have beene corrupted. 5. Wherefore the reſolution is this, that as no ſtranger, ſervant, or other, was to be forced to circumciſion, but it muſt come from his owne deſire, as it may be gathered, Exod. 12.48. ſo neither were they to receive any uncircumſed perſon into their houſe, that would not be circumciſed: this is evident by Abrahams practice, that circumciſed all his ſervants, both borne, and bought with money: who no doubt would not have ſerved him, if they had not ſubmitted themſelves to Gods ordinance: againe, ſeeing every one in the houſe muſt eat the Paſſeover, Exod. 12.43. neither ſtranger, nor borne in the houſe, muſt eat any leavened bread for the ſpace of ſeven dayes, and yet none could eat the Paſſeover that was not circumciſed, verſ. 48. it followeth, that no uncircumciſed perſons were to bee entertained, unleſſe they were contented to be circumciſed.

Toſtat. ſup cap. 12. Exod cap. 56.

Hebrewes whether ſuffered to have uncircumciſed ſervants.

QVEST. XI. The penalty for the neglect of circumciſion afflicted onely upon the adulti.

Verſ. 14. THE uncircumciſed male ſhall be cut off, &c. Saint Auguſtine following the reading of the Septuagint in this place, who adde, the man childe which is uncircumciſed the eighth day, which addition is not in the originall, doth underſtand this place of infants, and their cutting off, he interpreteth of everlaſting death, to be cut off from the ſociety of the Saints: and by the breaking of the covenant, would have ſignified the tranſgreſſion of Gods commandement in paradiſe: for the not being circumciſed ſaith he. Nulla culpa in parvulis; Is no fault in little ones, and therefore not worthy of ſo great a puniſhment: and ſo he urgeth this place againſt the Pelagians, to prove that infants are guilty of originall ſinne, and therefore have need of remiſſion, Lib. 16. de Civit. Dei. cap. 27.

1. In that Auguſtine expoundeth this cutting off, of ſeparation from the ſociety of the Saints, he interpreteth right: ſome take it for the corporall death; ſome for the extraordinary ſhortning of their dayes; ſome for excommunication; but it is better taken for the cutting off from the ſociety of Gods people now, and the fellowſhip of the Saints afterward, for he that ſhould contemne circumciſion being Gods ordinance, doth conſequently refuſe the covenant and grace of God, whereof it is a ſeale and pledge.

What it is to be cut off.

2. But that expoſition of Auguſtine ſeemeth to be wreſted: to referre the breaking of the covenant to Adams tranſgreſſion. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, that they ſinne not after the like manner of the tranſgreſſion of Adam, Rom. 5.14. 2. The Scripture calleth not that prohibition given to Adam, a covenant. 3. The Lord calleth circumcition his covenant, verſ. 20. what other covenant then is broken, but that which the Scripture treateth of here?

3. Neither can this place be underſtood of infants that are uncircumciſed. 1. That addition, the eighth day, day, is used onely by the Septuagint, it is not in the Hebrew. 2. the words are, qui non circumciderit, he which shall not circumcise, &c. so readeth the originall, the Chalde paraphrast, Ionnas, &c. which speaketh, that it must be understood of them that are adulti, of yeares of discretion, not of infants. 3. Abrahams practice sheweth as much, who circumcised those that were of yeares. 4. Againe to breake the covenant, is not incident to children: the punishment therefore is not to be inflicted, where the offence cannot be committed. 5. If Infants be not circumcised, it is the parents faults for omitting it, not the Infants: as may appeare in the example of Moses, whom the Lord punished, and not the childe, for the neglecting of that Sacrament.

QVEST. XII. Whether Abraham laughed through incredulitie.

Vers. 17. Abraham fell upon his face and laughed. 1. This was not onely an inward rejoycing of the minde, as the Chalde translateth, for Abraham indeed laughed. 2. Neither did this laughter of Abraham shew any infidelitie and unbeleefe in him, as Chrysostome thinketh, and some others, who make Abrahams and Sarahs laughter all one: infidelitate peccavit sanctus Abraham, &c. Holy Abraham, saith he, sinned by infidelity, and therefore his seed was punished 400. yeares with servitude, 6. de pœnitent. The same also is the opinion of Hierome, that Abrahams laughing, his speech shall Sarah that is ninetie yeare old beare: his wish and prayer for Ismael did declare his incredulity, lib. 3. cont. But the Apostle cleareth Abraham of all such imputation of unbeleefe, where he saith, Rom. 4. 19. according to this place, He was not weake in faith, v. 21. being fully assured, that he which had promised, was also able to doe it. And if Abrahams laughter had proceeded from doubtfulnesse, God would not have named Isaack, of such laughter: in the which name Rasi noteth many mysteries in the letters: Iod signifieth the ten tentations of Abraham: tsaddi, the age of Sarah, of ninetie yeare: cheth, the eighth day for circumcision: coph, an hundred yeares, which was Abrahams age. 3. Neither did Abraham at the first doubt, but afterward was confirmed in the faith, which is the opinion of Ioannes Arborensis, reported by Pererius, for the Apostle doth free Abraham also from all doubting, either first or last, Rom. 4. 20. Neither did he doubt of the promise of God through unbeleefe. 4. Neither is Cajetans conceit to be admitted, whereunto Pererius seemeth to subscribe, that Abraham doubted not of the truth of Gods promise, or of his power, but onely he doubted, whether the promise were to be taken literally, or mystically, in chap. 17. Gen. for what reason had Abraham to thinke of any mysticall sense, if he beleeved that God would and could literally and properly make good his word? And Saint Paul sheweth that Abraham understood the promise properly and literally, when he saith, that he considered not his owne body, which was now dead, being almost an hundred yeare old, nor the deadnesse of Sarahs wombe, Rom. 4. 19. 5. Neither yet can I fully consent to Ambrose and Rupertus, that doe discharge Abraham of all manner of doubtfulnesse: as Ambrose saith, that whereas Abraham prayeth for Ismael, he did not doubt of Gods promise, to receive a sonne by Sarah: but desireth that Ismael also may live, & sic superabundet gratia, and so Gods grace might abound more. Rupertus saith, that whereas Abraham said, shall a sonne be borne to him that is an hundred yeare old? Non dubitando dixit, sed suam felicitatem admirando: He doubted not in so saying, but admiring his owne happinesse: for there appeareth some difficulty and hesitation in Abrahams speech, seeing hee objected with himselfe the same thing which Sarah did: shall a childe bee borne to him that is an hundred yeare old? as Sarah said, shall I certainly beare a childe that am old, Gen. 19. 13. though Abraham yeelded not to the objection, as Sarah did, neither shewed so great weaknesse in doubting, and therefore was not reproved as Sarah was. 6. Wherefore the best solution is, that these objections and doubts in Abraham, proceeded not from want of faith; but Abraham feeling in himselfe a fight betweene faith and carnall sense, striveth against humane reason, and overcommeth these motions at the first, and so was strengthened (as the Apostle saith) in the faith: and his faith was thereby made more glorious, Calvin. There was then in Abraham a strife betweene his naturall reason, which wondred, that he at an hundred yeare, should have a sonne of Sarah, and his faith, which beleeved that God was able to doe it: yet in this cogitation he remained not long, his faith prevailed.

Lib. 5. comment. in Gen. cap. 35.

QVEST. XIII. Whether Abraham were circumcised first or last.

Vers. 23. Then Abraham tooke Ismael, &c. 1. It is questioned, whether Abraham were circumcised first, to give good example, or last, which I thinke rather with the Hebrewes, because Abraham had beene unfit by reason of his cutting to circumcise others: but it is certaine he beganne first with his owne sonne Ismael, to make the other more willing. 2. Abraham alone could not circumcise all his family: therefore it is like, that thereto he used the helpe of others: as the Jewes to this day use Chirurgians, which are skilfull in cutting, to circumcise their children. 3. Abraham the same day doth circumcise his family, to testifie to the world, that he was not ashamed of the badge of his profession, and to shew his prompt obedience, in not deferring the commandement: whereupon to this day the Jewes circumcise in the day, not in the night. Mercer.

Whether hee circumcised his family himselfe.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Our faith must rest onely upon Gods words.

Vers. 4. Behold I make my covenant, &c. Wee learne, that our faith must depend onely upon Gods word: as here the Lord would have Abraham to consider who it was, that made this covenant with him: behold I, &c. We must not then greatly regard what man saith: but the word of God be our warrant. As our Saviour maketh this opposition; You have heard that it was said to you of old time, &c. but I say unto you. Mat. 5. 27. sic Calvin.

2. Doct. the Sacraments called by the name of the things.

Vers. 10. This is my covenant. That is, the signe of my covenant: so the Sacraments are called by the name of the things which they represent, because they are not naked and bare signes, but doe verily seale unto us the promise of God. In the same sense, and by the like figure called (metonymia) doth our Saviour call the bread his body, saying, This is my body, whereof it was a figure onely and representation, Mercer.

3. Doct. Difference betweene external and internall calling in the Church.

Vers. 7. I will establish my covenant betweene me and thee, and thy seed after thee in their generations, &c. All then that were of Abrahams seed by Isaack, did belong to the externall covenant, and Church of God: and therefore are called in generall by our Saviour, the children of the Kingdome: yet the covenant of grace appertained onely to those, that received it by faith, and so were the children of faithfull Abraham: as Saint Paul saith, They which are the children of the flesh, are not the children of God, but the children of the promise are counted for the seed, Rom. 9. 8. Calvin.

4. Doct. Baptisme the Sacrament of regeneration belongeth to Infants.

Vers. 12. Every man-childe of eight dayes old shall be circumcised, &c. From hence the baptisme of Infants, which commeth in the place of circumcision, is most pertinently proved, against the grosse errour of the Anabaptists: for as then Infants were circumcised, to shew the contagion of the nature from the which they were cleansed by the circumcision of the spirit: so even Infants now, being guilty of originall corruption have need of the Sacraments of regeneration.

5. Doct. Gods purpose and promise towards us, should not stay our prayers.

Vers. 20. Concerning Ismael, I have heard thee, &c. God had promised before to Hagar, that he would greatly increase her seed, Gen. 16. 10. and yet here it is ascribed to the prayer of Abraham: whereby we learne, that we are to pray even for those things, which we know God purposeth toward us: as our Saviour saith, Your heavenly father knoweth whereof ye have need, before ye aske of him, Matth. 6. 8. yet in the same place he teacheth his Apostles to pray, Mercer.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against adoration of Angels.

Vers. 3. Abraham fell on his face, and God talked with him.] If it were an Angell, that in the person of God talked with Abraham, then was this no gesture of adoration, in that Abraham fell upon his face: for the Angels will not suffer men to worship them, Revel. 22. 9. But if they will needes have it adoration, then it was God, that talked with him, and not an Angell, as the words of the text insinuate. Mosculus.

2. Conf. The circumcision of the male, how it served also for the use of the female.

Vers. 12. Every man child of eight daies, &c. Though the males only were circumcised, because the beginning of generation, and so of originall corruption was from them, yet it served also for the signe of the covenant for the female sexe, because the woman is of the man, as the Apostle saith 1. Cor. 11. 8. and so was circumcised in the man. But hence it followeth not, that sacraments now may be applyed to the use and benefit of such as receive them not, which is an usuall thing in the popish Church: because there is now no such reason, or meanes of communicating the sacraments to the not receivers, as circumcision both by the intention of the Author, and order of nature, in the male, was forcible also in the other sex.

3. Confut. Sacraments doe not actually conferre grace.

HEnce also it is evident, that Sacraments doe not actually conferre the grace of Justification, or remission of sinnes, because Abraham was not justified by his circumcision. But he was first justified by faith, and afterward received circumcision the seale thereof, as S. Paul sheweth, Rom. 4. 10, 11. This Irenæus hath, Quod non per circumcisionem justificabatur homo sed in signum data est populo, clarum fuit judicio ipse Abraham, qui ante circumcisionem justificatus, &c. That man was not justified by circumcision, but was given as a signe to the people, Abraham is a cleare evidence, who was justified before circumcision. Chrysostome also rendring a reason why Infants were circumcised, thus writeth; Altera causa fuit, ut ne ipsa per se, nihil anima circumcisionem illam profuisse, sed eam signum tantum gratiæ esse factam, &c. Another cause is, that we should learne, that the circumcision did not profit the soule, but was onely a signe of grace: for children when they understand not what is done to them, can reape no profit thereby to their soules. Hence also is confuted the note of some Hebrewes, that Abraham, chap. 17. vers. 1. is bidden to be perfect, because he had not yet received circumcision; whereby he was made perfect: for circumcision was no cause, but a signe of his election in the covenant. Mercer.

Libr. 4. adverſ. hær. c. 30.

Chryſoſt. hom. 39. in Geneſ.

4. Confut.

4. Confut. Baptisme, wherein it excelleth circumcision.

WHerefore, whereas Pererius sheweth a threefold preeminence of Baptisme beyond circumcision: 1. In the facility or easinesse of it, because it is not so painfull to the flesh, as circumcision was. 2. In the universality and liberty: for baptisme is free for both sexes, for all Nations, that professe Christ, at all times: circumcision belonged onely to the Israelites, and to males, and was tied to the eighth day. 3. In the efficacie, because baptisme absolveth a man from all sinne, and the punishment thereof, &c. We willingly acknowledge the two first points of preeminence: but such an efficacie actually to give remission of sinnes, neither circumcision had then, nor baptisme now: for it would then follow, that every one that is baptised, is surely saved, his sinnes being remitted, or else that his sinnes being remitted, may returne againe. But God useth not where hee hath once forgiven sinnes, to remember them any more, Ezech. 18. 22. Baptisme then we confesse, significatione, in signification and representation is more rich than circumcision was: for washing is a more lively resemblance of our cleansing in the blood of Christ; and it is a commemoration, of a benefit performed, whereas circumcision was a type of the same to be exhibited. But otherwise for the efficacie there is no difference: they both are seales and confirmations of faith for the remission of sinnes, nor actuall conferrers and bestowers of grace.

Baptisme giveth remission of sinnes, no otherwise than circumcision did.

5. Confut. Abraham the first that received circumcision.

Further, Herodotus is here found to be in an errour, that thinketh that the Egyptians were the first that were circumcised, and that the Jewes received it from them. Whereas it is evident, that Abraham was the first that received circumcision by the commandement of God himselfe, and that the Egyptians above 200. yeare after learned it of the Hebrewes, that sojourned with them above 200. yeares more.

Herodotus error.

6. Confut. Neither Circumcision under the Law, nor Baptisme under the Gospell, absolutely necessary.

Vers. 14. The uncircumcised male, &c. shall be cut off, &c. This place I shewed before quest. 1. to be understood not of children that were uncircumcised, which was their parents fault and not theirs, but of such as were adulti, of yeares: therefore it is no good reading, to say the uncircumcised man childe, but the male, Zachar.: for the infant of eight dayes old, mentioned, vers. 12. is of purpose omitted here. Hence then it is inferred, that there was no such absolute necessity of circumcision, that children wanting it should be damned. 1. For the children of Israel were not circumcised for the space of fortie yeares, all the time of their sojourning in the wildernesse, Ios. 5. 6. Neither is it noted to have been any fault to neglect it, because they were continually in their journey. So they were charged to keepe the Passeover by an ordinance for ever, and whosoever kept it not as it was prescribed, should be cut off, Exod. 12. 14, 15. yet upon extraordinary occasion, as of some uncleanesse, or by reason of a long journey, they might deferre the eating of the Passeover till the foureteenth day of the second moneth, Numb. 9. 10, 11. yea it is evident that the Passeover after the first institution, was but once kept in the wildernesse for the space of forty yeares, namely, in the first moneth of the second yeare, Num. 9. 1. And it was not celebrated againe till Iosua his time, Iosua 5. 10. after they were entred into the land of Canaan. 2. Cajetan, a popish Writer, giveth good evidence here, Consentaneum est, ut non puniatur, nisi qui culpam admisit, infantes, autem nullam possunt admittere culpam, proinde pœna hic designata, ad solos adultos spectat, ut illi merito puniantur, qui solum de omissa circumcisione jure culpanda sunt. It is fit that none should be punished but they which had committed the fault: but infants can commit no fault, therefore the punishment here designed doth belong onely unto the adulti, that they onely be worthily punished, which onely are rightfully blamed for the omission of circumcision. Now put baptisme in the place of circumcision, and this sentence is most true, as well of the one as of the other: that as there is no cause why an infant should perish for want of circumcision, which is not his fault, so neither for the not having of baptisme: If that the ceremonies of the Law were not urged with such strict necessity, there is no cause to impose such a yoke now under the liberty of the Gospell.

The Passeover but once kept in the wildernesse, by the space of forty yeares. Cajetan. in 17. cap. Gen.

Morall Observations.

1. Observ. Affection may sometime be blinded, even in the righteous.

Vers. 18. O that Ismael might live, &c. 1. Though Abraham neither doubted to receive a sonne by Sarah, and so prayeth for Ismael. 2. Neither yet feared lest Ismael should have died, before the sonne being promised, as some thinke. 3. But onely desireth, that Ismael together with the promised childe might be blessed: and doth in thus praying, acknowledge himselfe unworthy of such an extraordinary blessing, holding himselfe contented, if it so pleased God, with this sonne which he had already had, Mercer. 4. Yet Abraham sheweth his humane infirmity and blinde affection toward Ismael. And thus we see, that oftentimes righteous men may be blinded in their affections, as Isaack was toward Esau, whom he would have blessed, Ioseph toward Manasses, before whom Iacob preferred Ephraim the younger, Gen. 48. So Samuel was deceived in taking Eliab the eldest brother of David for the Lord anointed, 1 Sam. 16. 6.

How Abraham prayed that Ismael might live.

1 Observ. Of the true joy of the spirit.

Vers. 17. Abraham laughed, Onkelos readeth rejoyced: and indeed this laughter of Abraham proceeded not of incredulity, but shewed the great gladnesse of heart, which he conceived upon the promise of the Messiah, which should come of his seed: of this joy our Saviour speaketh in the Gospell, *Your father Abraham rejoyced to see my day, he saw it and was glad, Ioh.*8.56. There is no joy then to the joy of the spirit, neither any gladnesse like to that which ariseth of our hope of salvation in Christ.

3. Observ. Abrahams obedience in keeping circumcision.

Vers. 23. Abraham tooke Ismael, &c. Abrahams obedience diversly appeareth, 1. in that he deferreth not the time, but the selfe same day circumciseth his family. 2. In that he circumciseth all the males of his house, omitting none. 3. He performeth this ministery and service chiefly himselfe, wherein he might use also the helpe of others: for he alone was not able to circumcise 318. persons, for so many he had in his house. 4. He refuseth not to be circumcised at the age of 99. yeares. This example of faithfull and obedient Abraham teacheth us, how diligent we ought to be in keeping Gods commandements: and how exact in celebrating the mysticall rites and Sacraments of religion.

4. Observ. The duty of the masters of families.

Further, In that Abraham circumciseth his whole family, it sheweth what the duty of parents and masters of families is, to see that all in their house be brought to the knowledge of God: for this cause Abraham commended of God, *Gen.*18.18. And the law, the charge of keeping holy the Sabbath, both for the children, servants, strangers and sojourners in the house, is laid upon the governour of the family, *Exod.*20.10. Abraham also beginneth with his owne sonne Ismael: and so should parents give good example to others, in their governing of their owne children, Mercer.

5. Observ. The righteous had in remembrance with God.

Vers. 24. Abraham was 99. yeare old, &c. The Scripture doth most exactly set downe the yeares of Abrahams life in five severall places. He was 75. years old when he went out of Haran, Gen. 12.4. He was 86. when Ismael was borne, *Gen.*16.16. Ninetie nine when he received circumcision, Gen. 17.24. an hundred yeare old when Isaack was borne, *Gen.*21.5. And the whole time of his life is set downe, an hundred and seventy five yeares, *Gen.*25.7. This is done to none other end, but to shew us, that the righteous are had in remembrance with God: that their yeares, dayes, moneths, yea the haires of their head before him are numbred, Perer.

6. Observ. Contrary religions not to be suffered in one Kingdome.

Vers. 12. He that is borne in thy house, and bought with thy money, must needs be circumcised. Mercerus well collecteth hereupon, that neither Kings in their kingdomes, nor fathers in their families, should tollerate any contrary religion, but bring all (under their charge) to the obedience of faith: first, this is agreeable to the precept and commandement of God in Scripture. 1. For the charge of keeping holy the Lords day, is laid upon the father of the house, both for himselfe and all that are within his gate, *Exod.*20.10. but Idolaters and superstitious persons, cannot sanctifie or keepe holy the Sabbath to the Lord. 2. The Lord commandeth, that if any person shall entice to Idolatry, or any City shall set up new worship, the one should be killed, the other destroyed, *Deut.*13.9.13.3. To this belongeth that precept of the Lord: *To seperate the precious from the vile, Ier.*15.19. true worshippers must be severed & discerned from false. 4. This is the meaning of the Law, *Levit.*19 19. Not to sow the field with divers seeds, nor to weare a garment of divers things: so divers religions and professions in one Kingdome are not to be admitted nor suffered: likewise Moses saith. *Deut.*22.10. Thou shalt not plow with an Oxe and an Asse together: which saint Paul thus expoundeth, 2 *Cor.*6.14. Be not unequally yoaked with Infidels, &c. what communion betweene light and darknesse, &c.

Secondly, this hath beene the practice of the Church in all ages, to cast out the leaven of contrary doctrine and profession: In the time of Enos before the floud, the servants of God and true worshippers, began to call upon the name of God, that is to serve the Lord apart in their holy assemblies, and to seperate and divide themselves from the prophane generations of Cain: Ismael is cast out of Abrahams house, because he was a scorner of Isaack, as all Idolaters are of true worshippers: Iacob reformeth his house, and putteth away the strange gods, *Gen.*35.2. Iosua maketh the Gibeonites hewers of wood, and drawers of waters for the house of God, Iosua 9.13. David expelleth the Idolatrous Jebusites out of Jerusalem, 2 *Sam.*5.8. Asa put Maacah his mother from her regiment, because she was an Idolatresse, and broke downe her Idoll, 2 *Chron.*15.16. Iosias put downe the Chemarims, a sect of Idolatrous Priests, 2 *King.*23.5. Zerubbabel would not suffer the adversaries of Iudah to build the Temple with them, but refused their service which they offered, *Ezra.*4.3.

According to the patterne of these worthy examples, we doubt not, but that our Christian Soveraigne resolved to take away all mixture of religion: not to admit any toleration of contrary worship, but with Iosias to expell all Idolatrous Chemarims, and Masse-Priests, with Asa to put all such from places of government, and with Zerubbabel, to reject their service and imployment, either in Church or common wealth: And we assuredly trust, that the presence of Gods Arke among us, shall cause that Dagon of Rome to lose both his hands and head for ever in this our famous and thrice renowned Countrey of Britaine.

CHAP.

Chap. XVIII.

1. The Method.

THis Chapter hath two parts. 1. The entertainment of the Angells in Abrahams tent, and such things as there were done to vers. 17. 2. The purpose of God concerning the destruction of Sodome, with Abrahams deprecation for the same, to the end of the Chapter.

In the first part. 1. There is the apparition of the Angels, both in what place, and at what time, vers. 1. and in what manner, vers. 2. 2. Their entertainment offered by Abraham, vers. 3,4. accepted by the Angels, vers. 5. performed by Abraham, ver. 6,7,8. 3. The promise is renewed concerning Abraham and Sarahs sonne, vers. 10. and Sara for her infirmity reproved, both for her laughter, 12,13,14. and for her deniall, vers. 15.

In the second part. 1. The Lord sheweth a reason, why he will impart his counsell to Abraham concerning the overthrow of Sodome, vers. 18,19. 2. The Lord propoundeth his resolution, with the cause thereof, vers. 20, 21. 3. Abraham intreateth: where first is set downe the ground of his prayer the justice of God, 23,25. then his particular request six times repeated, from fifty persons to bee found in Sodome, to ten.

The Explanation of doubts.

Quest. I. Of the vision and apparition made to Abraham in Mamre.

Vers. 1. AGaine the Lord appeared, &c. 1. This was the sixth apparition of God to Abraham, taking those two in the fifteenth Chapter for one: which herein is preferred before the rest, because this apparition is made in an humane shape: which is not expressed in the rest: and this is the third vision of this kinde, as Cajetane noteth, when the Lord shewed himselfe in some visible forme: 1. to Adam in Paradise; 2. to Agar in the wildernesse, Gen. 16. 13. 3. to Abraham in this place. 2. This apparition was not long after the other in the former Chapter: for in both after a yeare a sonne is promised to Abraham, Rupertus: and the promise is renewed for Sarahs cause, Calvin. 3. It was now in the heat of the day, that is, noone-tide. Septuag. the usuall time of rest and repast. Iun. when Abraham sate at his doore, to take shade, and to espie what travellers passed by, to give them entertainment. Muscul.

Quest. II. Who the three Angels were that appeared to Abraham.

Vers. 2. THree men stood by him. 1. They were not three men, but so appeared, Iun. They stood not hard by him, for he needed not then have gone to meet them: but they stood before him, over against him: for so the word gnal signifieth, Muscul. 2. Abraham at the first did not know them to be Angels, for he received them unawares, Heb. 13. 1. yet there appeared some extraordinary excellencie in them, in that Abraham useth them so reverently: for otherwise, to every common passenger he would not have given such reverence, Calvin. 3. Neither can it bee certainly affirmed, that these three men were the three Angels, Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, as some of the Hebrewes: the first the messenger to Abraham, the other appointed for the destruction of Sodome, and Raphael for Lots deliverance: for both the Angels that went toward Sodome, were in equall commission to destroy the City, chap. 19. 13. The Lord hath sent us to destroy it: and to deliver Lot, vers. 16. they caught Lot and his wife by the hand, &c.

4. Seeing

Abraham doth reverence to one aboye the reſt calling him Lord, v. 3. who alſo is called Jehovah. v. 17. their opinion may ſafely bee received, that thinke this eminent perſon, with whom Abraham talked, to be Chriſt. But it is a collection without ground, by the apparition of theſe three Angels, to conclude the Trinitie as Pererius ſeemeth to inſinuate. Calvin.

QVEST. 3. Why Abraham ſpeaketh to one of the 3. Angels in chiefe.

Verſ. 3. LOrd if I have found favour. &c. Abraham ſeeth three men, but ſpeaketh as to one: 1. whereby, neither a three fold knowledge of God is ſhadowed forth of his nature, by his benefits, by his judgements, as Philo: 2. nor yet hereby is ſignified the myſterie of the Trinitie, that one God in three perſons is to be worſhipped, as Rupertus. 3. Neither did Abraham ſpeake unto every one of them particularly, as Ramban. 4. But Abraham ſaluteth the third perſon as more excellent, either for the dignity of his perſon, or for ſome reſpect, which the other two had unto him. Chryſoſt. but for ſuch ſervices as equally belonged to them all, hee ſpeaketh to them all in generall, as the waſhing of their feet. 5. as they were three perſons, ſo he offreth unto them three ſervices; to waſh their feet, to reſt them under the tree, to comfort their hearts with bread. Perer.

QVEST. IV. Of the Hebrew meaſure called a Seime.

Verſ. 6. THree meaſures of fine meale. &c. The word is Seime, which is the ſame in Engliſh: a ſeime. 1. which neither containeth ſo much, as Epiphanius ſaith, that is, 50. ſextarios, pints. 2. neither is it ſo large, as the meaſure called Amphora, which contained 80. pound weight, as Hierome. 3. neither doth it receiue 24. ſextarios, or 36. pounds, as Pererius. 4. nor yet is it ſo large, to containe as much and an halfe, of the Italian meaſure called modius, as Ioſeph. lib. 9. antiquitat. 5. But in true account the Hebrew ſeime was the third part of an Epha: which Epha is not equall to the Grecians metreta, or medimnus. Atticus, which did hold an 108. pound, as Pererius geſſeth. But the Epha contained ten homers, Exod. 16. 37. that is, ſo many pottles: for the homer held two chenices, that is, two wine quarts and an halfe: ſo that the ſeime being the third part of an Epha, did containe foure cabi, every cabe held foure logi, every logi ſix common henne egges: the whole capacitie would receive 96. egges. And this meaſure did equalize the Romane modius, ſic Iunius in hunc locum, which is 14. pints Engliſh, and 14. ounces, ſomewhat leſſe than our peeke: and ſo it is well tranſlated in the great Engliſh Bible, three peckes of fine meale or flowre: for it is not like that Abraham for three men would prouide three great meaſures, buſhels, or ſeimes of fine flower.

QVEST. V. Of the cakes and other proviſion which Abraham prepared.

5. MAke cakes upon the hearth: the Septuagint tranſlate egcruphias panes ſubcineritios, bread baked in the aſhes, as Hierome readeth. 1. We need not with Ambroſe, from hence to gather, that Abraham uſed cakes raked up or hidden in the aſhes, as the Greeke word ſeemeth to import; eo quod latere debet omne myſterium, &c. becauſe theſe things were done in myſtery. 2. Neither was this kind uſed ſo much for the fineneſſe and delicacy, as Athenæus noteth, that it was in great requeſt among the Athenians lib. 3. and ſo Muſcul. 3. But in reſpect of the ſpeedie and preſent preparing rather. Iun. 4. Neither is it neceſſarie, that we underſtand the whole calfe to be made readie at once, but ſuch parts thereof, as more ſpeedily could be dreſſed. Muſcul. 5. But whereas the Hebrewes would have theſe cakes to be unleavened bread, becauſe it was now the Paſch, it is not like that this ceremonie was now uſed. Mercer.

QVEST. VI. Whether the Angels did truly eate, or had bodies.

Verſ. 8. ANd they did eate. 1. Wee neither thinke with Theodoret, that theſe Angels ſeemed onely to have bodies, and ſo alſo ſeemed to eat, but neither in truth: he ſaith they tooke the meat, ſimulatis manibus, with counterfeit hands, and put it into ſimulatum os, their counterfeit mouth: for theſe Angels had palpable and tractable bodies for the time, as may appeare by the waſhing of their feet. 2. Thomas thinketh that they aſſumed a true body, ſed nõ vera fuit comeſtura, but it was no true eating: but why ſhould it ſeeme more unlikely for them truly to eat, than to have true bodies? for there may bee a true eating, though the meat be not converted into the ſubſtance of the body, as our Saviour did eat after he was riſen againe. 3. Wherefore it is the ſounder opinion, that theſe Angels, as they were endued with true bodies for the time, ſo they did verily eat, as they did walke and ſpeak and doe other actions of the bodie truly: yet did they not eat of any neceſſity: but like as theſe bodies by the power of God aſſumed for the preſent, were againe diſſolved and turned to their firſt nature, ſo was the meat which they did eat. Calvin.

Queſt. 68. in Gen.

1. part. 4 51. art. 2. ad. 3.

QVEST. VII. The meaning of theſe words according to the time of life.

Verſ. 10. I will certainly come againe, according to the time of life. 1. which cannot be underſtood of God, as if he ſhould ſay, if I live, as Hierome: the immortall God would not ſo ſpeake as a mortall man. Calvin. 2. Neither is it ſpoken of Sara, ut Genevenſ. 3. or of Abraham and Sarai, Chald. that life is certainly promiſed to them both: Luther. for ſeeing God before promiſed to give Abraham a ſonne by Sarah, Gen. 17. 16. hee could not doubt, that Sarah ſhould then bee living. 4. neither is it referred to the childe, that hee ſhould be borne alive. Annotat. of the great bible, for this was alſo promiſed before, Gen. 17. 19. that God would make a covenant with Iſaak, and his ſeed: there was no queſtion but this child ſhould have a perfect birth. 5. Iunius expoſition is this, I will come unto thee, when this time of life commeth againe: that is, the ſame time twelve-moneth: as it may be interpreted out of the former Chapter, Gen. 17. 21. which Sarah ſhall beare unto thee, the next yeare at this ſeaſon: and ſo in other places, this word to revive, as here applyed to the time, is attributed unto things without life, 1 Chron. 11.9. Ioab is said to revive, that is, repaire the reſt of the City.

6. And if this were in the ſpring as ſome conjecture, and may be gathered by the heat of the time, v. and ſhadow of the tree, and eating abroad, v. 8. the time of life, or living time, may fitly bee applyed the ſpring, when all things ſeeme to revive againe: 7. But it is better underſtood of Iſaak, that he ſhou be borne according to the time of life, that is, after the uſuall and accuſtomed time of child-bearing, th is, Iſaak ſhould now be conceived, and ſo by that time twelve moneth ſpoken of, Gen. 17.21. hee ſhou bee borne: this to bee the meaning, theſe reaſons may perſwade: 1. becauſe it is like, that ſince the ti when Iſaak was promiſed after a twelve month, till now, Abraham had not knowne his wife, by reaſon the ſoreneſſe of his circumciſion, and by Sarahs words. v. 12. that ſhe had no luſt or deſire that way. 2. fu ther, ſeeing the Angell at the conception uſeth the very phraſe and ſpeech. Luke 1.37. of the Angell he v. 14. that the type may anſwer to the body, the Angell is here a meſſenger of Iſaaks extraordinary co ception of an old woman, as there of Chriſts miraculous conception of a Virgin.

So then whereas the Angell, v. 13. maketh mention of two times, at the time appointed I will come thee according to the time of life: the time appointed is the time ſet, v. 17.21. which was that time twelv moneth: the time of life is from Iſaaks conception to his birth.

8. But that is a meere fable of the Hebrewes, that the Angell made a line upon the wall, to the whi when the Sunne came that time twelve moneth, Sarah ſhould have a ſonne. Mercer.

QVEST. VII. Why Abraham is called old.

Verſ. 11. NOw Abraham and Sara were old, and it ceaſed to be with Sarah, after the manner of women &c.

1. Philo noteth, that Abraham is the firſt that in Scripture is called an old man, though many before him, were much elder in yeares: and thinketh he was ſo called, propter canitiem virtutum, for his old age and growth in vertue. But that is not the meaning here: it is given as a reaſon, why Sarah doubted of a ſon, becauſe ſhe was old and her Lord alſo. 2. Neither is Pererius collection ſound, that becauſe Sarah ſaith: ſhall I have luſt? that Abraham and Sarah after the birth of Iſmael had conſented to abſtinence from matrimoniall acts: for Abraham long after this had children by Keturah, which ſheweth that there was in Abraham moderate luſt and deſire: and Sarah, though her deſire that way had beene extinguiſhed yet ſhe was to be obedient: Sarah then only ſpeaketh comparatively, that the heat and luſt of youth was now abated in her.

Perer. in 18. Gen. v. 21. Whether Abraham and Sarah vowed continency.

QVEST. VIII. Whether Abraham was ſimply unapt for generation.

FUrther, 1. Some thinke that Abraham by reaſon of his great age, was ſimply unapt for generation in himſelfe; but yet received a generative faculty from God to beget Iſaak: ſic Thomas Aquin. Cum Abraham 37. yeares after by Keturah had ſix ſonnes, Geneſ. 25. 2. therefore it is like then hee was not ſimply unapt for generation: nor yet enabled by an extraordinary faculty; ſeeing alſo that many yeares after, ſome at 80. yeeres of age and more had children, as Cato, and Maſſiniſſa. Plin. lib. 7. cap. 14.

Auguſt. qu. 35. ſuper Geneſ.

2. Wherefore Auguſtines opinion is more probable, that Abraham was not ſimply unapt for generation, but not by Sara: for afterward by another wife he received children.

3. Whereas the Apoſtle ſaith, that Abrahams body was now dead, being almoſt an hundred yeare old. Rom. 4.19. this is ſpoken in reſpect of Abrahams owne opinion, who was out of hope, to have children, hee conſidered not his owne body, ſaith S. Paul. Perer. And comparatively, becauſe his body was now dead, being almoſt 100. yeare old, and much more unable, than before: and if in his younger yeares, he received no children by Sarah, much leſſe hope was there now. Calvin.

QVEST. IX. The reaſon of Sarahs barrenneſſe.

TWo reaſons are alſo given of Sarahs barrenneſſe: becauſe ſhe was old, and the monethly cuſtome of women had left her: Sarah was now thirty yeares old, which may ſeeme in thoſe dayes, when they lived long (as Sarah attained to an 120. yeares, Gen. 23.1.) to be no ſufficient reaſon of her not bearing: for than one of ninety yeares might be eſteemed as one of 50. now, beyond which time women commonly beare not; though ſome have children after thoſe yeares, as Cornelia bare Voluſius Saturninus, at 60. yeares. Plin. lib. 7. c. 14. 2. Neither the ſtaying of the monethly courſe, may be thought of it ſelfe a ſufficient cauſe of Sarahs barrenneſſe; becauſe as Ariſtotle writeth, ſome may conceive without them, though it be rare: lib. 7. de hiſtor. animal. c. 2. 3. But yet conſidering that Sarah both in her young time, and while the cuſtome of women continued with her was barren: ſhe being now both old, and that uſe diſcontinued, muſt needs be much more. And therefore thoſe both concurring in aged and barren Sarah, doe make the worke more miraculous, in that ſhe now conceived.

QVEST. X. Sarahs laughter whether it argued her incredulity.

Verſ. 12. Sarah laughed. 1. This laughter of Sarah can neither be altogether excuſed, as Ambroſe ma keth it a ſigne of a myſtery, rather than an argument of incredulity. 2. Neither yet did Sarah directly detract from the credit of Gods promiſe: for ſhe did not yet know that they were Angels. 3. But of a womanly modeſty ſhee ſhewed her ſelfe at the firſt incredulous, and being guilty of her infirmity, through feare denied it: but yet when ſhee was rebuked, ſhee ſtood not in defence thereof, neither replied, and was confirmed in her faith, and beleeved. Auguſt. 4. And herein Gods mercy appeared that is contented to chastise Sarahs incredulity, with a simple reprehension, whereas Zacharie for the like offence, was stricken dumb. Calvin.

8. 87. Shall I hide from Abraham? 1. Whereas the Septuag. read from Abraham, nunquid, puero, my childe, Ambrose sheweth, that Abraham, though old in yeares, is called a childe, or youth: ob pueritiæ obsequium, because of cheerefull obedience, and prompt and ready services, but wee need not stand upon this note, seeing the word is not in the originall: and yet it is usuall in Scripture, by that word to understand servant. Lib. 1. de Abraham. c. 6.

Quest. XI. How a thing is said to bee impossible.

2. Likewise where the latine readeth, can I hide from Abraham? which in the originall, standeth thus: shall I hide? Pererius observation, how divers wayes a thing is said to be impossible, or that cannot bee, is impertinent: yet because there may be use elsewhere of this annotation, I will not omit it.

1. A thing is said to bee impossible, when meanes and strength is denied, 1 Cor. 3. 2. I gave you milke to drinke, for yee could not, &c. 2. That which is seldome done, though it may bee done, Matth. 5. A City set upon an hill cannot be hid. 3. That which is not fitting nor convenient, Matth. 9. The children of the bridegrome cannot mourne so long as the bridegrome is with them. 4. When a thing may bee done, but against the will, Gen. 37. 4. The brethren of Ioseph could not speake peaceably to him. 5. That which cannot bee done of man, or by any naturall cause, though unto God not impossible, as to cause a Camell to goe thorow the eye of a needle, Matth. 19. 6. That which is simply impossible both in nature, and to God, as including a contradiction: as it is impossible God should lye: Heb. 6. 7. That which is forbidden by a superiour power: as the Angell saith to Lot, Gen. 19. 22. I can doe nothing, till thou be come thither. 8. That which is evill and unseemely, as Ioseph saith to his mistresse, How can I doe this great wickednesse, and sinne against God, Gen. 39. 9.

Quest. XII. Wherefore the Lord imparted his counsell to Abraham concerning the destruction of Sodome.

Vers. 18. Seeing that Abraham shall be indeed a great nation, &c. Two reasons are given, why the Lord will not conceale from Abraham his counsell concerning the destruction of Sodome: first in regard of the dignity and privilege which the Lord had indued Abraham with: both carnall, in that hee should be a father of a mighty people: and spirituall, because of him should come the Messiah: in whom all the nations of the earth should bee blessed. 2. In respect of Abrahams diligence and duty in teaching and instructing his posterity after him. For this should seeme to have beene the godly practice of the fathers, to catechise their families and instruct them: concerning the creation of the world, transgression of man, destruction of the old world, Gods providence, the Messiah to be revealed, everlasting life to come, and such like: Perer. 3. The Hebrewes thinke, that because the Pentapolis, or valley of five Cities belonged unto Canaan, which was promised to Abraham, the Lord imparteth this matter.

Quest. XIII. Of the greatnesse of the sins of Sodome.

Vers. 20. The cry of Sodome is great, &c. 1. Foure sinnes are noted in Scripture, to be crying sinnes: the sinne of bloud: Gen. 4. 10. The sinne of oppression, Exod. 2. 23. The detaining of hirelings wages, Iam. 5. 4. The sinne of uncleannesse, as in this place: Perer. 2. By the cry of sinne is here understood the impudency of sinners, Gregor. Peccatum cum voce est culpa in actione, peccatum cum clamore est culpa cum libertate, &c. Sin with a voyce, is a fault in action, sinne with a loud cry, is a licentious liberty, lib. 5. moral c. 7. 3. Their sin is said to be multiplied: 1. because of the continuall custome of sinning. 2. The number of offenders. 3. The number of sinnes: as pride, fulnesse of bread, idlenesse contempt of the poore, Ezech. 16. 49. Perer. 4. Their sinne in the singular number is said to bee increased, because, though they had many sinnes, yet there was one most notorious amongst them, the sin of uncleannesse. Muscul. 5. The fruitfulnesse of the ground, pleasantnesse of the water, brought abundance: their abundance made them wanton. Philo. 6. And their sinne was so much the greater, because not 15. yeares before, God had both chastised them by captivity, and againe in mercy delivered them, yet they notwithstanding, neither regarding the mercies, nor judgements of God, went on in their sinne. Luther.

Quest. XIV. Why the Lord punisheth and for what reason.

Vers. 21. I will goe downe and see. 1. It is a figurative speech: for God who filleth all things, neither goeth nor commeth: and he which knoweth all things, need no inquisition or search, to informe his knowledge. Perer. 2. God punisheth three wayes. 1. for the most part God deferreth the punishment of sinners till the next world: that by his patience some may bee brought to repentance: that men should thinke of another life and place of judgement beside this, that he might take triall of the faithfulnesse of his servants, that serve him obediently in faith, though presently they neither see punishment nor reward. The Lord punisheth in this life, but after a long time, much patience and often warning: as the Israelites at length, because of their sins were carried into captivity. 3. Sometime the Lord punisheth forth with, when the sinne is dangerous and contagious, as Core, Dathan, and Abiron, were straight-wayes punished for their rebellion. 3. God punisheth for three causes in this life: 1. for the correction and amendment of him that is punished. 2. for the preserving and maintaining of Gods honour, that is contemned. 3. for the good example of others.

Why God deferreth his punishment for the most part till the next life.

Quest. XV. How Abraham went on the way with the Angels, and how he ſtood before God.

Verſ. 22. Abraham ſtood before the Lord, and drew neare, &c. Whereas Abraham is ſaid, v. 16. to go out with the Angels toward Sodome: it was not to ſhew them the way, as Rupertus: nor yet only to ſhew his humanity unto them, who as he had entertained them friendly, ſo would bring them on the way kindly. Perer. the Hebrewes alſo thinke he went a mile with them, to ſhew his courteſie: but he did it rather to ſhew his duty and reverence to the Angels. Calvin. for Abraham did not now thinke they were Prophets: but knew them to be Angels, not by their departure and going into heaven, as Auguſtine thinketh: but he diſcerned it before by their communication. 2. Abraham acknowledgeth the third Angell to be God: and therefore the other two onely are called Angels. Geneſ. 19. 1. Iun. and prepared himſelfe to make interceſſion to God: as the Chalde readeth, he ſtood in prayer: ſome thinke, that the three Angels vaniſhed away, and then God ſpake to Abraham, ſome that this was a new viſion, after the Angels were departed: ſome take this to be an Angell, who is called Jehovah, becauſe the Lord ſpake in him. Marcer. but by this meanes, Abraham ſhould have committed Idolatry, in worſhipping the Angell, becauſe God ſpake in him: therefore it is to be thought, that this third Angell was Chriſt: and whereas in the next Chapter, v. 18. Lot alſo ſaith, Lord: hee ſpeaketh not to the Angels, but turneth to God. 3. He draweth neare unto God, both by his reverent approaching, and in his devout affections. Calvin.

Quest. XVI. Abrahams prayer not to be accuſed of temerity.

Verſ. 24. Wilt thou deſtroy and not ſpare the people for fifty righteous? &c. 1. It is evident that Abrahams interceſſion is ſpecially intended for Sodome: whereof the Lord maketh ſpecial mention, v. 20. yet his affection and pity was in like manner extended to the other Cities, that they might be ſpared according to the ſame rule. 2. Neither did Abraham diſſemble his affection, as ſome think, as though he only made interceſſion for Lot his kinſman there dwelling, but he remembreth all other righteous men, that ſhould bee there found. Calvin. 3. Neither doth Abraham pray more in affection than judgement, as Pererius thinketh: becauſe it is no unjuſt thing with God to chaſtiſe temporally the righteous with the wicked, as Ezekiel and Daniel were carried into captivity: for the ſame chaſtiſement to divers end, to the wicked and impenitent, a beginning of everlaſting judgement, to the righteous, a correction for their amendment: neither was it neceſſary that for the deliverance of the juſt the whole City ſhould be ſpared: for God could deliver the righteous, as Noah in the floud, and Lot in the families of Sodome, and deſtroy the reſt: Abraham upon theſe reaſons is not to be accuſed of temerity: becauſe that from this place, the Apoſtle ſeemeth to derive that ſentence, Rom. 3. 6. elſe how ſhall God judge the world? 4. Wherefore concerning the firſt reaſon, I thinke rather with Vatablus, that Abraham urgeth not God's juſtice as in it ſelfe conſidered, but in the opinion of the infidels: who not knowing how the ſame puniſhment may ſort out to divers ends, would accuſe God of injuſtice, if the righteous ſhould have periſhed with the wicked: or with Calvin, that Abraham propoundeth to himſelfe the deſtruction of Sodome, as a fore-runner of everlaſting judgement, and therefore prayeth that according to the rule of Gods juſtice the righteous might be exempted from it. 5. Neither doth Abraham entreat, that the City ſhould altogether be untouched, and the wicked goe unpuniſhed; but that the righteous might be ſpared. Calvin. he requeſteth two things, the one, that the very place might be preſerved, not utterly deſtroyed: if not, yet at the leaſt that the righteous periſh not. Marl. 6. Whereas God ſaith, v. 26. I will ſpare all the place, &c. he in his mercy granteth more than Abraham asked: that if there could have been ſo many righteous found, the City for their ſakes ſhould have beene wholy delivered: which was an indulgence, which the Lord would have granted for this time, not to bee a perpetuall rule: for the Lord afterward by his Prophet threatneth, that if Noah, Daniel and Iob were among the people, they ſhould onely deliver their own ſoules: he would not ſpare the reſt for their ſakes: Eſech. 14. 16. Pererius.

How it ſtandeth not with Gods juſtice to puniſh the juſt and wicked together.

Quest. XVII. Why Abraham beginneth at fifty and endeth at ten.

FUrther, if it be asked, why Abraham beginneth with 50. and endeth at ten: and beginneth not rather here firſt. 1. We need not for anſwer hereunto, with Thomas Anglicus, picke out a myſtery from the numbers: who by fifty, underſtandeth ſuch as are perfectly righteous, and ſo by the other leſſer numbers, the inferiour order of juſt men: for the Scripture uſeth other proportions to ſet forth the degrees of righteous men, as an 100. 60. 30. Matth. 13. 8. and if this were a good reaſon, Lot ſhould have beene none of the righteous perſons, becauſe hee was under ten. 2. But the other conjecture of the ſame author is not to bee refuſed: that Abraham will not bee ſo bold, as at the firſt to entreat, that the City might bee ſaved for tens ſake, but deſcendeth by degrees. 3. Neither is Toſtatus reaſon good, that Abraham is directed of God, to deſcend no lower than ten, becauſe hee knew that there were ſome juſt men under ten, for whoſe ſake yet hee would not ſpare the City: which juſt men hee thinketh themſelves were delivered: that God directed Abraham in his prayer is true; but not upon any ſuch ground: for excepting Lot, his wife and two daughters, and other righteous men are mentioned to bee delivered: nay the Scripture ſaith, all the inhabitants beſide of the Cities were deſtroyed: Geneſ. 19. 25. and it is like, that all which died in the flames of the Cities, were partakers alſo of their ſinnes. 4. Neither the 50. firſt named, are to be divided among the 5. Cities: 10. to bee found in every City, as ſome of the Hebrewes: neither yet in naming the 50. doth Abraham pray onely for Sodome, as Abrn Ezra: but though Sodome bee ſpecially mentioned becauſe it was the mother City of the reſt, in the which as the greateſt City, this number was moſt like to be found, yet Abraham intendeth the benefit of all. Neither doth Abraham end in ten, becauſe he thought there were ſo many righteous in Lots houſe, he and his wife, his 4. daughters and their husbands: for Lot had but two daughters, and the ſame unmarried: and Abraham hath not reſpect ſo much to the ſafety of Lots family, as the preſervation of the whole City; neither yet becauſe fewer than ten, as Noe with the reſt, that made eight, could not deliver that generation: neither doth hee ſtay at ten, as though God for a leſſe number of juſt men will not ſpare a City: for as ſometime for more than 5000. God will not ſuſpend his judgements, as Samaria and Iſrael was not ſpared, though God had reſerved to himſelfe 7. thouſand. 1 King. 19. 18 ſo for fewer than ten, God ſometime will ſhew mercy, as hee promiſed to ſpare Jeruſalem, if but one righteous man could bee found there. Ierem. 5. 1. Mercer. 5. It is therefore more like that Abraham named no leſſe proportion than ten, leſt hee ſhould have been too bold with God: as alſo for this reaſon, becauſe he muſt either have fallen ten more as in all the other numbers, (ſaving one) and then there ſhould have beene none at all: or elſe he ſhould have deſcended by five, as in the ſecond inſtance; which number of righteous perſons wel-nie Abraham knew to bee Lots houſe; even foure, himſelfe, his wife, and two daughters; whoſe lives being the whole ſum of the righteous in Sodome, Abraham might thinke a ſufficient redemption, though hee entreated not, for their cauſe alſo to have the reſt ſaved.

No more juſt perſons in Sodome than were delivered.

Quest. XVIII. Why Abraham maketh no mention of Lot in his prayer.

From hence alſo we may take the ſolution of another queſtion, how it came to paſſe that Abraham maketh no mention in his prayer of Lots deliverance, whom before by ſtrong hand hee had recovered from captivity, Geneſ. 14. 1. Some thinke that Abraham remembred Lot in his prayer, but Moſes expreſſeth it not, making mention rather of that part of his prayer, which might more commend his charity in making requeſt for ſtrangers. Pererius. 2. Some thinke that Lots deliverance was included in that generall requeſt, verſ. 27. that God would not deſtroy the righteous with the wicked. Muſcul. and therefore God is ſaid to have remembred Abraham, when hee ſent out Lot, that is Abrahams interceſſion. Geneſ. 19. 29. Luther. 3. Some are of opinion, that Abraham might have ſome ſpeciall revelation of Gods purpoſe for Lot. Calvin. But it is more like that Abraham relyed upon Gods generall promiſe; I will bleſſe them that bleſſe thee: and therefore doubted not but that God had a bleſſing in ſtore for Lot. Iunius. Geneſ. 12.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. The wicked ſpared, becauſe of the righteous.

Verſ. 26. I will ſpare all the place for their ſakes. God ſpareth the wicked becauſe of the righteous, which either are allied in bloud, as Cham was preſerved for Noahs ſake; or joyned in cohabitation as Paul had all the ſoules given him that were in the ſame ſhip, Act. 27. or when the righteous are moved in piety and commiſeration toward them: as at Samuels requeſt the Lord ſpared the people of Iſrael, 1 Sam. 12. 19. Muſcul. therefore, ſapiens eſt ſtulti redemptio, a wiſe man is a redemption for a foole: and as a Phyſitian, that healeth common diſeaſes: as a valiant man, that is a defence and muniment to the common wealth: Philo. ſo in forrein ſtories the like Princely mind is recorded to have been in Auguſtus Cæſar, who having overcome Antony, and taken the City of Alexandria, when the Citizens expected nothing elſe but preſent deſtruction, the Emperour proclaimed publikely that he did pardon their rebellion for Arius ſake, a Philoſopher of that City, whom he uſed familiarly. Perer. ex Plutarch, in M. Anton. Phil. lib. de execrationi.

2. Doct. Of the divers kinds of interceſſion and mediation.

Verſ. 23. Abraham drew neare, and ſaid; Philo noteth three kinds of interceſſion & mediation with God. 1. Gods owne goodneſſe and mercifull clemency: as our Saviour ſaith, my father himſelfe loveth you, Iohn 16. 27. 2. The interceſſion and requeſt of the righteous: as S. Iames ſaith, the prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſicke: c. 5. 15. 3. The repentance and true humility of the offender, that craveth pardon: as the prodigall child upon his ſubmiſſion was received to favour. Luke 15. 4. But he omitteth the principall interceſſion of all, whereupon the reſt are grounded, of the which hee was ignorant; the moſt effectuall and all ſufficient mediation of our bleſſed Saviour Chriſt Jeſus: according as the Apoſtle ſaith, If any man ſinne, we have an advocate with the father, Ieſus Chriſt the righteous, 1 Ioh. 2. 1.

3. Doct. How Abraham calleth himſelfe duſt and aſhes.

Verſ. 27. I am but duſt and aſhes. Man may bee foure wayes compared: 1. with the bruit beaſts and plants, in reſpect of whom man is of a moſt excellent workmanſhip, being created according to Gods owne image. 2. with the ſtarres and celeſtiall bodies, unto whom man is inferiour in regard of his terrene conſtitution, but ſuperiour in his ſoule. 3. with the Angels, to whom man in the ſubſtance of his ſoule, is but a little inferiour, as it is in the Pſalme, 8. Thou haſt made him a little lower than the Angels. But if man be compared with the omnipotent and eternall God, hee is but as duſt and aſhes before him, and indeed as nothing: as the Prophet ſaith, Behold the nations are as a drop of a bucket, and as the duſt of the ballance: all nations are before him as nothing, and they are counted to him leſſe than nothing and vanity, Iſa. 40. 17. therefore, Gregory ſaith well, Sancti quanto magis interna divinitatis conſpiciunt, tanto magis ſe veriùs eſſe cognoſcunt, &c. the Saints, the more they conſider the divine nature of God, ſo much the more they acknowledge themſelves to be nothing. Lib. 18. Moral.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Angels are not to be adored or worshipped.

Verſ. 2. Hee bowed himſelfe to the ground. From hence it cannot bee concluded, that Angels are to be adored and worſhipped, as the vulgar latine readeth: for Abraham ſuppoſed theſe to be men and not Angels, and therefore it is but a civill kind of reverence, which hee giveth unto them: otherwiſe though Abraham ſhould have forgotten himſelfe, in yeelding unto them adoration, yet would not they have accepted it: as the Angell forbiddeth Iohn to worſhip him, Revel. 22.8. Thomas Aquinas anſwereth that Iohn would have given unto the Angell, the divine and higheſt kinde of worſhip due unto God, which therefore was forbidden, is inſufficient: for this were to make ſo great an Apoſtle ignorant, what duty was only to be yeelded to God: and it is miſliked by Pererius, one of that ſide. And whereas he findeth out another ſhift, that this adoration exhibited by Iohn was not unlawfull, but inconvenient to bee done in reſpect of the great excellency, to the which man, was now advanced by Chriſt: this is as ſlender an anſwere as the other: for in that the Angell forbiddeth Iohn to worſhip him, becauſe hee was his fellow ſervant, it ſheweth that it was not only inconvenient, but unlawfull alſo for one ſervant to worſhip another. Iohn then adoreth the Angell, not of ignorance, but of forgetfulneſſe, being in an ecſtaſis of minde, and ravished with the glory of the Angell: for if the Apoſtle had not forgotten himſelfe, he would not twice have ſinned herein, Apoc. 19.10. 23.9.

2. Confut. The foreſight of our obedience not the cauſe of the increaſe of grace.

Verſ. 19. I Know him, that hee will command his ſonnes, &c. Pererius here noteth, that God foreſeeing Abrahams godlineſſe and obedience, doth beſtow upon him theſe great benefits, among the which was this revealing of his councell concerning Sodome: whereas the onely reaſon, as Vatablus well noteth, why the Lord doth accumulate and multiply his graces upon his ſervants, is his owne fatherly love toward them: who having once made choyce of them, doth for ever love them: for what elſe doth the Lord here make mention of, but his owne graces vouchſafed to Abraham? it was not then any merit in Abraham, that procured this increaſe of graces, but Gods favour: who leaveth not his, but addeth graces upon graces, till he have accompliſhed their ſalvation. Calvin.

3. Confut. Chryſoſt. Errour of free will.

Hom. 44. in Gen. HEre further may bee noted Chryſoſtomes errour: who ſaith that Abraham, ex ſeipſo, & ſcientia ſibi naturaliter inſita ad tantum virtutis faſtigium pervenit: of himſelfe and his naturall knowledge did attaine to ſueh an high degree of vertue. Pererius would thus excuſe Chryſoſtome, that by ſaying, of himſelfe, &c. he excludeth all externall helps by the inſtruction of other, and not the ſecret revelation, of Gods ſpirit and ſupernaturall gift of faith. If Chryſoſtome could be ſo handſomely expounded, for mine owne part I would be glad: but who ſeeth not, that his words carry another ſenſe? for the ſcripture uſeth, to ſet theſe two one againſt another, by grace, and of our ſelves: Eph. 2.8. By grace are yee ſaved through faith, and of your ſelves; if Abraham then was made righteous of himſelfe, it was not by grace. The Scripture alſo ſheweth, that God firſt called Abraham from his idolatrous countrey, before he did yet any commendable worke, Gen. 12.1. Wherefore all Abrahams righteouſneſſe depended upon the calling of God, as Chryſoſtome in another place hath this ſound ſaying, quamvis fidem adducas, à vocatione eam accepiſti: what though thou haſt faith, thou haſt received it from thy calling.

Hom. 12. in 4. l. ad Corinth.

4. Confut. There is no preparation in a mans nature, to his calling.

Verſ. 19. THat the Lord may bring upon Abraham, &c. Hence Chryſoſtome noteth, that Abraham, primum in omnibus virtutis ſuæ dedit ſpecimen, & ſic divinum meruit præſidium; did firſt ſhew every where an example of vertue, and ſo merited the divine aſſiſtance. Pererius two wayes would juſtifie Chryſoſtome: 1. he ſaith, he ſpeaketh not of merit of condignity, but of a ſufficient and fit preparation only unto grace. 2. or hee meaneth not that Abraham merited the firſt grace of juſtification, but onely the amplification or increaſe of it, Perer. in 18. Geneſ. diſput.

Contra. 1. It is Gods mercy and love, which firſt calleth us, before we can be any way prepared thereunto: there is no fitneſſe, aptneſſe, or congruity in our nature, but all is of grace: ſo Moſes ſaith, becauſe the Lord loved thy fathers, therefore he choſe their ſeed after them. Deut. 4.37. Gods love was the firſt motive for the choyce and calling of Abraham. And againe, ſeeing Terah Abrahams father was an Idolater, under whom Abraham was brought up, and by all likelihood infected that way before the Lord called him: what preparation could there be in Abraham, or provocation to his calling? 2. Neither was the beginning only of Gods favour toward Abraham of grace, the increaſe thereof by merit: for Iacob being of Abrahams faith confeſſeth, that he was not worthy, or leſſe, than the leaſt of Gods mercy, Gen. 32.10. he confeſſeth that none of Gods graces, neither firſt or laſt, were conferred upon him, for his worthineſſe: therefore Calvin well noteth, that this word, that, conſequentiam magis notat, quam cauſam, doth note rather a conſequence, than a cauſe. Where the Lord findeth his ſervants faithfull and obedient, he will increaſe them with further graces, not merited by their obedience, but added in mercy according to the gracious promiſe of God, that vouchſafeth of his fatherly goodneſſe ſo to crowne the faithfull ſervice of his children. For otherwiſe if our ſervice and obedience bee weighed in it ſelfe, it deſerveth nothing: as our Saviour ſaith, saith, When we have done all things which are commanded, we must say we are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to doe. Luke 17.10.

Neither firſt, nor ſecond grace merited.

Morall observations.

1. Moral. The commendation of hospitality.

Vers. 2. HE ran to meet them from the tent doore. Ambrose here well noteth, non otiosus sedit Abraham in ostio tabernaculi, &c. Abraham did not sit idlely in the doore of his tabernacle, sed longe aspicit, nec aspexisse contentus, cōcurrit obviam: festinavit occurrere, quia non satis est recte facere, nisi etiam maturè, quod facias. But he spieth a great way off, neither was hee content to espy, but went to meet them; hee made haste to meet them; because it is not enough to doe well, unlesse thou speedily dispatch that thou doest. Abraham therefore is commended for his hospitality: and thus is he rewarded: whereas hee thought he entertained men, he received Angels as the Apostle noteth, Heb. 13.1. and Ambrose saith, qui scis an Deum suscipias, cum hospitem putas: how knowest thou, whether thou receive God, whom thou takest to bee a stranger? But now adayes, men are so farre off from hasting to meet strangers, to invite them home, that many of the poore members of Christ with begging and intreating, can hardly find entertainment. Lib. 1. de Abrah. cap. 5.

2. Moral. Against curious building and careleſſe hoſpitality.

Vers. 6. ABraham made haſt into the tent to Sarah, &c. Abraham is not curious in his dwelling, but courteous in entertaining of strangers: much unlike is the practice of these daies: great men delight to build great houses, but keepe no hospitalitie: Abraham contrariwise, contenteth himselfe to dwell in a tent, yet his dores are open to strangers. This example of Abraham shall condemne the curiosity of this age in trimming their houses, and their carelessenesse in entertaining strangers.

3. Moral. Women muſt learne to keepe their owne houſes.

BEside, in that Sara kept in her tent, the property of a modest matron is expressed, which keepeth her selfe at home, and loveth her owne house; by which example such gossips and busie bodies are reproved that use to goe from house to house, giving themselves to idlenesse and pratling: as the Apostle describeth them, 1 Tim. 5.13.

4. Moral. Againſt curioſity in diet.

Vers. 7. TOoke a tender and good calfe: here is a patterne of frugality: Abraham prepareth for his guests, no wine, curious fare or dainty dishes, but wholesome countrey fare, as cakes, butter, milke, veale, and such like: curiosity then and nicenesse, superfluity and excesse in feasts and banketsis not commendable. Perer. as the Apostle saith, Be not drunke with wine, wherein is excesse, Eph. 5.15.

5. Moral. Againſt curioſity of the eare.

Vers. 10. SArah heard in the tent doore: Sara being otherwise a most modest matron, yet sheweth her infirmity and curiosity, in listening behind the doore, what the Angels said to Abraham: which is a fault very much incident to that sexe, to be harkening and giving eare to heare things to which they are not called unto. The Preacher giveth a caveat against such curiosity of the eare. Eccl. 7. 23. Give not thine heart to all the words that men speake, &c. Muscul.

6. Moral. Againſt mariage for luſt in old perſons.

Vers. 12. AFter I am old, ſhall I have luſt? Sarah thought it a shame for her in her old age to give her selfe to the sport and pleasure of youth: hereby the dotage of aged persons is reproved, which doe provoke their decaied and dead bodies to lust againe, and doe revive their abated heat by unequall and unseemely marriages. Perer. Hereunto agreeth the counsell of the Apostle, that wisheth younger widowes to marry, but such to bee chosen as were not under sixty yeare old, 1 Tim. 5.10. supposing such to have not such need of marriage.

7. Moral. The duty of wives to their husbands.

Vers. 12. ANd my Lord alſo. Saint Peter from hence exhorteth wives to be obedient and dutifull to their husbands, as Sarah was to Abraham, calling him Lord or master, 1 Pet. 3.6.

8. Moral. Sinne muſt not be excuſed but acknowledged.

Vers. 15. SArah denied, &c. Though Sarah shewed her infirmity in her deniall, yet being convinced, she by silence yeeldeth, she in obstinacy replyeth not to justifie her sinne: so likewise Peter when he had denied Christ, did not double his sinne by defending it, but diminish it by lamenting for it. Ambroſius.

9. Moral. Gods love appeareth in revealing his will to his ſervants.

Vers. 17. SHall I hide from Abraham that thing which I doe? &c. Like as a true friend will impart and reveale his secrets to his friend: so the Lord herein sheweth his love to Abraham, in vouchsafing to reveale unto him his counsell. So our Saviour saith to his Disciples: Henceforth call I you not ſervants, vants, for the ſervant knoweth not what his maſter doth, but I have called you friends, for all things that I have heard of my father, have I made knowne to you. Iohn 15. 15. Even ſo alſo are the faithfull bound to propagate the knowledge of the truth, as Abraham is commended, becauſe hee would teach his ſonnes, and his houſhold after him to walke in the feare of the Lord, Calvin.

10. Moral. Examination muſt goe before judgement.

Verſ. 21. I Will goe downe and ſee, &c. The Lord which knoweth all things, needed not to have ſearched or examined the truth, before hee proceedeth to puniſhment: But this is for our example, as Gregory noteth: ne mala hominum ante preſumamus credere, quam probare: that wee preſume not to give credit to the report of mens ſins, before we have proved.

Thus the Lord did in puniſhing the old world, and in confounding the languages, Gen. 11. firſt take triall and knowledge of the tranſgreſſion, before he inflicted puniſhment: which is a patterne for Judges to proceed maturely and gravely to ſentence, after due examination and ſearching out of the cauſe: as Iob ſaith, when I knew not the cauſe I did ſearch it out. Iob 29. 16.

11. Moral. The efficacy of the prayers of the Saints.

Verſ. 29. AND he yet ſpake to him againe. 1. Here appeareth the great liberty of ſpeech, and boldneſſe of the Saints in their prayers: Abraham renueth his requeſts 9. times. 2. We ſee alſo the goodneſſe of God, that cannot withſtand the requeſts of his ſervants, nor be offended with their importunity. Muſcul. So Moſes, when God had purpoſed to deſtroy Iſrael, did ſtrive in his prayers, and obtained favour by his importunity. 3. If God ſo patiently heard Abraham praying for wicked Sodome, much more graciouſly will he receive the ſupplications of the faithfull for his Church, Calvin.

CHAP. XIX.

1. The Method.

THis Chapter intreateth of ſuch things as happened to Sodome, and of ſuch matters as concerne Lot.

Three things are declared touching Lot, his hoſpitality in receiving the Angels, verſ. 1, 2, 3. his deliverance out of Sodome, which containeth: 1. the warning which Lot gave to his kindred, and their refuſall, verſ. 12, 13, 14. 2. The mercy of God in haſtening and pulling Lot out of the City, 15, 16, 17. 3. The requeſt of Lot concerning Zoar, verſ. 19. to verſ. 23. 4. The judgement upon Lots wife, verſ. 26. Thirdly, concerning Lot is expreſſed, the inceſtuous practice of his daughters, and the fruit and iſſue thereof, 31. to the end.

Concerning Sodome, firſt their ſinne and iniquity is ſet forth: where, 1. we have their ungodly attempt againſt the young men in Lots houſe, verſ. 4, 5. 2. Lots pacification with their outrage, verſ. 5. to 10. 3. The puniſhment of blindneſſe upon the Sodomites, verſ. 11.

Secondly, the overthrow and deſtruction of Sodome is deſcribed. 1. the cauſe God rained from heaven. 2. The manner, fire and brimſtone. 3. The lamentable effect, the Cities were overthrowne.

The explanation of doubts.

Quest. I. Why Lot sate in the gate of the City.

Vers. 1. LOt sate at the gate of the City, &c. 1. Neither as a Judge, because hee sate in the gate, which was the place of judgement. 2. Neither to meet his shepherds with their flockes. 3. But Lot there sate as Abraham in his tent doore, to take occasion to entertaine strangers, as also knowing the wicked use of the City, to preserve them from their rage and violence. Calvin.

Quest. II. Of the 2. Angels that came in the evening.

Vers. 1. IN the evening came two Angels. These two were not the sonne and the holy Ghost, as some thinke, and that God the father staid still with Abraham: but they were, as they are called Angels. 2. They are two, nor for that one had commission to destroy Sodome, the other to deliver Lot, or as though one Angell had not sufficed for this businesse; but they were both joyned in commission, as it pleased God. 3. These were Angels and not Prophets: which are also called men, because they were Angels in nature, and men in their habit. 4. They stayed not 5. houres in the way, as the Hebrewes thinke, but Sodome was of such distance from Abrahams tent, that the journey might well aske 5. or 6. houres. 5. They came about eventide to Lot, at noone and in the cleare day to Abraham: they were to him messengers of joy, but now Ministers of judgement. 6. Lot bowed himselfe upon his face aphim, his nose touched the ground: which is not added here and not before concerning Abrahams obeysance, as though Abraham being the more worthy person, would not bow so low, as Rabbi Carus: but it is added, ex abundanti: Mercerus.

Quest. III. Of Lots inviting of the Angels into his house.

Vers. 2. SEe my Lords. 1. It is but a curious observation: that adonai is here written with patach, as being but a civill salutation, and before, c. 18. 3. with camets as being then properly spoken of God: for neither did Abraham know them at the first to bee Angels, nor yet is the word in most copies there written with camets. 2. Neither doth Lot say turne aside into my house, as by the posterne or privy gate; for feare of the Sodomites, as Rasi, for their going in was well knowne unto them. 3. It is also a curious note, that Lot would have them first goe in, and then wash, that they might not bee seene washing in the streets. 4. Neither doe the Angels at the first refuse, that Lot might not come in danger for lodging of strangers, which was publikely forbidden, as some thinke, in Sodome: But they civilly refused, to make triall of Lots humanity, as for the same cause our Saviour did the like, to make his two Disciples more earnest, Luke 24. Mercer.

Quest. IV. Whether the children and all the people of Sodome came together.

Vers. 4. FRom the young to the old; all the people from all places: 1. Not such children only as were of discretion came together, Cajetane: but even the youth of the City corrupt by the evill example of the rest, flocked together with the rest: Calvin: as wee see that children, where an unruly company is assembled, doe run on heapes. 2. Neither as Lyranus and Tostatus, is it an hyperbolicall speech that all the people came together: but it is most like, that this was a generall concourse of the whole City, all besetting Lots house, some nearer, some further off. Pererius. 3. Some thinke that the Sodomites would admit no strangers to come in among them, and therefore they were so earnest against these young men: for whereas there are 4. properties among men, 1. mine is mine, thine is thine, 2. mine is thine, and thine is mine, 3. mine is mine, and thine is mine, 4. mine is thine, and thine is thine: the 1. of naturall men, the 2. of populare, the 3. of cruell men, the 4. of godly: the Sodomites were of the first and third ranke being unmercifull to others, all having to themselves. Mercer.

Quest. V. Of the beastly and immoderate lust of the Sodomites.

Vers. 5. BRing them to us, that we may know them, &c. 1. Their meaning is not that they would know what guests hee had received into his house. 2. Neither did they by a mannerly tearme conceale their vile lust. Calvin. 3. But they were come to that impudency that they were not ashamed publikely to proclaime their wickednesse: but the Scripture setteth downe an unhoneſt thing by an honest name. 4. And this seemeth to have beene extraordinary, and not usuall thus to beset Lots house, both because these two young men, were of excellent and Angelicall beauty and favour, which kindled their filthy lust: and God so disposing, that before their destruction they should come to the height of sinne.

Quest. VI. Why Lot stayed in Sodome so wicked a place.

NOw whereas it may be questioned, why Lot would stay in such a wicked City, the answer is. 1. That by this occasion a triall might bee had of the horrible wickednesse of the Sodomites. 2. And that Gods mercy might appeare in Lots deliverance. 3. Chrysostome addeth further: that Lot staid, ut ficut optimis timus medicus morbos eorum emendaret, that as a good Physitian hee might cure their diseases: and that Chrys. hom. in Gen. c. 43. he saw that he little prevailed, yet he was not to give over, as a good Physitian though he cure not, arte sua, vel officio praetermittit, he doth omit nothing of his art or duty.

Quest. VII. Whether Lot offended in offering his daughters.

Vers. 8. Behold now I have two daughters: This fact of Lots, in offering his daughters to the rage the Sodomites is diversly excused. 1. Ambrose reason is, minus erat secundum naturam cu quam adversus naturam delinquere: it was a lesse fault to company with his daughter, according to nat than with the young men against nature: and so according to that saying, of two evils the lesse is to
Lib. 1. de Abraham. c. 6. chosen; which rule indeed holdeth in such evils, as are punishments, but not in such evils as are sinne in corporall things, not in spirituall: no evill or sinne is to bee admitted at all: neither is it commanded before God to escape a greater sinne by doing a lesse: there is no such necessity, that a man should co mit sinne; hee ought rather to dye than to sinne. If hee bee blessed that condemneth not himselfe, in
Of two evils the lesse to be chosen, wherein it holdeth. thing hee alloweth, Rom. 14. 22. then hee is not blessed, that alloweth a sinfull thing in act, which h condemneth in judgement. 2. Chrysostomes excuse is, that Lot did it, ut servaret hospitib. honorem: that h might preserve his guests from shame and violence. But for this Saint Paul hath given us a rule, not to do evil that good may come thereof, Rom. 3. 8. 3. Augustine maketh this supposition, though he allow it not; non eas non peccare, si in ipsis fieret, quod in vita fieri in se sustinebant: hee knew that his daughters should not if they were forced to endure that, which was against their wils: and therefore his daughters not sinning, Cont. Mendac. §. 9. sinned not. But Augustine himselfe doth very well answer this objection, that if the maidens had consen ted to the Sodomites, faciem tuam Sodomitis te authore nequitiam: thou shouldest be the author of their sin
if not patientur a Sodomitis te authore violentiam: thou art the author of this violence. 1. It was uncertain whether they might have beene drawne to consent. 2. yet was it a sinne in Lot to prostitute his daughters especially being betrothed to others, as it may appeare, v. 14.

4. Cajetane thinketh, that Lot did not offer his daughters with any purpose to put off one sin with ano ther, but useth an hyperbolicall kind of submission, thinking thereby to appease their rage; some also further, that Lot knew, they would not desire his daughters, being espoused already to some great men the City; ex Calvin. But this had beene too great presumption in Lot, and tempting of God, to make such an offer to so unruly a multitude, hoping that it would not be taken.

5. Some thinke, that though a man in himselfe is not to doe a lesse evill to avoid a greater, yet it is law
Whether a lesse evill may be perswaded to avoyd a greater. full, when we see another obstinately set to commit a great wickednesse, to mollifie his mind with a per swasion or insinuation to a lesse evill, as Chrysostome would have those that are accustomed to sweare, ra ther to sweare by their owne head, than by God: Gregory resembleth it thus: qui murorum undique ambi clauditur ne fugiat, ibi se in fugam praecipitet, ubi previor murus invenitur: hee that is shut up within the wa that he cannot flye, let him escape that way where the wall is lowest. Contra. 1. This is a good rule, where we Hom. 27. ad popul. Antioch. are perswaders only from evill, and not actors our selves of evill; for Augustines rule is good, peccare no nino non debemus, ne alij gravius peccent: we must not sinne at all, lest other sinne more; If Lot had perswaded them rather to have gone to the maids of the towne, and let the young men alone, it had beene more tole rable, than to prostitute his owne daughters. 2. Though in it selfe it be a greater sinne, to abuse men unto lust, than women, yet was it a greater fault for Lot to be the author and counsellor of this attempt against his daughters, than to suffer his guests to be abused.

6. Wherefore this fact of Lot cannot bee justified, no more than that of the Ephrathite, Iud. 19. 24.
though it may be somewhat qualified: 1. in respect of Lots good charitable affection to use all meanes to preserve his guests from violence. 2. in regard of those times, when knowledge was not so ripe, nor it might be this point so well cleared to Lots judgement, whether a lesse evill might not be admitted, that a grea ter be avoided. 3. Lot, as Augustine well conjectureth, did it animo perturbato, with a troubled minde, and of a sudden, and therefore not so well advised. 4. If any shall urge S. Peters words, 2. epist. 3. 7. And deli vered just Lot vexed with the unleane conversation of the wicked; and hence conclude that Lot was here in blamelesse: hee shall not so reason well: for though generally Lot bee called a just man, yet it fol loweth not, that every particular act of his was just: for then his incest with his two daughters would finde defence.

Quest. VIII. With what kind of blindnesse the Sodomites were smitten.

Vers. 11. They smote the men with blindnesse, &c. that they were weary in seeking the doore, &c. 1. Chry sostome noteth, non tantum excaecati sed viribus dissoluti, &c. they were not only blinded, but their strength failed: this also may well be conjectured, yet the word beareth not that sense, but only that they were weary in seeking the doore, so Laah signifieth. 2. one Ribera, as Pererius noteth, would have it understood, not of Lots doore, but that every man returning was weary in seeking his owne doore: be cause it is said, Wisd. 19. 16. Every one being compassed with darknesse, sought the entrance of his doore: which words are uttered of the darknesse of the Ægyptians, not of the blindnesse of the Sodomites: and it is evident by the text, that the Sodomites sought to finde that doore, which the Angels pulled in Lot by.
3. This blindnesse, was neither an utter deprivation of their sight, for then as Augustine saith, they would rather have sought them guides to have led them, than laboured to find the doore: neither was it an ob scuring of their sight concerning the object of the doore only, as Perer. neither was it a blindnesse procu red by any naturall meanes, as by the obscuring the object, darkning the aire, or weakning the sight, as Pererius imagineth: but it was a miraculous and immediate worke: they smote the men with blindnesse; they

they ſmote not the medium or the obiect: but their ſight was generally blind, that they had no diſcerning of one thing from another: as the Aramites were blinded, that they could neither diſcerne Eliſha the prophet, the way, nor the City. Calvin. ſo that both their diſcerning and ſeeing faculty, both inward and outward ſenſe were dazled, and therefore the word ſanuere, is put in the plurall number, ſanuerim: they were then as it were ſan blind, which word may very well bee derived from the Hebrew: ſo is the property of ſuch, not to diſcry or diſcerne things of any diſtance from them.

QVEST. IX. Lot had only two daughters, no other children.

Verſ. 14. LOt went and ſpake to his ſonnes in law, &c. 1. Theſe were the men unto whom Lots daughters were eſpouſed, not already married, as ſome of the Hebrewes thinke, and Mercerus, that Lot beſide the two Virgins, had two other daughters married: but it may appeare that Lot had no more ſonnes or daughters, but only two: becauſe when the Angell had bid him bring out his ſonnes in law, his ſons and daughters, hee onely ſpake to his ſonnes in law: therefore ſonnes he had none, nor other daughters to ſpeake unto, but thoſe two which were with him. 2. It is evident alſo, that only Lot, his wife, and two daughters were delivered out of the flames of Sodome: 1. that it might appeare, that there were no more righteous perſons in Sodome, ſo that the number of ten laſt mentioned by Abraham, could not bee made up. 2. If any other had eſcaped, if men, Lots daughters would rather have practiſed with them than their father, if women, they would have entiſed them to doe the like as they did. As for the wine, which they drunke, they might either carry it themſelves, or upon beaſts, there was no ſuch neceſſary uſe of ſervants in that behalfe: or which is moſt like, they brought it with them from Zoar. Mercer.

Onely foure perſons eſcaped from Sodome.

QVEST. X. Why Lot is willed to ſpeake to thoſe that would not heare him.

Verſ. 14. HE ſeemed, as though he had mocked. It will be here queſtioned, why the Lord willeth ſuch to be warned, whom hee knew would deſpiſe their calling. The anſwer is ready, God notwithſtanding would have them to be called, that they might be more inexcuſable, and his judgements appeare to be moſt juſt: like as he hath appointed the Goſpell to be preached to all the world, yet many are called and few choſen, as our Saviour ſaith, Mat. 20. 16. ex Calvin.

QVEST. XI. Why Lot and the reſt are forbidden to looke backe.

Verſ. 17. LOoke not behind thee. The Lord forbade Lot, and likewiſe the reſt with him, to looke behind them, not either becauſe of the Angell that deſtroyed Sodome, or for that it was dangerous to looke into the infected aire, as the Hebr. but for theſe reaſons: 1. to try their obedience, as hee did Adams in prohibiting the eating of an apple. 2. to ſhew hereby the indignity of that place, that was not worthy by any honeſt man to bee looked upon. 3. to ſtay Lots curioſity, that he ſhould not too narrowly looke into Gods judgements, or gaze upon his workes. Perer. 4. as alſo for more ſpeed ſake, as the Apoſtles were likewiſe forbidden to ſalute any by the way. Iun. 5. that Lots deſire and affection might bee ſequeſtred from the pleaſures and wealth of the City. Calvin.

QVEST. XII. How Lots wife looked behind him.

Verſ. 26. HIs wife looked backe behind him. 1. not behind her ſelfe, as the Latine readeth: 2. nether yet being behind Lot, dragging after him, did ſhee looke backe, as Cajetane in c. 19. Geneſ. & Mercer. 3. neither did ſhe looke behind upon Lot, that ſhe might come after him. Calvin. for then ſhe had not broken the Angels charge. 4. but ſhe looked toward Sodome behind and beyond her husband. Iun.

QVEST. XIII. Why God ſo ſeverely puniſhed Lots wife.

SHe was turned into a pillar of Salt. God ſhewed this example of severity upon Lots wife, 1. for her diſobedience. 2. her incredulity, in not giving credit to Gods word. 3. her curioſity in deſiring to ſee the City burning. 4. her fooliſhneſſe in pitying the ruine of her countrey, kindred, and people. 5. her affection ſeemed yet to bee addicted to the pleaſures of Sodome, and therefore our Saviour giveth a caveat hereof, Remember Lots wife, Luke 17. 32. that wee for ſaving and loving of this life, loſe not the next. Perer. Calvin.

QVEST. XIV. What pillar of Salt Lots wife was turned into.

PIllar of Salt. 1. Not becauſe Lots wife periſhed in the fire of brimſtone mingled with ſalt, as it is Deut. 29. 23. as Aben Ezra: for it might as well be ſaid a pillar of brimſtone. 2. neither is it ſo called only becauſe it was a durable pillar: as an everlaſting covenant is called a covenant of ſalt. Numb. 18. 19. for ſalt hath a property to preſerve things from corruption and decaying. 3. Neither was ſhe turned into a pillar of ſalt, becauſe ſhe refuſed to bring the gueſts ſalt the day before, as ſome of the Hebrewes dreame. 4. Neither yet is it an allegory, to ſignifie ſuch to be as ſenſleſſe pillars, which divert their affections from themſelves all to earthly and ſenſuall things: as Philo applieth it. 5. But hereby is ſignified, that ſhe both was turned into a pillar of materiall ſalt, and that alſo durable and of long continuance, which Joſephus ſaith, continued to be ſeene in his time, Borchardus long after maketh mention of it in his deſcription of the holy land: and the Thargum Hieroſolymit. ſaith, that it is duraturam uſq; ad tempus reſurrectionis, to continue till the reſurrection: but God would have that monument, ut præbeat fidelibus condimentum, &c. that it might be a warning to faithfull men to take heed of backſliding, as Auguſtine noteth. Auguſt. lib. 16. de ciu. dei. c. 30.

QVEST.

Quest. XV. What became of Lots wife.

FUrther, 1. Neither muſt it bee ſuppoſed that her ſoule, but her body onely was turned into a pillar of ſalt. Calvin. 2. And the Lord might have mercy upon her ſoule, though this chaſtiſement was ſhewed upon her body. 3. And it is moſt like that this miracle was done before Lot came to Zoar: neither is it to be thought, that Lot and his two daughters went before, and his wife ſtaid behind in the field to looke backe, as Cajetane thinketh: but it was done in Lots ſight and preſence, for the better example ſake, before they entred into Zoar: for when Lot departed out of Zoar, mention is made only of him and his two daughters. And they which have travelled that countrey doe teſtifie, that this pillar was to be ſeene betweene Segor and the dead Sea, where Sodome and Gomorrha ſtood. Perer. ex Borchard.

In what place Lots wife was turned into a pillar of Salt.

Quest. XVI. Why Lot refuſeth to goe to the mountaines.

Verſ. 20. See now this City hereby, &c. 1. Neither was this done in myſtery, that Lot refuſed the mountaine to dwell in Zoar, to ſignifie, as Gregory collecteth, that a low, humble, and meane life is to bee preferred before high places. 2. neither did Lot refuſe the high places, becauſe of the craggy rockes and ſteepe hils, which are to bee ſeene in the mountaines of Engaddi: 3. But Lot himſelfe gives two reaſons, why he preferreth Zoar before the mountaines: one in reſpect of himſelfe, becauſe the City was hard by, and he might ſooner eſcape thither, than to the mountaine: the other in behalfe of the City he intreateth for it, becauſe it was but a little one, and not likely to bee ſo wicked, as the more populous Cities Quest. XVII. How the Lord ſaith, I can doe nothing.

Verſ. 22. I can doe nothing, &c. 1. Some apply this to the Angels, which could not exceed Gods commiſſion. Muſcul. 2. Some to Chriſt in reſpect of his humanity to be aſſumed. 3. But it is beſt underſtood of Chriſt as hee is God; neither doth this reſtraine the power of God, which is no otherwiſe executed, but according to his will: hee cannot, becauſe hee will not, neither can change his decree concerning the ſaving and delivering of Lot: as in the like phraſe of ſpeech, it is ſaid in the Goſpell, that Chriſt could doe no great workes in his owne countrey, becauſe of their unbeleefe. Mark. 6. 5. for like as the Lord promiſeth and purpoſeth a bleſſing to the faithfull, as here deliverance to Lot, ſo he hath decreed to with-hold it from unbeleevers. 4. The Hebrewes doe here but trifle, that the Angell is here deprived of his power, becauſe hee did arrogate it to himſelfe, v. 13. and that they were deprived of their miniſtry 138. yeares, till Iacobs ladder.

Quest. XVIII. Of the name of the City Zoar.

Qu. 6. in Gen.

Verſ. 22. The name of the City was called Zoar. 1. It is then corruptly called Segor, as the Latine and Septuagint read. 2. Theodoret alſo is deceived, that ſaith Segor ſignifieth the opening of the earth, becauſe the earth ſwallowed up the inhabitants of this City: for that is the ſignification of Bela which was before the name of the place, Gen. 14. 2. derived of the word balang, to ſwallow or devour. 3. The right etymology then of the word is here given by Lot, becauſe it was tſegnar, a little one. 4. This was an happy change, not only of the name, but of the condition and ſtate of the City: before it had the name of deſtruction, but now it is called little, that it might put them in mind of Gods mercy in ſparing of the City for that time at Lots requeſt. Muſcul.

Quest. XIX. How the Lord rained from the Lord.

Verſ. 24. The Lord rained brimſtone and fire from the Lord out of heaven, &c. 1. This is not all one, as if ſay the Lord rained fire from himſelfe, as Vatablus, Oleaſter, with others: that note this to be a phraſe of the Hebrewes, to put nownes for pronownes: as Gen. 4. Lamech ſaith, heare ô ye wives of Lamech, for my wives: 2. Neither doth it only ſignifie, that this was an extraordinary and miraculous raine, cauſed by the Lord himſelfe, beſide the courſe of naturall cauſes: as Cajetane. 3. But this place was well urged by the fathers, to prove the eternity of Chriſt: that the Lord Chriſt, to whom the father hath committed all judgement, did raine from Jehovah his father. Thus the fathers applied this text. Iuſtine, Tertullian, Cyprian, Epiphanius, Cyril, with others. Thus Marcus Arethuſius, in the Syrinian Councell did godlily interpret this place againſt the hereſie of Photinus, that held Chriſt not to have beene before his mother. 4. For thus the Lord hath tempered the Scriptures, that beſide the literall ſenſe, in divers places of the old teſtament, the myſtery of the Trinity is inſinuated: Gen. as Let us make man: Pſal. 1. Thou art my ſonne, this day have I begotten thee: which the Jewes underſtand literally; the firſt they ſay is but a phraſe of ſpeech, the ſecond uttered of Dauid. But to our underſtanding, the myſtery of the Trinity is here revealed.

Socrates lib. 2. c. 30. Syrinenſe c. 16.

Quest. XX. Of the raine of fire and brimſtone, the beginning and manner thereof.

Rained brimſtone and fire. 1. This was a miraculous and extraordinary raine, wherein fell together fire and brimſtone, as a fit matter to diſperſe the fire, and ſalt alſo: as it may bee gathered, Deut. 29. 23. The land ſhall burne with brimſtone and ſalt: and it may bee, that water powred downe alſo, whence was gathered the dead ſea remaining to this day. 2. This raine came from heaven, that is the upper region of the aire, the place for fiery meteors: and it is not unlike, but that the nature of the ſoile, being full of pitch and ſlime and other combuſtible matter. Gen. 14. 10. did much increaſe the combuſtion: though

Smoke

Strabo be deceived, who thinketh, that this fierce fire did break out firſt from the earth. Iib. 17. 3. This was a fit puniſhment for this wicked people, that as they burned with unnaturall luſt, ſo they ſhould be conſumed with unnaturall fire. Gregor. 4. The ſubverſion of theſe cities was very ſudden: it was done, as Ieremy ſaith, in a moment. Lament. 4. 6. And Abraham riſing up early in the morning, ſaw onely the ſmoake, and not the falling of the fire: and yet the ſunne was but in riſing, when it began to raine fire and brimſtone. Gen. 19. 24, 28. by the breake of day the Angell haſtened Lot forward, v. 15. betweene which and the Sun riſing one may goe foure miles, as the Hebrewes. 5. Of all examples of Gods judgements, this is the moſt fearefull in Scripture: 1. becauſe of the ſtrange puniſhment: 2. the ſuddennes of their deſtruction. 3. The perpetuall monument thereof to this day. 4. And it was a forerunner of everlaſting fire and perdition. Iude v. 7.

The moſt fearefull example of the deſtruction of Sodome and Gomorrhe.

Quest. XXI. How many Cities were deſtroyed with Sodome.

Vers. 24. VPon Sodome and Gomorrhe, 1. Neither were theſe two cities onely deſtroyed, as Solinus. 2. Nor yet tenne cities, as Stephanus, or thirteene, as Strabo. 3. nor five, as Lyranus, Theodoretus, who thinke, that Zoar alſo was deſtroyed after Lots departure. 4. But it is moſt like, that onely foure cities were overthrowne, Sodome, Gomorrhe, Admah, Zeboim; for theſe onely were rehearſed, Deut. 29. 23. for Zoar was preſerved by the interceſſion of Lot. v. 21. I will not overthrow this citie, for the which thou haſt ſpoken: and it was known by the name of Zoar in Iſayas time, cap. 15. 5. Hierome alſo maketh mention of it in his dayes, and ſaith, ſola de quinq; Sodomorum urbib. precib. Lot preſervatate eſt: it was onely of the five cities of the Sodomites preſerved by the prayer of Lot. 5. But whereas it is ſaid, Sapien. 10. 6. that the fire came downe vpon the five cities: the word is pentapolis, which is taken joyntly for the whole region, wherein the five cities ſtood, not for the five cities ſeverally: ex Perer.

Lyran in cap 19. Genes. Theod q. 89. in Gen.

Quest. XXII. Of the largeneſſe of the plaine that was deſtroyed.

Verſe. 25. AND overthrew thoſe cities and all the plaine, &c. where now ſtandeth the dead and ſalt lake or ſea. 1. Plinie ſaith, it is above an hundred miles long, and twenty five broad. 2. But Ioſephus, which better knew, being brought up in the countrey, giveth it but 580. furlongs in length, that is, 72. miles and ſomewhat more, and an 150. ſtadia or furlongs broad, that is, nineteene miles or there about. By this it may appeare what a great deſtruction this was, which overflowed ſuch a great circuit of ground. 3. Ariſtotle alſo teſtifieth by heare-ſay, that the thickneſſe and ſaltneſſe of the water is ſuch, that it beareth up man or beaſt, throwne into it, ex Perer.

Plin. l. 5. c. 16. Lib. 5. de bell. Iudaic. c. 5. Lib. 2. Meteor.

Quest. XXIII. Whether any were ſaved beſide Lot and his company.

AND the inhabitants of the cities. 1. then Strabo is deceived, which thinketh that ſome of the cities were forſaken of thoſe which could flie away, lib. 17. ſo that he ſuppoſeth, that divers eſcaped: but the Scripture teſtifieth, that all the inhabitants ſaving Lot, his wife, and two daughters were deſtroyed. 2. Not onely the men and women, but the infants alſo periſhed in the fire, ſo that there remained no ſeed or off-ſpring of the Sodomites: as the Prophet witneſſeth, Iſai. 1. 19. Except the Lord had reſerved unto us a ſeed, wee ſhould have beene as Sodome, &c. This the Lord did, 1. to increaſe their ſorrow and torment in ſeeing the deſtruction of their children. 2. to ſhew his perfect deteſtation of that wicked nation, whoſe very ſeed was accurſed. 3. Although thoſe infants were not guilty of their fathers actuall ſinnes, yet it may ſtand with Gods juſtice temporally to chaſtiſe the children for their fathers ſins, as Davids childe begotten in adulterie died. Perer. 4. God hath abſolute power and free choice to ſhew mercy to whom he will, and to withhold it at his pleaſure. 5. Gods judgements are ſecret, yet moſt juſt. Calvin. 4. This deſtruction of the Sodomites by fire was a foreſhewing of evelaſting fire, the vengeance whereof they now ſuffer, Iude 7. therefore Hierome is deceived, that ſaith, Deum ad praſ·ns reddidiſſe ſupplicia, ne in æternum puniret; that God did chaſtiſe them preſently, that hee ſhould not puniſh them eternally. Unleſſe Hierome bee expounded to ſpeake conditionally, if they repented, which it is not like they did. Wee may therefore ſafely ſubſcribe to the ſentence of Saint Iude, that the Sodomites are eternally puniſhed: for neither were there any juſt men left after Lot was gone out, upon whom God might ſhew mercie: neither is it like they did repent in that inſtant, ſeeing they ſcorned Lots warning before: neither can any temporall puniſhment whatſoever, redeeme or buy our everlaſting damnation.

Whether the infants were deſtroyed, and wherefore.

Whether the wicked Sodomites were damned in hel. Hieron. in 1. cap. Nauin.

Quest. XIV. Of the barrenneſſe of the ground where Sodome ſtood, and the ſtrange fruit there growing.

Verſe. 25. AND all that grew upon the earth. 1. Not onely that time were the plants and herbs ſmitten, but the earth was ſtricken with barrenneſſe for ever. As the Pſalme hath reference to this example, 107. 34. A fruitfull land turneth he into barrenneſſe or ſaltneſſe for the wickednes of the inhabitants. Ariſtotle alſo witneſſeth, that the bitterneſſe and ſaltneſſe of the water is ſuch, that no fiſh can live therein. lib. 2. meteor. 2. Borchardus alſo that ſpent 10. yeares in the viewing of that countrey ſaith, that no graſſe groweth there, and that it alwaies ſmoaketh: 1. part. c. 7. num. 38. which is agreeable to that place of the Prophet Iſay, 34. 9. The rivers thereof ſhall be turned into pitch, the duſt thereof into brimſtone, the ſmoake thereof ſhall goe up for evermore. 3. Others alſo doe write, that the fruit which there groweth, is outwardly like other fruit, but within the rine there is nothing but duſt and aſhes. Ioſeph. 5. de bell. Iudaic. Solinus ſaith, Fuligiem favillaceam, ambitius extimæ cutis cohibet, that the goodly outward rine or skinne onely, doth keepe in the filthy ſoily embers, cap. 37. Pererius.

Quest. XXV. Why Lot feareth to ſtay in Zoar.

Verſ. 30. He feared to tarry in Zoar, &c. 1. Not ſo much for that the City was ſubject to earth-quakes and had divers times before beene thereby overthrowne, whereupon it was called Bela, of Balang, which ſignifieth to ſwallow or devoure; and therefore Lot might thinke, that now much more the ſame calamity might befall it in this fearefull tempeſt of fire and brimſtone, ſic Hieron. in traditionibus Hebraic. 2. But rather Lot ſeeing the ſame ſinnes to reigne in this place, might feare leſt the ſame puniſhment ſhould overtake them: wherein notwithſtanding he ſheweth his weakneſſe in not ſtaying upon the Lords promiſe, Calvin. 3. As alſo that fearefull judgement which fell upon his wife at his entring into Zoar might move him the ſooner to depart from thence.

Quest. XXVI. How Lot is ſaid to be delivered for Abrahams ſake.

Verſ. 29. God thought upon Abraham, and ſent Lot out, &c. It may bee here queſtioned how Lot is ſaid for Abrahams ſake to be ſent out, when Saint Peter ſaith, That juſt Lot was delivered, 2 Pet. 3. 7. he was then delivered for his owne righteouſneſſe by the Apoſtles ſentence. The anſwer here is not that Lot was delivered for his ſervice to Abraham in Egypt, in concealing Sarah to be his wife, or following him out of his Countrey; but, 1. Lot was indeed principally delivered, neither for Abrahams, nor his owne righteouſneſſe, but for the Lords owne mercy and goodneſſe ſake: and it is moſt certaine that Lot ſhould have beene delivered, though he had not beene Abrahams nephew: yet the Lord to ſatisfie his love to Abraham, and to encourage us one to pray for another, doth ſhew how much the prayers of the faithfull prevaile with him. 2. God is ſaid to remember Abraham, not what hee prayed, but what God ſaid to him, that he would not deſtroy the righteous with the wicked, Muſcul. 3. As alſo it may be referred to the Lords firſt promiſe made to Abraham, I will bleſſe them that bleſſe thee, Gen. 12. ſo that Lots deliverance dependeth not upon any merit in Abraham, but Gods gracious promiſe toward him, &c.

Quest. XVII, Whether Lots daughter were indeed ignorant that there was no man left alive but her father.

Hom. 5 in Gen.

Verſ. 31. There is not a man in the earth to come in unto us, &c. 1. Origen thinketh that Lots daughters thought verily that all the world had beene deſtroyed by fire; as it is like that they had heard of their father that there ſhould be a conflagration of the world, but they perfectly underſtood it not: But this is not like, for they might eaſily have diſcerned from the hils, the reſt of the Countrey to be untouched, and they came but lately from Zoar, which was preſerved. 2. Some thinke further, that this ignorance of theirs was invincible and remedileſſe, and by this argument would excuſe their practice with their father, ſic Ioſeph. lib. antiq. Irenam lib. 4. c. 51. Ambroſe lib. 1. de Abraham. c. 6. 3. Others thinke that indeed Lots daughters did thus ignorantly perſwade themſelves, but ſo as that preſent arguments were offered to cauſe them to thinke otherwiſe, and therefore their ignorance was not invincible; as the view of the Countrey, the preſervation of Zoar, which upon their fathers feare they might imagine alſo to be deſtroyed; the remembrance that Sodome was puniſhed for their particular ſinnes: they knew alſo that their father had a godly uncle, and a great kindred; at the leaſt they might before this attempt have conſulted with their father, Cajetan. Perer. 4. But I rather ſubſcribe to Calvin, that they doe not ſo ſpeake, as though all men of the world were periſhed (which they did know upon the former reaſons) but onely the men of that place; as Iunius well tranſlateth, Intera hac; In this Countrey; and they being ſhut up in the Cave could have no acceſſe unto others, Mercer. Though that other conjecture of Calvins, that there might be beſide ſome of their ſervants, be not ſo probable, for they would not then have practiſed with their father.

Quest. XVIII. Lots drunkenneſſe whether to be excuſed.

Verſ. 32. We will make our father drunke with wine, &c. 1. Some doe altogether excuſe Lot in that he was drunken, becauſe he did it not of intemperancie, but onely to mitigate and allay his griefe and heavineſſe, Chryſoſtom. hom. 44. in Gen. And Thomas ſaith, that Lot totaliter excuſatur a culpa, that Lot is wholly to be excuſed; and his reaſon is, becauſe, Actus precedens talis fuit, ut ex eo ſequeretur ebrietas ſine peccato; The preceding act was ſuch, that drunkenneſſe followed without ſinne: which is not true, for wine cannot be taken with exceſſe without ſinne; as Saint Paul ſaith, Epheſ. 5. 18. Be not drunke with wine wherein is exceſſe: the very exceſſe is ſinfull howſoever taken. 2. Theodoret will not wholly excuſe Lot, Ebrietas Lot nonnullam habet reprehenſionem, venia tamen temperatam; Lots drunkenneſſe hath ſome reprehenſion, but worthy of pardon; becauſe, Vino animi agritudinem ſolabatur; He did allay his ſorrow with wine. 3. But Auguſtine doth wholly condemne it, thinking that it became not a juſt man, Talem adhibere conſolationem, To uſe ſuch a kinde of conſolation: And indeed in this caſe though Lot might have more freely uſed wine in this forlorn eſtate, yet to uſe it in exceſſe to drunkenneſſe and luſt, can have no excuſe, Muſcul.

Queſt. 89. in Gen.

Lib. 22. cont. Fauſt. cap. 43.

Lib. 4. cap. 51.

Verſ. 32. That we may preſerve ſeed of our father. 1. Some doe excuſe this fact of Lots daughters; ſuch as Irenaus ſaith, Ipſæ excuſabiles, arbitrantes ſe ſolas relictas ad conſervationem generis humani; They are excuſable, thinking they were onely left for the preſervation of mankinde. Anſw. 1. A good intention maketh not a good action; it is not enough to propound a good end, but the meanes alſo muſt be good: their deſire to preſerve mankinde was commendable, but the means to compaſſe it, by inceſt with their father, was not juſtifiable. 2. It ſeemeth alſo that they ſinned againſt their conſcience, knowing that their father would would never have assented to them, if he had not beene made drunken first to forget himselfe.

Secondly, Chrysostome before alleaged, saith, it is extreme madnesse to condemne those, Quos Scriptura ab omni liberat crimine; Whom the Scripture freeth from all blame. Answ. The Scripture setteth downe only a plaine narration of the fact, without either praise or dispraise, according to the holy manner thereof, leaving the consideration thereof to the godly wise Reader: It sheweth that they committed this fact of ignorance, and love of posterity, rather than of intemperancie, which is not enough for the approbation of their fact, though it be somewhat for the qualification thereof. Hom. 44. in Gen.

Thirdly, Irenaus useth another reason of excuse, because of the mysticall signification: he would have Lot signifie Christ, his daughters the two synagogues, &c. Answ. 1. This mysticall application hath no warrant in Scripture, but is onely devised by man. 2. Though it were, yet the argument followeth not: for the Scripture borroweth similitudes and allegories from things which are not allowed: as from the enchanter or charmer, Psal. 58. 5. Christs suddaine comming is compared to the theefe, 1 Thess. 5. 2.

2. Wherefore this attempt of Lots daughters is no way excusable. 1. Because incest with the father is a sinne against the law of nature, and no wayes tolerable. 2. They could not be ignorant, that, although those few Cities were desolate, the whole world was not emptied of people. 3. Their owne conscience gave them that they did not well, because they did intoxicate their father with drinke, thinking, that if he were in his perfect memory, he would not consent unto them. 4. Though procreation of children, and the propagation of man-kinde be a thing to be desired, yet was it not lawfull by unlawfull meanes to compasse it: in this case the Apostles rule must stand, not to doe evill, that good may come thereof, Rom. 3. 8. 5. The resolution then is this: first that the sinne of Lots daughters was greater than their fathers: for his chiefe fault was his drunkennesse: but they committed a double fault, in making him drunke, and committing incest with him: therefore Augustine saith well: Culpandus est Lot, non quantum ille incestus, sed quantum ille ebrietas merebatur: Lot was to be blamed, not as much as this incest, but his drunkennesse deserved: for the one was voluntary, the other involuntary: Secondly, his daughters sinned the lesse, because they desired their fathers company, not for lust, but for procreation: as both their words shew, and for that they did it but once, Calvin: yet was their offence very great, being against the law of nature: and therefore Augustine saith well: Potius nunquam esse matres, quam sic uti patre debuerunt: ibid. It had been better for them never to have beene mothers, than to have used their father so. Lib. 22. cont. Faust. cap. 43.

Quest. XXX. The copulation of the father and daughter in no necessity lawfull or tolerable.

FUrther, if this question be moved, whether in this case, if there had beene no more men in the world left but Lot, it had beene lawfull for his daughters to have conceived by him. 1. Ambrose affirmeth it by the example of Adam and Eva, which was taken out of Adam, and yet carnally knowne by him. But this example is not proper, for Eve cannot be said to be Adams daughter, seeing the beginning of such kindreds is by carnall copulation and commixtion; neither will God ever suffer in his providence such necessitie to fall out, that none but the father and daughter should be left for procreation; which necessity, if ever it were likely to be, had bin seene in Noahs flood; when notwithstanding God would rather preserve wicked Cham for the generation of the world, than bring in any such necessity of unnaturall copulation.

2. Therefore Augustine thinketh more truly, that in this supposed case it had not beene lawfull for Lots daughters to doe as they did; because Vetitus est lege naturali talis commixtio, such carnall commixtion is forbidden by the law of nature, and admitteth no dispensation. And againe, their owne minde gave them that they did not well; the care of conservation of man-kinde belonged to their father, and therefore they should have consulted with him; they then not consulting with their father, feared his consent, and so condemned in their conscience their owne act. Lib. 22. cont. Faust. cap. 43.

Quest. XXXI. Whether Lot were altogether ignorant what was done to his daughters.

Vers. 33. HE knew not when she lay downe, nor when she rose up. 1. It can neither be as the Septuag. read; he knew not when he lay downe, or rose up: for Lot was not so senselesse, not to know what he did, when he awoke and rose up. 2. Neither is it a thing incredible, nescientem coire quempiam; for a man not knowing in his sleepe to doe the act of generation, seeing the Scripture so testifieth here of Lot. 3. Neither is Lyranus opinion right, that Lot onely was ignorant when his daughters came to him and rose up but he knew what he did in the act, supposing through forgetfulnesse that it might be his wife: for Lot if he remembred himselfe, when hee awaked, what he had done, would not have committed the same thing againe. 4. Neither is Tostatus conceit out of Thomas probable, that Lots daughter conceived by him by nocturnall pollution and shedding of seed, not by the act of generation, as Thomas reporteth of one, that was by that meanes with child by her father, who for preserving of her virginity, kept her in his owne bed: for the text it selfe overthroweth this conceit; they consulted to lie with their father, or as the Septuagint reade, sleepe with him, and so they did. 5. Therefore Cajetanus opinion is to bee preferred: Lot omnino nescivisse universam rem gestam: that Lot was ignorant of the whole matter what was done from the first to the last: of which opinion Chrysostome was before: the reasons are these. 1. Chrysostome: peccata nos condemnant, qua scienter facimus: those sinnes condemne us, which we doe wittingly: but the Scripture excuseth this fact of Lot by his ignorance. 2. Cajetane saith, hoc omne opus perfici posse impedito rationis usu: that his businesse may be done, though the use of reason be hindred, as in those that are drunken. Ferus addeth, that the progressive faculty may be exercised in sleepe: as many walke, carry things from place to place, and doe such like things in their sleepe: and of the same sort might this act be. 4. The devill also to helpe forward this worke, might worke such a fantasie in Lots minde, being asleepe. Hier. in tradition Hebrew. Tostat. in c. 19. Genes.

5. Calvins conjecture is beſt; Non tam vino fuiſſe obrutum, quam propter intemperiem divinitus percuſſum ſpiritu ſtuporis; That Lot was not ſo much oppreſſed with wine, as ſtricken with a ſpirit of ſlumber and ſenſleſſneſſe from God, becauſe of his intemperance: to which agreeth that ſaying of Chryſoſtome; Divina diſpenſatione factum, ut ſic ille vino gravaretur, ut omnino ignoraret: That God ſo diſpoſed, that he ſhould be ſo overcome of wine, that he was utterly ignorant. It was not then the operation onely of the wine, but Gods worke withall, that cauſed this ſenſleſſe ignorance.

Quest. XXXII. The cauſes why the Lord ſuffered Lot thus to fall.

THe cauſes why Lot was permitted thus to fall, are rendred to be theſe. 1. His double incredulity, in not giving credit to the Angell promiſing him ſafety, firſt in the mountaine, and then in Zoar, cauſed him to be puniſhed with theſe two ſinnes of drunkenneſſe and incontinencie, Hieromo. 2. His drunkenneſſe made way unto his luſt, Calvin. 3. God hereby ſheweth his great goodneſſe and ſingular providence, who can turne evill unto good: for of Moab, one of thoſe inceſtuous births, came Ruth, which was married to Booz, of whoſe line came our Saviour after the fleſh, Perer. 4. God hath ſet forth this example, to make us circumſpect: Ne abeamus in ſecuritatem: that we be not ſecure, Lauher. If Lot ſo excellent a man fell into ſuch grievous ſinnes, of drunkenneſſe and inceſt, who ought not to be humbled, and take heed to his wayes, and depend upon God for his direction?

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. None perfectly juſt in this life.

Verſ. 8. BEhold I have two daughters, &c. Calvin from hence concludeth, that no mans works are ſo perfect, but in ſome things they faile. The Scripture calleth Lot a righteous man, but ſecundum quendam modum, after a certaine manner, as Auguſtine ſaith. The Scripture noteth ſix great faults in this righteous man: 1. His contention with Abraham, Gen. 13. 2. His offering of his daughters to the rage of the Sodomites. 3. His incredulity in doubting to be ſaved in the mountaine. 4. His weakneſſe of faith in fearing to ſtay in Zoar, which the Lord promiſed to ſave for his ſake. 5. His drunkenneſſe. 6. His inceſtuous act, though involuntary. Therefore as Saint Iames ſaith, In many things we offend all, Iam. 3. 1. ſo there is none ſo righteous, but in ſome things he offendeth.

Aug. q. 45. in Gen.

2. Doct. The elect Angels miniſters of Gods judgements upon the wicked.

Verſ. 13. THe Lord hath ſent us to deſtroy it. The good Angels then, as they are Miniſters of Gods mercies toward the elect, Pſal. 91. 11. He ſhall give his Angels charge over thee: ſo are they the executors of Gods judgements upon the wicked, as upon the hoſt of Senacherib, 2 King. 19. and here upon the City of Sodome. Sometime alſo the elect Angels doe execute Gods judgements upon his owne people, as 2 Sam. 24. when David had numbred his people: but this is more rare, and then when ſuch judgements tend rather to our good than hurt, our correction rather than confuſion.

3. Doct. No man can deliver himſelfe from the bondage of ſinne.

Verſ. 16. THe men caught him and his wife by the hands, &c. As Lot would not have haſtened to come out of Sodome, if the Angels had not pulled him by the hands; ſo cannot we free our ſelves from the bondage of ſinne, nor come forth out of the wickedneſſe of the world, except the Lord doe call us out: as our Saviour ſaith, None can come unto me except my father draw him, Ioh. 6. 44.

4. Doct. We muſt abandon whatſoever belongeth to Babylon.

Verſ. 17. NEither tarry thou in all the plaine. Lot is not onely taken forth of Sodome, but forbidden to ſtay in the plaine that belonged thereunto: ſo is it not enough to come forth from the groſſe ſuperſtition of the Romiſh Babylon, but we muſt ſhake off whatſoever hath any affinity or agreement with it, ſic Muſcul. as the Apoſtle ſaith, Abſtaine from all appearance of evill, 1 Theſſ. 5. 22.

5. Doct. The deſtruction of the world by fire ſhall be ſudden.

Verſ. 28. HE ſaw the ſmoake of the land mounting, &c. Abraham ſaw not the raine of fire and brimſtone, but the ſmoake onely thereof, and yet he roſe very early: ſo that it ſeemeth the burning of Sodome was done in a moment: for the raine fell not till Lot was entred into Zoar, which was about the Sunne riſing, verſ. 23. By this we may ſee, how ſuddenly the world at Chriſts comming ſhall be conſumed with fire, and we changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, 1 Cor. 15. 52. Muſcul.

6. Doct. Wherefore unlawfull copulations are often more fruitfull than lawfull.

Verſ. 36. THus were both the daughters of Lot with childe, &c. We finde in Scripture, that many lawfully companying with their husbands, as Sara, Rebecca, Rachel, Anna, yet hardly conceived: and yet divers with one unlawfull copulation were with childe, as Thamar with Iuda, Beroſhe with David, Lots daughters with their father: which the Lord doth not, as more favouring ſuch unlawfull conjunctions, but to this end, that ſuch ſecret uncleane works ſhould come to light, for their converſion, as in Iuda, David; or confuſion, Marlor.

5. Plat.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Universality no sure marke of the Church.

Vers. 4. ALL the people from all quarters. All the whole City of Sodome consented in evill, onely Lot and his family were free. Universality then is but a slender or uncertaine argument of the truth, or Church that professeth it. It is oftner seene, that the greater part is the worse, than otherwise. The Romanists therefore reason but simply, that their religion is the best, because the greater part of the world received it: for by the same reason, the uncleane conversation of Sodome might bee justified against Lot.

2. Confut. Against Atheists, that beleeve not the transmutation of Lots wife.

Vers. 26. She became a pillar of salt. Let not prophane persons scoffe at this, as though it were one of Ovids Metamorphosis fables. There is a great difference betweene Gods actions, and Poets fictions: he that beleeveth that God made all things of nothing, which dayly seeth birds to come forth of eggs, and living creatures to be ingendred by dead seed, and hopeth for the resurrection of the body, cannot doubt, but that God could turne a womans body into a salty pillar.

3. Confut. Monkish and solitary life maketh not more holy.

Vers. 38. HE dwelt in a cave. Even Lot in a solitary cave committed sinne: it is not then the place that amendeth mens manners. Gregory well saith, sic deest spiritus non adjuvat locus: If an heart be wanting, the place helpeth not. Lot sinned in the mountaine, Adam fell in Paradise, the Angels in heaven. It is then but a Popish fantasie, that a Monks coule, a cloister life, an Hermites weed, can make a man more holy. But it is to be feared, that as drunkennesse and incest were committed even in the cave, so the Cloisters and Cells of Popish votaries are not free from the like uncleannesse. Hom. 1. in Ezek.

6. Places of morall observation.

1. Observ. Unruly people to be gently handled.

Vers. 7. I Pray you my brethren doe not so wickedly, &c. Lot sheweth that a furious multitude is to be gently dealt withall, and not to be exasperated with sharpe words: as here Lot calleth the Sodomites his brethren, not in the same profession, but in respect of his cohabitation, and common condition of life. This is S. Pauls rule, Instructing them with meeknesse that are contrary minded, 2 Tim. 2. 25.

2. Observ. God delivereth in extremity.

Vers. 10. THe men put forth their hands and pulled Lot, &c. The Lord though he deferre his helpe, yet will not faile us in the greatest danger, when we are brought to a straight. As here Lot was delivered from the Sodomites, as from raging Lions, when he was as under their pawes, Calvin. In the verie pinch, the Lord delivered David, when Saul had compassed him in, 1 Sam. 23. 26.

3. Observ. Prophane persons make a mocke of Gods judgements.

Vers. 14. HE seemed to his sons in law, as though he had mocked, &c. Such are the prophane Atheists and worldlings, that make but a mocke and scorne of Gods judgements, and are no better perswaded of the end of the world by fire, than these wretches were of the destruction of Sodome: of such Peter speaketh; That there shall be in the last dayes mockers, &c. which shall say, where is the promise of his coming, &c. 2 Pet. 3. 3. Calvin.

4. Observ. We must not deferre our turning to God.

Vers. 16. AS he prolonged the time. By Lots example, who delaying the time, if God had not beene more mercifull to draw him forth, might have perished in the overthrow of Sodome: wee learne, how dangerous a thing it is to deferre our calling, and to trifle or dally with Gods judgements. Therefore the Prophet Amos saith, Prepare to meet thy God O Israel, Amos 4. 12. better to meet and prevent the Lord by repentance, than to stay till his judgements overtake us.

5. Observ. We must not forsake our calling.

Vers. 26. HIs wife looked backe. This teacheth us, that a man should not fall away from his profession and calling, whereinto he is once entred; as our Saviour saith, He that setteth his hand to the plow and looketh back, is not fit for the kingdome of God, Luk. 9. 26. Muscul.

6. Obser. He that wavereth in faith is never setled.

Vers. 18. NOt so my Lord: Lot not following the Lords direction, to goe first to the mountaine, entreateth for Zoar: yet being in Zoar, he is not contented to stay there. So they which doe not submit themselves to Gods ordinance, but are doubtfull, in faith, are unconstant and wavering, and never setled: as Saint Iames saith, A wavering minded man is unstable in all his wayes.

7. Observ. Custome and continuance in sinne dangerous.

Vers.35. They made their father drunke that night also, &c. We see then what a dangerous thing it is once to give way to the tentation of Satan: Lot having beene once drunken already, is more apt to fall into it againe: so fearefull is a custome and continuance in sinne. Our instruction is therefore, that we should resist the temptation at the first, and not by yeelding to give way for a second assault: as the Apostle saith, Be not overcome of evill, but overcome evill with goodnesse, Rom.12.21.

8. Observ. The sinne of drunkennesse how dangerous.

Further, we see how much drunkennesse is to be taken heed of, which did prostitute Lot so excellent a man, to such beastly uncleannesse. Origen well noteth, Decepit Lot ebrietas, quem Sodoma non decepit, uritur ebrius flammis mulierum, quem sobrium sulphurea flamma non attigerat: drunkennesse deceived Lot, whom Sodome could not deceive: he burneth with the lust of women, being drunken, whom while he was sober, the flames of brimstone touched not. Wherefore let us alwayes remember that saying of the Apostle. Be not drunke with wine wherein is excesse, but be ye fulfilled with the Spirit, Eph.5.15.

CHAP. XX.

1. The Method.

THis Chapter hath two parts: first, the taking away of Sara Abrahams wife, vers.1. 2. Secondly, the restoring of her againe: where first is set downe the admonition of Abimelech in a dreame, vers.3. to 8. then Abimeleches expostulating with Abraham. Thirdly, Abrahams defence, vers.9. to 14. Fourthly, the restitution of Sarah with large gifts, vers.14. to 17. Lastly, Abrahams thankfulnesse in praying unto God, and the effect of his prayer, vers.17, 18.

2. The divers readings.

3. The Explanation of doubts.

QUEST. I. Wherefore Abraham removed from the Plaine of Mamre, where he had so long dwelt.

Vers.1. AFterward Abraham departed thence toward the South Countrey, &c. Abraham had now dwelled in the Plaine of Mamre above fourteene yeare before Ismael was borne, who was thirteene yeares old when he was circumcised, Gen.17.25. Now he removeth from thence, not because of any famine, as Pererius thinketh, for the Scripture maketh mention but of one famine to have fallen in Abrahams dayes, Gen.26.1,2. nor yet for hospitality sake, as some Hebrewes: for he was now a sojourner in a strange Countrey. 3. Nor yet forced through the injuries and wrongs offered by his neighbours. 4. But it is most like, that the fearefull spectacle of the ruine of Sodome, with the pestilent and unwholesome ayre thereof rising, moved Abraham to change his dwelling: God so disposing, that Abraham should not continue alwayes in one place, as a possessor, but shift from place to place, as a stranger and sojourner.

QUEST.

Quest. II. Of the desart of Shur.

Vers. 1. He dwelt betweene Cadesh and Shur. 1. Those were the names of two desarts: the wildernesse of Shur, was that, into the which the Israelites entred, when they had passed over the red Sea, Exod. 15.22. 2. It is the same which is called the desart of Ethan, as Tostatus proveth against Lyranus: as may appeare by comparing Exod. 15.22. with Numb. 33.8. 3. This place of Abrahams dwelling is called afterward Beersheba, Gen. 22.32. Iunius.

Quest. III. Of Gerar where Abraham sojourned.

Sojourned in Gerar. 1. This was the South bounds of Palestina, as is evident, Gen. 10.19. Sidon, Gerar, Sodome, Lasha, are set downe as the foure utmost parts of the Countrey of Canaan: Sidon, Gerar, from the North to the South on the West side; Sodome, Lasha, from the South to the North-eastward. 2. This Gerar was at the first a kingdome by it selfe, distinguished from the five principalities of the Philistims, Iun. It was the chiefe City of the region called Gerartis, Hierom. 3. Here Abraham did sojourne with Isaack twenty five yeares; from hence he went to sacrifice his sonne in the land of Moriah, Gen. 22.1. Perer.

Quest. IV. How Sara retained her favour and beauty at ninetie yeares of age.

Vers. 2. Abimelech sent and tooke Sara. Sara was now ninety yeares old, how could she at these yeares retaine such beauty, as that she should be desired of Kings? 1. Neither is the history transposed, as Lyranus thinketh upon this reason: for Abraham removed not from the Plaine of Mamre, till after the overthrow of Sodome. 2. Some thinke that this beauty in Sara was miraculous, as the Hebrewes. 3. But we need not seeke a miracle, other reasons may be alleaged; 1. Women then at ninety might be as fresh, as now, at forty: for as seventy or eighty is now the full age of women, so then they lived an hundred and thirty: Sara died at an hundred twenty seven yeares, Perer. 2. Moderate diet, and chaste life, might be a great helpe: but especially Gods blessing, as Moses, Iosua, Caleb, retained their strength and vigor in their old age, Deut. 34.7. Ios. 14.11. Luther. And as Sarah had a childe at ninety, so it is like her favour and colour was, as it useth to be in childe-bearing women, Mercer. 3. The not bearing, or nursing of children was a great meane to preserve her favour, Perer. 4. Her inward parts and other womenly gifts might commend her, as well as her favour: and this comelinesse of her person was a singular gift from God among the rest, Calvin. These reasons may be yeelded that Sarah at those yeares did keepe her beautie, which consisteth of three things, the softnesse of the flesh, the smoothnesse of the skinne, the sweetnesse or freshnesse of the colour, Perer.

Quest. V. Why the Lord dealt more mercifully with Abimelech than with Pharao.

Vers. 3. God came to Abimelech. The Lord dealeth more mercifully with Abimelech than with Pharao, for the like offence: Pharao was not admonished by dreame, but forced by plagues to confesse his sinne, Gen. 12. 1. We need not with Rupertus, to runne to allegories: who by these two afflictions of Abraham in the taking away of his wife, would have the two captivities of the Israelites signified: one in Egypt, where the Egyptians suffered many plagues, the other under the Chaldeans, from whence they were delivered by Cyrus with good conditions. 2. Neither is the reason hereof, because Pharao was a more wicked King, though Abimelech seeme to bee the honester man: for the beginning of Gods mercy is from him, not from us. 3. But the difference of this proceeding commeth from the mercifull disposition of God; who will have mercy on whom he will, Rom. 9.15.

Quest. VI. Of divine dreames and the diversity thereof.

Vers. 3. In a dreame by night. 1. The visions which are shewed in the day are more excellent than those which fall upon men in the night, if all other circumstances be alike: not onely for that, it must bee a greater propheticall power, which can sequester the soule from the thoughts and cares of the day wherein it is occupied, than in the silence of the night, which is Aquinas reason, but because all the powers of the soule, when the body is watching, are in their operation and working, and so better prepared for heavenly contemplation: an argument hereof may be this; that dreames in the night have beene shewed to naturall and carnall men, as to Pharao, Nebuchadnezer; but visions of the day are shewed to the faithfull, as to Daniel and Peter, Act. 10. 2. Yet the person of Abimelech considered, who was in the day occupied in the affaires of his kingdome, the night was a fitter season for him to be drawne to heavenly meditation, Musculus. 3. There are two sorts of divine dreames, one which is by representations and similitudes of other things, such were the dreames of Pharao and Nebuchadnezer; the other is a more excellent kinde, when one heareth God speake to him, as Abimelech here, or an Angell, as Ioseph, Matth. 1. or some man, as Paul, Act. 16.9. And these more noble dreames, are for the most part shewed to the servants of God, Perer. 4. But we must take heed, that we ascribe not too much to dreames, and to make those divine that are not, which may be thus discerned. 1. The dreames which God sendeth are good and godly, not savouring of any carnall thing. 2. They are sent upon grave and weighty occasions. 3. And for the most part to men fearing God. 4. And they leave a certaine perswasion and inward sense of Gods presence in the soule, Musculus.

Divine dreams how to be discerned.

Quest. VII. Why the Lord ſaith of Abraham, he is a Prophet.

Verſ. 7. Deliver the man his wife againe, for he is a Prophet, and he ſhall pray, &c. 1. Some make this clauſe, for he is a Prophet, a reaſon of the former ſentence, of delivering his wife: becauſe he being a Prophet did know that he had not come neare her, and therefore Abimelech need not doubt to deliver her, Iunius, Perer. 2. Or he is a Prophet and deare unto me, and the wrong offered to him, I will revenge as done unto my ſelfe, Iun. 3. Becauſe he is a Prophet, marvell not that this puniſhment is laid upon thee, for doing wrong to ſuch an excellent man, Calvin. 4. But it is better referred to the words following: he is a Prophet and an holy man, and therefore ſhall pray for thee, and his prayers ſhall prevaile, Muſculus.

Quest. VIII. Of divers kindes of propheſying.

THis word Prophet, or to propheſie, is diverſly taken in Scripture. 1. He is called a Prophet to whom things ſecret and hid, were revealed, and the knowledge of things to come by the ſpirit of God: ſuch in times paſt were called ſeers, 1 Sam. 9. 9. 2. They were called Prophets among the heathen, whoſoever could foretell things to come, as ſome did by the ſubtilty of Satan: ſo Saint Paul calleth Epimenides, the Cretenſian Prophet, Tit. 1. 3. Thirdly, they were called Prophets, that had a ſpeciall gift to indite hymnes and ſongs to the praiſe of God, 1 Chron. 25. 3. Iedithun is ſaid to have propheſied upon the harpe. 4. They were ſaid to propheſie, which did imitate onely the Prophets outward geſture, when they were beſide themſelves; as Saul propheſied, when the evill ſpirit came upon him, 1 Sam. 18. 10. that is his outward geſture and behaviour, was as of a man beſide himſelfe. 5. They were ſo called Prophets, that were Expounders and Interpreters of Scriptures; ſo is it taken, 1 Cor. 14. ſo Aaron was Moſes Prophet, Exod. 7. 1. that is, his ſpokeſman, Exod. 3. 16.

Quest. IX. Two ſorts of Prophets.

BUt a Prophet is taken properly the firſt way; whereof there were two ſorts. 1. They were called Prophets, which had ſecrets revealed unto them to publiſh by writing and preaching to the people: and in this ſenſe the word Nabi a Prophet, commeth of Nub, which is to ſpeake. 2. They alſo were called Prophets, who though they preached not, yet God revealed many things unto them, and uſed them familiarly: and in this ſenſe Nabi ſhall be derived of ban, which is to underſtand: of this ſort was Abraham a Prophet. Toſtat. Oleaſter. ex Perer.

Quest. X. How Sarah is ſaid to be Abrahams ſiſter.

Verſ. 12. Yet in very deed ſhe is my ſiſter, &c. 1. Neither is their opinion ſound, that thinke Sarah to have beene Abrahams owne ſiſter by his father, not by his mother: ſic Lyppoman, Satus, Cajetanus: for ſuch mariages were not in uſe among the faithfull in Abrahams time. 2. Neither was ſhe the daughter of Terah his brother, adopted by Terah: for Abraham ſaith, ſhe was the daughter of his father. 3. Therefore Chryſoſtomes ſentence is to have bin preferred, that holdeth Sara to have bin the daughter of Haran Abrahams brother, whom Thare had by one woman, Abraham by another: this Haran died a long time before his father, ſo that Sarah after the death of her father, might very well be called the daughter of Terah, becauſe he was her grandfather, and he was alſo in ſtead of her father being dead. 5. And whereas Abraham ſaith, In very deed ſhee is my ſiſter: he ſaith not that ſhe was properly his ſiſter, being his Neece, but he ſaith, In very deed, to free himſelfe from the ſuſpition of lying. See more of this matter, Gen. 11. 4. 18.

Chryſ. hom. 45. in Gen.

Quest. XI. How much the ſickle was in values.

Verſ. 16. A Thouſand peeces or ſickles of ſilver. The common ſickle neither was of ſo little value, as ecc Ribera affirmeth out of Budeus, as equivolent to the Atticke drachma, or groat, which is the eighth part of an ounce. 2. Nor yet doth it countervaile foure drachmaes or groats, as Ioſephus. 3. Nor an whole ounce, as Hieronie. 4. But the common ſickle doth weigh ten gerahs: the ſickle of the Sanctuary was double, of twenty gerahs in weight: Exod. 30. 13. and every gerah did weigh ſixteene barley cornes: ſo that the common ſickle did weigh 160. barley cornes, that is two drachmaes and ſomewhat more, Iunius. and therefore the 70. tranſlate the ſickle didrachma, a double groat: that is a quarter of an ounce, about fourteene pence ſtarling.

Quest. XII. Who is ſaid to be the vaile of Sarahs eyes.

Verſ. 16. HE is a vaile of thine eyes to all that are with thee, &c. 1. This is neither to be referred to the gift which Abimelech gave. 1. As though he had given it for a recompence for taking Sarah away, as the Septuagint read, and Chryſoſtome expoundeth. 2. Or to buy Sarah and her maid vailes to hide their beauty, that others be not intangled, ex Perer. 3. Or that it was a gift of honour, to ſhew that Sarah was both chaſte and innocent. Latine tranſlat. and the great Bible: ſo alſo Raſi.

2. It is not underſtood of this excuſe or diſſimulation which Sarah uſed, as though the ſenſe ſhould be this: that ſhe might uſe this vaile or colour of the truth among her ownr: for they could not bee deceived, but among ſtrangers ſhe ſhould plainly confeſſe her ſelfe to be Abrahams wife, Lyranus, Toſtatus: for what needed Sarah to uſe any ſuch excuſe, where ſhe was knowne?

3. Some doe referre it as well to Abraham, as to the gift, and to all that now hapned, that they were ſignes of Sarahs chaſtity, Mercer.

But

But the better interpretation is, to apply it to Abraham, that he should be the veile of her eyes. 1. That no man knowing her to be Abrahams wife, should looke upon her to desire her: Aben Ezra, Cajetan. 2. It also putteth Sara in minde of her subjection to Abraham, whereof the veile is a signe, 1 Cor. 11.10. 3. Oleaster also further stretcheth it; that Abraham was her veile, that is, her just excuse, that she did this, for his cause, being by him perswaded: but the former exposition is the better.

Quest. XIII. How Sarah was reproved.

She was thus reproved. 1. The 70. reade, speake the truth, that is, that I am innocent, and touched thee not: but this reading dissenteth from the originall. 2. So doth the Latine; remember thou art deprehended: Lyppoman saith, it should be read reprehensam, reprehended, not deprehensam, deprehended. 3. Iunius readeth, all this is done that thou maist be learned. 4. But the better reading is, all this was, that shee might be reproved, or in all this she reproved her selfe: so that they seeme to be the words rather of the writer concerning Sarah, than of Abimelech to Sarah.

Quest. XIV. Whether Abimelech were smitten with any disease.

Vers. 17. God healed Abimelech, &c. for the Lord had shut up every wombe. 1. Aben Ezra is not right, that thinketh, that Abimelech himselfe was stricken with no disease: but that he is said so to be, because his wife and maidens were punished: for the text it selfe saith, that God healed Abimelech: and it is most like, that God sent upon him some infirmity in his secrets, whereby he was kept from coming neare to Sarah.

Quest. XV. What the shutting up of the wombe signifieth.

2. THe shutting up of the wombe, is not to bee understood (as Pererius doth) of the difficulty of bringing forth: for then the children being ready for birth, and staying longer than their time, should have beene suffocated: and the text saith, the Lord had shut up every wombe: but all were not great with childe at one instant. Neither need we with Calvin, because in so short a time (Sarah being conceived with childe of Isaack, and not yet delivered) there could be no experience or triall of their sterility and barrenesse, to say the history is transposed, and was done before: for Abraham till now had no occasion to sojourne in Gerar: therefore the meaning is, that the women were hindred from conception, so signifieth the shutting up of the wombe: as the opening of the wombe betokeneth aptnes to conceive: as we reade, Gen. 29.31. The Hebrewes affirme, that not onely in the women, but the men also all their pores and passages were stopped, as well of the mouth to take meat, as of other places that expell them: and that the hens could not lay their egges: but the text beareth it not. Hebrewes fansies.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Adultery a sinne punishable with death.

Vers. 3. Thou art but dead, &c. God threatneth death to Abimelech conditionally, if he did not restore Abrahams wife, Iun. whereby we see, that in the justice of God, adulterie is a sinne to be punished by death: as Iudas adjudged Thamar to the fire for whoredome, Gen. 38.24. Where the law then is more gentle, than to inflict the punishment of death upon adulterers, they may thanke the lenity of the Magistrate, which useth not that rigour which may well stand with justice.

2. Doct. Ignorance excuseth not sinne.

Vers. 6. I kept thee, that thou shouldest not sinne against mee, &c. Abimelech then if hee had touched Sarai, though he did not know her to be anothers wife, had sinned: ignorance then excuseth not sinne, though it doe somewhat extenuate and qualifie it, Muscul. as it is in the Gospell, He that knew not his masters will, and yet did commit many things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes, Luk. 12.48. he that sinneth willingly shall receive more stripes, and he that falleth of ignorance shall have some also.

3. Doct. The whole family blessed because of the Master.

Vers. 7. Thou shalt die the death, and all thou hast: as the sin of the Master of the house bringeth a judgement upon the whole familie; so the Lord also sheweth mercy to the whole house for the masters sake. Luk. 19.9. This day is salvation come into this house, because he is become the sonne of Abraham.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. No perfect righteousnesse in this life.

Vers. 5. With an upright minde, and innocent hands, &c. This place is no ground for their opinion, that thinke a man in this life may attaine to perfect justice: for Abimelech doth not absolutely cleare himselfe from all sinne: but onely in this particular, in this degree of sinne, that he had not committed willingly any act of uncleannesse with Sarah, Calvin: as the Prophet David useth to plead himselfe, Psal. 7.3. If I have done this thing, if there be any wickednesse in my hands, &c. he onely purged himselfe from the suspition of a particular fact.

2. Confut.

2. Confut. The Scripture ſendeth us not to pray to the dead, but to be holpen by the prayers of the living.

Verſ.7. HE is a Prophet, and ſhall pray for thee, &c. Neither doth this place make for the invocation of Saints that are departed: for God ſendeth not Abimelech to Noah, or any other departed to pray for him, but to Abraham then living, Calvin. The living then may pray for the living, which duty may be mutually performed in charity, while one knoweth anothers neceſſities. But for the living to pray to, or for the dead, which know not their wants, and they are already certainly diſpoſed of in an unchangeable ſtate, as the living are not, it hath no warrant upon any precept or example of Scripture, or any ſound reaſon drawne from thence.

3. Confut. Againſt the hereſie of the Tritheiſts.

Verſ.13. WHen God cauſed me to wander out of my fathers houſe, &c. The word is elohim, Gods, in the plurall number, which maketh ſome to underſtand the Angels: Vatablus, Calvin: but God, and not the Angels firſt called Abraham from his Country & fathers houſe, *Act.*7.3. Some thinke that Abraham thus ſpake according to the phraſe and ſpeech of the heathen: but Abraham doth every where profeſſe himſelfe by erecting of altars, a worſhipper of the onely true God. Wherefore this place is truly tranſlated, God cauſed me: ſic P.T.B.G.S.H. onely the Chalde readeth in the plurall number very corruptly, when the people erred after the works of their hands. Notwithſtanding this text doth no way favour the hereſie of the Tritheiſts, that make divers Gods: for in that here a verbe of the plurall number hitgu, is joyned with elohim, it ſheweth the Trinity of perſons: in that ſometime a verbe of the ſingular number is put unto it: as *Gen.*1.1. bara: it betokeneth the unity of the God-head.

6. Places of Morall obſervation.

1. Obſerv. The righteous may fall often into the ſame infirmity.

Verſ. 2. ABraham ſaid of Sarah, ſhe is my ſiſter. Abraham had once thus offended before, and had forgotten by this pretence, what danger Sarah was like to have beene brought into, and yet he falleth into the ſame infirmity againe. Therefore it is ſometime ſeene, that even the children of God runne in the ſame thing ſhew their weakneſſe often, Calvin. As Iehoſaphat being reproved by Iehu for joyning in league with Ahab, did forget himſelfe, and was afterward confederate with his wicked ſonne Ahaziah, and was the ſecond time reproved by Eliazer another Prophet, 2 *Chron.*19.2. and 20. 37.

2. Obſerv. Good Princes doe ſubmit themſelves to their lawes.

Verſ. 9. ABimelech ſaid to Abraham, what haſt thou done, &c. Abimelech ſignifieth, my father the King: which ſheweth, that Kings at the beginning were fathers, and nouriſhers of their Countrey: but afterward, they which knew not God, became in ſtead of Abimelachim, Oebimelachim, that is, our enemie the King, Muſcul. Happy then is that people, that hath a King for a common father. Beſide here Abimelech though a King, taketh not himſelfe to be lawleſſe, to doe what him liſt: as Caligula ſaid to his grandmother Antonia, Memento omnia mihi licere & in omnes: Remember that all things are lawfull for me toward all men: and wicked Iulia to Antonius Caracalla, ſoliciting him to inceſtuous marriage, when he anſwered, Vellem ſi liceret, I would, if it were lawfull, replied impudently again, Si libet, licet, an neſcis te imperatorem eſſe, leges dare non accipere: If you will you may; know you not, that you are Emperour, and gave lawes, but receive none? That ſtate is likethen to flouriſh, where even Kings, as Abimelech doe ſubmit themſelves here to good lawes. As Plato hath an excellent ſaying, In qua civitate lex ſubdita eſt, video ibi perniciem paratam in qua vero lex domina eſt principium, ibi video ſalutem: In which City the law is ſubject, I ſee deſtruction at hand, but where the law ſwayeth even the Prince, I ſee health to that place: ex Perer.

Sueton. in Calig.

Plat.l.4. de legib.

3. Obſerv. God divers wayes keepeth us from ſinne.

Verſ.6. IKeepe thee, that thou ſhouldeſt not ſinne againſt me. It is God that keepeth his children from ſinne: either by the inſtinct of his ſpirit, or the inſtruction of his word, the guard and guiding of Angels, or by diſeaſes: as Abimelech was here reſtrained, verſ.17. or by the counſell and advice of others, as David was ſtayed from ſhedding of bloud by Abigail. 1 *Sam.*25. Calvin.

4. Obſerv. Things voluntarily taken muſt be reſtored.

Verſ.7. DEliver the man his wife againe, &c. Unleſſe then that things violently taken from others, be reſtored, there is no mercy to be expected, Muſcul. therefore Zacheus being truly called doth reſtore largely, what he had wrongfully ſcraped together, *Luk.*19.

5. Obſerv. Adulterie bringeth generall calamities upon the whole citie or kingdome.

Verſ.9. THou haſt brought on me, and on my kingdome this great ſinne. Adulterie is called a great ſinne, not onely becauſe of the uncleannes and filthines of it, but becauſe of the puniſhment that followeth, and the calamites that ſometime overtake the whole Citie and kingdome for that ſinne in their governors. As the whole citie of Sechem was put to the ſword for raviſhing of Dinah Iacobs daughter, Gen. the whole kingdome of David ſmarted for his ſinne committed againſt Vriah concerning Bethſabe

2 Sa

2 Sam. 12. The like examples are found in forren histories; how Troy was destroyed for the taking away of Helen; the name and office of Kings expelled out of Rome for the ravishing of Lucretia by Sext. Tarquin. Perr.

6. Observ. Barrennesse a due reward of incontinent life.

Vers. 18. THe Lord had shut up every wombe, &c. Sterility and barrennesse is a just punishment for incontinent life, that they which seeke for issue of strange flesh, should bee without fruit at home, Mustul. This may well be seene in Salomon, who of his 300. Concubines, and 700. Wives, left but one sonne, Roboboam, and him not very wise, to succeed him.

CHAP. XXI.

1. The Method.

THis Chapter hath three parts: 1. Of Abrahams Oeconomicall; 2. Of his politicall; 3. Of his religious state.

First, to his Oeconomicall affaires belong such things as hapned to Isaack and his mother, to Ismael and his mother.

Isaack is borne and named, vers. 2, 3. circumcised, vers. 4. nursed up by Sarah, and brought up with great joy, vers. 6, 7. weaned, vers. 8.

Ismael, 1. Mocketh Isaack, and Sara saw it: 2. Is cast out with his mother by Sarahs motion, vers. 10. and Gods bidding, vers. 12, 13. 3. He is provided for, first by Abrahams care, who sendeth her not forth empty, vers. 14. by Gods providence, vers. 16. to 20.

Secondly, his politicall state concerneth his affaires with Abimelech; 1. Both as touching a league which Abraham maketh with him and his seed, vers. 23, 25. 2. The restitution of the Well which Abimelech confirmeth to Abraham by the accepting of seven lambs, to vers. 33.

Thirdly, Abrahams religious act was in planting a Grove, and calling upon the name of God.

2. The divers readings.

v. 2. And bare a sonne. H. bare Abraham a sonne. cat.
v. 3. Which Sara bare him. A. which was borne unto him, which Sara bare him. cat.	H.de.

v. 31. He called the name the Well of oath. S. Beersheba. cat.	S. app. f. pr.

3. The explanation of doubts.

QUEST. I. Why Sara is said to have given children sucke.

Vers. 7. THat Sara should have given children sucke. 1. The conceit of some Hebrewes is here ridiculous, that Sara is said to have given children sucke, in the plurall number, because many children were brought in to sucke of her, that it might appeare whether the childe borne were hers; but it might have beene knowne by the sucking of Isaack onely. 2. Therefore Chrysostomes conjecture is better, that mention is made of Sarahs sucking, that it might be evident, that the childe was verily borne of her. 3. But it is spoken in the plurall number, according to the phrase of Scripture, that useth sometime the plurall for the singular: as also Cajetanus conceit may be received, that hereby was signified the great store of milke that Sarah had, which was sufficient to have suckled more children than one. Hom. 45. in Gen.

QUEST.

Quest. II. At what time Isaack was weaned.

Vers. 8. The childe grew and was weaned. 1. Hieronie reporteth two opinions of the Hebrewes, that some hold Isaack to have beene weaned at five yeares, some at twelve. 2. Lyppoman thinketh that three yearrs was the common stint, as the mother saith to her sonne, 2 Macchab. 7. 27. I gave thee sucke three yeares. 3. Some of the Hebrewes thinke hee was weaned at the end of twenty fourre moneths, vide Calvin. sic Mercer. 4. But it skilleth not at what time Isaack was weaned: it sufficeth to know that Isaack was not weaned before the usuall time for any want in his mother: for he grew first and then was weaned, and then was weaned, Calvin.

Quest. III. Why Abraham made a feast when Isaack was weaned.

And Abraham made a great feast. 1. Neither is it like, that Abraham, lest he should seeme to imitate the fashions of the heathen, did institute a feast not usuall: for it is not unlike, but that there was great rejoycing also at the birth of Isaack: as vers. 6. Sarah said, God hath made me to rejoyce. 2. Neither was this done either mystically, as Augustine, to signifie that then we should rejoyce, cum facti sit homo spiritualis, when a man is become spirituall, and weaned from carnall desires. 3. Neither yet was it performed typically, to foreshew that Christ should weane us, ab infantis lib. ritib. &c. from the childish rites of the Law: Rupertus. 4. But rather it seemeth to have beene, laudabilis consuetudo, a laudable custome in those dayes, ut invitium comedendi, &c. that the beginning of the eating of the first borne, should bee celebrated with a feast, Cajetane. For at the birth of the childe, the mother being in griefe, and at the circumcision the infant being in griefe, it might seeme not so fit a time of feasting, as at the weaning, Mercer. Besides, speciall mention seemeth to be made of this feast, because Ismael at this time, scorning this solemnitie, derided and mocked Isaack, Calvin.

Quest. IV. How Ismael is said to have mocked Isaack.

Vers. 9. Sarah saw the sonne of Hagar, mocking, &c. 1. The Septuagint read, Playing, Paizonta, but neither had it beene such a great fault for children to play together: neither was Ismael (being fourteene yeare elder than Isaack, and almost twenty yeares old, if Isaack was weaned at five yeares, as some thinke) a fit play-fellow for Isaack. 2. Lyranus also too much presseth this word: for beside that it signifieth to play, he noteth that in Scripture it signifieth, 1. the act of venery, as Gen. 26. 8. Isaack is said to have sported or played with Rebecca: 2. The act of Idolatry, Exod. 32. 6. they rose up to play. 3. To play is taken for to fight and kill, 2 Sam. 2. 14. Abner said to Ioab, let us see the young men play before us: the two first wayes he thinketh Ismael played with Isaack, both in making of Idols, and in some obscene behaviour: some thinke also that he did strive and fight with Isaack, Mercer. But we may not stretch this word so farre. It was misdemeanor great enough for Ismael to scorne and flout Isaack, in riding him, as though he should be their young master, and heire of all: and this was the persecution which Saint Paul speaketh of, Gal. 4. 29. And further, Ismael sheweth himselfe here a very prophane person: that whereas Isaack had his name given of laughter: both because his father laughed, and rejoyced in the spirit, when he was promised: and for that there was such great joy as at his birth, verse 6. but most of all because he was a type of Christ, in whom Abraham rejoyced, Ioh. 8. 56. and all the faithfull children of Abraham: Ismael made him indeed a right Isaack, that is, a laughing stocke, deriding the mysticall name, which was given him of God, Calvin.

Quest. V. Why Sarah would have the bond-woman and her sonne cast out.

Vers. 10. Cast out the bond-woman with her sonne, &c. These reasons may be given why Sarah desired Ismael to be cast out. 1. because shee saw how hee continually abused and mocked Isaack. 2. For that he ambitiously sought the inheritance, vers. 17. The sonne of this bond-woman shall not be heire, Chrys. 3. Ismael was of evill disposition, and lewd manners, she might feare lest Isaack should be corrupted by him, if the other staid in the house, Perer. 4. Lest if they had still both dwelled together their posterity might be confounded: Propagatio nominis Abrahæ directius pertinuisset ad Ismaelem: The propagation of Abrahams name should have more directly belonged unto Ismael, being the elder, Cajetan, Calvin. this reason is confirmed by the Lord himselfe, who stirred up Sarah, to rouse up Abraham, carried away with fatherly affection toward Ismael: for he saith, Thy seed shall be called in Isaack: which could not so happily have beene done, if Ismael had not beene separated from him. 5. His mother also was cast out with him, because it seemeth she ambitiously provoked her sonne to stand for the inheritance.

Quest. VI. What Isaack was heire of.

Vers. 10. Shall not be heire. 1. Though Abraham yet possessed not so much as the breadth of a foot, Sarah was not ignorant, that the whole land was promised to Abraham and his seed, and believed they should possesse it in time. 2. Abraham had great store of cattell, treasure, and household, and of other goods, which he gave unto Isaack, Gen. 25. 5. bestowing onely gifts upon his other sonnes. 3. She desired that Isaack might be heire of Abrahams name and bloud: as the Lord said afterward; that his seed should be called in Isaack.

Quest. VII. Whether Hagar carried Ismael upon her shoulder.

Vers. 14. Putting it upon her shoulder, and the childe also. 1. It is not like that Ismael being now a youth of twenty yeares old, was laid upon his mothers shoulders to beare, as the Septuagint read or that Abraham was constrained to binde Ismael with cords, and lay him upon his mother, for v. 18. she is bid to take him by the hand, not to lay him upon her shoulder: and whereas shee is said to cast him from her: this was done, not out of her armes, but animo, in her mind and affection: Augustine, Iunius. Or taking him into her lap being sicke, she after despairing of his health, put him from her, Mercer. whereas also hee is called jeled, a childe, this word is used not onely of infants, but of young men, Genes. 4. 23. and Hierom well noteth, that all children are so called in respect of their parents. 2. Neither is it here a metaphoricall speech, as Cajetane saith, that to lay Ismael upon his mothers shoulders, was to commit him to her care. 3. But the sentence is thus distinguished, as the Latine readeth well, that whereas there are two words, he gave, and imposed, or layed on, this is to be referred to the bottle of water and bread, the other to the child. 4. As for that conceit of the Hebrewes, that Ismael was sicke, and through griefe fell into a dropsie, or some inflammation, which was the cause the bottle of water was so soone spent, it hath small ground. Hieron. tradit. Hebraic. in Gen. Hebrewes conceits.

QUEST. VIII. What the reason is that Abraham gave Agar and Ismael no better provision.

HE tooke bread and a bottle of water, &c. Now commeth it to passe that Abraham being so rich a man, and loving Ismael so well, should send him out with no better provision: seeing that they were not to send away their servants empty, but to give them a liberall reward of sheepe, corne, and wine, Deut. 15. 13. Cajetane thinketh, that by bread and water all other victuals are expressed, and that Abraham gave them both servants and cattell: being both his father and very rich, and so both willing and able: neither would he deale worse with Ismael his first borne, than with the rest of his sonnes, to whom he gave gifts, Genes. 25. 5. sic Cajetan. But the Scripture it selfe gain-sayeth Cajetan herein, which omitteth not to make mention of the very bottle, which Abraham gave to carry the water in: then by all likelihood the other gifts of greater value should have beene spoken of. 2. Neither need we with Rupertus to seeke out an allegory that by Hagars carrying of water and not wine, is shadowed forth the old Synagogue labouring under the literall sense of Scripture. 3. Wherefore Tostatus thinketh better, that Abraham gave Hagar no more than these necessary helpes in her journey: 1. Either because Sarah the dame of the house would have it so, whom God commanded Abraham to heare in this case. 2. Or for that the Lord had promised to provide and take care for Ismael. 3. Or Abraham might afterward remember Ismael with a portion among the rest of his brethren: sic Tostatus. 4. Or Abraham did thinke to send them a supply afterwards, they sojourning not farre off: 5. Or Abraham being in griefe and heavinesse for their departure, might forget to doe that, which otherwise he would have done: for it seemeth he did it in haste. Calvin. Among which reasons, I take the first and the last to be most probable.

QUEST. IX. How Hagars eyes were opened.

Vers. 19. GOd opened her eyes, &c. 1. Not that her eyes were shut before. 2. Neither as though this fountaine, which the Angel shewed, did suddenly breake out of the ground, as some think: Pineda. 3. But caused her to see the well, which either by reason of her griefe she before regarded not, Calvin: or she saw it not by reason of the farre distance, or for that it was in some hidden place, Perer. Thus the two Disciples are said not to have knowne and discerned Christ, till their eyes were opened, Luke 24. Rupertus gathereth from hence a further mystery: that as Hagar wandring in the wildernesse was brought to see a fountaine of water, so the Jewes in the end of the world shall be called and brought to the knowledge of the truth.

QUEST. X. Abimelech rather of feare than love, maketh a league with Abraham.

Vers. 22. ABimelech spake unto Abraham, &c. 1. Some thinke, that Abimelech not of any suspition or jealousie toward Abraham, but for love of his vertue, and seeing him to be a man prosperous and beloved of God: both by reason of the victory given him against foure Kings, when he recovered Lot, and the honourable congratulation of Melchisedech, that met him, and now the rare birth of his sonne Isaack: for these causes he desired his friendship, Pererius. 2. But it is more like that Abimelech feared Abrahams greatnesse, and therefore of feare rather than love, desired to make a league with him, Muscul. idem: for it is no other like but that Abimelech was affected to Abraham, as afterward to his sonne that journied in the same place: and how Abimelechs affection stood toward Isaack, the Scripture sheweth: Wherefore came yee to me, seeing yee hate me? &c. Gen. 26. 27. yet Abimelech desireth also to make a covenant of friendship with Isaack.

QUEST. XI. Of the gifts given to Abimelech and the seven lambs.

Vers. 27. ABraham tooke sheepe and beeves, &c. Pererius thinketh, that no other ceremony was used, in making this covenant, but only an oath betweene them: but this giving of sheep to Abimelech, sheweth that some other rite and solemnity was performed, Muscul. 2. And hereby Abraham doth acknowledge his homage to the King of the place: for, though all this land was promised to Abraham, the time of his actuall possessing it, was not yet come. 3. The seven lambs, were not money stamped with that marke, but so many in the kind which Abraham giveth as a price or redemption of his well, that he might enjoy it quietly afterward: Calvin. 4. And these seven lambs did not belong unto the covenant, or rite and ceremony thereof: for then Abimelech would not have asked, what they did meane: v. 29. but they were as an earnest given for the redeeming of the well, Perer. 5. Augustine thinketh, that Abraham bought with them that parcell of ground, where he planted a groave: and it is not unlike: for before time Abraham is not found to have planted any.

Quest. XII. Of the name and City of Beersheba.

August.qu.56. in Genes.

Vers.31. Wherefore the place is called Beersheba. 1. The word Shabangh, signifieth both seven, and with some little alteration of the points, to sweare: but here Moses deriveth the word from the oath, which was taken betweene them, although not without relation to the seven lambes given in exchange: Vatab. 2. Moses called the place Beersheba, that is, the well of the oath, before ver.24. that is by anticipation. 3. Of this well the City next adioyning was so called Beersheba, which was the utmost bound of the land of promise toward the South, as Dan was on the north side. 4. This Beersheba was one of those Cities that belonged to Simeons lot, Iosua 19.2. but because Simeon had their inheritance in the middest of the inheritance of Iudah, *Iosu.*19.1. Beersheba also is numbred among the Cities of Iudah, *Iosu.*15.28.

Beersheba how counted among the cities of Judah belonging to Simeon.

Quest. XIII. Why Abraham made a groave.

Vers.33. And Abraham planted a groave, &c. 1. To let passe Rupertus allegory, who by this groave planted by Abraham in a strange countrey, understandeth the Church planted among the Gentiles, professing Abrahams faith. 2. Abraham planted this groave, that it might bee a quiet and solitary place, to the which he might betake himselfe, for prayer and contemplation. Cajetan. 3. Some think that this groave was set with all manner of fruitfull trees, whither Abraham did use to carry his guests, and the sight thereof to stirre them up to praise God the giver of all good things. Tostat. ex Targ. Hier. 4. It should seeme, that the heathen from this godly use of Abraham, derived by a corrupt imitation the consecrating of woods and groaves to their Idols: and therefore the Israelites were forbidden afterward doe the like: and that this was the fashion of the heathen, Pliny testifieth: how that severall trees were proper to severall Idols, the esculo or oake tree to Iupiter, the lawrel to Apollo, olive to Minerva, myrtle to Venus, poplar to Hercules: which abuse was taken up by the idolatrous Israelites: *they offered incense under the oakes, the poplar trees, the olive, Hosh.*4.13.5. This superstitious use was afterward forbidden the Israelites, not for those reasons alleaged by Philo: 1. because the temple of God, amœnitates non poscit, must not be a place of pleasure. 2. or because dung and other filth is applyed to the trees to make them grow: 3. God will be worshipped in patent and open places, not in secret and obscure corners. For then Abraham would not have worshipped God in a groave, if upon these grounds it were unlawfull. 4. But the cause of the prohibition was the superstitious practice of the heathen, that had abused these things to Idolatry, to whom the Lord would not have his people conforme themselves. Deut. 12.3. You shall breake downe their pillars, and burne downe their groaves with fire, &c. you shall not so doe unto the Lord your God.

The idolatrous abuse of groaves among the heathen. *Lib.*1.c.1. Trees consecrated by the heathen to their gods. Why the Israelites were forbidden to consecrate any groaves.

Quest. XIV. How long Abraham sojourned in the land of the Philistims.

Vers.34. Abraham was a stranger in the Philistims land a long season, &c. 1. Lyranus thinketh with other Hebrewes, that Abraham sojourned in this countrey 25. yeares: for so old Isaack is supposed to be, when Abraham was bid to offer him up in sacrifice: for then Abraham dwelt still in Beersheba, and some what after. 2. It is also not unlike, that Abrahams time of abode was longer in Beersheba, than it was in Hebron, in the plaine of Mamre: for it was but 25. yeares from Abrahams first comming into Canaan, in the 75. yeare of his age, to the birth of Isaack, in his 100. yeare: Lyran. 3. From this time of Isaacks birth beginneth the account of the 400. yeares mentioned, *Gen.*15.13. Calvin.

Now whereas S. Paul doth draw this history of Sarah and Hagar, Isaack and Ismael, to an allegory, this place giveth occasion to intreat of and handle the Apostles words: and to gather the summe of Pererius and others commentaries upon that Scripture, as it is set forth, *Galat.*4. v.21. to v.27.

The allegory of Sarah and Hagar, handled by S. Paul, *Galat.*4. explaned.

Quest. XV. How diversly the word Law is taken in the Scripture.

Vers.21. Tell me, &c. doe ye not heare the Law, &c. 1. Sometime the law is taken for the Scriptures of the old Testament: as *Ioh.*15.25. a testimony alleaged out of the Psalmes, is said to be written in their law. 2. Sometime, the old Testament is divided into the law and the Prophets, *Matth.*7. 3. Sometime the law is taken for all the bookes beside the Prophets and the Psalmes, *Luk.*24.44. 4. The law is taken for the five bookes of Moses: as here for Genesis the first booke. Perer.

Quest. XVI. What it is to be borne after the flesh.

Vers.23. He which was of the servant, was borne after the flesh. 1. Sometime flesh is taken for the corruptible and mortall state of man in this life: so the Apostle saith, flesh and bloud cannot inherit the kingdome of God: and expounding himselfe, hee addeth, neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. 1 *Cor.*15.50. 2. It is taken for the sinfull state and condition of the flesh: as *Rom.*8.8. They that are in the flesh cannot please God. 3. It signifieth the nature and state of the flesh, Matth 16.17. Flesh and bloud hath not revealed this unto thee: that is, nothing in the nature of man: so in this place, Ismael is said to be borne after the flesh, that is, after the common order and course of humane birth: Isaack also was borne by promise, that is, beside the usuall strength and course of nature, he was borne by the power of Gods word and promise, of one, whose wombe was in a manner dead in respect of her yeares. Beza.

Quest. XVII. Of divers kinds of allegories.

Vers.24. Which things are spoke by way of allegory. There are three sorts of allegories & parables: some are altogether feined & applied to the matter in hand: such are those parables in the Gospel ſpel, as Luk. 16. of the wiſe ſteward, Matth. 25. of the ten Virgins: ſome allegories conſiſt altogether in borrowed phraſes, and metaphoricall ſpeeches: ſuch as often doe occurre in the reading of the Prophets. A third ſort there is, which are not in words, but in the things: as the ſerpent in the wilderneſſe ſet up, ſignified Chriſt, Ioh. 3. 14. and here Abrahams family is a figure of the Church.

QVEST. XVIII. How the teſtaments are ſaid to be two.

THeſe are the two Teſtaments, &c. 1. That is, Sarai and Hagar ſignifie two Teſtaments, as the rocke is ſaid to be Chriſt, 1 Cor. 10. 4. 2. They are called two Teſtaments, in reſpect of the divers times, and the divers diſpenſation, which in effect and ſubſtance were not two: for the law was a ſchoolemaſter to bring unto Chriſt: ſaving that the falſe teachers, that did ſtrive for the ceremonies of the law againſt the liberty of the Goſpell, did make them not only divers, but contrary. Beza. 3. A Teſtament is properly taken for the will of the dead, but here in a more generall ſenſe, it ſignifieth a covenant: and ſo is the Greeke word διαθήκη uſed. Perer.

QVEST. XIX. How the law held men in Servitude and bondage.

ONe which is Agar from mount Sinai which gendreth unto bondage. 1. The one Teſtament, which was given in Sinai, is ſignified by Hagar: which Sinai is out of the limits of the promiſed land, and ſo are they ſtrangers from the true Jeruſalem, that are not the children of Abrahams faith. Calvin. 2. The law is ſaid to beget unto bondage, not ſo much for that under the law all things were wrapped up in myſtery, and not revealed in ſuch manifeſt ſort as under the Goſpel: for ſo they are called ſervants that know not their maſters will. Ioh. 15. 15. neither for that they were nouriſhed with temporall promiſes, as Abraham ſent away the ſonnes of Keturah, but reſerved the inheritance for Iſaack. But becauſe the law held them in bondage under the hard yoke of ceremonies, Act. 15. 10. and they were kept in feare, by reaſon of the curſe and ſevere ſentence of the law, which they tranſgreſſed through the weakneſſe of the fleſh, Perer. 3. Yet the law wrought not this effect upon all, that lived under the law, but only upon thoſe, that knew not the right uſe of the law, which was to bring them unto Chriſt: for many were in thoſe times, as Auguſtine ſaith, Miniſtri veteris Teſtamenti, hæredes novi, though Miniſters of the old Teſtament, yet heires of the new.

QVEST. XX. How Agar is ſaid to be mount Sinai.

Verſ. 25. AGar is Sinai, a mountaine in Arabia: which is the better reading, than to ſay, Agar or mount Sinai: for here Hagar is the type, and mount Sinai, (which is taken for the law, which was there given) is that which anſwereth to the type: 1. both becauſe of the name, which ſignifieth, as they ſay, the ſame thing in the Arabian tongue, which Sinai doth. 2. and the word Arabia, ſignifieth alſo affliction, humility. 3. Sinai in reſpect of the ſite is without the land of promiſe. 4. And Arabia with the inhabitants therefore, lived in a ſervile ſtate and condition: and in this reſpect chiefly doth Sinai repreſent the law, which bringeth a ſpirituall bondage. Pererius.

QVEST. XXI. How the mount Sinai is ſaid to anſwer to Ieruſalem.

WHich anſwereth to Ieruſalem, that now is: 1. not bordereth upon, or is joyned to Jeruſalem, as the vulgar Latin and the B, tranſlation readeth: for the contrarie is evident to him that behold-eth the ſituation of the countrey. 2. neither becauſe the way or journey is continued from Sinai to Jeruſalem. Aquinas. 3. but in reſpect of the correſpondency and ſimilitude: becauſe the terrene and earthly Jeruſalem, retaining ſtill the ceremoniall yoke of the legall ceremonies, was held in ſpirituall bondage and ſervitude. Beza. Perer.

QVEST. XXII. Of Ieruſalem that is from above.

Verſ. 26. IEruſalem which is above, is free, the mother of us all, &c. S. Paul ſetteth againſt the old teſtament, and terrene Jeruſalem, the new teſtament and heavenly Jeruſalem, which is deſcribed by three epithites. 1. it is ſaid to be from above, becauſe Chriſt the head thereof came from above. Iohn 16. 28. I came out from the father: and becauſe wee muſt have our converſation in heaven, Philip. 3. 20. 2. It is called Jeruſalem, which ſignifieth the viſion of peace. It is free, not with civill and outward freedome: for many may be called being ſervants, 1 Cor. 7. 21. but it is free, both morally, in not being a ſervant or ſubject to the affections and deſires of the fleſh, and ſpiritually in caſting off all ſervile feare: and celeſtiall liberty it hath in hope, which ſhall bee an everlaſting freedome both of body and ſoule. 4. It is now the mother of us all, and fruitfull of many children, as Sarah at the firſt was barren, but at the laſt brought forth Iſaack, whoſe ſeed was promiſed ſhould be as the ſand of the ſea: ſo ſhe that was fruitfull, the old Synagogue is now barren, ſhe that was barren, the Church of God, is now fruitful among the Gentiles, according to that ſaying of Anna, 1 Sam. 2. 5. The barren hath borne many, and ſhe that had many children is feeble.

Divers kinds of liberty and freedome.

QVEST. XXIII. Wherein Iſmael reſembleth carnall profeſſors.

Verſ. 28. THerefore brethren wee are after the manner of Iſaack. This then is the application which the Apoſtle maketh of this allegory. 1. they which make account to be juſtified by the ceremonies or workes of the law, are like unto Iſmael borne of the bond-woman after the fleſh: they which believed unto the faith of Chriſt, are the children of promiſe by grace. 2. As Iſmael born of the bondwoman perſecuted Iſaack: ſo they which either live or teach after the fleſh, doe now perſecute the ſervants of God, as the Phariſies did the Apoſtles, the Pſeudocatholikes the profeſſors of the Goſpell. 3. As the ſervant with her ſonne were caſt out, for mocking of Iſaack; ſo the Jewes for deriding of Chriſt, are caſt out of the land of promiſe: and ſo many as beleeve not in Chriſt whom they crucified, are deprived alſo of the celeſtiall Canaan. Peror. 4. Auguſtine further fitly expreſſeth this compariſon, betweene the carnall and ſpirituall Iſraelites by the hiſtory of Ionah: reſembling the Jewes, envying the calling of the Gentiles to Ionah, angry for the ſaving of Ninivie: the ceremonies and carnall rites to the gourd, that ſhadowed but for a time: Chriſt to the worme, that ſmote the gourd: and removed the ceremonies, bringing in true righteouſneſſe and everlaſting comfort and refreſhing.

Auguſtin. in epiſt. 45.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Chriſtians may have their plentifull feaſts, ſo they take heed of exceſſe.

Verſ. 8. Abraham made a great feaſt: This feaſt was more than ordinary, at the which ſome ſay Sem and Heber, and King Abimelech were preſent: but of the firſt two gueſts no likelihood, becauſe no mention is made of them afterward: of Abimelechs preſence there is more probability. Muſcul. Howſoever, in that Abraham maketh ſuch great preparation for this feaſt, we learne that it is lawfull for Chriſtians to have their ſolemne and joyfull feaſts and meetings, ſo that they take heed of exceſſe: and that the creatures of God may not only be uſed for neceſſity, but in plenty and alacrity, ſo there be no ſuperfluity. Calvin. For as bread was given for mans ſuſtenance, ſo wine is ordained to make the heart cheerfull. Pſal. 104. 14.

2. Doct. God is otherwiſe with his elect, otherwiſe with men of the world.

Verſ. 20. God was with the child and he grew: God was with Iſmael by his generall providence and care, in that he grew up, thrived in the world and proſpered: but there is a more ſpeciall grace and favour toward the elect: as our Saviour promiſeth to be with his till the end of the world, Matth. 28. 20. and in this ſenſe S. Paul ſaith, God is the Saviour of all men, but eſpecially of them which beleeve. 1 Tim. 4. 10.

3. Doct. Children ought not to contract marriage without the conſent of their parents.

Verſ. 21. His mother tooke him a wife out of the land of Ægypt. This ſheweth that it belongeth to parents to provide that their children bee honeſtly beſtowed in marriage: and that children ought not contract themſelves without the conſent of their parents: Abraham provideth a wife for Iſaack, Gen. 24. 4. Iſaack for Iacob. 28. 2. By Moſes law the daughters vow was not good, unleſſe the father did ratifie it: Numb. 30. 6. Wherefore the canon law is injurious, that alloweth contracts, and eſpouſals made without conſent of the parents. Muſcul.

4. Doct. We muſt only ſweare by the name of God, and not of Saints.

Verſ. 23. Sweare unto me here by God. Abimelech, though himſelfe, as it is likely, were a worſhipper of other Gods: yet exacteth no other oath of Abraham, but to ſweare by God only: ſuperſtitious then is the uſe of papiſts, that urge men to ſweare not only by God, but by the Virgin Mary and other Saints: whereas the Scripture ſaith, thou ſhalt feare the Lord thy God, and ſweare by his name, Deut. 6. 13. Muſcul.

5. Doct. Lawfull to take an oath before a Magiſtrate.

Verſ. 24. Abraham ſaid I will ſweare. This example condemneth the Anabaptiſts: and ſheweth that it is lawfull to take an oath before the civill Magiſtrate: either to teſtifie the truth, for the ending of ſtrife. Heb. 6. v. 12. or for the confirming of a league, and performing and keeping of faith, as there was an oath betweene Iacob and Laban, Gen. 31. 50. Luther.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. No Sacraments but commanded of God,

Verſ. 4. Abraham circumciſed Iſaack, &c. as God had commanded. Wherefore in religious duties, and eſpecially in the adminiſtration of the Sacraments, we muſt follow Gods ordinance and commandement: nothing ought to be altered, added and changed in the ſubſtance and neceſſary parts thereof, otherwiſe than God hath left them. Saint Paul delivereth to the Corinthians the ſame, which he received of the Lord, 1 Cor. 11. 23. The Church of Rome is found then to bee a falſifier and corrupter of Gods ordinance, who have brought in ſeven Sacraments, whereas the Lord commanded but two, and theſe alſo of Gods inſtitution, they have defiled with many vaine inventions, and idle ſuperſtitious ceremonies of their owne. Calvin.

2. Confut.

2. Conſut. Hagar was not Abrahams wife.

Verſ. 11. THis was very grievous in Abrahams ſight becauſe of his ſonne: not becauſe of Hagar: it ſeemeth then that Hagar was not Abrahams wife, as Pererius thinketh, for theſe reaſons: 1. Becauſe Abrahams affection would have beene greater to his wife, than to his childe. 2. Hagar is called a bond-woman ſtill: but if ſhe had beene Abrahams wife, ſhe had beene free: neither would Abraham, if ſhe were his wife, have committed her to the power and government of Sarah, as he did: Gen. 16. 6. Behold thy maid is in thine hand, doe with her as it pleaſeth thee. The husband only in the family is the governour and head of the wife. 3. It is not likely, that Abraham ſhould have beene commanded to ſend Hagar away, never to returne, if ſhe had beene his wife: the Scripture alloweth no ſuch perpetuall ſeparation, but in caſe of fornication. Matth. 5. 35. Whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, except for fornication, cauſeth her to commit adultery.

Neither are the contrary reaſons of any value: 1. Thom. Aquin. ſaith, that as in the law Moſes allowed to give a bill of divorcement, ad evitandum uxoricidium, to avoyd wive-ſlaughter: ſo it was lawfull for Abraham to caſt out Hagar, for the manifeſting of that myſtery expreſſed by Saint Paul, Galat. 4. Contra 1. Aquinas then thinketh, that the very mariage was diſſolved, which Pererius denieth, as ſhall even now appeare. 2. That which Moſes permitted, was no approbation, but a toleration, as our Saviour ſaith, for the hardneſſe of their hearts, Matth. 19. 6. but this fact of Abraham was lawfull and commendable, the examples therefore is not alike. 3. God will not have his commandement broken: to make a myſterie: but if Hagar had beene Abrahams wife, he in putting her away; had violated that precept: they two ſhall be one fleſh. 4. the myſterie better holdeth to make Iſmael the ſonne of Abrahams bond-maid, rather than of his wife. In 4. ſententiã diſtinct. 33.

2. Perer. this was done not by the will of Abraham, but by the councell of God: therefore Abraham might put her away, though his wife: in v. 21. Contra. 1. proove her firſt to be Abrahams wife, and then I will yeeld, that at Gods commandement ſhe might be put away. But this being the thing in queſtion, whether ſhe were Abrahams wife: it is more probable that ſhe was not, becauſe of this ſeperatiõ. 2 God uſeth not to diſpenſe extraordinarily with his law, whereas his purpoſe and will may otherwiſe be effected: as in this caſe, the counſell of God for caſting out of Hagar might ſtand without any contradiction to Gods precept, if Hagar be held to be Abrahams concubine, rather than his wife. 3. We find in ſcripture, that God brought man and wife together, as Eve to Adam, the Angell bid Ioſeph not to feare to take Mary, whom hee purpoſed ſecretly to ſend away: but of Gods ſeparating of man and wife, but in the caſe excepted, we read not.

3. This ſeparation was only from bed and bord, not otherwiſe, the matriage knot remained inſoluble and untied ſtill. Perer. ibid. Cont. If the marriage bond remained, how came it to paſſe, that Abraham after Sarahs death tooke a new wife Keturah, and not his former wife Hagar.

4. But the Scripture ſaith, Hagar was Abrahams wife, Gen. 16. 3. Sarah gave her to Abraham for his wife. Contra. 1. The meaning only is, that Sarah gave Hagar to be in ſtead of his wife, in this office only for procreation of children, and to be in her place: for ſhee ſaith, It may be I ſhall receive a childe by her: neither is Hagar accounted afterward as a wife, but an handmaid ſtill: 2. or wee may ſay that Hagar is here called a wife, improprié, improperly, for Sarah had no power to give Abraham another wife. Calvin. How Hagar is called Abrahams wife.

3. Conſut. Many challenge to be true Catholikes which are not.

Verſ. 10. THe ſonne of this bond-woman ſhall not be heire. Like as Iſmael did challenge the birth-right, and deſpiſed Iſaack, and by his mothers inſtigation ſought the inheritance, and bare himſelfe bold of his elderſhip: ſo it is no marvell, if that they which are but a baſtard Church, and Pſeudo-catholikes, doe appropriate unto themſelves the name of the Church of Chriſt: like to thoſe, of whom the ſpirit of God ſpeaketh: which were of the Synagogue of Satan, calling themſelves Iewes and were not, Revel. 3. 9. But as Iſmael, for all his bragging, was no whit nearer the inheritance: ſo theſe bolſtred out and emboſſed titles, will no ſooner make them the Church of God.

4. Conſut. Not lawfull to make allegories of Scripture.

THough Saint Paul, having the inſtinct of Gods Spirit, doth allegorize the hiſtory of Sarah and Hagar: it is therefore no warrant to every expoſiter and interpreter to make allegories of Scripture: which corrupt uſe the Romane Synagogue alloweth, and others practiſe: 1. Saint Pauls rare uſing of allegories, ought to teach ſuch, that they alſo ſhould be verie ſparing. 2. Unleſſe they could ſay of themſelves, as Paul did, I think I have the ſpirit of God, 1 Cor. 7. 4. They cannot challenge the like liberty in expounding of ſcripture, as S. Paul did: therefore it may be ſaid unto them, as Chriſt ſaid to his diſciples you know not what ſpirit you are of. Luk. 9. 55. 3. Perer. to this purpoſe uſeth a good reaſon; It only belongeth to God, which inſpired the Scriptures, perfectly to know all things, that were to come, and not only to know them, but to diſpoſe & frame them, as it pleaſeth him, wherefore he only can appoint that things formerly done, veram totamq; figuram eorum, &c. ſhould beare a true and certaine type and figure of things afterward to bee done. Man therefore that cannot diſpoſe of things to come, is not to make types and figures, according to his owne device.

5. Conſut. Types are ſaid to be, that is, to ſignifie the things whereof they are types.

ANd Saint Paul ſaith, theſe are 2. teſtaments, that is, Sarah and Hagar, ſignifie two teſtaments, Galath. 4. 24. ſo the rocke is ſaid to be Chriſt, that is, prefigured Chriſt, 1 Cor. 10. 3. This Pererius acknowledgeth, and yet could not ſee, that Chriſt, &c. after the ſame manner ſaid, This is my body, that is, a figure of my body, as both Tertullian and Auguſtine expound: although there is great difference (I grant) betweene the figure and repreſentation in types, and in ſacraments: for there is only a ſignification of ſpirituall things: but in the Sacraments, there is a lively and effectuall oblation of the things ſignified and ſhadowed forth, yet in the phraſe and manner of ſpeaking in both, there is no difference. Beza.

6. Places of morall obſervation.

1. Moral. Mothers ſhould nurſe their owne children.

Verſ. 7. That Sarah ſhould have given ſucke, &c. Ambroſe well noteth hereupon, that by Sarahs example mothers ſhould learne to nurſe their owne children: they which of neceſſity, for want of milke or weakneſſe, doe put forth their children to nurſe are excuſed: but of niceneſſe to refuſe this duty, is worthy of blame: The Prophet ſaying, thou haſt given mee hope at my mothers breaſts, Pſal. 22. 9. and the Apoſtle commending widowes, that had nouriſhed their children, 1 Timoth. 5. 10. ſheweth that God hath laid this duty upon mothers: which they that refuſe are but halfe mothers, which nourish the infant in their wombes, but forſake it when it commeth into the world. 2. the infants many times drawing the milke of bad women, doe imitate their evill manners, as we ſee in plants, and young cattell, that follow the nature of the ground that feedeth them, and the dammes that ſuckle them. 3. The purpoſe of nature is made fruſtrate, when for this end God hath provided milke for the food of infants: for God hath made nothing in vaine. Calvin. 4. By this meanes alſo the mothers affection is alienated from the childe, whom ſhee cannot ſo well fancy, as whom ſhee hath nurſed and kiſſed at her breaſts. Peter.

2. Moral. Our affections muſt be ſubject to Gods will.

Verſ. 11. This was very grievous to Abraham: yet Abraham, though his affection ſtood otherwiſe, after the Lord had ſpoken unto him, doth bridle his naturall affection, and ſubmitteth to Gods pleaſure. Wee likewiſe muſt learne to confirme our deſires to the Lords will; And if commendable and naturall love, ſuch as Abrahams was, muſt be overſwayed by our duty toward God, how much more unnaturall and unlawfull luſt ought to be extinguiſhed, which are flat oppoſite and contrary to the will of God, Calvin. a man is to forſake and deny himſelfe for Chriſt. Mark. 8. 35.

3. Moral. The counſell of inferiours not to be deſpiſed.

Verſ. 12. In all that Sarah ſhall ſay unto thee heare her voice. Abraham is bidden, to give eare to the counſel of Sarah: And we muſt learne not to deſpiſe the advice of inferiours, when they ſpeake the truth unto us, and perſwade us to that, which is right, as the Apoſtle ſaith: ſet up them, which are leaſt eſteemed in the Church, 1 Corinth. 6. 4. Muſcul.

4. Moral. The trueſt love leaveth not a friend, no not in the inſtant of death.

Verſ. 16. I will not ſee the death of the child: Hagars heart would not ſerve her to ſee her child dye: but this was but a compaſſionate and effeminate love: give me ſuch a friend and lover, as will not forſake one in the greateſt extremity, and will ſtand by him in the agony of death, when hee hath moſt need of comfort: I condemne not the firſt, if it proceed of tenderneſſe of affection, rather than of niceneſſe and want of duty, but I preferre the other. So the Lord ſaid to Iacob, moving him to goe downe into Ægypt, Ioſeph ſhall put his hand upon thine eyes. Geneſ. 46. 4. This duty is the deareſt, and neareſt of other performed to their friends, to cloſe their eyes, when they were dead.

5. Moral. God heareth our prayers every where.

Verſ. 17. God heard the voyce of the child, &c. God is every where ready to heare the complaints of the poore: Iſmael was heard in the wilderneſſe, Daniel in the Lions denne, the three children in the fiery furnace, Ionas in the whales belly: Therefore Saint Paul ſaith: I will that men every where lift up pure hands, &c. 1 Timoth. 2. 8. no place is then barred to our prayers. Muſcul.

6. Moral. Old rancour muſt be left, where true reconciliation is made.

Verſ. 25. And Abraham rebuked Abimelech. &c. Abraham did well, being now to make a firme and faithfull league with Abimelech, to powre forth all the griefe of his heart at once: not as the faſhion of ſome is, which make ſemblance ſometimes of reconciliation and attonement, and yet doe retaine rancour and ſeeds of malice in their heart: as Ioab did, that embraced Abner with one hand, and ſtrooke him to the heart with the other.

7. Moral. Inferiour officers often abuſe the name and authority of their Lords and maſters.

Verſ. 26. I know not who hath done this thing, &c. alſo thou toldeſt mee not, &c. Abraham is found to bee here in ſome fault, that finding himſelfe grieved and wronged by Abimelechs ſervants would complaine of it before the King, but powreth it out upon this occaſion. Luther. ſo many that hold themſelves quiet a long time, ſometime in their heat will utter their ſtomacks: But the greateſt fault of all was in Abimelechs ſervants, who abuſing their maſters name & authority, do without his knowledge take away a well from Abraham: Such is the officious diſpoſition of many inferiour officers and Miniſters under Princes and other great men, that they will father their injurious dealings upon their authority, that neither knew, nor conſented: So Gehezi abuſed his Maſter Eliſha. 2 King. 5. 22.

CHAP. XXII.

1. The Method.

THis Chapter entreateth firſt of Abrahams purpoſe to ſacrifice Iſaack his ſonne, with other things adjoyning, verſ. 1. to 20. ſecondly, of Abrahams kindred, namely of the iſſue of his brother Nachor by his wife Milcah, and his concubine Reumah, verſ. 20. to the end.

In the firſt part wee have 1. Gods commandement to Abraham to ſacrifice his ſonne: verſ. 1, 2. 2. Abrahams obedience: verſ. 3, 4. 5. 3. The preparation to the ſacrifice, the wood, the fire, the knife, the altar, Iſaacks binding, are all expreſſed, verſ. 6. to verſ. 10. 4. Gods prevention of Abraham, and proviſion of another ſacrifice: verſ. 10. to 15. 5. The Lords commendation of Abrahams faith and obedience, with renuing of the promiſe.

3. The explanation of doubtfull queſtions.

QVEST. I. At what yeare of his age Iſaack ſhould have beene ſacrificed.

Verſ. 1. AFter theſe things. 1. Though it be uncertaine in what yeare of Iſaacks age, Abraham was bidden to ſacrifice him; yet it is neither like, that he was then but 12. yeare old, as Aben Ezra ex Toſtato, ſeeing Abraham laid a burthen of wood upon his ſhoulder; neither was he yet 37. yeares old, as ſome Hebrewes hold, which was the yeare of Sarahs death; for this was done, Sarah being yet living, and in good health; But Ioſephus opinion ſeemeth to bee more probable, that Iſaack was at this time 25. yeare old. 2. But that this was done the firſt day of the ſeventh moneth, upon which occaſion the Jewes obſerved the feaſt of blowing of Trumpets, in remembrance of Iſaacks deliverance, is but a Jewiſh tradition without ground. 3. Whereas Nyſſenus and Auguſtine thinke, that Sarah knew of this intended ſacrifice, Chryſoſtomes opinion is more like, that ſhe knew it not, leſt ſhe ſhould have beene too much grieved with the loſſe of her ſonne. Ex Perer. Whether Sarah knew of Abrahams purpoſe.

QVEST. II. Why Iſaack was commanded to be ſacrificed.

Verſ. 2. TAke thy onely Sonne, &c. There ſeeme to have beene two principall ends of this commandement of God: 1. that thereby Abrahams faith and obedience might be tried: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb. 11. 17. by faith Abraham offred up Iſaack. 2. The other end was, to bee a lively type and repreſentation of the ſacrifice of Chriſt: and to this ſenſe ſome expound that place, Heb. 11. 19. that Abraham received Iſaack, in Parabolè, in a ſimilitude or parable; which though it ſeeme not to be the proper meaning of thoſe words, yet this offering up of Iſaack in ſacrifice, in many things repreſenteth the death of Chriſt: 1. as Abraham offered Iſaack, ſo God gave his ſonne to dye for the world: 2. as Iſaack was not ſacrificed, ſo Chriſt was the lambe, that was as though hee had beene killed, Revel. 5. 6. his diuinity died not, and his humanity was revived. 3. the time alſo agreeth, Abraham was three dayes and three nights in going to the place of ſacrifice; as Chriſt was ſo long in the grave. 4. the wood is laid upon Iſaack, Chriſt carried his croſſe. 5. the ramme is entangled in a thicket, Chriſt was crowned with thornes. 6. Iſaack was offered in the ſame place, where afterward the temple ſtood, and our Saviour ſuffered in Hieruſalem. Iſaack how a type of Chriſt.

QVEST

Quest. III. Of the ten ſeverall tentations of Abraham.

THis was the laſt and greateſt tentation of Abraham, and in number the tenth. 1. Abraham was tempted and tried, when he was bidden to come forth of his countrey, not knowing whither. 2. When by reaſon of the famine he went downe to Ægypt. 3. When Pharaoh tooke away his wife, that both hee was in danger of his life, and ſhe of her chaſtity: 4. When there was a ſtriſe betweene Lots ſervants and his. 5. When he was conſtrained to arme himſelfe and his ſervants to reſcue Lot, taken captive. 6. When at Sarahs motion he expelled Agar out of his houſe. 7. When at ninety nine yeares of his age, he was circumciſed in his foreskinne. 8. When Abimelech tooke away his wife. 9. When he ſent away Hagar and Iſmael his ſonne. 10. When he was commanded of God to ſacrifice his ſonne Iſaack. Perer. ex Habreis.

Quest. IV. Whether this mountaine Moriah, were the ſame, wherein the Temple was built.

Verſ. 2. TO the Land of Moriah: 1. That this was the mountaine, where afterward the temple was built, there is no queſtion: for ſo it is directly affirmed, 2. Cron. 3. 1. 2. But whether Chriſt were crucified upon this mountaine, it cannot certainely be affirmed, as Auguſtine thinketh, receiving it from Hierom. ſerm. dempor. 71. ſeeing Chriſt ſuffered without the citie in mount Calvarie: unleſſe it can bee ſhewed, that theſe two mountaines are continued together and ſo in effect but one. 3. But that Cain and Abel did ſacrifice in this place, it is unlike, ſeeing they kept not off from paradiſe, which was in Meſopotamia: neither did Noah build his altar here after the floud, becauſe the ſcripture ſaith, that the arke reſted upon the hills of Armenia, Gen. 8. and immediately upon Noahs comming forth of the Arke, he reared that Altar unto God. 4. This hill whereon the temple ſtood, was ſometime higher than the reſt of the City, as Ioſephus deſcribeth it, but the Romans caſt it downe into the brooke Cedron, ſo that now it is in a manner a plaine, lower than the other parts of the City. Perer. ex Borchet.

Whether Cain, Abel, Noah; ſacrificed upon this mountain.

Quest. V. Of the originall and derivation of the name of Moriah.

FOr the ſignification of the word Moriah: 1. ſome interpret it, the bright or ſhining hill, deriving it of oorh, light: becauſe there was the oracle of God. Aquila. 2. Some would have it ſo called of Mor, myrrhe, becauſe that place abounded with myrrhe and cynamon, Cantic. 4. 6. 3. Some of jara, to feare: becauſe God was there feared and worſhipped. Chald. 4. Some of jarah, to teach: becauſe there the law and heavenly doctrine was taught. 5. Oleaſter fetcheth it from mar, bitter: becauſe of the bitter griefe of Abraham offering his ſonne. 6. But we neede not goe far for the derivation of this word: Abraham ſheweth the originall to be from raah to ſee: not becauſe it was a conſpitious hill, and eaſie to bee ſeene; or becauſe it was the countrey of the ſeers and prophets: Lyppoman: but becauſe the lord was there ſeene of Abraham, and did provide for him. Iun.

Quest. VI. The greatneſſe of Abrahams tentation in the ſacrificing of Iſaack.

2. TAke now thine onely ſonne: Many difficulties doe concurre in this tentation of Abraham. 1. He ſaith not, take thy ſervant, but thy ſonne. Muſcul. 2. The only ſonne. If hee had had many, the griefe had beene the leſſe, but now, Iſaack was his onely ſonne, Iſmael being abdicated and ſent away. Calvin. 2. It is added, whom thou loveſt, &c. Iſaack was a vertuous and obedient child, and Abraham loved him ſo much the more; if he had beene an ungracious ſonne, the griefe had beene much leſſe. Calvin. 4. yea he is bid to offer Iſaack, of whom the Lord ſaid, in Iſaack ſhall thy ſeed bee called: ſo that Abrahams hope of poſterity by this meanes, and the expectation even of all thoſe promiſes made in Iſaack was cut off. Origen. 5. Ipſe primus author inuſitati exempli, &c. Abraham muſt be firſt Author of an unwonted example, in ſacrificing humane fleſh. Philo, 6. He is bid with his owne hands to kill him, to be the executioner himſelfe. Muſcul. 7. Hee muſt offer him for a burnt offering, that no memory or monuments ſhould remaine of him, but he ſhould be conſumed to aſhes. Perer. 8. He muſt not doe it preſently, but he taketh a journey of three dayes, all which time his ſoule is tormented with griefe and care: dum ambulat, dum iter agit, cogitationibus animus ejus diſcerpitur: while he walketh upon the way, his mind is as torn in ſunder with theſe thoughts. Origen. hom. 7. in Geneſ. 9. It muſt bee done upon a mountaine, in the view and ſight of the world: if a ſecret place had beene permitted for this ſacrifice, it had been more tolerable. Marlorat. 10. But the greateſt conflict of all was, in that the Meſſiah was promiſed to come of Iſaack, ſic in ejus perſona periret videbatur tota mundi ſalus: and ſo the ſafety and ſalvation of the world did ſeeme to periſh in his perſon. Calvin.

Quest. VII. How Abraham knew that it was God that had him ſacrifice his ſonne.

Verſ. 3. THen Abraham roſe up early, &c. 1. It appeareth, that the Lord ſpake not unto Abraham by dreame in his ſleep, but being awake: both becauſe Abraham roſe up in the night, to addreſſe himſelfe to his buſineſſe: he ſtaied not till he was awaked out of his ſleepe: as alſo this being ſo hard and unaccuſtomed charge, it was requiſite, that Abraham ſhould have beene in the plaineſt manner ſpoken unto, that without all ambiguity he might acknowledge it to be Gods voyce, Cajetan. 2. Now Abraham knew it to be Gods voyce, partly by that experience which hee had of ſuch heavenly conferences: that he knew it as well, as he diſcerned Sarahs voyce when ſhe ſpake: partly the Patriarkes and Prophets, by the cleere light and illumination of their ſoules, did underſtand ſuch viſions to be of God: as the ſoule naturally diſcerneth of certaine generall notions and principles: but in theſe dayes, there being no ſuch cleare light of illumination, it is hard to judge of viſions, without ſome ſpeciall direction & better certainety out of Gods word. 3. Wherefore Abraham nothing doubting, but that God ſpake unto him, did eaſily overcome all other troubleſome thoughts. As that it might ſeeme an unnaturall and cruell part, for the father to kill his owne ſonne; and that God did appeare to be contrary to himſelfe, in commanding him to be killed, in whom Abraham was promiſed to bee bleſſed and increaſed: the firſt doubt Abraham was ſatisfied in, becauſe nothing which God commandeth can be againſt nature, ſeeing he is the author of nature, although God may worke againſt the ordinary courſe of nature. And like as God hath inflicted death juſtly upon all both good and bad, ſo at Gods ſpeciall bidding to take away mans life, is not mans act, but Gods: and therefore juſt. Againſt the other doubt Abrahams faith prevailed: for hee doubted not, but that God was able to raiſe up Iſaack againe from the dead, Heb. 11.9.

Quest. VIII. Of the diſtance of the mount Moreah from Beerſheba.

Verſ. 3. THe third day Abraham lift up his eyes. 1. Neither doe I thinke with Toſtatus, that this mountaine Moriah was under 20. miles, and ſo not a dayes journey from Beerſheba, where Abraham dwelt, and that hee as full of care and griefe went but an eaſie pace: for it was moſt like, that hee which roſe up ſo early, aſſoone as the Commandement was given him, would make all haſte alſo to performe it. 2. Neither need wee thus to reckon the dayes with Perer. that the firſt day moſt be accounted, that, which went before, whereof the night was a part, wherein God ſpake to Abraham, and ſo hee travelled but one whole day; for this ſeemeth to bee againſt the text, that counteth the third day from Abrahams ſetting forth. 3. Therefore I approve rather Hieromes opinion, which thinketh that from Gerar to mount Moriah, it was three dayes journey: and ſo we need not force the letter of the Scripture.

Hieron. traditi. hebraic. in Gen. 22.

Quest. IX. How the mountaine Moriah was ſhewed to Abraham.

Verſ. 4. SAw the place afarre off. 1. Abraham knew not this mountaine by a pillar of fire upon it, as ſome Hebrewes thinke: nor by any externall viſible meanes: 2. neither by any viſion, or dreame: for in the laſt viſion the Lord ſaid, which I will ſhew thee, v. 2.3. but it is moſt like, that God ſhewed it him by ſome ſecret inſtinct, as he uſed to ſpeake to his Prophets, and as David was ſhewed to Samuel, 1 Sam. 16.12.

Quest. X. In what ſenſe Abraham ſaith to his ſervants, we will come againe.

Verſ. 5. ANd come againe unto you. 1. Neither doth Abraham here utter an untruth, ſaying they would come againe, whereas he in his minde purpoſed to ſacrifice Iſaack. 2. neither doth he ſo ſpeak, including a ſecret condition, ſi Deus voluerit, if God will, Thom. Angl. for Abraham knew the will of God was otherwiſe, that Iſaack ſhould be ſacrificed. 3. neither was this a figurative ſpeech, in uſing the ſingular for the plurall, as though Abraham ſhould meane only himſelfe, for he meaneth his ſonne directly, I and my child, &c. 4. neither yet doth Abraham ſpeake ſo cunningly or captiouſly: captioſe loquebatur, &c. leſt any of his ſervants, knowing his buſineſſe, ſhould have gone about to hinder it: as Ambr. lib. 1. de Abraham. c. 8. 5. nor yet did Abraham ſo ſpeake, becauſe he knew God would raiſe up Iſaack againe to life: as Origen. hom. 8. Geneſ. The Apoſtle only ſaith, that he conſidered, that God was able to raiſe him up even from the dead: but that God would doe it ſo preſently, he knew not: neither had it beene ſuch a triall of his faith to ſacrifice his ſonne, if hee had beene ſure, that his ſonne ſhould in that inſtant have beene reſtored againe to life. 6. I thinke rather that Abraham, being generally by faith aſſured of Gods power, yet was ignorant in this particular, what would fall out: and therefore ſpake as a man amazed and aſtoniſhed: and yet ignorantly propheſied. Prophetavit quod ignoravit. Ambr. Iun.

Quest. XI: Of Abrahams conſtancy and Iſaacks obedience.

Verſ. 7. MY Father, &c. 1. Abrahams ſetled conſtancy appeareth that notwithſtanding theſe amiable words of his ſonne, yet cannot be turned from his purpoſe: nomina vitæ ſolent operari gratiam, non miniſterium necis: words of life, as to call father, ſonne, doe inſinuate grace and favour, they miniſter occaſion of death. 2. Iſaacks obedience is commended, who willingly ſubmitteth himſelfe. 1. being now 25. yeares old, and ſo ſtrong enough to reſiſt his old and weake father, yet he yeeldeth himſelfe. Calvin. 2. He was bound, not that his reſiſtance ſhould be feared, but leaſt any involuntarie motion by the pangs of death, might have beene procured. Perer. 3. his willingneſſe further appeareth, in that Iſaack maketh no requeſt for his life: nemo rogat, nemo ſe excuſat: neither he entreateth, nor his father excuſeth this fact, Poets doe fable, how Iphigenia Agamemnons daughter, was ſacrificed to the gods, for the ſafety of the whole armie; but here we have a true ſtiſtory. 4. It is moſt like, that Abraham had before declared Gods commandement unto Iſaack, to the which hee was obedient. Ioſephus proceedeth further to ſhew what the communication was betweene them: but whence knoweth he that? it is out of doubt that Iſaack was made acquainted with Gods counſell, wherewith hee reſted contented, Luther.

Quest. XII. Why the Lord would not have Iſaack offered up in ſacrifice though he ſo commanded, for the triall of Abrahams faith.

Verſ. 11. THe Angell of the Lord called to him. 1. I will omit here to make any long mention of the fables of the Hebrewes: how that Sathan appeared in the ſhape of an old man to Abraham, and againe to Sarah; and in the likeneſſe of a young man to Iſaack, to draw them from obedience to this commandement, but he prevailed not. Muſcul. 2. The heathen alſo by their poeticall fictions have obſcured obſcured the credit and truth of this hiſtory: for as the Angell of God appeared in this laſt and extreme point to Abraham, ſo they have alſo counterfeited the apparition of their gods in extreme perils. Calvin. 3. Thus it pleaſed God, that, although Abrahams faith was tried with this hard Commandement, that it ſhould not be performed: 1. for his owne glory ſake, leſt that Abrahams God might have beene traduced among the heathen, as a lover of humane bloud: 2. for Abrahams ſakes, that the Lord might more amply reward him for his faithfull obedience. 3. for our ſakes, that we might have the example of faithfull Abraham to follow: 4. and for the generall inſtruction of Chriſtians: that this might bee a lively figure unto them of the ſacrifice of Chriſt: both of Gods love in giving him to dye for the world, and his obedience in humbling himſelfe to the altar of the croſſe. And therefore Ambroſe fitly applyeth thoſe words of Abraham, v. 8. God will provide him a lamb for a burnt offering, to the ſacrifice of Chriſt: which was, that alia hoſtia, quam Deus pararet, that other offering which God would provide: lib. 1. de Abrah. c. 8.

QVEST. XIII. How the Lord ſaith, I know now that thou feareſt, &c.

Verſ. 12. NOw I know, &c. 1. Not that God is ignorant of any thing, or can have any experimentall knowledge of any thing which hee knew not before: for all things are naked in his ſight. 2. Neither, as Auguſtine expoundeth, is God ſaid to know, quia fecit, ut ſibi Abraham innotoſceret: becauſe he made Abraham to be knowne to himſelfe, qu. Geneſ. 58. for then he ſhould have rather ſaid, Now thou thy ſelfe knoweſt, &c. 3. Some doe take it for the knowledge of approbation: I have knowne thee, that is, approved this fact of thine, as it is ſaid, Pſal. 1. The Lord knoweth the way of the righteous. Hillary. 4. Some referre it to Gods eternall knowledge: I have knowne from the beginning, that thou ſhouldeſt doe this thing, but I appointed it to be done only now: but this had beene no commendation to Abraham: for thus God may be ſaid to know every thing, whether commendable or otherwiſe. T. hom. Angel. 5. Wherefore the Lord ſpeaketh here, humaniter, after the phraſe of man, and by a metaphor. Iun. and in effect it is nothing elſe, but that Abraham had now declared and teſtified his faith by his fruitfull obedience. Calvin. Chryſoſtome ſaith, Nunc omnibus declaraſti, quomodo Deum ſyncere colas, thou haſt made manifeſt to all, how thou ſincerely worſhippeſt God. hom. 47. in Gen.

QVEST. XIV. Why this fact of Abraham is rather aſcribed to feare than love.

Verſ. 12. THat thou feareſt God. It is ſo ſaid, rather, than that thou loveſt God: 1. becauſe the love of God muſt be joyned with a reverent feare of God: ſerve the Lord with feare. Pſal. 4. and the love of God bringeth forth a filiall and dutifull feare: as the child that loveth his father, will alſo feare him. 2. the feare of God is generally taken, not for the particular act of feare, but for the whole worſhip of God: as Pſal. 25. 14. The ſecrets of the Lord is revealed, to thoſe that feare him: and ſo feare in this ſenſe comprehendeth alſo love. 3. becauſe Abraham had now forgotten his naturall love and affection, towards his ſonne, becauſe he feared God, this act is more properly aſcribed to his religious feare. Per.

QVEST. XV. This fact of Abraham wherein it excelleth the like among the heathen.

NOw concerning the excellency of Abrahams fact, whereas the heathen objected the like example among them, to obſcure this reſolution of Abraham: as how Codrus of Athens offered himſelfe for his people: and one Idomeneus King of Creet, as he came from the battell of Troy, being in a great tempeſt upon the ſea, did vow unto Neptune, the firſt thing, which came forth to meet him, which was his ſonne, and ſo he did: Marius is mentioned by Cyril againſt Iulian, that ſacrificed his ſonne: ſo the Scripture recordeth that inhumane factiof the King of Moab, that did offer up his ſonne in ſacrifice. 2 King. 4. It ſhall now appeare what great difference there is, between theſe examples, and the fact of Abraham, both in the difficulty of the object, the readineſſe of his affection, the end alſo and purpoſe of the action.

1. Abraham offred up his only ſonne, whom hee dearely loved, being the ſonne of his old age: a vertuous and obedient ſonne, upon whom depended, not only the continuance of his name and poſterity, but the promiſe of the Meſſiah: theſe things could not concurre in any of the other examples.

2. Abraham did every thing with ſingular alacrity: in the beginning he anſwered God preſently, he tooke his journey in hand ſpeedily: in the middeſt, he ſhewed in his three dayes journey a ſetled conſtancy; in laying the wood upon his ſonne, and going up the hill, great magnanimity; and in the end in building an altar, binding his ſon, lifting up his hand to ſtrike, fortitude invincible: the like is not to be found in thoſe heatheniſh preſidents.

3. Concerning the end: they did it to purchaſe ſome benefit to themſelves or their countrey, as Codrus, Idomeneus: for feare, as the King of Moab; or to get them immortall fame. Some, becauſe it was the cuſtome of the countrey: as Philo giveth inſtance of the Gymnoſophiſts among the Indians, that when they were old, did caſt themſelves into the fire, and their wives after them. But none of theſe things moved Abraham: not feare of man, for no man knew this oracle but himſelfe: not the eſcaping of any calamity which was not neare him: nor any deſire of praiſe, for he was alone upon the mountaine: neither was there any ſuch cuſtome in Babylon, or Meſopotamia, from whence Abraham came. Philo. but the only feare and reverence, which Abraham did yeeld unto God, and the love of his Commandements, did induce him to performe this hard part of ſervice.

QVEST. XVI. Of the ramme that was intangled in the buſh.

Verſ. 13. BEhold there was a ramme caught by the hornes in a buſh, &c. 1. Neither is the conceit of Euſeb. Emiſſen. to bee received, that thinketh ſabech, tranſlated a buſh, to be a kinde of grape with upright hornes: neither is it a kind of shrub, or bryer so called, as the septuagint thinke, or of a tree, as Ganad. and Theodoret, not yet is it fitly translated, erectus, upright, as some read: but the word sabech signifieth the perplexity, winding, or clasping of a bush, a brier. 2. The fable of the Hebrewes, that this ram was created the sixth day, and kept 3000. yeares for this use, is ridiculous, and worthy to bee laughed at. 3. Ambrose maketh this ram a type of Christ: by his hanging in a tree or bush prefiguring the manner of Christs passion, in hanging upon a tree: lib. 1. de Abraham. cap. 8. Hebrewes fables.

Quest. XVII. How Abraham would take a ramme which was not his owne.

NOw whereas it may be doubted, how Abraham would take a beast for sacrifice, that was none of his owne: It may be answered; 1. That Abraham having made an altar, and prepared himselfe to sacrifice, did take it to be an irreligious act to depart, having not performed that service, and therefore of purpose looked about, to see what sacrifice might be offered to God. 2. And seeing a ram, hee tooke it as sent of God, and remembred, what he had said before, that the Lord would provide a sacrifice: 3. Therefore, he knowing, that the Lord had provided this offering, he maketh no doubt or scruple to use it: neither is inquisitive to examine who was the owner: seeing that the earth is the Lords and all things therein: to whose dominion, every mans right and title ought to stoope and give place. Musc.

Quest. XVIII. How the Lord will be seene in the mountaine.

Vers. 14. IN the mount will the Lord be seene. 1. The septuagint, reading, the Lord was seene, referre it to the appearing of the Angell in the mount. 2. Hierome reading the Lord will see, seemeth to understand it, of Gods providing of a sacrifice, as Abraham had said before. v. 8. 3. Some Hebrewes doe take it to bee a prophecie of the Temple, which should afterward bee built at Jerusalem, where the Lord would manifest and shew himselfe: so also the Chalde paraphrast expoundeth. 4. But beside these interpretations, which may indifferently be received: this name given upon this occasion, and growing into a proverbe, hath this sense, that in like sort, in the mountaine of the Lord, that is, in due time and place, his children in their necessities, shall be provided for: and therefore Iunius better readeth: in the mountaine of the Lord it shall be provided.

Quest. XIX. He was an Angell, and not Christ, that spake here unto Abraham.

Vers. 15. AND the Angell of the Lord, &c. 1. This Angell was not Christ: for the Angell addeth, by my selfe have I sworne (saith the Lord:) he speaketh then in the person of the Lord, as being not that Lord himselfe; but Christ, being God, would have spoken in his owne person. 2. Therefore Origen is found to be in a great errour: whose words upon this place are these, unde puto, quod sicut inter homines habitu repertus est homo, ita inter Angelos habitu repertus est, ut Angelus: As among men he was found in habit as a man, so among the Angels he was found in habit as an Angell. Unlesse Origen be favourably interpreted to speake of the office of an Angell: for so Christ diversly appeared to the Prophets and fathers: but if hee meane, that Christ tooke upon him the very nature and person of an Angell, it is a great errour, and contrary to the Apostle, Heb. 2. 16. hee in no sort tooke the Angels. 3. Therefore it is an Angell, which as Gods messenger, for the greater authority, speaketh in the name of him that sent him. Calvin.

Quest. XX. Of the forme and manner of Gods oath.

Vers. 16. BY my selfe have I sworne: 1. Some would have the forme of Gods oath to bee in this particle, chi, translated by the Apostle ὅτι μὴ, certe, surely, Heb. 6. 14. the Latine translateth it nisi, unlesse, as though it were εἰ μὴ, as Psal. 95. 11. I sware in my wrath, if they shall enter into my rest: as though the oath should be explaned thus: let me not live, or let me not be God, if, &c. Perer. But wee need not so curiously to search out any other forme of Gods oath, than that here expressed: I sware by my selfe: the Chalde, by my word. 2. Philo maketh a nice and curious difference betweene swearing by God, and by the name or word of God: the first, God only sweareth by, man by the second: for to sweare by himselfe, by his name, by his word, are all one: God sweareth by himselfe, Isay 45. 23. by his soule, Ierem. 51. 14. Amos 6. 8. by his name, Ierem. 44. 26. by his holinesse, Amos 4. 2. by his right hand, Isay 62. 8. So then like as a debter doth use two wayes to satisfie his creditor, by leaving a pledge or pawne, or procuring some surety: in like manner he that taketh an oath, sometime sweareth by his soule, by his honesty, faith, &c. as laying these things to pawne, that he will lose the credit of them, if hee speake not the truth: sometime by God, as making him his surety, and witnesse, that he speaketh the truth. So the Lord swearing by his holinesse, goodnesse, &c. doth pledge them, that unlesse that be, which he saith, he will lose them: and swearing by himselfe, he bindeth his Godhead for the performance, as though he should say in effect, If this be not, let me be no more God. Calvin. Phil lib. 3. de allegoriis legis.

Quest. XXI. Why the Lord tooke an oath.

BUt further it will be asked, what need God had to take an oath, seeing the word of God is certaine of it selfe, and need no confirmation; and an oath is used in doubtfull cases, but to God nothing is doubtfull or uncertaine: an oath is used, when the party cannot be credited without an oath; but Abraham did credite God. The answer then is this. 1. The Lord sweareth not to any such end, as though any more credit and certainty by his oath might bee wonne unto his promise. 2. And yet wee take not this to bee a metaphoricall speech onely with Cajetan: that God is said to sweare by himselfe. 3. But the Lord taketh an oath, ad ampliorem confirmationem fidei noſtræ, for the better confirmation of our faith: and hee doth it, as the Apoſtle ſaith ex abundanti, more abundantly to ſhew the ſtableneſſe of his counſell, Heb. 6. 17. Calvin. 4. Where we may note the differences betweene this oath and other oathes. 1. God taketh this oath willingly, not forced thereto of any neceſſity. 2. He ſweareth by himſelfe, as having not a greater to ſweare by, and Philo ſheweth the reaſon: Solus de ſeipſo aſſeverare poteſt, quia ſolus ipſe ſuam novit naturam: He only can beare witneſſe of himſelfe, becauſe he only knoweth his owne nature. 3. He alſo further ſaith; Sententiæ noſtræ juramento fides accedit, ipſi juramento ex ipſo Deo fides aſtruitur; Our ſentence is credited becauſe of our oath, but this oath is beleeved, becauſe of God that taketh it.

Difference betweene Gods oath, and other oathes.

Quest. XXII. Whether the promiſes here made are new, or the old renewed.

Verſ. 18. In thy ſeed ſhall all the nations of the earth be bleſſed. 1. It is of all hands confeſſed, that the other three promiſes were made unto Abraham before. 1. That Abraham ſhould be bleſſed, Geneſ. 12. 2. 2. That his ſeed ſhould be multiplied as the ſtarres, and as the ſand of the ſea, Geneſ. 13. 16. 3. That his ſeed ſhould poſſeſſe the gate of his enemies, which is in effect the ſame with that Geneſ. 13. 12. all the land will I give thee, &c. God promiſed Abraham the land of the Canaanites, which were his enemies. 2. But Ambroſe thinketh that this was a new bleſſing, containing a promiſe of the Meſſiah; lib. 1. de Abraham c. 8. Paulus Burgenſis confirmeth the ſame by theſe reaſons; becauſe Saint Paul rehearſeth this as ſpeciall bleſſing concerning Chriſt, urging theſe words, in thy ſeed, which are onely found here; and the Lord confirmeth this by an oath, as Zachary in his ſong maketh mention of this oath, which hee ſware to our father Abraham, Luke 1. 73. 3. But theſe reaſons are eaſily anſwered; 1. Saint Paul citeth, rather that promiſe made, Geneſ. 12. 3. in thee ſhall all the Gentiles be bleſſed, Galath. 3. 8. for hee ſpeaketh of that promiſe which was made 430. yeares before the law, which muſt needs be that former given to Abraham the 75. yeare of his age; but there will want 50. yeares of that ſumme, if the account ſhould begin at this time, when Abraham was 125. yeares old; And whereas Saint Paul alſo alludeth unto this place, v. 16. and thy ſeed; and ſo expoundeth one place by another, he ſheweth, that in effect, they are both but one promiſe. 2. The adding of the oath, maketh it not a new promiſe, but confirmeth onely the former; otherwiſe by this reaſon, all theſe promiſes ſhould be newly made, ſeeing the oath goeth before them all; and indeed not onely this promiſe of the Meſſiah, but the other alſo concerning the poſſeſſing of the land of Canaan was ratified by an oath, Exod. 13. 5. Perer. 4. Wherefore here is no other promiſe made to Abraham, but ſuch as he had heard before; but the ſame more amply and fully confirmed by an oath, and againe renued both to Abraham and Iſaack: in which two reſpects, this promiſe is more excellent than the former, Calvin.

Quest. XXIII. How Saint Paul applieth this word Seed only to Chriſt. 3 to the Galath.

HEre by the way, it ſhall not be amiſſe to explane that place of Saint Paul, Galath. 3. 16. where the Apoſtle preſſeth the word ſeed, ſhewing that becauſe he ſaith, ſeed, not ſeeds, it muſt bee referred to one, namely Chriſt. The Jewes doe make two principall objections againſt this place. 1. They urge, that this word metaphorically taken for the of-ſpring of men, is a nowne collective, never uſed in the plurall number, but put in the ſingular, only ſignifieth a multitude, as likewiſe doth the word populus, vulgus, people, commonalty, &c.

The objections of the Jewes againſt the Apoſtles collection anſwered.

Anſwer. 1. True it is, that the word Zeraugh, in the ſingular number doth often ſignifie a multitude, but ſometime in Scripture it is reſtrained to one, as Gen. 4. 25. the name of ſeed is given to Seth, the Lord hath appointed me another ſeed for Habel, Geneſ. 21. 13. Iſmael is called Abrahams ſeed. Wherefore it is not enough to ſay that this word in the ſingular is ſometime taken for a multitude, unleſſe they could ſhew it ſo to be uſed here, Beza. 2. The Apoſtle then, being not ignorant of the phraſe and uſage of the Hebrew tongue, doth not contend about the word, but the ſenſe: that the word ſeed in this place is not taken for ſeeds, that is, many, but for ſeed, that is, one ſpecially, Perer. 21. They object further: that whereas it is ſaid, In thy ſeed ſhall all the nations of the earth be bleſſed, this is but a forme of bleſſing, by way of compariſon, like to that, Gen. 48. 20. God make thee as Ephraim, &c. Anſ. 1. If this ſpeech did only ſhew a forme, not the cauſe of bleſſing: it need not have beene ſaid. in thy ſeed, but in thee: that is, Abraham: God make thee like Abraham. 2. Where ſuch formes of bleſſing are uſed, they are reſtrained to ſome as in the place alleaged, Gen. 48. In thee Iſrael ſhall bleſſe: but here all nations ſhall bee bleſſed: how ſhould it come to paſſe, that all nations ſhould not bleſſe themſelves, but bee bleſſed, but in being called to the knowledge of God, which is by Chriſt: wherefore theſe words ſhew the cauſe of bleſſing, not the forme, Calvin.

The meaning of the Apoſtle opened. Galath. 3. 16. expounded.

Now then, their objections being thus anſwered, I will ſhew the right meaning of the Apoſtle. I reject Hieromes collection, reproved by Eraſmus: Paulum hoc argumento abuſum apud craſſos Galatas, that Paul abuſeth this argument, having to doe with the dull Galathians: for it becommeth us not ſo to think of ſo grave an Apoſtle, writing by the Spirit of God. 2. Neither is it enough to ſay, that Paul by the ſame Spirit whereby Moſes did write, did underſtand him to ſpeake of Chriſt, Cajetan. in 3. ad Galat. but Paul having to deale with the gain-ſaying Jewes, would not ſo much ſtand upon his Apoſtolike illumination, neither would they reſt upon it. 3. Neither is the word ſeed taken here not ſingularly for the perſon of Chriſt, but collectively for the whole ſpirituall ſeed of Abraham, the people of God conſiſting of the Jewes and Gentiles, Beza. for this ſenſe ſeemeth to bee coact and not proper: and the Apoſtle himſelfe denieth it to bee underſtood of many, but of one. 4. Neither doth Saint Paul ground his argument upon the received opinion and confeſſion of the Jewes, which hee was experienced in, being brought up in the sect of Gamaliel; who all generally did hold this promise of blessing in Abrahams seed, to be understood of the Messiah, Perer. for thus the Apostles reasoning should be inverted, and that made his conclusion, which is his argument: for the Apostle doth not reason thus; This place is referred to the Messiah, saying, he saith, not seeds, but seed: But thus rather standeth his argument; In saying seed, not Seeds, hee meaneth but one; Ergo, the Messiah, that is, Christ. 3. Wherefore if the Apostles words bee thorowly weighed and examined, he enforceth two conclusions in this one sentence: the first is, that this place out of Moses must needs be interpreted, not of all Abrahams seed confusedly, but of some one specially: the other is, that this being evicted, that the Lord in this promise speaketh but of one, it will follow of necessity that this one must be Christ.

For the first; that Abrahams seed is not understood promiscue, for all his seed; the Jewes themselves could not deny: for this seed was first restrained to Isaack, and Ismael excluded, therein Isaack it was assigned to Iacob, and Esau refused: in Iacob this seed was singled out in Iuda, when the other tribes were carried into captivity, and never returned: therefore seed here cannot bee taken for many, but wee must still proceed in descending, till we come to one in whom this blessing is performed, Calvin.

For the second; that this one must be Christ, it will necessarily follow, because none else can be named, by whom all the Gentiles received this blessing: for that place, Psal. 72. 17. All nations shall blesse him, and be blessed in him, cannot be understood of Salomon, who was so farre from procuring a blessing to all nations, that he brought a curse upon his owne nation and posterity, when for his idolatry a rent was made in the Kingdome, the smallest part falling to the share of his sonne Rhoboam. And beside, this Psalme is a prophetical song of Christ under the type of Salomon, as vers. 5. They shall feare him as long as the Sunne and Moone endureth: vers. 11. All Kings shall worship him: vers. 17. His name shall endure for ever. These things cannot be uttered of Salomon, of any other mortall man, but onely are true of the Lord Messiah. There being then none else found by whom the Gentiles were spiritually blessed, in being called from their filthy idolatry, to the knowledge and worship of the true God, in being lightned with Scriptures, brought to the acknowledgement, and so remission of their sinnes, but onely Christ: none else in whom they beleeve, whose name is blessed among them: Who can this else bee but Jesus Christ the Messiah? And thus it is evident, that the Apostle hath reasoned strongly from this place, that salvation commeth not by the Law, but by faith in Christ, which is the thing the Apostle in this place intendeth to prove.

Psal. 72. 17. expounded.

Quest. XXIII. Whether Abrahams obedience, or Isaacks patience were more notable.

It may seeme that Isaacks obedience in yeelding himselfe willingly to death, was more excellent, and worthy of note than Abrahams; because it is a greater patience to suffer death for Gods cause, than to inferre it: Isaack also should have felt the sorrowes and pangs of death in his body, which Abraham was onely to behold. Notwithstanding these reasons, Abrahams example of obedience excelled: 1. Because he was to sacrifice his onely, most beloved, and innocent sonne, which was no doubt more grievous unto him, than if he had died himselfe. 2. Isaacks death came unlooked for: it should have been finished at once: Abrahams griefe, as it pierced his heart three continuall dayes before, so the remembrance of this fact would have continued still. 3. The Scripture giveth sentence with Abraham, which maketh mention in this place, and others beside, of Abrahams offering up of Isaack, but ascribeth no part thereof to Isaack.

Now because that example of the King of Moab, which offered up the King of Edoms sonne in sacrifice, and not his owne, as the common opinion is, may be thought to resemble Abrahams fact here, it shall not be amisse briefly to examine that place, as it is set downe, 2 King. 3. 27.

2 King. 3. 27. expounded.

Quest. XXIV. Whether the King of Moab sacrificed his sonne, and wherefore.

FIrst then, 1. Neither is it like that the King of Moab having learned of his Priests that God prospered Israel because of Abrahams faith, which doubted not to offer his sonne, as Lyranus: therefore he attempted to doe the like: for at this time the Israelites did not so greatly prosper, the kingdome being divided because of the idolatry of Salomon, and diversly afflicted: and the King of Moab offered not his owne sonne, but the King of Edoms, as it is expounded by Amos 2. 1. For three transgressions I will not turne to Moab, because he burnt the bones of the King of Edom into lime. 2. Neither did the King of Moab this by the advice of the Priests, after the example of Israel, because they used to offer up their sons to Molech, thinking to please the God of Israel hereby, Burgens. For the Israelites rather learned this idolatrous use of the Gentiles: and the Israelites prospered not, but were punished of God for such impieties. 3. Nor yet did the King of Moab this to move the Israelites to commiseration, when they should see to what misery and necessity he was brought, to offer such a bloudy sacrifice, as Tostat. and Katab. for he did it rather to delight them, as shall even now appeare. 4. Nor yet did he offer this sacrifice only with an intent thereby to appease his gods, and to procure their help: which opinion indeed the heathen had of such wicked and devilish offerings, Cajetan. Perer. 5. But it is most likely that the King of Moab slaying to breake thorow to the King of Edom, and could not, tooke the Kings sonne of Edom that was to reigne after him, and therefore is called the King of Edom, Amos 2. 1. and sacrificed him in the sight of his father, to his great griefe, Iunius.

Quest. XXV. What was the cause of the indignation against Israel.

SEcondly, where it followeth thus; For that Israel was sore grieved, and they departed from him, or there was great indignation against Israel: 1. This is not referred to the indignation or wrath of God, as though though the Lord should be offended with Israel, & sent a plague amongst them, because the King of Moab by their evill example did sacrifice the King of Edoms son, as Burgens. for no such thing is expressed in the text. 2. Neither was this indignation conceived by the idolatrous Israelites against the rest, thinking the King of Moab invincible, because of this sacrifice, Cajetan. for this indignation was kindled, not by the Israelites, but against them. 3. And for the same reason the common exposition seemeth not to be so proper, that this indignation and griefe of the Israelites was for the horror and cruelty of this unnatural fact, which they could not endure to behold, Tostat. for this indignation or wrath should not have beene against the Israelites, but against the King of Moab. 4. Therefore it seemeth more agreeable to the text, that this wrath was on the Edomites part against the Israelites, because it was their quarrell that brought the King of Edom to take part with them against the Moabites, upon which occasion this hard hap fell out upon his sonne: and upon this division they brake off, and left the siege, Iunius.

Quest. XXVI. Of Huz, Buz, Kemuel, Chesed, the sonnes of Nahor.

Vers. 21. Huz, &c. and Buz. Of this Huz was not named the Countrey where Iob dwelt, Iob 1.1. but of that Huz rather which was the sonne of Aram, Genes. 10.22. Hierome. 2. Of Buz came the family of the Buzites, of the which Elihu was, Iob 32.6. 3. Kemuel here mentioned, was not the father of the Syrians, as the Greeke and vulgar Latine read; nor yet of Aram Naharaim, as Tostatus, or Aram Seba, as Cajetane: for the City of Nahor was in Aram, Genes. 24.10. This name and Countrey therefore was more ancient than Kemuel Nahors sonne, and was rather so called of Aram the sonne of Sem, Genes. 10.22. 4. Neither is Chesed here named the father of the Chaldees, which was Abrahams Countrey, and could not therefore be founded by his nephew. 5. But these sonnes of Nahor were fathers of certaine families in Syria, whereof there was some remainder in Constantine Caesars time: as may appeare by the names of certaine townes, Reman, and Buzan, remembred by Ammian. Lib. 18. ex Iun.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. How God is said to tempt.

Vers. 1. God did tempt or prove Abraham, &c. 1. God is not said here to tempt Abraham, metaphorice, metaphorically, as he is said to be angry, to repent, in a figurative speech, as Cajetane: but God truly and verily tempteth, that is, proveth and taketh triall of Abrahams faith. 2. And God doth it, Non ut ipse hominem inveniat, sed ut homo se inveniat: Not that God need to finde out man, but that man may finde out himselfe, as Augustine saith. 3. God tempteth otherwise than Satan is said to tempt: God properly is the author only of good temptations, but Satan is the tempter unto evill. Evill temptations proceed not from God, effective, sed permissive, by way of action, but by way of permission: when the Lord withdraweth his sufficient grace, and necessary helpe.

The difference betweene good and bad temptations.

Gods tempting, and Satans tempting doe diversly differ: 1. In respect of the end, Deus tentat ut doceat, Diabolus ut decipiat; God tempteth to teach, the Devill to deceive, as Augustine saith. 2. In respect of the persons: God tempteth onely the good, to make their faith and obedience knowne: sometimes the weake are tried, that after they have fallen they may repent and be restored: sometimes the strong, that they may be more and more confirmed. But the devill tempteth both good and bad, the good to bring them into evill; the bad that they forsake not evill. 3. The object of good and evill temptations are divers: good temptations are especially seene in outward things, as in poverty, sicknesse, persecution, and such like: evill temptations are exercised in spirituall and inward evils, as in evill suggestions, ungodly thoughts, stirring to evill desires, and provoking to sinne, Peret.

2. Doct. The grave motions of the spirit of God, differ from the furious fansies of those led with an evill spirit.

Vers. 4. The then the third day, &c. We see a manifest difference betweene the furious and sudden motions of those which are possessed with an evill spirit; such as Saul had, who in his rage all at once cast a javelin at his sonne Ionathan to have killed him, 1. Sam. 20.33. and the deliberate actions of those which are guided by the good spirit of God: as here Abraham not suddenly is moved to sacrifice his son, but after three dayes journey, having thorowly advised upon it, he obediently yeeldeth himselfe to Gods commandement.

3. Doct. The obedience of the will is accepted of God for the deed.

Vers. 12. Seeing for my sake thou hast not spared thine onely sonne. God accepteth the resolute purpose of will of Abraham for the done deed. An obedient will then is accepted before God when worke it selfe: as the Apostle saith, If first there be a willing minde, God accepteth it according to that a hath, not according to that he hath not, 2 Cor. 8.12. Musculus.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. By faith we are assured of our justification.

Vers. 12. I know that thou feareſt God. It is confeſſed by our adverſaries, that Abraham at this time was certaine that he was in the ſtate of grace; but becauſe it is their opinion, that we cannot by faith ordinarily be aſſured of remiſſion of ſinnes, they have framed divers anſwers to this place.

1. Thomas Aquinas ſaith, that this aſſurance that Abraham had, was a particular experimentall knowledge, that in this worke he feared God, Thom. 1. 2. qu. 112. ar. 3. Com. Abraham not onely in this particular was aſſured of Gods favour, but was undoubtedly perſwaded of the promiſe in generall concerning the Meſſiah: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Neither did he doubt of the promiſe, &c. but was ſtrengthened in the faith, Rom. 4. 20. And this is that which our Saviour ſaith, Thus Abraham deſired to ſee his day, he ſaw it and rejoyced, Ioh. 8. 56. His aſſurance which he had of ſalvation in the Meſſiah, procured unto him this ioy.

2. The ſame Thomas ſaith, Abraham illud cognovit per ſpecialem Dei revelationem; That Abraham knew this that he was in the ſtate of grace by Gods ſpeciall revelation. Contra. This aſſurance that Abraham had, was not by any particular or extraordinary revelation, but by the proper and ordinary operation of faith: as the Apoſtle ſaith, He was ſtrengthened in the faith, Rom. 4. 20.

Abraham and the Patriarks no otherwiſe aſſured of their juſtification, than the faithfull now are.

3. Pererius anſwereth, that this revelation was made to the Patriarks in the old Teſtament, and the Apoſtles in the new, which were, as it were, the founders of the people of God, 10. diſput. in 22. cap. Gen.

Contra. Saint Paul in the matter of faith maketh no ſuch difference betweene the Patriarks and other beleevers; as he ſaith, Now it is not written for him onely, that it was imputed to him for righteouſneſſe, but alſo for us, &c. Rom. 4. 23. And the Apoſtle ſaith, That a crowne of righteouſneſſe was not onely laid up for him, but unto them alſo which love his appearing, 2 Tim. 4. 8. where the ſame certainty of the reward is decreed, the like aſſurance is not denied.

4. Bellarmine anſwereth, that hence it is evident that all beleevers are not ſure of their juſtification, ſeeing Abraham that had ſerved God moſt faithfully before, yet never till now was aſſured of his juſtification, lib. 3. de juſtif. cap. 11. reſp. ad ration. 1.

Contra. It followeth not, Abraham was not alwayes aſſured, therefore every beleever cannot be aſſured: but it well followeth, that as there was a time when Abraham had not ſuch aſſurance, ſo the faithfull at all times have not ſuch perſwaſion, and that we grant. 2. It is untrue that Abraham had not this aſſurance till now, when he offered up Iſaack: for the Apoſtle ſheweth, that then hee had this aſſurance, when faith was imputed to him for righteouſneſſe, Rom. 4. 22, 23. which was before he was circumciſed, Gen. 15. 6.

5. Bellarmine againe anſwereth, that the Scripture commending the righteouſneſſe of Abraham and other Patriarks, doth rather make us certaine and ſure of their ſalvation, than themſelves, ibid.

Contra. No mans ſalvation can be better knowne to another than to himſelfe: for as the life of the body is more felt where that life is, than of others that ſee the bodies to live: ſo faith, which is the life of the ſoule, as the Scripture ſaith, The juſt ſhall live by faith, is better apprehended of thoſe which have the poſſeſſion of it, than of ſuch as onely behold it.

2. Confut. The promiſes not merited by Abrahams obedience.

Vers. 16. Becauſe thou haſt done this thing, &c. From hence Pererius inferreth, that Abraham, Egregio illo facto meruiſſe, Deſerved by this worthy act, that ſuch promiſes were made unto him, and that the Meſſiah ſhould be borne of his ſtocke, rather than of any other.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtle doth conclude the contrary, that becauſe faith was imputed to Abraham for righteouſneſſe, he was not juſtified by works, Rom. 4. 2, 4. 2. Theſe promiſes were made to Abraham before he had ſhewed any worthy worke: even then, when he was firſt called out of his Countrey, Gen. 12. 2. they then proceeded from Gods mercy, not of Abrahams deſert or worthineſſe. 3. The Lord therefore rewardeth Abrahams obedience with renewing his promiſes, to ſhew us, that they which are juſtified by faith, ought to proceed and goe forward in good works, whereby their faith is approved, Muſcul.

3. Confut. The aſſumption of the humane nature to the God-head in Chriſt not merited.

But to ſay that Abraham merited, that the Meſſiah ſhould take fleſh of his ſeed, is not farre from blaſphemy; for then he ſhould have merited more than Chriſt himſelfe did, as he was man: ſeeing the hypoſtaticall union of the humane nature with the God-head in one perſon, was of grace, not merit: as Auguſtine well reſolveth, Quod Chriſtus eſt unigenitus æquale patri, non eſt gratia, ſed naturæ: quod autem in unitatem perſonæ unigeniti aſſumptus eſt homo, gratia eſt, non natura: That Chriſt was the only begotten Son equall to his Father, it was not grace but nature; but in that mans nature was taken to make one perſon, with the onely begotten, it was of grace, and not by nature. But now, if the man Chriſt deſerved not the aſſumption or taking of the humane nature to the God-head, and yet Abraham merited, that his ſeed ſhould in the Meſſiah be united to the God-head, it will follow that he merited more than Chriſt; where- Tract. in Ioan. 37.

that is a ſound and Catholike concluſion of Auguſtine, Neque enim illam ſuſceptionem hominis, illa præceſſerunt, ſed ab illa ſuſceptione merita ejus cuncta cæperunt: before the taking of mans nature Tract. 8. in Ioan. there was no merits at all, but all Chriſts merits tooke beginning there.

4. Confut. The Chalde Paraphraſt corrupt.

Verſ. 18. IN thy ſeed, &c. So readeth the Septuagint according to the originall, in the ſingular number; and this reading is approved by the Apoſtle, Galath. 3.16. Wherefore the Chalde Paraphraſt is found here to be corrupt: which readeth thus in the plurall number; In thy ſonnes ſhall all the people of the earth be bleſſed.

5. Confut. Many in Scripture taken for all.

ALL the nations of the earth ſhall be bleſſed: And Gen. 17. 5. the Lord ſaith, A father of many nations have I made thee: we ſee then that in the phraſe of Scripture ſometimes many are taken for all: by this place therefore that cavill of the Pelagians may be anſwered, who becauſe the Apoſtle ſaith, By one mans diſobedience many were made ſinners, Rom. 5.19. would inferre that we became ſinners not by originall corruption or propagation of ſinne, but by imitation, for then the Apoſtle would have ſaid, not many, but all. But the Apoſtle by many underſtandeth all, as he affirmeth, verſ. 18. That by the offence of one the ſinne came upon all to condemnation: for they which are all, may truly be ſaid to bee many. The like cavill in another queſtion is urged by Catharinus a popiſh writer, who becauſe it is ſaid in Daniel 12.2. That many of them which ſleepe in the duſt ſhall awake, ſome to everlaſting life, ſome to ſhame: collecteth, that all ſhall not, but that ſome, as namely infants dying without baptiſme, ſhall neither be in heaven nor hell: But this objection may receive the ſame anſwer, that as in the promiſe made to Abraham many is taken for all, ſo alſo is it in this place of the Prophet, as before alſo is ſhewed the like uſe in the Apoſtle.

Of Infants dying unbaptiſed.

6. Places of Exhortation.

1. Obſerv. To beare the death of children patiently.

Verſ. 10. ABRAHAM ſtretching forth his hand, tooke the knife, &c. Origen from this example of Abraham that doubted not to offer up his ſonne, perſwadeth parents to beare patiently the death of their children, Latus offer filium Deo, eſto ſacerdos animæ filii tui: Cheerfully offer thy ſonne unto God, and be Prieſt of his ſoule. This is nothing (ſaith he) to Abrahams ſtrength, which bound his ſonne himſelfe, and bent his ſword, Hom. 8. in Gen.

2. Obſerv. Confidence in Gods providence.

Verſ. 14. IN the mount will the Lord provide, &c. We are taught with the like confidence, when all other meanes faile, to caſt our care upon God, as Abraham did; for whom the Lord provided another ſacrifice which he thought not upon, in ſtead of his ſonne Iſaack, Calvin. Therefore it is ſaid in the Pſalme 68.20. To the Lord belong the iſſues of death: he knoweth how to make a way for our deliverance, though we at the firſt ſee it not.

3. Obſerv. Gods voice muſt be obeyed.

Verſ. 18. IN thy ſeed ſhall all the Nations of the earth be bleſſed, becauſe thou haſt obeyed my voyce: Whereupon Ambroſe giveth this good note, Et nos ergo audiamus vocem Dei noſtri, ſi volumus apud eum gratiam invenire: Let us therefore heare and obey the voice of God, if we will finde grace with him.

I. The Explanation of doubtfull queſtions.

QUEST. I. Of the yeares of Sarahs life, why noted.

Verſ. 1. AND Sarah lived an hundred twenty ſeven yeares, &c. 1. The Hebrewes note, that the death of Sarah is immediately joyned to the birth of Rebecca, according to that ſaying in Eccleſiaſtes, The Sunne riſeth, and the Sunne ſetteth, Mercer. 2. She is the only woman, whoſe whole age is recorded in Scripture. 3. Becauſe the words are, ſhe lived an hundred years, twenty yeares, and ſeven yeares: ſome Hebrewes note by the dividing of the yeares, that ſhe was at an hundred yeares as faire as at twenty, and as chaſte as at ſeven. But this is too curious, ſeeing that the like phraſe is uſed in ſetting downe Iſmaels years, Gen. 25.17. in whom the like conſtancie, eſpecially in goodneſſe, appeared not. 4. Iſaack was at this time thirty ſeven yeare old, being borne in Sarahs ninety yeare: therefore the Hebrewes obſerve that the letters of the firſt word vaiihu, doe make thirty ſeven, inſinuating thereby, that theſe were the beſt dayes of Sarahs life, after the birth of Iſaack, in whom ſhe joyed. 5. But it is not like that Iſaack was now thirty ſeven yeares old, and Sarah died the ſame time when Iſaack was offered up, the Devill repreſenting the manner thereof to Sarah, as the Jewes fable, whereupon ſhee tooke a conceit and died: for whereas Abraham returned from Mount Moriah to Beerſheba againe, and there dwelled, Gen. 22.19. but now he was removed to Hebron, where Sarah died; there muſt needs ſome good ſpace of time come between Iſaacks offering up, and Sarahs death, Perer. 6. Whereas the word is put in the plurall, the lives of Sarah: we need neither refer it to three lives in man, the vegetative, ſenſitive, intellectuall life, nor to the changes & alterations, wich ſeemeth to make one life many: but the word is ſo uſed according to the phraſe of the Hebrew language, Calv. Hebrewes curious notes.

QUEST. II. The City of Arba, whence ſo called.

Verſ. 2. SARAH died in Kiriatharba: Which City Arbah, which ſignifieth foure, was ſo called; 1. Neither of the foure giants, Ahiman, Sheſhan, Talmai, Anach, Num. 13.23. for theſe were long after Abrahams time. 2. Nor yet of the foure Patriarks, Adam, Abraham, Iſaack, Iacob, there buried: for neither can it be proved that Adam was there buried, and it was ſo called before the other were there buried. 3. Neither was it ſo named of the forme and faſhion of the City, which ſhould conſiſt of foure parts. 4. But the Citie bare this name of Arbah, the father of Anak, Ioſu. 14.14. and 15.13. Mercer.

QUEST. III. Of Hebron, ſuppoſed to be the City of Iohn Baptiſt.

THE ſame is Hebron. 1. This City was not ſo named of Hebron, which came of one of the ſonnes of Caleb, mentioned, 1 Chron. 2.42. for it was ſo called long before his time. 2. It is probable, that this City Hebron was the place of Iohn Baptiſts Nativity: for this City did belong to Iudah, and was a City of the Prieſts, 1 Chron. 6.55. it was alſo ſituate in the hilly Countrey, Ioſua 14.12. ſo was the City of Iohn Baptiſt, both a City of Iudah belonging to the Prieſts, where Zachary his father dwelt, and had the ſituation in the hill Countrey, Luk. 1.39. 3. This Hebron is ſaid to bee in Canaan, as it is taken for the name of the whole Countrey: for the Canaanites were alſo one of the ſeven Nations that inhabited that Countrey: to whom Hebron belonged not, but to the Hittites, Perer. 4. Hebron ſignifieth a ſociety or conjunction: for there Abraham and Sarah, Iaack, Rebecca, Iacob, Lea, lay buried together as honourable couples: from hence then it ſeemeth the name was derived, Muſcul.

QUEST. IV. Whence Abraham came to mourne for Sarah.

Verſ. 2. ABRAHAM came to mourne, &c. 1. Neither is it like that Abraham at this time dwelled in Beerſheba, and Sarah in Hebron, and that he came thence hither to bewaile Sarah: for Abraham as he bewailed Sarah being dead, ſo he would not be wanting to her in her life. 2. Neither did Abraham come from burying of his father Thare, as ſome thinke: whom Pererius would have to die two yeare before: but the truth is, that he was dead 62. yeares before: for Abraham was now 137. yeares old, who was borne in the 70. yeare of Tharehs age, who lived 205. yeares in all: ſo Abraham was 75. yeares old when his father died, Gen. 12.5. to that adde 62. ſo ſhall we have Abrahams age of 137. 3. Neither doth this comming of Abraham ſignifie onely his addreſſing and preparing of himſelfe to mourne, Mercer. 4. But Abraham commeth from his owne tent into Sarahs, to mourne for her, for they had their tents and habitations apart, as it may appeare, Gen. 24.67. Iun.

QUEST. V. Wherefore Abraham weepeth over the corps of Sarah.

Verſ. 2. TO mourne for Sarah, and to weepe for her. 1. As Abraham by his weeping ſhewed his affection, ſo by his mourning voice he ſet forth the vertues of Sarah, and bewailed his loſſes, Perer. 2. He weepeth over the corps, not to provoke himſelfe to weepe by the ſight thereof, being of late ſo much grieved with joy for Iſaacks deliverance, as ſome Hebrewes thinke: but according to the uſe which then was, and after continued among the Jewes, which was to weepe a certaine time at the bodies or graves of the dead, as is evident, Iob. 11.37.

QUEST. VI. Whether it were lawfull for Abraham to buy a place of buriall.

Vers. 4. Give me a poſſeſſion of buriall with you, &c. Here a queſtion is moved, whether it were lawfull for Ephron to ſell a place of ſepulture, or for Abraham to buy it: for anſwer whereunto,

Hieron. trad. in Gen. 23.

1. I neither thinke with Hierome, that Ephron did not well in ſelling a place of buriall for money, and therefore his name is changed from Ephron with vau, to Ephron without vau: but if it were a fault in Ephron to take money, Abraham could not be without fault in urging him to take it: 2. Neither can Abraham be excuſed, in redeeming by this meanes his trouble and vexation, as Aquinas thinketh: for Lyran. in 23. Gen.

we muſt not doe evill that good may come thereof. 3. Neither ſay we with Lyranus, that Abraham buyeth onely the ground, the right of ſepulture he buyeth not, but deſireth it to be given him: for Abraham deſireth it to be given him onely for his money, and not otherwiſe: as it followeth, verſ. 9. 4. Nor yet with Thomas Anglicus, that the Sepulture of the Gentiles is no ſacred thing, and therfore it cannot be ſymoniacall to ſell it: for it had beene notwithſtanding ſymoniacall in Abraham to buy it, that was no Gentile but a beleever. 5. Nor yet is Cajetans anſwer ſufficient, that the place of buriall was then no ſacred thing, there being no poſitive lawes made as yet of that matter, and therefore it was no ſinne: for ſinne is not a tranſgreſſion of humane poſitive lawes, but of Gods Law. 6. Nor yet ſay we with Toſtatus, Toſtat. in cap 23. Gen.

Thom. in cap. 23. Gen.

In cap. 23. Gen.

that Ephron intended onely to make this field a burying place: but as yet none were there buried, and therefore the place was not ſacred. 7. But I rather preferre Thomas Aquinas other reſolution, that this double cave was not yet conſecrate or ordained for ſepulture, and therefore Abraham might lawfully buy it, and the other ſell it: as it is lawfull to buy a peece of ground to build a Church, or make a Churchyard in. 8. Adde hereunto, that Abraham would bury his dead apart from the Infidels, that had no hope of the reſurrection, Calvin: and that the dead ſhould take poſſeſſion of that land, which ſhould afterward be given to their living and remaining poſterity, Mercer.

QUEST. VII. Abraham why he is called a Prince of God.

Vers. 6. Thou art a Prince of God among us. 1. Not that he was a King, or had any authority over them: as the Septuagint read, Thou art a King from God among us. 2. But either he is ſo called, becauſe he was as Gods oracle (the Lord ſpeaking to him by viſions and dreames) unto whom they had recourſe for counſell in difficult matters, Lyran. Toſtat. 3. Or becauſe according to the Hebrew phraſe, excellent things are ſo named of God, as the mountaine of God, a man of God: the wreſtlings of God, that is, excellent wreſtlings, Gen. 38. Calvin. Perer. 4. Or he is ſo called a Prince of God, becauſe the Lord proſpered him, and made him famous for his vertue and godlineſſe: as Abimelech ſaid, God is with thee in all thou doeſt, Gen. 21. 22. Iun.

QUEST. VIII. Why they did not forbid Abraham a place of buriall.

Vers. 6. None of us ſhall forbid thee his ſepulchre, &c. 1. Some thinke, that the Hittites upon ſome hope which they conceived of the reſurrection, were willing that Abraham ſhould burie his dead among them, Lyppoman. but of that there is no certainty out of the text. 2. But hence it is gathered, that every family and kindred had a peculiar place of buriall for themſelves, Mercer. 3. The courteſie of this people is to be noted, that reverenced Abraham for his gifts, whereas even among Chriſtians many times men are envied and hated for their good parts, Muſcul.

QUEST. IX. Why it was called a double Cave.

Vers. 9. The cave of Machpelah, or double cave. It was ſo called. 1. Not for that in one cave they buried the men, in the other the women. 2. Or becauſe one cave was placed directly over another, Lyran. 3. Or that one was encloſed in the middeſt of the other, Hamerus. 4. Or becauſe Adam was buried in one, Eva in another, Thom. Anglic. 5. Neither was it ſo called double, beccauſe of the excellency, for that it opened upon Paradiſe, as the Hebrewes. 6. But it hath this name, becauſe it was a ſpacious cave, having many receptacles and corners, Mercer. 7. So that we need not runne here unto allegories, as Gregory by this double cave, underſtandeth the contemplative and active life, whereby men are buried and lequeſtred from the vanities of the world, ex Perer.

QUEST. X. Why Ephron ſetteth a price of 400. ſickles.

Vers. 15. The land is worth foure hundred ſickles of ſilver, &c. 1. Ephron ſpeaketh not this in Abrahams eare, nor ſignifying thereby, that the ground coſt him ſo much, and he could not well ſell it under, nor yet is it his meaning, that the ground was worth more to another, but to him, as his friend he would make no greater price: but Ephron dealeth ſimply, that ſo ſmall a price was not to be ſtood upon betweene them, Mercer. 2. Abraham received gifts of Pharao and Abimelech, and refuſed them not: but here he would not receive a peece of ground of gift, becauſe it was to remaine to him and his poſterity. 3. Although Abraham purchaſed this cave for his money, yet it is true, as Saint Stephen ſaith, that he had not ſo much as the breadth of a foot, that is, of Gods gift. 4. Whereas ſome collect, that the foure hundred ſickles ſignified the terme of foure hundred yeares: which time expired, then the whole Countrey ſhould fall to Abrahams poſterity, it is too curious, Mercer. how much a ſickle is valued at, hath beene declared before, quæſt. 11. in cap. 20.

QUE

Quest. XI. Ephron not faulty in taking Abrahams money.

Verſ. 16. Abraham weighed to Ephron the ſilver, &c. 1. It was the uſe then to deliver money by weight: and in that it is added, it was currant money among merchants: Ephron did not as R. Iſaach imagineth, get ſome merchant to tell the money, and to refuſe that which was not good; but the meaning is, that Abraham payed currant money both for weight and goodneſſe, Mercer. 2. The Hebrewes, whom Hieromo follow, and the Cabuliſts, becauſe Ephron is written here without vau, doe note, that as ſomething was taken from his name, ſo his credit was empaired: but this note is not true, for afterward Ephron is expreſſed with vau, as alſo it is uſuall in the Hebrew tongue to have words ſet downe ſometime fully, ſometime with abbreviation. 3. The like curioſity is in the Cabaliſts: who obſerve, that the foure letters of Ephrons name, doe ſignifie 400. anſwerable to the ſumme of money received: for neither did Ephron commit any unlawfull thing in ſelling, nor Abraham in buying.

The Hebrewes curious note.

Quest. XII. Of the circumſtances and manner of contract which Abraham maketh.

Verſ. 17. Over againſt Mamre. 1. This Mamre and Hebron were all one, as is expreſſed, verſ. 19. from whence not farre off was the plaine or valley of Mamre, where Abraham dwelt ſo long time: whence he eſpied and marked this place as fitteſt for buriall. 2. Here all the circumſtances uſed in bargaining and ſelling are expreſſed: as the bounding and confronting of the place, as alſo the appurtenances, namely the trees. 3. Like as Ieremie in making a ſolemne purchaſe, with writing, ſealing, witneſſes, and delivery, chap. 32. did thereby ſhew the certainty of the returne of the Iſraelites into that country againe: So Abraham by making ſure worke in this contract, doth profeſſe his hope of obtaining the land of Canaan, as God had promiſed.

Quest. XIII. How Moſes and Steven reporting this ſtory, may be reconciled.

THere remaineth yet a great queſtion, that whereas Abraham in this chapter is ſaid to have bought a burying place of Ephron the ſonne of Zoar: Stephen reporting the ſame ſtorie ſaith, that Abraham bought it of the ſonnes of Emor, ſonne of Sichem, Act. 7. 15, 16. Now that theſe places may be the better reconciled, I will ſet downe the words themſelves, as they were uttered by Saint Stephen, Act. 7. 15, 16. So Iacob went downe into Egypt, and he died, and our fathers: and were removed unto Sichem, and put in the Sepulcher which Abraham had bought for money of the ſonnes of Emor, ſonne of Sichem.

Reconciliation of places.

Act. 7. 15, 16. expounded.

Out of theſe words foure principall doubts doe ariſe: firſt, how it is ſaid, that the fathers were removed into Sichem: whereas the Scripture maketh mention onely of the burying of Ioſephs bones there, Ioſ. 24. 32. But this doubt is eaſily removed, for although that ſpeciall mention be made of Ioſeph onely, both becauſe he was the moſt honourable of all the Patriarks, and for that he gave a ſpeciall charge to his brethren, and tooke an oath of them for the carrying of his bones out of Egypt, Gen. 50. 25. yet it is like, that the reſt of the Patriarks were alſo removed thither. And S. Hierome witneſſeth, that in his time the Sepulchers of the twelve Patriarks were ſhewed in Sichem, Epiſt. 101.

Whether all the Patriarks were removed to Sichem.

The ſecond doubt is, how the Patriarks are ſaid to be put in the Sepulcher that Abraham bought: hereof there are three ſolutions. 1. The Syrian Interpreter readeth in the ſingular number, He was put, and ſo applieth it onely to Iacob: but all the tranſlations are againſt this reading, which with one conſent read in the plurall, and they were put, and ſo is alſo the originall, etetheſan, they were placed. 2. Some take it according to the phraſe of Scripture, which ſpeaking in the plurall, yet meaneth ſome one: as Matth. 26. 8. the Diſciples are ſaid to have murmured, whereas Iohn imputeth it onely to Iudas, chap. 12. 4. ſo in this place Iacob is onely underſtood to be buried in that Sepulcher, Perer. But this anſwer is not ſufficient, for if this be underſtood of Iacob, then the former ſpeech alſo, that they were tranſlated into Sichem, which is no where extant in Scripture, that Iacob was carried thither: and that inſtance of Iudas is nothing like, for though Iudas was the beginning of the murmuring, yet ſome other of the Diſciples might conſent unto him. 3. Some doe underſtand it joyntly of Iacob and the fathers, that part of them were buried in Sichem, part in Abrahams cave in Hebron, Iun. in paral. and ſome affirme that the twelve Patriarks were buried in Hebron, though firſt removed to Sichem, Ioſephus lib. 2. antiquitat. 4. But it is more probable, that they were buried in Sichem, in that place of ground which not Abraham, but Iacob bought of the ſonnes of Hemor, as ſhall be ſeene afterward.

The Patriarks whether buryed in Abrahams Cave.

The third doubt is, that Hemor is ſaid to be the ſonne of Sichem, whereas he was Sichems father: 1. Some anſwer, that Zohar Ephrons father was alſo called Hemor, and his father Sichem, Lyranus, Cajetan. But this is not like, that where we finde an Hemor that was Sichems father in Scripture, wee ſhould without warrant deviſe another Hemor to be Sichems ſonne: and ſeeing one Ephrons father is mentioned in the ſtory, there was no reaſon for Stephen to name his grand-father here. 2. Wherefore this doubt is more eaſily ſalved thus; that whereas in the originall there is neither father nor ſonne expreſſed, but only thus, Hemor of Sichem, the Scripture will beare it as well to underſtand father as ſonne: as Luk. 24. 10. we read Mary of Iames, without any other addition, that is, the mother of Iames, as another Evangeliſt expoundeth, Mark. 15. 40.

Hemor Sichems father, not his ſonne.

The fourth doubt remaineth: becauſe Abraham is ſaid to have bought the Sepulcher of the ſonnes of Hemor, whereas it was Iacob and not Abraham: to this queſtion foure anſwers are made:

How Abraham is ſaid to have bought a Sepulcher of the ſonnes of Hemor, which Iacob did, and not Abraham.

1. Some thinke that Stephen in ſo long a ſtory might faile in memory, and miſtake one name for another, Abraham for Iacob: ſic Beda, Eugubinus, Melchior Canus, &c. But this is not like: 1. Becauſe Stephen was full of the holy Ghoſt, and directed thereby to ſpeake. 2. Though Stephen had ſlipped, Saint Saint Luke would not have recorded that errour. 3. The Jewes would have derided Stephen, if hee had committed so apparent an overſight. 4. If the leaſt errour ſhould be admitted in Scriptures, wee ſhould never be at any certainty for our faith.

2. Some others doe affirme, that Zohar Ephrons father was alſo called Emor, and ſo Abraham bought it of Ephron the ſonne of Zohar or Emor, Lyran. Cajetan. But this expoſition I refuſed before, both for that no ſuch thing is mentioned in Geneſis, from whence this ſtory is alleaged: neither any other Hemor or Sichem is read of, but of whom Iacob bought the parcell of ground: as alſo Abraham bought it of Ephron the ſonne of Zohar, but this text ſaith, of the ſonnes.

3. Some doe joyne the words thus together, And they were put in the tombe by the ſons of Hemor of Sichem, which Abraham bought, and would have this to be the meaning, that the Sichemites tranſlated the Patriarks from Sichem to Hebron, not vouchſafing them any buriall among them. But beſide, that there is no evidence of this fact out of the Scripture, it is more like that the Sichemites, abhorring the memory of Simeon and Levi their cruelty, would rather have unburied them, than honoured them with their fathers grave and ſepulture.

4. Neither yet can I conſent, that Abraham through the errour of the Writers and pen-men was thruſt into the text for Iacob: which is the conjecture of Eugubinus, Lyppoman, Calvin, Beza. 1. Both for that there is no ſimilitude betweene the names of Abraham and Iacob, and ſo one not likely to be miſtaken for another. 2. As alſo there can be no Copy ſhewed, that readeth Iacob for Abraham; neither Greeke, Syriake, or Latine. 3. And it is evident that Stephen pointeth at that Sepulcher which Abraham bought, for Iacob bought not a Sepulcher, but a peece of ground to build an Altar in: and for an hundred lambs, not for ſilver, for the which Abraham is here ſaid to buy it.

5. Wherefore there remaineth onely this way to reconcile theſe places, which for my part I doubt not but to preferre before the reſt: Saint Stephen in this place abridgeth two hiſtories, one of Abrahams buying a Sepulcher, the other of Iacobs purchaſe of a peece of ground from Hemor: ſo that his meaning is, that Iacob and the fathers were buried, part in Sichem, part in the Sepulcher in Hebron: theſe words then of Emor of Sichem muſt be referred to the firſt words, They were removed to Sichem, ſic hiſtor. Scholaſt. Iun. parall. the words then comming betweene, and were put in the Sepulcher which Abraham bought for money, muſt be read with a parentheſis, and the ſenſe ſuſpended to make a perfect ſentence. The like example, where two hiſtories are abridged and joyned together, we have Exod. 12.40. The dwelling of the children of Iſrael while they dwelled in Egypt, was 430. yeares: in which ſumme is comprehended not onely their dwelling in Egypt, (for ſo long they were not ſojourners there) but in Canaan, in a land not theirs: and yet the one is named, the other underſtood: ſo then as the ſaying is true, In ſenſu diviſo, non compoſito, dividing the ſenſe and ſentence concerning their abode both in Egypt and Canaan: in like manner, in this place the ſentence muſt be divided, and part referred to Abrahams purchaſe, part to Iacobs.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Lawfull to weepe for the dead, ſo it be done in meaſure.

Verſ. 2. Abraham came to mourne for Sarah, and to weepe for her. It is lawfull then to mourne and lament for the dead, ſo it be done in meaſure and moderately. Man is not as a ſtocke or a ſtone, to be without all naturall paſſions or affections. We ſee that our Saviour himſelfe alſo wept going to Lazarus grave, which they interpreted to proceed from his love, Ioh. 11.35. Saint Paul forbiddeth not all ſorrow at all, but not as men without hope, 1 Theſ. 4.13. Wherefore that ſaying of Solon, Mors mea non careat lachrymis, &c. Let not my death want teares, ſo it be done temperately, is to be preferred before that of Ennius, Nemo me lachrymis decoret, &c. Let no man weepe for me, Perer.

2. Doct. Our mourning for the dead muſt be in meaſure.

Verſ. 3. Abraham roſe up from the ſight of the corps, &c. Leſt that he might be overcome of griefe, he removeth the object thereof: which teacheth us that we ſhould keepe a meaſure in our griefe: not to mourne as the heathen doe, that have no hope of the reſurrection: or as thoſe paſſionate women, which wept for their children and would not bee comforted, Matth. 1. 16. It is well obſerved, that the Egyptians mourned for Iacob ſeventy dayes, Ioſeph but ſeven dayes, Gen. 50.3.10. to ſhew a difference betweene the exceſſive griefe of men that have no hope, and the moderate ſorrow of the faithfull.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Againſt prayer and ſacrifice for the dead.

Abraham roſe up from the ſight of the corps. The Latine text readeth, ab officio funeris, from the funerall office or duty: by which Pererius would prove, that the Patriarks uſed to faſt and pray, and offer ſacrifice for the dead, in cap. 23. Gen. Num. 12. which is a corrupt doctrine, grounded upon a corrupt text: for the originall maketh no mention of any office, but onely that Abraham roſe up from the ſight of the corps: and the text ſaith not he came to faſt or pray, but to mourne for Sarah.

2. Confut.

2. Confut. Against Purgatory.

Against Bellarmine saith, Continetur implicite mentionem purgatorii; That the mention of Purgatory is here implied: and that for this cause onely Iacob and Ioseph desired that their bones might be removed into the land of promise, because they knew that their sacrifice should be offered for the dead, de Purg. lib.1.cap.11.

Contra. 1. And is not this now a goodly argument? Abraham rose up from the sight of the corps, Ergo Sarah was in purgatory. 2. If the fathers went to purgatory, then the bosome of Abraham, a place of rest and comfort, Luk.16.25. must be purgatory, for thither the fathers went. 3. What a bold assertion is this, to say that the fathers for that cause desired to be buried in the land of promise: when as the Scripture directly sheweth this to have beene the cause, the profession of their faith and hope, that the land of promise should be given them; as Ioseph saith: God will surely visit you, and you shall carry my bones hence, Gen.50.25.

6. Morall observations.

1. Observ. Against ambitious desire of honour.

Vers.6. THou art a Prince of God among us, &c. Abraham had said before of himselfe, I am a stranger, and a forreiner among you: the more Abraham humbleth himselfe, the more he is exalted of them: Thus honour fleeth away from them that hunt after it, and it is cast upon them that seeke it not, as the shadow followeth the body: so here it falleth out to Abraham, according to the saying in the Proverbs, It is better that it be said unto thee, come up hither, than to be put lower in the presence of the Prince, Prov.25.7. for Abraham in humbling himselfe, is more honoured before the Prince of the people here.

2. Observ. Wisdome and circumspection to be used in contracts.

Vers.17. IN the sight of the Hittites: The field is made sure to Abraham in the sight of many witnesses: Abraham provideth for his security and quietnesse afterward, that this purchase might be sure to him and his without question: whereby we learne, that it is lawfull for the faithfull wisely to provide and foresee for themselves, and to be wary and circumspect in all their doings, Muscul. according to that saying of our Saviour, To be wise as Serpents, and innocent as Doves, Matth.10.16.

CHAP. XXIV.

1. The Method.

THis Chapter hath three parts: First, the sending of Abrahams servant to provide a wife for Isaack, with Abrahams instructions, and his servants oath, from vers.1. to vers.10.

The second sheweth the servants behaviour in his journey. 1. His prayer unto God, vers.11.15. 2. The fruit of his prayer, in meeting with Rebecca, vers.15. to 29. 3. His entertainment, vers.30. to 34. 4. The delivering of his message, vers.35. to 48. 5. The good successe thereof, in obtaining their consent for Rebecca, to vers.61.

The third part setteth forth the returne of Rebecca with Abrahams servant, and her receiving and welcome by Isaack, vers.61. to the end.

2. The divers readings.

v.7. To thee and thy seed. S. to thy seed. cæter. S.ad.

Ch.ad. H.ad. 67. He loved her so much, that he tempered the griefe which hapned by the death of his mother. H. Isaack comforted himselfe after the death of his mother.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

Quest. I. Why Abraham is said to be old.

Vers. 1. NOw Abraham was old. 1. Neither is the conjecture of some Hebrewes to be received, that thinke because Abraham was said to be old at an hundred yeares, Gen. 18.11. that even then Abraham gave this charge to his servant, to provide Isaack a wife, but he deferred the execution of it till now, when Isaack was of ripe yeares: for it is evident, vers. 10. that the execution of this charge followed immediately upon the giving thereof, Mercer. 2. Neither need we with Rupertus, to make an allegorie of Abrahams old age: that he is said to be old, perfectione fidei, in the perfection of faith: but he is called old, and the first so named in Scripture, not in respect of those long lived Patriarks, but in comparison of that age wherein he lived. 3. Abraham was now 140. yeares old, not 137. as Lyppoman conjecturech: for Isaack was now 40. yeares old when he married Rebecca, Gen. 25.20. who was borne when Abraham was in his hundred yeare, Perer.

Quest. II. Wherein Abraham was so exceedingly blessed.

THe Lord had blessed Abraham in all things, &c. The word is bacol: which some of the Hebrewes dreame to have beene Abrahams daughter: but this is great boldnesse to affirme that which the Scripture is silent in: and if Abraham had received a daughter by Sarah, as well as a sonne, he would have been no lesse carefull to have bestowed her in marriage, than he was for Isaack, Mercer. 2. Abraham was principally blessed in foure things, in his old age, vers. 1. in his great substance, vers. 35. in his issue, vers. 36. and in the victory of his enemies, Perer.

Quest. III. Why Abraham sendeth his servant, and who his servant was.

Vers. 2. ABraham said to the eldest servant of his house, &c. 1. This servant is thought to be Eliezer of Damascus, which had the government of his house, of whom mention was made before chap. 15. 2. Who is thought, being now very old, to have come with Abraham into the land of Canaan 65. yeares before, and to have knowne all Abrahams kindred, Cajetan. 3. Abraham sendeth not Isaack, who then of 40. yeares, might be judged as one of 25. now, lest the Canaanites might have abused his flexible youth, and therefore he committeth this businesse to his grave and prudent servant.

Quest. IV. Of the putting the hand under the thigh.

Vers. 2. PVt now thy hand under my thigh. 1. This was neither the generall custome of those times, as Chrysostome thinketh, for neither Abimelech with Abraham, Gen. 20. nor afterwards with Isaack, Gen. 26. and Laban with Iacob making a covenant, Gen. 32. and one swearing to another, doe use this ceremonie, which sheweth it to have beene no generall custome. 2. Neither was this custome derived from the Indians, as Aben Ezra, who in honour of Bacchus, who is fabled to have come forth of Iupiters thigh: and for reverence unto the instruments of generation, which they worshipped under the name of Priapus, did use in taking of an oath, to put their hand under the thigh: for neither Abraham would have imitated such an idolatrous usage, and Dionysius called Bacchus, is found to have beene long after Abraham, in the time of Iosua. 3. Neither is it sufficient to say, that this manner was used to signifie the firmnesse of an oath, because the thighs are as the pillars of the body, Oleaster: for the strength of man as well consisteth in his armes and legges. 4. Nor yet was this a token of subjection onely and superiority: for Iosephs Prince in Egypt, putteth his hand under his fathers thigh, Gen. 47.29. 5. But either we must say with Rabbi Hezechias in Gen. that this usage was retained for the honour of circumcision, which was performed in the parts adjoyning. 6. Or with Ambrose and Augustine, we understand a mystery in this ceremony, because Christ was to come in that flesh, Quæ de illo semen propagunda erat, Which should be propagated out of that thigh.

Traditt. Hebraic. in Gen.

Quest

QUEST. V. Of the divers kindes of adjuring.

Vers. 3. I will make thee sweare, or adjure thee, &c. This word to adjure one, is taken two wayes in Scripture: either actively, when we by the reverence of the divine Majestie, doe urge and induce another to speake the truth, or doe or not doe any thing: as Ahab adjured Michaias, and charged him in the name of God to speake the truth, 2 Chron. 18.15. or else it is used passively, when we force another to take an oath, as Abraham here maketh his servant to sweare. The first kinde of adjuration is used two wayes: 1. By way of deprecation and intreaty by the inferiour to the superiour, as the devils doe impudently adjure Christ not to torment them, Matth. 5.7. but it was by way of intreaty, vers. 10. 2. It is used by way of authority and command: 1. Thus the Prince adjureth his subjects, as Saul did the people, that they should eat nothing till night, 1 Sam. 14.24. 2. Thus the Apostles charged and commanded the spirits to come out of men, as Paul did, Act. 16.18. By this kinde of adjuration, which is with power and authority, spirits may be adjured: but by the other, which is by intreaty and supplication to conjure them, which is nothing else but to intreat them for their helpe, as Magicians and sorcerers doe, it is a great impiety, and plaine idolatry. 3. Yea by a power and authority given from God: thus the sensleste creatures may be adjured and commanded, as Iosua by the power of God commanded the Sunne to stand still, and it obeyed, Perer.

Spirits how they may be adjured.

The other kinde of adjuring, which is by ministring an oath, is to be used onely in grave and weighty causes: either divine, as Nehemiah tooke an oath of the people, that they should not give their daughters in marriage to the heathen, Nehem. 13.25. or in humane affaires: 1. For the deciding of controversies, and ending of strife, Heb. 6.16. 2. For the binding of one to the obedient or faithfull performance of his service. As Abraham here taketh an oath of his servant, so officers may lawfully be sworne for the upright execution of their office, and subjects to be loyall and true to their Prince. 3. For the establishing of a league or covenant, as an oath was betweene Iacob and Laban, Gen. 32.53. 4. For the clearing of a suspition: as the woman suspected of adultery, was charged with an oath by the Priest, Numb. 5.21. 5. For the satisfaction of our neighbour in a matter of trust, Exod. 22.11. so by the law the debtor may be lawfully urged with an oath by his creditor. 6. For the security of a mans life, one may sweare to another: as the Egyptian servant to the Amalekite, required an oath of David for the safety of his life and estate: Sweare unto me by God, that thou wilt neither kill me, nor deliver me into the hands of my master, &c. 1 Sam. 30.15.

An oath in what cases it may lawfully be taken.

QUEST. VI. Why Abraham refuseth to take a wife from the daughters of Canaan.

Vers. 3. Thou shalt not take to my sonne of the daughters of Canaan, &c. The reasons why Abraham would not have his sonne Isaack be linked in mariage with the Canaanites, are these: 1. Because they came of cursed Cham: Generis author maledictionis hereditatem transmisit in suos: The author of their stocke for not honouring his father, did bring a curse as an inheritance upon his posterity, Ambr. lib de Abrah. cap. 9. 2. Because the Canaanites were Idolaters, and of corrupt manners: Primum in conjugio religio quæritur; Religion must first be sought in mariage, Ambr. Againe, Salomon was corrupted and perverted from his faith by his idolatrous wives: for although Nachors stocke were not pure in religion, having a smattering of imagery and idolatrous worship, as Laban sought for his gods that were stolen from him, Gen. 31.30. yet they had some knowledge and understanding of God, as appeareth in this chapter, vers. 50. This thing is proceeded of the Lord, &c. And beside, their manners were honest and commendable, not like to the Canaanites, as is evident by Rebecca her virginity, and their humanity in entertaining of strangers, Perer. 3. Another reason hereof was, for that the Lord promised the Countrey to Abrahams posterity, and to expell the Canaanites: therefore Abraham, as he refused to bury his dead among them, so much lesse would mingle his seed in mariage with them, Mercer.

QUEST. VII. Why Abraham sendeth not Isaack to chuse his owne wife.

Vers. 4. Thou shalt goe. 1. Though Abraham send his servant about this businesse of mariage, yet it was not without Isaacks consent, who knowing this servant to be the minister of his fathers will, yeeldeth himselfe to his fathers choice. 2. Isaack is not sent, not to make a way unto a mystery, as Rabanus thinketh, to shadow forth Christ, who not by himselfe went, but by his Apostles sent to the Gentiles. And though Isaack afterward sent Iacob for the same end, to chuse him a wife from his fathers kindred: yet that case was not like to this: for Isaack had two sonnes, Abraham but one: and besides Iacob fled from the wrath of his brother, to save his life, Perer. And further, Isaack was but forty yeares old, a youth in those dayes; Iacob was about seventy seven yeares of age, and so fitter to chuse for himselfe.

QUEST. VIII. In what sense Mesopotamia is called Abrahams Country, seeing he was borne in Chaldea.

Vers. 4. Goe unto my Countrey and kindred. This Countrey and place of Abrahams kindred is named to be Aram Naharaim, that is, Mesopotamia, vers. 10. where was the City of Nahor, which is Charran, Gen. 28.10. Now Charran in Mesopotamia is said to be Abrahams Countrey: 1. Not that he was borne there, as Rambam, and Paulus Burgens. thinke: for the place of Abrahams birth was in the Chaldees, Gen. 11.28. 2. Neither is it called his Country, because as Tostatus thinketh, he dwelt there a long time, even 60. yeares, till the death of his father, which is a great errour: for Abraham stayed not long in Charran: Eucherius thinketh but one yeare, Pererius not so much, Mercerus some two yeares, and not five yeares: howsoever the time was not long; for Abraham no doubt being called to goe into Canaan,

How long Abraham staied in Charran.

Canaan, would make no long aboad by the way, nor yet deferre to obey Gods commandement: So the neither Pererius thinketh right, that Terah lived 60. yeares in Charran after Abrahams departure: for Abraham came not into Canaan till after his fathers death, Act. 7.4. And Tostatus also is deceived, that Abraham with Terah lived together 60. yeares in Charran: for seeing Abraham was but 75. yeares old when he departed from Charran, if he staied there 60. then was hee but 15 yeare old when he came first to Charran, which cannot be, for he was then married, Gen. 11. 30. But both these errors are builded upon a false ground, that Abraham was the eldest sonne of Terah, and borne in his 70. yeare, whereas the truth is, hee was the youngest, and borne in the 130. yeare of his fathers age, as hath beene before shewed in the questions upon the 11. chapter.

Pererius deceived.

3. Wherefore the solution is this, that Abraham calleth all the region beyond Euphrates his country, in respect of Canaan, which was on this side the river: and so Aram, Naharaim, or Mesopotamia, taken largely, as it comprehendeth Chaldea also, which indeed was Abrahams native countrey: also S. Stephen understandeth it, Act. 7.2.

QUEST. IX. How Isaack is said not to goe againe into Chaldea, where he was never before.

Vers. 6. BEware that thou bring not my sonne thither againe. 1. Not that Isaack was wholly against disposing of the servant, but that he should not promise or undertake to bring Isaack thither againe. 2. Though Isaack was never there before in his owne person, yet hee is said to return thither in respect of his father Abraham, in whose loines he was, who was called from thence: as Gen. 15. 16. in the fourth generation it is said the Israelites shall returne thither againe, though their fathers onely, and not themselves had beene there before, Mercer. And in the same sense we may say to such as are borne under the Gospell; Take heed that ye never returne to poperie againe, Muscul. 3. Two reasons especially moved Abraham, not to suffer Isaack to returne into his countrey: because God had called him from his fathers house, never to returne thither: and so God promised to him and his seed the land of Canaan: which promise might have beene hindred by Isaacks departure, Perer. Mercer. 4. Lest he went thither to fetch a wife and to returne againe; but if Isaacks wife refusing to come, he had gone himselfe, there was feare of his abiding there still, Mercer.

QUEST. X. Angels ministers and helpers of mariage.

Vers. 7. HE shall send his Angel, &c. 1. This Abraham uttereth not by way of wishing, as [illegible] but he doth confidently assure himselfe of the assistance of Gods Angel, Mercer. 2. We see the gentle nature of the Angels, that are willing to yeeld their ministerie and service to [illegible] rable men, Luther. 3. The dignity of marriage is set forth, which is guided and directed by Angels, Mercer.

QUEST. XI. How Abrahams servant is said to have all his masters goods in his hand.

Vers. 10. HE tooke ten camels, and he had all his masters goods in his hand, &c. 1. Wee do not with Rupertus allegorize these words, by the ten Camels understanding the ten commandements, and by all manner of goods, the spirituall gifts which the Apostles carried to the Gentiles. 2. But this is a reason why he tooke ten camels, because all his masters goods were in his hand: as [illegible] and the Genev. read: as it is said before, that he had rule over all that Abraham had, v. 2. [illegible] like phrase, c. 16. 6. 3. Others doe read, that he carried of all his masters goods with him: either [illegible] of every sort, Perer. or all is understood for many, Mercer. but the other reading is better. 4. That conceit of Rasi is but a toy, that he is said to carry of all his goods, because he had a deed of gift as it were of all his masters goods to Isaack: for it is not like that Abraham had yet disposed of all his goods, leaving his children by Ketura were yet unborne, to whom hee gave their portions, Mercer.

QUEST. XII. Of the abundance and necessary use of Camels.

TEn camels. 1. In Hebrew, it is written with G, not C, a Camel, howsoever use hath otherwise obtained in other tongues, Calvin. 2. In those countreys there was great abundance of camels; as wee read, that the Hebrewes overcomming the Agarens in battell, tooke from them fifty thousand camels, 1 Chron. 5. 20. there was also great use of them for their swiftnesse, they would goe a hundred mile a day: for their strength, they would beare seven hundred, or a thousand weight: for their hardnesse, they would forbeare drinke sometime eight, yea fifteene daies, ex Iul. Scalig. adver. Cardan. exercitat. 209. num. 2. 3. It appeareth then, that this was a most solemne message, or embassage rather: 1. by the companie that went, (for other servants accompanied him, vers. 32. to guard those camels) by the rich gifts that were carried: by the length of the journey which they undertooke: by the worthinesse of the messenger, the chiefe in Abrahams house, Perer.

QUEST. XIII. Of the city of Nahor.

Hebrewes fables.

TO the citie of Nahor. 1. Not where Nahor was borne, but where Nahor (though now dead) had long time dwelled, as it is like not long after that Abraham with his father Thare came thither. 2. The Hebrewes here faigne a miracle without cause, that Abrahams servant came from home to Charras in a daies journey: whereas they themselves write, that from Hebron thither it was seventeene daies journey: Ptolomie counteth from Beersheba (from whence Hebron was not farre distant) to Charras eight degrees, which make 120. Germane miles, Mercer.

QUEST.

QUEST. XIV. Whether Abrahams ſervant did well in asking a ſigne.

Verſ. 14. GRant that the maid to whom I ſay, &c. This asking of a ſigne was no tempting of God, and it is farre differing from the ſuperſtitious conjectures and vaine obſervations of the Augures and wiſe men among the heathen. 1. One difference is, as Auguſtine noteth it, Aliud eſt miracula poſcere, quod ipſo miraculo ſignum ſit, aliud hæc obſervare, quæ ita fiant, ut mira non ſint, &c. It is one thing to aske ſome ſtrange thing, which by the ſtrangeneſſe thereof may be a ſigne, another thing to obſerve thoſe things which are not miraculous or ſtrange, ſuper Geneſ. qu. 53. ſuch was the flying of birds, the ſearching of beaſts inwards, which were ſuperſtitiouſly obſerved by the heathen, being things ordinarie and uſuall, and of no ſpeciall note. But that which this ſervant asketh to be a ſigne, was a rare and ſtrange thing, and not uſually to be expected. 2. Again Lyranus giveth another note: he did not aske a ſigne by way of divination, ſed præmiſſa oratione petivit ſignum à domino: but making his praier before he craveth a ſigne. 3. Further it is to be conſidered, that he fetcheth not his ſigne a farre off, ſed ex re præſenti, from the preſent buſineſſe. Calvin. and he ſeeketh no other conjecture, but from her hoſpitalitie and courteſie, that ſhee might be in manners anſwerable to his maſter, Chryſoſt. He therefore deſireth no vaine, light or impertinent ſigne to be given him, but a grave, profitable, and fit demonſtration from the manners and behaviour of the woman. 4. He asketh not a ſigne as doubting of Gods power, or of the veritie of his promiſes; but he asketh in faith, relying upon Gods providence, not preſcribing unto God, but praying, that what God had determined concerning Iſaacks wife, might be made knowne unto him: for thus he ſaith, Let that be ſhee, whom thou haſt ordained for thy ſervant Iſaack: and hereunto he was much encouraged by that ſaying of Abraham, verſ. 7. he ſhall ſend his angell before thee; Muſcul. Perer. 5. He was alſo hereunto directed (whether by dreame as Aben Ezra thinketh) is uncertaine, but certainly by the inſtinct of Gods ſpirit, Calvin. Mercer. Wherefore in this manner to aske a ſigne, not of diſtruſt in Gods power, or doubtfulneſſe of his promiſes, but with confidence in God, not preſcribing unto him, but onely deſiring to be aſſured what is his good pleaſure: and this to doe, not with any ſuperſtitious minde, but with devout prayer, and by the ſecret motion of Gods ſpirit, it is no tempting of God at all. But as Auguſtine ſaith of Gedeon asking a ſigne, Conſultatio illa magis quàm tentatio fuit; It was a conſultation rather then a tentation.

Lyran. in cap. 24.

Now ſeeing an entrance is made into this queſtion, concerning the lawfulneſſe of ſuch gheſſes and conjectures as are made by mens ſpeeches, or behaviour, of things to come, as Abrahams ſervant deſireth to be informed by the anſwer and behaviour of the maid, whether ſhe were appointed to be Iſaacks wife, it ſhall not bee amiſſe ſome what more fully to diſcuſſe this matter.

QUEST. XV. Of the divers kindes of conjecturall and ominous predictions.

There are then foure ſorts of ſuch conjectures and ominous predictions of things to come. The firſt are naturall, which doe for the moſt part certainly foreſhew that which followeth, as the cauſe producing the effect: as a cloud riſing in the weſt cauſeth and foreſheweth raine: the Southwind heat, Luke 12. 54. or the effect doth ſometime premonſtrate the cauſe following, as the lightning the thunder, which though it be firſt ſeene and perceived by reaſon of the quickneſſe of ſight, yet is it laſt done. Theſe tokens and conjectures, it is not ſuperſtitious or vaine to obſerve.

Naturall predictions.

Secondly, there are ſome humane conjectures, which are taken by the words, behaviour and actions of men: as when the king of Iſrael had let fall a word, calling Benhadad brother, the meſſengers tooke it for a good ſigne, the Latine tranſlation ſaith, acceperunt pro omine, they tooke it for good lucke, 1 King. 20. 22. and thereby gave conjecture of the kings favour. So when the king Ahaſhuereſh had ſaid of Haman, will he force the queene alſo before me &c. they tooke this as a ſigne of the kings diſpleaſure, and covered Hamans face, Eſther 6. 8. The like in forraine ſtories is recorded of Tarquinius Superbus, king of Rome, who being ſent unto by his ſonne Sextus Tarquinius, how hee ſhould uſe the Gabii, that had received him into their citie, he gave no other anſwer to the meſſengers, but topped the heads of the poppies in the garden with his ſtaffe: whereby his ſonne perceived his meaning, that he ſhould make the heads of the citie lower by their heads. By theſe humane conjectures, we may gheſſe of ſuch things which are in mens owne power and purpoſe to doe: but otherwiſe to catch at words and deeds, and to make them as divine oracles, it is a ſuperſtitious and ridiculous uſe: as Cicero giveth an example, how, when M. Craſſus did ſhip his Armie at Brunduſium, one in the haven that brought figs from Caunus a citie in Caria, chanced to crie out Carica cauneas, Caunean figges: if Craſſus had taken this hint, as a ſigne of evill lucke, and gone no further, he had not periſhed, Tullie himſelfe conceiveth ſuch obſervations as ridiculous, for then, ſaith he, by the ſame reaſon, pedis offenſio, abruptio corrigiæ, & ſternutamenta ſunt obſervanda, the ſtumbling of the foot, breaking of the ſhooe point, ſneeſing, and other ſuch things, muſt be obſerved as ominous, Perer.

Humane conjectures, how lawfull.

Livius decad. 1. lib. 1.

Superſtitious and curious obſervations. Cicer. lib. de divinatione.

The third ſort of predictions is divine, which are either uttered by men inſpired of God, being well and knowing what they ſay: as Ionathan encouraged himſelfe with this ſigne, thereunto directed by the ſpirit of God: that if the Philiſtims ſhould ſay, come up unto us, he would take it as a ſigne, that God had delivered them into his hand, and ſo it came to paſſe, 1 Sam. 14. 10. Sometime God directeth the tongues to ſpeake the truth unawares: as Caiphas prophecied, that it was better for one man to die for the people, than the whole nation to periſh, Iohn 11. 50. yet Caiphas underſtood not what he ſaid: of Divine predictions how to be diſcerned.

August. l. 8. confess. c. 8.

this kinde was that direction given unto Augustine, much perplexed within himselfe, what profession of life he should betake himselfe unto, by a voice saying unto him, Tolle, lege; Take up thy booke and read: and then opening the booke hee light upon that place, Rom. 13. 13. See that wee walke honestly, &c. not in gluttonie and drunkennesse, chambering, and wantonnesse, &c. by reading which sentence, hee was resolved to reforme his life, and to leave his youthfull pleasures.

Diabolicall predictions. Lib. 2. in Gen. ad lit. cap. 17.

The fourth kind of ominous predictions is superstitious and diabolicall: whereof Augustine giveth his judgement thus: Cum ad decipiendos homines fit, spirituum seductorum operatio est; When it is done to deceive men, it is the working of seducing spirits: such was that conjecture of the priests and soothsayers among the Philistims, that if the arke which they had put into a new cart, went up the way by Bethshemesh, then it is he (that is, the God of Israel,) that hath done this great evill, 1 Sam. 6. 9. This indeed came to passe, and the event answered the prediction, whereby the devill cunningly wrought, that those idolatrous priests and soothsayers should still retaine their credit and estimation: Pausanias maketh mention of the like superstitious observation in the towne of Phare in Achaia, where after the people had consulted with the oracle, their manner was, going away to stop their eares, and the first voyce which they heard afterward, they tooke as a divine oracle, Pausan. in Achaic. Cicero reporteth of Paulus Æmilius, that preparing to goe against Perses king of Macedonia, and seeing his daughter sad, and she answering, being asked the reason, because her little dogge called Persa, was dead: saith he, Accipio omen, I take this a signe of good lucke, my daughter. Such superstitious, curious and vaine observations, are not beseeming a Christian profession: which Sathan useth as meanes to keepe men in a superstitious awe and feare, and to seduce them from trusting in the providence of God.

Cicer. lib. 1. divination.

Quest. XIV. Why it is said that Rebecca was a virgin, with this addition, and unknown of man.

Vers. 16. A Virgin, and unknowne of man, &c. Lest this might be thought a superfluous speech, because she could not have bene a virgin, unlesse she were unknowne of man, divers interpretations are given. 1. Some thinke that she is called a virgin in respect of her outward habit, and unknowne of man for her chastitie, Cajetan. 2. Others, that because there was a lewd use among the Gentiles, to abuse other parts of the body to their filthy lust, beside the place of virginitie: they thinke shee is called not onely a virgin, but altogether untouched or unknowne in any part of her body, Rabbi Salomon. 3. Some, that she was not a virgin onely in body, but unknowne of man, that is, untempted in her minde of the devill, Origen. hom. 10. in Genes. 4. Some thinke this clause is added, to shew a difference betweene these two words, betula and gnalma, which both signifie a virgin: because the first here used doth betoken a virgin corrupted: as Ioel 1. 8. mourne like a virgin for the husband of her youth: therefore it is further expounded, unknowne of man, Leo Castro. in 7. Isai. ex Pro. 5. But this may be a sufficient answer, that the scripture useth sometime a reperition of the same thing in other words, for a more sure demonstration of that which is affirmed: as Augustine saith, firmatum esse sententiæ in repetitione; that the strength of the sentence is in the repetition: and therefore for the more full manifestation of the virginitie of Rebecca, because many goe for virgins that are not, the same thing is twice expressed, Mercer.

Quest. XV. Of the word almah, that it alwaies betokeneth a virgin.

Cajetan. in 30. proverbior. Prov. 30. 19. expounded.

NOw further as touching the word gnalmah, whereas the Jewes to obscure that prophecie, Isay 7. 14. a virgin shall conceive &c. doe affirme, that it is sometime taken for a young woman corrupted, Prov. 30. 19. the way of a man with a maid, gnelam: for answer hereunto, 1. We neither will grant with Cajetane, that the word is here taken for a woman, not a virgin, because saith he, the way of a man with a virgin may be knowne by the markes of her virginitie, but with a woman not so easily: for the wise man speaketh not here of such markes, but of the secret and close meetings of such, which can hardly be known. 2. Neither need wee with Lyranus, to referre it to the incomprehensible mysterie of the incarnation of Christ in his mothers wombe: who expoundeth this place by that of Jeremie, a woman shall compasse a man, Ierem. 31. 22. for it is evident by the verse following: such is the way of an adulterous man, Prov. 30. 20. that the wise man speaketh of such lewd practices before. 3. Nor yet doth it fully satisfie to say, that the wise man calleth her a virgin, which though shee bee not so, yet would be so taken, Iunius: for still the objection remaineth strong against that prophecie, Isay 7. 16. that virgin should likewise be so taken there. 4. But the best answer is, that he speaketh of such a maid or virgin, whose chastitie or virginitie is in the first attempt violated, (being a virgin till then) and yet would conceale the fact, as though no such thing were done: so that notwithstanding any objection out of this place, Hieroms observation is justified, that gnelam in scripture, is alwaies taken for a virgin uncorrupted, lib. 1. adverss. Iovin.

Quest. XVI. Of Rebeccaes receiving of the gifts.

Vers. 22. THe man tooke a golden abillement, &c. It may bee questioned how it stood with the modestie of the maid, to take these gifts of a stranger. 1. Some defend it, for that there was no danger, seeing hee was an aged and reverent person of whom shee received them, and it was done in the presence of the whole company that came with him, Paner. 2. Some thinke, that she might take them as a reward of her paines which shee tooke, in watering ten Camels, whereof each, as the Hebrews say, will drinke ten Hydriæ, or great pitchers full. 3. But the true answer is, that be-he gave her these gifts, he had asked of her whose daughter she was, as appeareth in the 47. verse, and it is like she also had inquired of him: so that he resolved upon her in his minde to be the woman appointed for Isaak, and thereupon gave her these gifts, Mercer.

Quest. XVII. Of the jewell of halfe a shekel weight.

Of halfe a shekel weight. 1. Leaving the Hebrewes conceits, that this halfe shekel represented that halfe shekel, which the Israelites were taxed at, Exod. 30. the two bracelets, the two tables, the ten shekels, the ten Commandements. 2. The Jewell was not for the eares, but an ornament of the forehead or nose, weighed neither two sickles, as the Latins, nor one sickle as the Chalde readeth, but halfe a sickle. 3. Neither need wee to make it answerable to the bracelets, of ten shekels weight, to say with some Hebrewes, that there was a precious stone in it, that weighed halfe a shekel; or with Vatablus, that because a shekel is not here expressed, but only bechang, halfe, that it weighed halfe the weight of ten shekels afterward expressed: for it may appeare, that where bechang is put alone, there the other word shekel must be supplied, as Exod. 38. 26. halfe (a shekel) for a man. 4. Wherefore the proportion was correspondent, that the jewell for the frontlet should be but of halfe a shekel weight, both in respect of the place, which required no cumbersome ornament, and for that it was of gold: an halfe shekel whereof, that is, the 4. part of an ounce might be valued at 14. or 15. shillings sterling. Hebrewes conceits.

Quest. XVIII. Why it is said she went to her mother, not her fathers house.

Vers. 28. The maid ran and told them of her mothers house, &c. 1. Not that her father Bethuel was dead, as some thinke; for he is named, v. 50. 2. Neither is her mothers house named, because shee might have a step-mother beside, to whom she would not first tell this newes, Cajetane. 3. Neither went she to her mothers house, because her father being old, had committed the government to his sonne Laban. 4. But for that the women dwelled in houses by themselves, it is like she went first to her mother, from whom the rest of the family presently heard it, Mercer.

Quest. XIX. How the Scriptures which in shew are contrary, may be reconciled.

Vers. 38. Thou shalt goe to my fathers house, &c. But Abraham said, Thou shalt goe to my country and my kindred, v. 4. and other things beside seeme to be diversly reported, as v. 40. the Lord will send his Angell, and prosper thy journey; but Abraham saith, v. 7. he will send his Angell before thee, and no more: againe, v. 47. he saith, he first asked Rebecca whose daughter she was, and then gave her the jewels: but v. 53. it is set downe that hee asked her afterwards. Wherefore to reconcile these and such like places of Scripture, which seeme to be repugnant, certaine rules are to be observed.

The first rule is, that where the difference is in words and not in sense, as in the first place objected, there is no contrariety at all.

The second, that it is no repugnancy, if in one place a matter bee set forth more fully and without circumstances: if one expresse that which another denieth not, but only concealeth, as in the second instance supposed: the difference is not great.

Thirdly, if the order upon some speciall reason bee changed, and that is set downe last, which another hath first, as in the third instance produced, it need give no offence. And these three varieties do often occurre in the Evangelists, which doe rather commend and set forth the truth of the history, than disgrace it: that hereby it may appeare that they did not conferre together, or write all after one manner, of purpose, but in some variety of order and words were directed by the Spirit to write one truth.

Other rules also may be propounded for the reconciling of places of Scripture, which seeme at the first sight to be repugnant, in respect of the divers computation of time. 1. When as one writer doth inclusively account the time, which another doth exclusively; as Luke c. 9. 29. saying, that Christ about an 8. dayes after was transfigured, includeth in this number, both primum & ultimum, the first and last day: Matthew saying after 6. dayes, doth exclude these two dayes, making mention of those six that came between: sic Augustin. lib. de consens. Evang. c. 56. Rules to be observed concerning the computation of time in Scripture.

2. Sometime the principall part of the time is rehearsed, and the small or odde numbers omitted; as 1 King. 2. David is said to have reigned 40. yeares over Israel, 7. yeares in Hebron, and 33. yeares in Jerusalem; whereas the precise account of his reigne in Hebron was 7. yeares 6. moneths, and in Jerusalem, 33. yeares; which make in all 40. yeares, 6. moneths, 2 Sam. 5. 5.

3. Sometime, the yeares of a Kings reigne are reckoned, which he reigned alone, sometime those wherein he reigned with another: so Iotham reigned 16. yeares alone, but twenty yeares, counting those, wherein he governed under his Father, 2 Kings 15. 5. 30. 33. Perer.

Quest. XX. Why Abrahams servant refused to eat or drinke.

Vers. 33. They set before him to eat, but he said, I will not eat. 1. Hee neither refused to eat, because unusuall meat was set before him, such as hee was not accustomed unto in Abrahams house, as the Hebrewes thinke. 2. Neither doth he deferre till he had spoken his words, that is, said grace, as some write: for though it is not to bee doubted, but that they used in Abrahams house to receive their meat with thanksgiving; yet hee meaneth the delivering of his message. 3. But that is a meere fable, that hee would not eat, because they set poyson before him, to have his goods, which poyson was returned to Bethuel, who thereupon died: and this fable the Hebrewes would build upon the word sam, which is answerable to the word sume, here used, which signifieth to place or set: for neither were they Hebrewes fables.

ſo poore, that they needed Abrahams goods; nor ſo unhoneſt, ſo to deale with their nea reſt kinſmans ſ- vant: nor yet is there any affinity betweene thoſe two words, the one beginning with ſamech, the oth- with ſhin, Mercer. 4. Neither doth he refraine from eating and drinking, fearing leſt afterward hee ſhou- not tell a ſober tale. 5. But his diligence is commended, who preferreth his maſters buſineſſe before h- meat and drinke.

QUEST. XXI. Perſwaſions uſed by Abrahams ſervant to further the mariage.

Ver. 35. THe Lord hath bleſſed my maſter, &c. 1. The ſervant beginneth to uſe perſwaſions to m- a way for the mariage intended: 1. That hee was rich, and not by evill meanes, but by God- bleſſing, Muſcul. 2. That Iſaack was borne of Sarai in her old age, and ſo not without a miracle, as ma- ordained of God for ſome great matter, Calvin. 3. And leſt they might object, why being ſo rich, he took not a wife neare hand, he addeth, that his maſter gave him ſpeciall charge not to take a wife of the daugh- ters of Canaan, Mercer.

QUEST. XXII. Certaine fabulous conceits of the Hebrewes refuſed.

IT ſhall not bee amiſſe to note certaine fabulous collections of the Hebrewes: 1. Verſ. 39. They think that Eliezar ſecretly inſinuated, that if hee could not otherwiſe provide a wife for Iſaack, hee would offer his owne daughter: but that Abraham abſolutely refuſed, becauſe he was of the Canaanites. But yet they ſay that this Eliezar for his faithfull ſervice was taken alive into Paradiſe, as Iſaack came alive from thence: 2. Verſ. 42. Where he ſaith, I came this day to the well: the Hebrewes thinke that he came from Hebron to Charras in a day, which is noted to be ſeventeene dayes journey: and this day noteth the time not of his departure from home, but of his comming thither, Mercer. 3. V. 47. They note, that he put the jewels ſo upon her face, that he touched not her fleſh, whereas the meaning is, that hee gave her them- ther to put them on her ſelfe.

QUEST. XXIII. Whether Abrahams ſervant gave the gifts before he knew who ſhe was.

Verſ. 47. WHereas before v. 22. he firſt brought forth the jewels, before hee asked her whoſe daugh- ter ſhe was, whereas here he firſt is ſaid to aske her: 1. Neither is it like that he asked her before he brought them forth: as Iun. Perer. 2. Neither doth he here report it otherwiſe than it was done leſt they might have accuſed him of levity, to give jewels to one whom he knew not: as Raſi. 3. But ſaid he brought them forth, and then asked her the queſtion, and after gave them, Mercer.

QUEST. XXIV. Why Laban is ſet before Bethuel.

Verſ. 50. THen anſwered Laban, and Bethuel. 1. Neither was this Bethuel the brother of Laban, but Aram. 2. Neither was Bethuel Rebeccahs father dead, as Ioſephus. 3. Neither is Labans impiety noted, who taketh upon him to ſpeake before his father: as Raſi. 4. Nor yet is Laban firſt named, as more excellent in wiſdome than his father: as Aben Ezra. 5. But for that his father being old, or ſickly, had committed his houſhold government to Laban, Iun. Mercer.

QUEST. XXV. The ſpace of ten dayes for Rebeccahs abode how to be underſtood.

Verſ. 55. LEt the maid abide with us at the leaſt ten dayes. 1. She meaneth not (that is, Rebeccahs mo- ther) to have her ſtay a yeare, or at the leaſt ten moneths, as the Hebrewes, and Onkelos: for this had bin an unreaſonable requeſt, ſeeing the man made ſuch haſte. 2. Neither (the words ſtanding thus let her abide, dayes, at the leaſt ten,) by dayes, are underſtood ſeven dayes of mourning for Bethuel, whom they ſuppoſed to have beene dead: for then they would not have requeſted for ſeven dayes firſt, and then for ten, but have begun with the greater requeſt firſt. 3. Neither is the vulgar reading the beſt, to joyne the words together, at the leaſt ten dayes: for in the originall, dayes goe before. 4. The beſt reading then is, Let her abide dayes, that is, certaine, or at the leaſt ten, Iun.

QUEST. XXVI. Of the willingneſſe of Rebecca.

Verſ. 58. I Will goe, &c. 1. Not that ſhe ſaid in effect, I will goe though you will not, as Raſi: for this thought or ſpeech had not become the modeſty of the maid: 2. but rather her obedience to her parents appeareth, to whom ſhe conſenteth, Calvin. 3. and her will was no doubt directed by the Spi- rit of God, Muſcul.

QUEST. XXVII. How Iſaack dwelled in Beerſheba, Abraham remaining in Hebron.

Verſ. 62. I Saack came from the way of Beer-lahai-roi, &c. 1. Not that Iſaack went thither to fetch Hagar to be Abrahams wife after Sarahs death, as ſome Hebrewes: for ſhe was not Keturah, as ſhall appeare afterward. 2. Neither becauſe Abraham had married another wife, as ſome ſuppoſe, did Iſaack dwell apart from him in Beerſheba, his father remaining in Hebron, as Calvin: for it is not like that Abra- ham would want the preſence and comfort of his dutifull ſonne. 3. Nor yet for a time did Iſaack dwell apart, employed as is moſt like in ſome ſpeciall affaires in that countrey, Merc. 3. But it is moſt like that Abraham at this time dwelt in Beerſheba, both becauſe Abrahams ſervant returned thither, as alſo that it was Sarahs tent, into the which Iſaack brought Rebecca, v. 67.

QVEST. XXVIII. Why Isaack used in the evening to walke in the field.

Vers. 62. TO prayn the field. 1. Some read to talke or conferre in the field. Aquila. 2. some to talke with his workmen. Cajetan. 3. some to exercise himselfe in the field. Septuag. 4. Some to give himselfe to meditation. Ambr. Iun. 5. some to meditate and contemplate the heavens, and starres, & other naturall things. Lyran. 6. some to talke with himselfe, as they doe which are given to meditation. 7. some to take the ayre. Vatabl. 8. But it is most like hee went into the field to pray unto God: and to pray with deepe meditation: for so the word Suach signifieth, both to meditate and pray: and it may be, that he intended his prayer specially, concerning this businesse of his mariage.

QVEST. XXIX. How and wherefore Rebecca lighted downe from the camell.

Vers. 64. SHe lighted downe from the camel, &c. 1. She neither bowed her selfe a little upon the camell, as Ramban. neither did she hurt her selfe in lighting downe, forcing by the fall the markes of her Virginity, whereby Isaack suspected that the servant in the way had deflowred her: as the Hebrewes fable. 3. But she did to reverence unto Isaack, light downe from the beast. Mercer. 4. so that we need not with Gregory to make a allegory hereof, who by Isaack walking in the evening, understandeth Christ comming in the end of the world, and by Rebecca lighting from the camel, the Church of the Gentiles forsaking her vitious life and manners. Gregor. in 42. h.

QVEST. XXX. Why they used to cover the face.

Vers. 65. SHe tooke a vaile and covered her. 1. The covering of the head sometime is a signe of mourning, as David covered his head, when he mourned for Absalom. 2 Sam. 19. 4. 2. sometime it is signe of great reverence, as Elias covered his face in the mount Horeb, when he talked with God, 1 Kings. 19. 3. It is also a signe of displeasure, as they covered Hamans face, when the king was incensed against him, Esther 7. 4. but it is here a signe of modesty and shamefastnesse: as Tertullian writeth of the Arabian women, qua non caput, sed faciem ita totam tegunt, ut uno oculo liberato contenta sint videre frui luce, pelius quam totam faciem prostituere: which doe not only cover their head, but their whole face, that having but one eye to see with, they had rather enjoy but halfe the light, than prostitute their whole face. Caius Sulpitius Gallus, is said to have divorced his wife, because she was seene abroad with her face uncovered. Valer. Maxim. l. 6. c. 3. ex citation. Perer. Tertul. de vel tand. virginibus.

Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. It is lawfull to take an oath where there is just cause.

Vers. 3. I Will make thee sweare, &c. Abraham both sweareth himselfe, Gen. 14. 12. he also sware to Abimelech, who demanded an oath of him, Gen. 21. 31. and here he requireth an oath of his servant, It is therefore lawfull to take an oath, where there is just cause. Muscul. Therefore that saying of Origen is somewhat hard, perfecti viri jurare ipsis, &c. for perfect men either to sweare themselves, or to adjure others, it is uncomely. homi. ultim. in Matth.

2. Doct. Children ought not to marry without their parents consent.

Vers. 4. TAke a wife to my sonne Isaack. Abraham provideth a wife for Isaack: It is not then lawfull for children to enterprise mariage without the consent of their parents: so Rebeckas parents doe dispose of her for marriage, v. 51. Rebeckah is before thee, take her and goe: and she afterwards giveth consent to their choice, v. 58. wherefore great wrong is offered to the right of parents by the popish Canons, that allow contracts made without the parents consent. Calvin.

3. Doct. Angels Presidents and Ministers of marriage.

Vers. 7. HE shall send his Angell before thee, &c. The holy Angel is appointed to be a guide in this businesse of mariage: which therefore is hence concluded to be an holy thing, seeing such holy spirits are presidents of this action: As the Apostle also saith, Mariage is honourable among all men, Heb. 13. 3. If Angels vouchsafe their presence and assistance in mariage: how can it be a polluting or prophanation of orders, as some popish writers affirme? Greg. Martin. dis. c. 15. sect. 11.

4. Doct. Iewels and ornaments, how farre lawfull for women.

Vers. 22. HE tooke an abillement of gold: concerning the use of these ornaments and jewels, as simply they are not unlawfull, the manner and person of wearing them considered: so these cautions must bee admitted. 1. that although these tokens were sent unto the spouse, and it was the use of the bride to decke and attire her selfe. Ierem. 2. 32. yet did they not usually thus apparrell themselves, as with gold and such like, as S. Peter sheweth, 1 Pet. 3. 3. 5. 2. The simplicity of that age is to bee considered, that did not set their delight upon such things, as we read here of Rebecca, that she bare a pitcher of water upon her shoulders, our gentlewomen in these dayes, that urge Rebeccas her example for bracelets and jewels, would be loth to doe in other things as Rebecca did. 3. Their speciall care was to decke and adorne the hid man of the heart, with a meeke and quiet spirit, 1. Pet. 3. 4. Let our nice and curious women first imitate them therein, then let them plead their example for the rest.

Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Peter not the chiefe among the Apostles.

Vers. 2. ABraham said to the eldest servant of his house, which had the rule: To this servant Perrius resembleth Peter. 1. because of his age: 2. and he was likewise by Christ set over his whole house, that is, the Church, as this servant was over Abrahams house: 3. as this servant was sent to chuse a wife for Isaack, so S. Peter was the first that converted the Gentiles to Christ, and invited them to this spirituall marriage: for Peter first of all the Apostles was instructed by vision, that the Gentiles were to be called: and the first conversion of the Gentiles, namely of Cornelius and his family was wrought by Peter. Perr. in 24. Gen. num. 5.

Contra. 1. That Peter was one of the eldest in yeares among the Apostles, we deny not: but that he was the eldest of all, as it seemeth this servant was, cannot be proved. 2. That he was set over the whole Church of Christ, is but a friers dreame: all the Apostles were in equall commission: and all were sent immediately of Christ to preach the Gospell, as my father sent me, so send I you, Ioh. 20. 21. that charge of our Saviour, pasce oves, feed my sheepe, will not prove such universall jurisdiction: for neither all Christs sheepe, are committed, only to Peter: and feeding, signifieth not ruling or commanding, but teaching and instructing: a duty (Saint Peter himselfe being Judge) common to all pastors and presbyters: feed the flock, &c. 1 Peter 5. 2. 3. Neither is it true that Saint Peter first preached to the Gentles. 1. for Saint Paul was converted, Act. 9. before Peter saw that vision. Act. 10. who immediately upon his conversion preached to the Gentiles in Arabia and Damascus. Galath. 1. 15, 16, 17. 2. Saint Peter indeed was both the first and last, that was resolved by vision, of the calling of the Gentiles: but Saint Paul was sure thereof before by revelation, and communicated not with Peter about his vision, before he preached to the Gentiles. Galath. ibid. 3. Neither is it true that Cornelius family was the first, that was called among the Gentiles: for Andronicus and Iunia were in Christ before Paul, Rom. 16. 7. who was converted before Cornelius was called. 4. Though the priority of preaching to the Gentiles were yeelded to Peter, yet the superiority goeth not together with it. 5. Lastly, all this being presupposed, yet it is but a simple argument, that is grounded upon types and figures, as this is for Saint Peters supremacy, out of this place.

Not the first converter of Gentiles.

2. Confut. Marriage cannot be contracted by Proctors betweene the parties being absent.

Vers. 4. TAke a wife to my sonne: Thomas Anglicus by this president would authorise the marriage of parties absent by messengers and proctors going betweene them, in 24. c. Genes. But no such thing can be hence gathered: for Abrahams servant did not conclude the marriage betweene Rebecca and Isaack, but only procured the espousals and promise of marriage: which was not fully contracted and concluded, till they both met, and then the text saith, he tooke Rebeccah and she was his wife. v. 67. Peter.

3. Confut. Against the invocation of Angels.

Vers. 42. O Lord the God of my master Abraham: though Abraham had said to his servant, that the Angell of God should goe before him, v. 7. yet the servant, prayeth not to this Angell, that was appointed to be the president of his journey: but he only directeth his prayer unto God: as the scripture biddeth; Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve. Matth. 4. 10.

6. Places of Morall observation.

1. Observ. Not to sweare rashly.

Vers. 5. AND the servant said, what if the woman will not come? &c. The servant is very cautelous, and circumspect in taking his oath; lest he should binde himselfe to any inconvenience by his oath, he casteth all doubts afore, and desireth to have the matter explaned to the which hee sweareth. Muscul. so ought wee to bee well advised in taking of an oath: which the Prophet calleth swearing in judgement. Ierem. 4. 2.

2. Observ. Our countrey not to be hated, for some abuses therein.

Vers. 4. THou shalt goe unto my countrey, &c. Abraham hateth not his countrey, though hee knew the same to be addicted to Idolatry: As many doe in these daies, who being runnagates from their countrey for superstition rather than religion, have practised the subversion of Prince and countrey by forrein invasion. Muscul.

3. Observ. All our affaires must begin with prayer.

Vers. 12. HEe said, O Lord God of my master, &c. This servant commending the successe of his businesse and journey by prayer unto God, doth teach us to begin all our actions and enterprises with prayer: as the Apostle saith; I will that men pray, every where lifting up pure hands, &c.

4. Observ.

4. Obſerv. A faithfull prayer hath preſent effect.

Verſ. 15. YEr he had left ſpeaking Rebecca came. Thus the Lord gave preſent audience to the prayer of his ſervant, as appeareth by the immediate effect thereof: According to the ſaying of the Prophet, before they call will I anſwer, and while they ſpeake I will heare, Iſay 65.24. Mercer. So the Angell ſaid to Daniel: In the beginning of thy ſupplication the commandement came forth, Dan. 9.23. as ſoone as he beganne to pray, the Lord heard him.

5. Obſerv. Children muſt not be brought up delicately.

Verſ. 16. SHe went downe and filled her pitcher, &c. Rebeccah was trained up by her mother to doe domeſticall and houſhold works, ſhe was not brought up delicately: even ſhee that was appointed to be the mother of Patriarks, Prophets, Kings, had this ſimple and hard education: which may be a leſſon to fathers and maſters, not to bring up their children and ſervants delicately or wantonly: but to bring them to labour in their youth: and children and ſervants may here learne obedience, not to thinke ſcorne to doe ſuch homely ſervices, which their parents and maſters ſhall thinke good to require of them, Muſculus.

6. Obſerv. It is lawfull ſometime to conceale part of the truth.

Verſ. 39. WHat if the woman will not follow me? Here the ſervant leaveth out in his diſcretion Abrahams charge given him: Beware that thou bring not my ſonne thither againe, verſ. 6. as alſo other ſpeeches of his maſter: As the Lord that tooke me from my fathers houſe, &c. for theſe ſpeeches would have but further offended them, as though Abraham had held them to be a forlorne and wicked people, that he counted it a benefit that God called him out from them, and would by no meanes that his ſonne ſhould returne thither, Mercer. Muſcul. We learne then that every truth in all places, and upon all occaſions, is not to be uttered: as Ieremy thereunto moved by the King, concealed the chiefe matter wherein the King communed with him, and telleth the Princes what he thought good to impart unto them, Ierem. 38.27.

TO THE MOST HONOVRABLE LORD, THE L. DVKE OF LENOX, AND TO THE RIGHT Honourable, the Earle of Marre, Lords of his Majesties most Honourable Privie Counsell: Grace, mercie, and Peace, from the Lord JESUS.

RIght Honourable, as the highest Majestie in his wise providence hath united and conjoyned your Honours, not onely in one consent and judgement of religion, but also in the joynt administration and regiment of this Nation and Kingdome under his excellent Majestie: so I thought good to make your Honours, with other of your Honourable place, united Patrons of these my labours: and as he saith, non debet charta dividere, quos amor mutuus copulavit; It was not fit that Hieron. ad Chromat.

should sever you in this my duty, who are combined in your mutuall amity.

Men of noble birth, delight much in antiquities, and it is their glory to derive their loud by many descents from their thrice renowned ancestors: here I present to your Honourable view, that noble and most ancient family of Abraham, Isaack, and Iacob, ho were in favour with God, and in honour and great reputation with men: whose ildren they are, which imitate their piety and obedience: that famous Matron Paula, hom Hierome so much commendeth, was by her father descended of Æneas, and the ble house of the Gracchi, by her mother of Agamemnon, of whom Hierome made Gracchorum soboles, Agamemnonis inclita proles, Hoc jacet in tumulo, &c. Epitaph. Paul. Phil. 3. 8. Hieron. ad Celantiam.

is Epitaph, thought her Christian profession more honourable, than her noble birth and ndition: and so I doubt not, but that it is also your honourable resolution, to say with e Apostle, who having rehearsed his great privileges after the flesh, his birth, paren- e, and profession, thus concludeth: I count all these things but losse, for the ex- llent knowledge sake of Christ Iesus, for whom I have counted all things as sse, and doe judge them as dung, that I might winne Christ: as Hierome also ib well, Summa apud Deum nobilitas, clarum esse virtutibus; It is the greatest no- y with God, to shine with vertue.

Here your Honours have the worthy example of the Patriarks to follow: the Hea- presidents are but counterfeit and deceitfull: they had the shadowes of vertues rather than the substance : as Ambrose saith well of Polemo, who of a drunken and ri- tous companion, by hearing of Xenocrates, became a Philosopher : Si resipuit à vino, fuit semper tamen temulentus sacrilegio; If hee were sober from wine, yet hee was drunke with superstition. But these holy examples are seasoned with grace, and sa- of true religion : Abraham was famous in Pharaohs Court, so was Isaack in Abime- lecks, and Iacob in another Pharaohs also, for their piety and vertue : So they which walke in their steps, shall be great both with God and man : Abraham told Abimelech plainly of the wrongs which his servants had done him, Gen. 21. 25. so is it the part of good Courtiers, to shew unto the King, the wrongs and oppressions that are done in the land, to succour the poore, to relieve the oppressed, to countenance the truth, to main- taine justice and equity. Iacob being in Bethel saw a ladder, which reached to heaven, and the Angels ascending and descending upon it : whereupon one thus noteth ; In the house of Bethel there is alwayes both going up, and comming downe: this Isay not that the goers down should dismay you, but the climers up incourage you. So in the Princes Bethel and Court, there be examples of both sorts, of some that are declining and sliding backe, onely seeking to make themselves great, and to bee enriched by the Kings favour: some there are, though the smallest number, which doe ascend upon this ladder, not aspiring to their owne honour, but using their favour to the glory of God, and benefit of his Church. Thus I trust your Lordships have learned to scale this ladder of honour, to the which you are called : to raise up those which are in the dust, to set for- ward the truth, to nourish and encourage the Preachers thereof, to speake for the innocent, to hold out your helpfull hand to the needy : so shall your Honours ascend from step to step, till you come to the top of the ladder, where Christ sitteth, who shall cast and tumble downe from thence all unfaithfull Stewards, and cut them off to have their portion with hypocrites, Matth. 24. 51. but shall say unto you, and all other, that shall serve him faith- fully here in earth ; It is well done good servant and faithfull, thou hast beene faith- full in little, I will make thee ruler over much, enter into thy masters joy, Amen.

In domo Bethel quotidie ascenditur & descenditur, hoc dixi, non ut te terreant descendentes, sed provocent ascendentes, Hieron. ad Iul.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

Quest. I. Why Abraham tooke a wife in his old age.

Vers. 1. Abraham tooke another wife. 1. Not giving way unto his luft or of any incontinency, as some of the Hebrewes: as Baal haturim saith, it is a griefe to see a man eat, if he eat not with him. 2. Neither was this done for any such mystery, as Origen supposeth, to signifie the spirituall marriage of the minde with wisdome, which is most ripe in old age, hom. 11. in Genes. 3. And yet this use may be made of Abrahams second marriage, to convince such heretikes as condemne second marriage. Augustin. lib. 16. de civit. Dei. c. 34. as also whereas the sonnes of Abraham by Hagar and Keturah were the great adversaries to the Israelites, as the Ismaelites, the Madianites: so they which beare the name of the Church as papists and other heretikes are the greatest enemies to the Church of God. 4. But the speciall cause why Abraham married in his old age, was to shew the efficacie of Gods blessing, in increasing him with a large posterity, as the Lord said unto him: I have made thee a father of many nations, Genes. 17. 5. Mercer. as also to have a comfort in his olde age, now living a part from Isaack, and having committed over to him the affaires of the household, Cajetan.

Quest. II. How Abrahams body being said to be dead at one hundred yeares, yet was able for procreation at one hundred forty yeares.

But whereas Saint Paul saith, that Abrahams body was even now dead, being almost 100. yeares old, Rom. 4. 19. how was it not now more dead, being 40. yeares elder, for Isaack was now 40. yeares old, when he married Rebeccah, Gen. 25. 20. who was borne in Abrahams 100. yeare.

To this some answer, that Abrahams body was said to be dead only in respect of barren Sarah, Mercer. But that seemeth not to be so: because the Apostle maketh mention together both of the deadnesse of Abrahams body and Sarahs wombe: wherefore I preferre rather Augustines opinion, that Abrahams body though dead in it selfe, was revived by the power of God, not onely for the generation of Isaack, but this strength of nature continued a long time after, for further procreation, Calvin.

Quest. III. Whether Keturah were Hagar.

Reasons affirming the same answered.

Called Keturah: some affirme that this was Hagar, upon these grounds: 1. Because the Madianites which came of Keturah, are called Agarenes, Psal. 83. 6. the Ismaelites, Moab, and Agarenes. 1. Chron. 5. 19. They made warre with the Hagarenes, with Iethur, Naphish and Nadab, which were all sonnes of Ismael, Hieron. tradit. Hebraic. in Gen. 25.

Answer. These places prove not, the Madianites or any other of Keturah to be called Agarenes: but that the name Agarenes was common to all that came of Ismael: whereof some were called Ismaelites, some Itureans, some Nabeans, &c. Iunius in 1 Chron. 5. 19.

2. Keturah signifieth incense, whereby is signified that Hagar all this while living continently, was consecrated to God, as incense: and therefore Abraham, Sarah being dead, sent for her, Lyranus.

Answer. Concerning the signification of this name, it skilleth not, but that Hagars name was not changed it may appeare, for that vers. 12. she is called by the name of Hagar still.

3. But it was most fit and beseeming, seeing Hagar had beene Abrahams lawfull wife, and yet living that he should rather take her than any other, Thomas Anglic.

Answer. Shee was not Abrahams lawfull wife, but his concubine: and seeing she was a bond woman there was no reason that she should succeed in a free womans place, and rather because of that mystery which the Apostle noteth: which maketh Sarah and Agar figures of two mothers, one of the carnall sort, the other of the faithfull and spiritual seed.

4. Therefore Ismael and Isaack are said to have buried Abraham: as being returned to fraternall society, Thom. Anglic.

Answer. No such thing can be gathered hereby, that Hagar and Ismael were restored to Abrahams house: but the reason why Ismael only is ioyned with Isaack in performing this last duty is this because the other sonnes were sent farre away in Abrahams life time into the East country: But Ismael being neare dwelling (for Isaack at this time had his habitation about Hagars fountaine, which she named Beer-la-hai-roi, vers. 11.) would not be wanting in this office toward his father.

Wherefore the true opinion is, that this Keturah was some other woman and not Hagar. 1. The words of the text give it: that Abraham proceeded, or added this, and tooke him a wife, &c. but if she had beene his wife before, then Abraham had not added or proceeded to doe as it were a new worke, Cajetan. 2. Agar is called by her owne name in this chapter, verse 12. therefore she was not Keturah. 3. Hagar could not be lesse now then 80. yeares old (Abraham being 85. when hee tooke Hagar, and now 140. some 55. yeares before, and Hagar being supposed then to be 25.) at which yeares it is not like she could bring Abraham so many sonnes: seeing it was a great miracle for Sarah to beare at 90. Tostatus. 4. Abraham is said to have concubines, therefore more than one concubine, namely Hagar: and Keturah is directly said to be Abrahams concubine, 1. Chron. 1. 32. Mercer. Reasons shewing that Keturah and Hagar are not all one.

Quest. IV. Keturah not married in Sarahs life time.

Abraham had taken him another wife, &c. 1. Abraham did not take this wife while Sarah lived, as some thinke, Calvin. Genevens. in hunc locum: for Moses setteth downe the story in order: and seeing he tooke not Hagar but at Sarahs instance, and because he had no sonne, it is not like, that having two sonnes, he would grieve Sarah with assuming another wife: and where it is objected, that Abraham should have staied a widower 3. yeares, if he married not Keturah till now: this need not seeme strange that he deferreth his second marriage, both because he would first provide a wife for Isaack, and for that he mourned no lesse time for his wife than Isaack did for his mother, who was not comforted over her death, till he married Rebeccah, Genes. 24. 67.

Neither need it move any question, whether this Keturah were of the daughters of Canaan: for seeing Isaack of whom the promised seed should come, was provided for, Abraham for this second offspring which he knew should not increase the people of God, was not so carefull to decline marriage with Canaan. Tostat. Mercer. Keturah, whether of Canaan.

Quest. V. Of the names and countries of Abrahams sonnes by Keturah.

Vers. 2. Which bare him Zimram: Iosephus thinketh that some of these inhabited the region Troglodytis in Africa, which cannot be, because they were sent to inhabit the East countrie, vers. 6. as most of them had their seat in Arabia fœlix: as may appeare by the remainder of their names, as Zimram gave the name to Zamram in the region of the Sinedocolpites in Arabia fœlix: of Iocksan was named the towne Camasa, in Syria palmyrina, Iun. ex Ptolom. 5. Geograph. Zimram. Iocksan.

Madan, Midian: of Madan tooke the name the towne Madiania in Arabia fœlix, Iun. and the country Madianæa, on the south of Arabia, Hieron. of Midian, the country Madianitis had the name, in the borders of Arabia petræa. Therefore Pererius is in an error, which thinketh these two all one country, and confuteth Hierome for distinguishing them, in 25. Gen. numer. 19. Madan. Midian. Pererius in an error.

Of this Midian came the Midianites, of whom was Balaam, which gave that wicked counsell against Israel: from hence Moses had his wife, who is also called a Chusite, or Æthiopisse: for there were two countries called Chus, or Æthiopia, one eastward, which was Arabia, another the occidentall Æthiopia in Africa beyond Egypt, Perer. These Madianites were also called Ismaelites, Genes. 37. 25. 28. Iud. 7. 23. & 8. 24. because they were in their dwelling dispersed and mingled among the Ismaelites, being yet of a divers kindred and originall, the one of Agar, the other of Keturah.

Ishbak the founder of Laodicea Scabiosa in Suria: of Shuah came the Saccai, inhabiting the East part of Syria, by Batanæa, Iun. Ishbak. Shuah.

vers. 3. Sheba. There were three almost of this name; one the son of Chus, Gen. 10. 7. a people inhabiting neere to Persia: another Sheba of Iocksan, of the posterity of Sem, Gen. 10. 38. who are thought to inhabit India: the third is Sheba of Keturah, in Arabia deserta, Perer. Iun. Sheba.

Dedan. There was another Dedan, the son of Raamah son of Chus, Gen. 10. 7. 1. These were two divers people, as appeareth Ezech. 27. 15. 20. where two nations are rehearsed with their divers merchandise. Neither of these could inhabit so far as Æthiopia in Africa, as Hierome supposeth, for being so far remote, they could have no traffike with Tyrus, as the Prophet sheweth, Ezech. 27. 3. It is evident, that the Dedaneans were not farre from the Idumeans, Ier. 49. 7, 8. Perer. of this Dedan seemeth to take name Adada in Syria Palmirena, Iun. Dedan.

Vers. 4. The sonnes of Midian, Ephah. These two countries are joyned together by the Prophet, The multitude of camels shall cover thee, the dromedaries of Midian and Epha, Isa. 60. 6. and Hierome saith, that these two are countries beyond Arabia, which abound with Camels: the whole province is called Epha, Hier. Is. 17. in Isaiam. Ephah.

Hepher: Of him Iosephus would have Africa so called: which is not like, seeing all these are said to dwell in the East countries: and yet there is no great probability that it should be called Africa of Afer the son of the Lybian Hercules. Perer. Hepher.

The rest of the posterity of Keturah, either were no founders of severall nations, or their seats are unknowne: only this generall direction we have, that they setled themselves towards the East in Arabia, Syria, not farre off one from another.

QUEST. VI. Of what goods Isaack was made heire, and why.

Vers. 5. Abraham gave all his goods to Isaack. 1. Abraham had no lands or possessions to give to Isaack: for he possessed nothing but certaine wels of water, and the grove which he planted in Beersheba, Gen. 22. and the double cave which he bought of Ephron. 2. They were therefore moveable goods, as they are called, which Abraham gave to Isaack, as sheepe, beeves, silver, gold, maid servants, men servants, wherein Abrahams substance consisted, Gen. 24. 35. Abraham was greatly encreased in all these things, 90. yeares before his death, when Lot and he for their greatnesse were constrained to divide houshelds, Gen. 13. and such was Abrahams greatnesse, that even kings, as Abimelech, desired his friendship, Gen. 21. 3. Hee made Isaack heire of all this, both because he was the sonne of Sarah his first and chiefe wife, and because God had declared Isaack to be Abrahams heire, Perer.

QUEST. VII. The difference of lawfull and unlawfull copulations in Abrahams time.

Vers. 6. To the sonnes of the concubines. Wee see then, in Abrahams time there was a difference betweene wives and concubines, and that all copulations were not lawfull: as Cicero noteth, that in the beginning, there was a time, when men lived as beasts, &c. nemo legitimas viderat nuptias, nemo certos quispiam insperexerat liberos, &c. no man knew what lawfull marriage was, nor did acknowledge his own children, Cicer. in prowm. de invention. Well might this brutish fashion be received among the heathen, but in the church of God among the faithfull it was not so: but even then, when as yet no positive lawes were made to restraine unnaturall lusts, and unlawfull conjunctions in marriage, they were a lawe themselves, and made a great difference betweene honest marriage, and unhonest lust.

1. In Abrahams time, it is evident that there was a distinction betweene a wife and a concubine: Sarah was Abrahams wife, Hagar his concubine: hereof more shall be said in the next question. 2. They made a difference betweene marriage with a free woman and a bond-woman, as Hagar the bond-woman with her sonne was cast out. 3. That age discerned betweene matrimoniall acts and adulterous: Abimelech confesseth adulterie, that is, commixtion with another mans wife to be sin, Gen. 20. 4. Another difference was made betweene marriage and fornication, Gen. 34. 32. Should he use our sister as a whore? so the sonnes of Iacob answered their father. 5. Betweene lawfull marriage and unlawfull copulation with the fathers concubine, or sonnes wife: as Ruben was accursed because he lay with Bilha his father concubine, Gen. 35. 22. and Judas having committed the like fault with Thamar his daughter ignorantly, would doe it no more, Gen. 38. 26. 6. A great difference they made betweene voluntary commixtion and violent forcing: therefore Simeon and Levi were incensed against the Sichemites, because Sechem had forced their sister, Gen. 34. 2. Perer.

QUEST. VIII. The difference betweene a wife and a concubine.

NOw whereas Keturah seemeth to be reckoned among Abrahams concubines; yet was she indeed Abrahams wife, as she is called, Gen. 25. 1. Neither in that sense Abrahams concubine, as Hagar was.

1. There are foure principall differences betweene a wife and a concubine: the wife was taken solemnly with espousals, contract, consent of friends: as Iacob tooke Lea and Rachel, so did he not Zilpah and Bilhah: the wife was taken into the house to be the mother of the family, and governesse of the house: the concubine was a servant still of the family, as Hagar was to Sarah: the wife was taken as an inseparable companion to the husband during his life, the concubine might bee put away, as Hagar was from Abraham: the wife was chosen, whose issue should onely be heires of the house, but the sonnes of the concubine inherited not: as the sonnes of Gilead said to Iephtah, Thou shalt not inherit in our fathers house, for thou art the sonne of a strange woman, Iud. 12. 2.

2. Now where all these properties concurred, she was properly and truly a concubine: such an one was Hagar, who was neither contracted to Abraham by any solemne espousals, nor yet had the government of the house, but was at Sarahs checke, neither continued shee all her daies with Abraham, nor her sonne admitted to be heire.

Keturah in what sense called Abrahams concubine.

3. But where all these properties are not seene together, but some one of them, there sometimes she that is the wife, by a certaine abuse of the word, is called a concubine: as the Levites wife, before she was yet solemnly espoused unto him with consent of her parents, is called his concubine, Iud. 19. 1. so as yet she did commit fornication with him: but afterward having her fathers consent, he is called his father in law, vers. 4. so here in this place Keturah is called Abrahams concubine, for that her children were not admitted to be heires with Isaack: but otherwise she was Abrahams lawfull wife. And for the same reason, sometimes a concubine is called a wife, as Zilpah and Bilhah are said to be Iacobs wives, Genesis 37. 2. because their children were coheires with the rest, and fathers of the tribes.

Hagar otherwise Abrahams concubine, than Keturah.

4. There appeareth then great difference betweene Hagar and Keturah: Hagar was neither solemnly taken to be Abrahams wife, but given him onely for procreation, and while Sarah Abrahams lawfull wife was yet living, shee remained a bond-woman still, and was not made free: she was cast out of the house: But Keturah was solemnly taken to be Abrahams wife, she was a free woman, Sarah was now dead, she left not Abraham while she lived: wherefore Keturah was not properly Abrahams concubine but for that reason onely before alleaged. But Hagar was verily his concubine, as Leo well determines: Aliud est uxor, aliud concubina, sicut aliud ancilla, aliud libera, propter quod Apostolus ad manifestandum hoc personarum perſmarum diſcretionem teſtimonium ponit, ex Geneſ. &c. A wife is one thing, a concubine another: a free woman is one thing, a bond another: and therefore the Apoſtle to ſhew the difference of theſe perſons, doth alledge a teſtimony out of Geneſis, where it is ſaid to Abraham, Caſt out the bond-woman and her ſonne, for the ſonne of the bond-woman ſhall not be heire with my ſonne Iſaack, Leo epiſt. 90. c. 4. & citatur par 2. c. 32. q. 2. c. 12. & concil. Tribarienſ. c. 38.

QUEST. IX. Why Abraham ſent away the ſonnes of Keturah.

Abraham gave them gifts, and ſent them away from Iſaack, &c. The reaſons of Abrahams ſo doing are theſe: 1. becauſe that countrey was not like to hold them, Abraham knowing that his ſeed ſhould exceedingly multiply, Perer. 2. Abraham did it to take away all occaſion of ſtrife that might fall out betweene brethren, as for that cauſe before, Abraham and Lot were ſeparated, Calvin. 3. leſt that Iſaack and his ſeed might have beene corrupted by their evill manners, and falſe worſhip, whom Abraham did forſee not to belong to the people of God, Perer. 4. The greateſt reaſon of all was, becauſe the inheritance of that land was promiſed to Iſaacks ſeed, which he would not have diſturbed by his other ſonnes, Moſul. Mercer.

QUEST. X. What Eaſt countrey Abraham ſent Keturahs ſonnes into.

Sent them Eaſtward to the Eaſt countrey, &c. 1. Not Eaſtward in reſpect of Iſaacks dwelling, for ſome part of the land of Canaan was ſo towards the Eaſt. 2. nor yet Eaſtward in reſpect of the ſituation of the world: for ſo India is counted in the Eaſt, whither indeed Hierome thinketh that they were ſent: but it is not like that Abraham would ſend his ſonnes ſo farre off. 3. They were then ſent into the Eaſt countrey in reſpect of Paleſtina, as into Syria, Arabia, where the Iſmaelites, Idumeans, and Midianites inhabited: which countries in the Scripture are uſually called by the name of the Eaſt: as Iacob going into Meſopotamia is ſaid to goe into the Eaſt country, Gen. 29. 1. Balaam came from Aram out of the mountaines of the Eaſt, Num. 23. 7. Iob alſo is ſaid to have beene the greateſt of all the men of the Eaſt, Iob 1. 3. Into theſe Eaſt countries they were ſent, not becauſe the people there were addicted to art magicke, whereunto Abraham ſaw his ſonnes inclined, as the Cabaliſts coniecture: but it is like that thoſe countries to the which he ſent them, were as yet vacant and unpeopled, Mercer.

QUEST. XI. Of the computation of the yeares of Abrahams life.

Vers. 7. THis is the age of Abrahams life, 175. yeares: Pererius upon this place gathering into a ſumme the ſtorie of Abrahams life, falleth into many apparent errours in Chronology, which briefly ſhall be noted. 1. He ſaith, that Abraham was borne in the ſeventy yeares of his father Terahs age: whereas it is cleare, ſeeing Araham in his fathers two hundred and five yeare, was ſeventy five yeares old, Gen. 11. 31. & 12. 4. that he was borne in the hundred and thirty yeare of his fathers age. 2. As one abſurdity being granted, many follow, and one errour breedeth many: ſo upon this falſe ground he buildeth other uncertaine concluſions, as that Abraham was borne after the flood, 292. yeares: whereas he was borne 352. yeares after, an. 352. after the flood: for ſo long after is the 130. yeare of Terahs age. 3. He ſaith, that Noah died in the 58. yeare of Abrahams age, whereas Noah died 2. yeares before Abraham was borne. 4. Further he affirmeth, Terah Abrahams father to have died in the 135. yeare of Abrahams life, whereas he muſt end his life ſixty yeares before, in the ſeventy five of Abrahams age: for ſo old was Abraham when he went out of Charran: whence he departed not till the death of Terah, Act. 7. 4. 5. He proceedeth further in this his new coyned Chronologie, that Abraham died in the 467. yeare after the flood, and 2123. yeares after the creation, whereas it was the 527. yeare after the flood, and 2183 yeares from the beginning of the world, wherein Abraham left his life. 6. Further he ſaith, that Abraham left Sem alive behinde him: whereas it is certainly gathered, that Sem died 25. yeares before, in the 150. yeare of Abrahams life, and 502. yeares after the flood, Geneſ. 11. 11.

Pererius noted of manifeſt error in Chronologie.

QUEST. XII. How Abraham yeelded up his Spirit.

Vers. 8. HE yeelded up the ſpirit and died, &c. 1. Though the word gava rather ſo ſignifieth, expirare, to give up the ghoſt, than deficere, to faint: Hieromes reaſon is not ſo good, quia non convenit Abrahæ deficere, it was not fitting that Abraham ſhould faint and decreaſe: for no morall decreaſing or fainting is here ſpoken of, but onely naturall. 2. Neither is this word, which ſignifieth to yeeld up the ghoſt, uſed onely of the juſt, as Rabbi Salomon and Lyranus: for the ſame is uttered of the old world, Gen. 7. 22. all the fleſh yeelded the breath: and of Iſmael, verſ. 17. of this chapter. 3. Neither is Oleaſters reaſon ſufficient, why we ſhould read rather he fainted, than yeelded up the ſpirit, becauſe it followeth, he died: and ſo the ſame thing would be twice expreſſed: for this expiring or yeelding up of the ſpirit, ſhewe the facility and eaſineſſe of his death: as the word following betokeneth the thing, that he dyed this declareth the manner: not that he dyed without any ſickneſſe, or griefe, as Aben Ezra: for the juſt are not exempted from the common condition of mankind, Vatab. but it ſheweth that he willingly rendred up his ſoule into the hands of God, Calvin. 4. Cajetanes collection is not here to be refuſed, whereby three things are ſet downe by Moſes concerning Abrahams departure: 1. that he dyed, that is, was diſſolved, which belongeth unto the whole man, as conſiſting of body and ſoule: 2. that hee was gathered, which concerneth his body: 3. that he was gathered unto his people, in reſpect of his ſoule which was joyned to the bleſſed company of the Saints: Cajet. in hunc locum.

Hier. traditi Hebraic. in Gen. 25.

QUEST. XIII. How Abraham died in a good age, and full of yeares.

IN a good age, satisfied or full of daies. 1. In that Abraham is said to have died in a good old age, whereas many before him were of longer life, and much elder, of whom this phrase is not used: Philo gathereth thereth, that it was not the old age of his body, but his perfection of vertue, that made a good old age: Disce soli viro bono contingere senectutem bonam: Know, that onely a good old age happened to a good man: sic etiam Calvin. 2. Hee was full, because daies is not added in the originall, the Hebrewes gather that he was full, not onely of daies, but of all other blessings, ex Mercer. and he was satisfied with daies, as not desirous to have his life prolonged, Calvin. Thus even some among the Heathen were satisfied with daies: as Cicero writeth of Cato, that he should say, Si quis deus mihi largiatur, ut ex hac aetate repuerascam, & in cunis vagiam, valde recusem: that if God should grant me to become a childe againe, and to cry in the cradle, I would refuse it, Cicer. de senectute. Therefore Abraham was in another sort full of daies, because his daies were full of vertue: hee had not spent his life in vaine, but as Apelles that cunning painter was wont to say, nullus dies sine linea, no day without a line: and Titus the Emperour, if any day had passed, wherein he had not done some good, would say to his friends: Diem perdidi, I have lost a day: so no doubt Abraham did passe over his time in fruitfull workes, Perer.

QUEST. XIV. How the sinner is said to die before his time.

Phil. in libr. quis rerum divinar. sit haeres. August quaest. 163. in Gen.

ABraham then received a great blessing of God, in living both long and well; and dying in his time: not as the Preacher saith of the wicked man, lest thou die in tempore non tuo, in a time not thine, Eccles. last. 7. 19. which is so spoken, 1. Not that a man can die before the time appointed of God: for a mans daies are determined with God, Iob 14. 5. 2. Nor yet so onely, because the wicked is never prepared or fit for death, both because he is destitute of vertue, as also hee expecteth not death, in which respects in some sense he may be said to die not in his time, being neither ripe for it in vertue, nor looking for it. 4. But the sinner is said to die before his time; when the naturall course of his life, which in the judgement of man (though not in the determination of God) might have lived, is by some violent and extraordinary kinde of death shortned and cut off: as Nadab and Abihu, for offering in strange fire, were thus before their time consumed with a fire sent from God, Levit. 10. ex Perer.

QUEST. XV. What it is to be gathered to his people.

Vers. 8. AND was gathered to his people. 1. This people are not the sunne, moone and starres, or their visible Ideae, or formes, according to the which, these sensible things were made: or the foure elements, of the which the bodies of men are compounded, as Philo imagineth: these are but Platonicall conceits: and who seeth not how unproperly the name of people agreeth to any of these? 2. Neither with Augustine, by people doe we understand the society and company of Angels: for Ismael also is said vers. 17. to be gathered to his people. 3. Neither can it bee applied to Limbus patrum, where all the men were from the beginning of the world, as Lyranus, Rupertus: unlesse they will say, that Ismael went into the place of just men, who was also gathered to his people: and whereas they make Limbus patrum, a member of hell, a place of darknesse, Abraham went not thither: seeing Abrahams bosome was a place of rest and joy, where the Angels were, for they carried Lazarus soule thither. But the blessed spirits are Angels of light, and not of darknesse. 4. We also refuse Burgensis conceit, who maketh a difference of phrase in the old and new testament, when the Scripture speaketh of the dead: they are said, that die in the new testament, to die in the Lord, which phrase is not used of any in the old testament, because they were not admitted ad beatificam Dei visionem, to the blessed presence and sight of God, Cajet. Indeed I grant, that after the manifestation of the Messiah to the world, the Scripture speaketh more clearely of the faithfull departed in the new testament, because the Messiah was then come: but not for any such cause pretended: for even the soules of the faithfull departed in the old testament, did enjoy the presence of God, as David saith, I shall behold thy face in righteousnesse, and when I awake, be satisfied with thine image, Psal. 17. 15. he doubted not but that his soule first apart should see God, and then his body and soule in the resurrection: and the Scripture speaketh evidently, that Abraham, Isaack, and Jacob, did live with God: for of them God is called, who is not the God of the dead but of the living, Matth. 22. 32. 5. Neither this phrase, to be gathered to his people, doth only signifie to be in the state of the dead, and equivalent to that phrase, to sleepe with their fathers, which is spoken of the wicked, as well as of the righteous: as idolatrous Ahaz is said to have slept with his fathers, 2 King. 16. 20. Mercer. For if it were no more but thus, to be gathered to his fathers, that is, to die, and be buried: the same was said before: and such repetition of the same thing might be thought needlesse. 6. Wherefore beside this, this phrase doth further shew the divers state of the soule after this life, that both Abraham had his people, the just and righteous, to whom he was gathered, as also Ismael his: that the soules which goe hence are not solitary and alone, but goe as it were from one people to another, from one city to another, Calvin, Perer.

QUEST. XVI. Why Ismael is joyned with Isaack in the buriall of his father.

Vers. 9. HIs sonne Isaack and Ismael buried him, &c. 1. Isaack is set before Ismael, not as though he had repented him of his presumption against Isaack, and gave him the priority, as the Hebrewes imagine: but Isaack is preferred before Ismael for the dignity of his prerogative. 2. Neither doth this shew that Abraham had called Ismael home againe, after he was cast out: for that had been against the counsell of God, that the bond-woman with her sonne should bee cast out. 3. But it that Abraham being ſicke and wearing away ſent for Iſmael, dwelling not farre off, and reconciled him and Iſaack, Mercer.

QUEST. XVII. How Iſaack was bleſſed after Abrahams death.

Vers. 11. AFter the death of Abraham God bleſſed Iſaack, &c. 1. We refuſe here the fond conceit of the Hebrewes, that Abraham bleſſed not Iſaack becauſe of Eſau which ſhould come of him; and therefore God and not Abraham is ſaid to bleſſe Iſaack: for although no expreſſe mention be made of Abrahams bleſſing Iſaack, it is not to bee thought, that Abraham omitted it: and ſeeing God bleſſed Iſaack, Abraham had no reaſon to withhold his bleſſing. 3. This bleſſing of Iſaack was rather ſpirituall than temporall, for Iſaack was married twenty yeares before he ſaw his poſterity, or had any children borne: whereas Iſmael begat twelve Dukes: Iſaack therefore with patience expected Gods promiſe and bleſſing upon him, Mer. 3. We ſee here alſo performed that promiſe of God, I will be thy God, and the God of thy ſeed, for Iſaack is bleſſed after Abrahams death, Martyr.

QUEST. XVIII. Of the dwelling of Iſmaels ſonnes.

Vers. 13. THeſe are the names of the ſonnes of Iſmael, &c. Nebaioth, of whom came the Nabathæi in Arabia Petræa, and Napathæi, in Arabia fœlix, or the happie: of Kedar, the Cedreni, as Lampridius, or Cedræi, as Plinie calleth them, in Arabia petræa: of Adbeel the Adubeni or Agubeni, with Ptolomy in Arabia the happy: of Mibſam, the Muſcmanenſes in Arabia the happier: of Miſhma, the Raabeni, in Arabia the deſart, where Ptolomie placeth the towne Zagmais: of Dumah the Dumæi, between the Adubenes and Raabenes, where is the towne Dumetha: of Maſſa, the Maſani, neare to the Raabenes: of Chadar the Athritæi: of Thema the Themanei, in Arabia fœlix, where is the towne Thema: of Iethur, the Itureans in Cœlæ-Syria: of Naphiſh, the Nubæi Arabians, neare to the mount Bibanus: of Kedma the Cadmonæi, called Eſites becauſe they worſhipped fire, by the corrupt uſe of the Hebrew word eſh, fire: ex Iunio.

QUEST. XIX. The Maſſorites curious obſervation.

Vers. 14. MIſma, Dumah, Maſſa: 1. Of Dumah and Maſſa mention is made, Iſay 21. 11. where ſome tranſlate maſſa, burden: in the ſame place alſo Thema is mentioned, verſe 14. another of the ſonnes of Iſmael here rehearſed. 2. The Maſſorites doe note that this is one of the 14. verſes through the whole Bible, that conſiſteth of three words, Mercer. 3. And further they obſerve, that their three names, the firſt derived of ſhamang, to heare, the ſecond of dum, which is to keepe ſilence, the third of maſſa, to beare, doe ſignifie the three principall things that make a quiet and good life: to heare, to keepe ſilence, to beare: but theſe notes are too curious, Mercer.

QUEST. XX. Why mention is made of Iſmaels age.

Vers. 17. THeſe are the yeares of the life of Iſmael, 137. yeares: The Hebrewes thinke that Iſmaels wicked mans age is recorded for this end, that we may have a perfect account of Iacobs yeares: for if Iſmael died the ſame yeare that Iacob went from his father, unleſſe he be ſuppoſed to have hidden himſelfe 14. yeares in Hebers houſe before he came to Laban, as the Hebrewes thinke, which is not like, he ſhall want 14. yeares of his age; as they further gather thus: Iacob was 63. yeares old when he went from his fathers houſe becauſe of Eſau, his father being then 123. years old, and Iſmael 137. 14. yeare older than Iſaack: then he ſerved 14. yeare before Ioſephs birth: Ioſeph was 30. yeare old when he ſtood before Pharao: then followed 7. yeares of plenty, and two yeares of dearth, when Iacob went downe to Egypt: all maketh but 116. yeare: But Iacob then confeſſeth when hee appeared before Pharao to bee 130. yeare old: the 14. yeares wanting they imagine Iacob to have ſpent in Hebers houſe. But this computation of the Hebrewes faileth many waies. 1. Heber was dead long before Iacobs 60. yeare: he died ſome 4. yeares after Abraham, in the 19. yeare of Iacobs age, as may be gathered thus: Heber was borne 67. yeares after the flood, Gen. 11. v. 10. to 15. and lived 464. yeares, which make together 531. yeares after the flood, and Abraham died 527. yeares after the flood, as is before ſhewed, Gen. 11. 2. It is alſo an uncertaine conjecture, that Iſmael died the ſame yeare that Iacob went to Meſopotamia, neither can it be proved. 3. Theſe 14. yeares may be otherwiſe ſupplied: if we ſay that Iacob might be 14. yeares in Labans houſe before he ſerved for his wives, Mercer. or, which is the more likely, that Iacob was 77. yeares old, before he went out of his fathers houſe, Concen. 4. Therefore this cauſe is mention made of Iſmaels age, who is the onely evill man, whoſe whole age is recorded in ſcripture, but to ſhew the fulfilling of Gods promiſe, who condeſcended to Abrahams requeſt, that Iſmael might live in Gods ſight, Geneſ. 17. 18. for ſo the Lord endued him with long life, and bleſſed him with much proſperity and an honourable iſſue.

The Hebrewes cõfuted, which ſay Iacob was 14. yeares at Hebers houſe.

QUEST. XXI. How Iſmael is ſaid to dwell in the preſence of his brethren.

Vers. 18. AND they dwelt from Havilah to Shur, &c. And he lay, or his lot fell before all his brethren. 1. The meaning is not, that Iſmael did iſſue out or fall upon all his brethren, as the word naphal ſignifieth, whereof commeth the word Nephilim, Giants, Muſcul. 2. Neither, that hee fell, that is, died, Aben Ezra. 3. Or that he died before his brethren, that is, his ſonnes in a full age, Lyran. Or that he died before his brethren, as though his life was ſhorter than of the reſt, 5. But either it may be expounded his lot fell, Iun. or if this ſeeme to be coact, as Calvin thinketh, the word alſo ſignifieth, to lie,

lie, Iud. 7. 12. so that this is the sense, that he lay, that is, dwelt, as the Septuagint and Chalde translate before his brethren; that is, he bordered upon them, his brethren the sonnes of Keturah; not he onely in person, but his posterity, inhabiting this large countrey, whereof the desart of Sur was the bounds on the south, the land of Chavilah (not that in India, but another in Arabia, where the Geographers place the Chaulareans) on the East, Assiria on the North, so that this sheweth the accomplishment of that prophecie, Gen. 16. 12. he shall dwell in the presence of all his brethren, Mercer. Iun.

QUEST. XX. Why Isaack is againe said to be the sonne of Abraham.

Vers. 19. THese are the generations of Isaack, Abrahams sonne, &c. 1. Although the birth of Iacob and Esau was long before Ismaels death; for at that time Ismael was but 74. yeares old, 14 yeare elder than Isaack, who was 60. at the birth of his children; but Ismael lived in all 137. years: yet Moses finisheth and knitteth up briefly the story of Ismael because he maketh haste to set downe the story of Isaack and Iacob, the Patriarkes of the Church and people of God. 2. Yet hee dwelleth not long in the history of Isaack, handling the life and acts of Iacob, in the most part of this booke behinde: and as it may appeare for these reasons: 1. Because all the children of Iacob, the twelve Patriarkes, were founders of the visible Church; whereas Esau came of Isaack. 2. For that greater variety of temptations and changes happened to Iacob, than to Isaack, wherein he shewed experiment of his vertue. 3. More excellent visions were manifested to Iacob, than to Isaack, six in all, Genes. 28. 2. Genes. 31. 3. cap. 32. and 5. chap. 35. 6. Gen. 46. whereas two onely were revealed to Isaack expressed c. 26. ex Perer. 3. Isaack is here againe called the sonne of Abraham, not because some sorcerers of that time held him to be Abimelechs sonne, and therefore to put the matter out of doubt, hee is againe repeated to be Abrahams sonne; thus the Hebrews conjecture; but because Genealogers must beginne from the first famous author, or father, Moses beginneth with Abraham, to whom such large promises were made concerning his seed.

Why Moses is larger in the history of Iacob, than of Isaack.

QUEST. XXI. Why Isaack staid three yeares after Sarahs death for Rebecca.

Vers. 20. ISaack was 40. yeare old when he tooke Rebecca to wife, &c. 1. The Hebrewes doe but fable that Rebecca was borne about Sarahs death, and that Isaack stayed for her 3. yeares after: though the report of Rebecca her birth about that time came to Abraham, Gen. 22. yet then it was not done; and if Rebecca had beene then borne, Isaack must have stayed longer for her than 3. yeares: Iosephus thinketh Rebecca was then 10. yeare old, and that Isaack stayed for her three years more; but it is more like that she was then 30. yeares of age, ten yeares younger than Isaack, as Sarah was to Abraham. Mercer. 2. Rupertus allegorie also is but forced, that as Sarah died 3. yeares before the marriage of Isaack and Rebecca, so from the baptisme of Christ three yeeres before his passion, the law began to faile. 3. Mention is here made of Bethuel and Laban, to shew the grace of God toward Rebecca, that was rose between two thornes, having a superstitious both father and brother, Musculus. as also Laban is brought in, to make a way for the storie following, whose daughters Iacob married, Iun.

QUEST. XXII. Whence Mesopotamia was called Padan.

Vers. 20. OF Padan Aram. This was not the name of a city, but a country; for the name of Laban and Bethuels city was Charran. 1. It was not called Padan Aram, that is, the region or countrey of Aram. 2. Neither because Padan in the Syrian tongue signifieth a paire, is it so called, because there were two countreys of Syria, or Aram; Aram Soba, and Aram Naharaim, or Mesopotamia; and the name of Padan to be given to Mesopotamia, as the chiefe. 3. But a part of Mesopotamia was so called because of two floods which parted and divided the river Chaborah and Euphrates: a monument of the name Padan, appeareth in the name Aphadana, given unto two townes, one situate by Euphrates, the other by the river Chabora, Iunius ex Ptolem.

QUEST. XXIII. Wherefore barren women were the mothers of the Church.

Vers. 21. BEcause she was barren: We finde in Scripture, that many excellent women appointed to be the mothers of holy men, were barren: as Sara, Rebecca, Rachel, Anna the mother of Samuel, Elizabeth the mother of Iohn Baptist: the reasons are yeelded to be these: 1. That we might know genus Israeliticum non naturali successione, sed gratia esse multiplicatum; that the Israelites were multiplied not by naturall succession, but by grace, Theodoret. qu. 74. in Genes. 2 Vt ex mirabili partu sterilium fecundarum præstruretur fides partus virginis: that by the miraculous bearing of barren women, a way might be made to believe the birth of a virgin, Chrysost. hom. 49. in Genes. 3. This was also done, ad consolandos sterilium conjugum, to comfort the minds of barren couples, Chrysost. ibid. 4 It might be that God would qualifie the excesse of Isaacks love by this meanes, Calvin.

QUEST. XXIV. Why and how long Isaack prayed for his wife.

Vers. 21. ISaack prayed to the Lord for his wife. 1. He knew that the impediment was in his wife, and not in himselfe, because of Gods promise made to Abraham, Gen. 21. 17. I will greatly multiplie thy seed: and therefore he prayeth for Rebecca. 2. It is not like that hee continued in this prayer twenty yeares, so long as Rebecca was barren, as Chrysostome thinketh, hom. 49. in Gen. for some experience Isaack first had of her barrennesse, which could not be immediately after their marriage. 3. Now they as Rash, did hee expect ten yeares, (as Abraham so long tooke triall of Sarah before he tooke Hagar, and hereupon the Hebrewes after ten yeares triall of barrenneſſe doe take liberty to repudiate their wives:) for the ten yeares, after the which Sarah gave Hagar to Abraham, are to be counted not from their marriage, but from their comming into Canaan. 4. The time therefore cannot be precisely ſet how many yeares Iſaack continued praying for his wife: but it is like he continued and waited in prayer, for ſo the word gnathar here uſed, ſignifieth to frequent and multiply prayer. 5. And where the word is nocach, he prayed, in reſpect or toward his wife: we need neither to underſtand his wife alway to be preſent when he prayed, or that they prayed together, one in one corner, the other in another, as the Hebrewes: but the meaning is, that he prayed in the behalfe of his wife: though it is not unlike but that ſometime they prayed together.

QUEST. XXVII. Why Iſaack did not thinke of ſecond marriage, as Abraham tooke Agar.

NOw Iſaack ſeeing his wife to be barren, did not take unto him another, to have children by, as Abraham did Hagar. 1. Not as the Hebrewes imagine, becauſe he was conſecrate unto God in mount Moriah, and therefore could not be twice married: for the Prieſts were conſecrate unto God, and yet ſecond marriage was not prohibited unto them. 2. But it is like that Abraham who expected the promiſed ſeed 25. yeares, taught Iſaack with like patience to wait upon God. 3. And Abraham himſelfe might ſhew ſome diſlike of his forwardneſſe in taking Hagar, Mercer. 4. And beſide the caſe herein was unlike, becauſe Rebeckah made no ſuch offer to Iſaack, of another to beare in her ſtead, as Sarah did to Abraham, Perer. 5. And notwithſtanding that Iſaack onely had Rebeckah, Abraham two other beſide Sarah, he is not to be ſimply preferred before Abraham: for as Auguſtine well determineth this queſtion, Auguſt. lib. 16. de civit. Dei, c. 36.
Non ex bonis ſingulis inter ſe homines comparari debere, ſed in unoquoque conſideranda ſunt univerſa, &c. that men muſt not be compared together in particular gifts, but all muſt be conſidered together: that although herein Iſaack exceeded Abraham, yet he in meaſure of faith and obedience did goe beyond him.

QUEST. XXVIII. Whether Gods purpoſe is furthered by prayers.

THe Lord was intreated of him, and Rebeckah conceived. Although the Lord promiſed to multiplie Abrahams ſeed by Iſaack, and that Iacob was predeſtinate of God, and therefore Gods purpoſe could not but ſtand; yet here it ſeemeth to be effected by Iſaacks prayers, that Rebeckah ſhould conceive: becauſe Iſaack had no certaine promiſe whether by Rebeckah, or at what time he ſhould be increaſed. For anſwer hereunto: 1. We ſay not with Thom. Angl. that Gods counſell and predeſtination is conditionall: Deus non predeſtinat talia abſolute, ſed ſub congruis conditionibus; God doth not predeſtinate ſuch things abſolutely, but under certaine conditions. For Gods purpoſe of election and predeſtination is without any condition: as the Apoſtle ſaith, That the purpoſe of God might remaine according to election, not by workes, but by him that calleth, Rom. 9. 11. Gods election ſtandeth not by any condition, in him that is called, but by the will of the caller. 2. Neither doe we thinke, predeſtinationem ſanctorum precibus juvari poſſe, quoad effectum, licet impediri non poſſit: that Gods predeſtination can be helped in reſpect of the effect by the prayers of the Saints, though it cannot be hindred: which is the opinion of Thomas Aquinas, 1. par. qu. 23. ar. 8. for the Apoſtle ſaith, Who was his counſeller, or who gave unto him firſt, and he ſhall be recompenced, Rom. 11. 35. As neither God was aſſiſted in his eternall counſell, neither can he be helped in the execution thereof. 3. Nor yet doe we allow that ſaying of Gregorie; that God ſo predeſtinates eternall life, ut precibus meremur accipere, that yet it may be merited by prayer: and as Aquine ſpeaketh, that God doth creaturis dignitatem cauſalitatis communicare, that God doth communicate to creatures the dignitie of being cauſes: for the Apoſtle calleth it election of grace: and if it be of grace, it is no more of workes, Rom. 11. 6. therefore workes as cauſes cannot be ſubordinate to election of grace. 4. Yet ſeeing as God hath predeſtinated the end, ſo he hath ordained the meanes and way leading thereunto: therefore by faith, prayer, hope, patience, the elect are brought to be partakers of the happy end: not as cauſes procuring the ſame, nor as meanes to aſſure them thereof: for theſe are fruits of our election: as the Apoſtle ſaith, He hath choſen us in him, before the foundation of the world, that wee ſhould be holy, Eph. 1. 4. So Ambroſe upon theſe words of the Apoſtle, who hath ſaved us, &c. not according to our workes, but according to his owne purpoſe and grace, 2. Tim. 1. 9. thus inferreth: Quomodo redintegraretur, predeſtinavit, quo tempore, per quos, qua ratione ſalvari poſſunt, ut neque merito ſuo, qui ſalvantur, neque horum, per quos vocantur, ſed Dei munis iſtud donum præſtari videatur per fidem Chriſti: God hath predeſtinate how a man ſhould be reſtored, at what time, by whom and what meanes he ſhould be ſaved, that neither by their merit that are ſaved, nor theirs by whom they are called, but by Gods grace this gift is beſtowed through faith in Chriſt. So in this place Iſaacks prayer is not the condition, cauſe, or helpe of Rebeckahs conceiving, but even Iſaacks prayer was as wel predeſtined of God, as Rebecahs bearing: God appointed that Iſaack ſhould pray, and that Rebeccah thereupon ſhould conceive: and as Gods purpoſe for the conception of Rebeccah could not be altered, ſo alſo his preſcience concerning the ſtirring up of Iſaack to pray to the ſame end, could not be deceived.

In cap. 25. Gen.

The effect of Gods predeſtination, whether merited, helped, or cauſed by prayer, and other labours of the Saints.

QUEST. XXIX. How the children ſtrove together in the wombe.

v. 22. THe children ſtrove together, &c. 1. They did not exultare, leape, as Ambroſe readeth, nor geſtire, skip, as Auguſtine, or ludere, play, as Hierome: but the word ſignifieth to beat upon another, as is ſhewed before. 2. Which motion was neither naturall, as Ariſtotle ſaith, that children doe ſtrive in the right ſide upon the 40. day, the female in the left, in the 90. day: de hiſtor. anim. lib. 7. c. 3. 4. Neither was this motion voluntary: non colidebantur ſcientia certandi, they ſtrove not knowing, as having any skill to wreſtle, Rupert. But this motion was extraordinary, both becauſe Rebeccah

Lib. de Iſaac, & c. 4. lib. 16 de civit. Dei, c. 35. tradit. in Gen.

was

was ſo affected with the ſtrangeneſſe of it, Calvin. as alſo for that it portended two kinde of people, that ſhould one ſtrive againſt another, Perer.

QUEST. XXX. Why Rebeccah ſaith, why am I thus.

WHy am I thus. 1. Not as though ſhe ſhould ſay, cur vivo, why live I? as Mercer. 2. Neither yet ſhe fearing ſome abortion or miſcarrying of the infant, wiſhed ſhe had not conceived, Muſcul. 3. But ſhe doubted whether ſhe had conceived or no, or whether it might be otherwiſe with her, Iun.

QUEST. XXXI. How Rebeccah conſulted with God.

Verſ. 22. She went to aske the Lord. 1. Shee neither tooke a journey for her health ſake: as Ariſtotle giveth advice, that women with childe, deſidia non torpeant, ſed ſingulis diebus ſpatium aliquod deos venerandi cauſa conficiant: ſhould not give their bodies to reſt, but every day ſhould take ſome journey to viſit the gods, &c. lib. 7. politic. c. 16. 2. Neither did ſhe goe to Sem, who was dead ten yeares before, nor to Heber, who dwelt too farre off, as the Hebrewes thinke. 3. Neither yet was there any Prieſt to whom ſhe ſhould reſort, as Chryſoſt. 4. Nor yet need ſhe goe to any Prophet, as Oleaſter, her husband being a Prophet. 5. Nor yet is it like ſhe went to Melchiſedeck, to Mount Moria, as Euſeb. Gemel. which was too far a journey of three daies at the leaſt, Gen. 22. 4. for a woman great with childe to take in hand: and if Sem were Melchiſedeck, he was not then alive. 6. Neither need ſhe goe to any of the altars, which the Patriarkes had made to aske counſell of God, ſeeing God was every where preſent to the prayers of the faithfull. 7. Neither are we to imagine, that ſhe uſed any ſuperſtitious way, as to lay agnus caſtus, lawrell, or any ſuch thing under her head, to have a dreame or a viſion, as ſhe had ſeene her friends to doe in her owne countrey: ſic author hiſtor. ſcolaſtic. in Genes. for ſhe was farre from ſuch ſuperſtitious toies, ex Perer. 8. Nor yet did ſhe conſult with God by Abraham then living: as Aben Ezra, Iun. for this oracle was given her by Gods owne mouth, rather than mans, Calvin. 9. But ſhe went to ſome ſecret place to pray, and received ſome revelation from God, Muſculus. Calvin. Mercer. Perer.

QUEST. XXXII. How many waies they uſed to conſult with God in Iſrael.

FOure waies they uſed to aske counſell of God in Iſrael: 1. Beſide the caſting of lots, which was but ſeldome uſed, as by Ioſua, in Achans cauſe, Ioſua 7. and by Samuel at the election of Saul, 1 Sam. and by Saul to finde out the tranſgreſſion of his vow by Ionathan, 1 Sam. 14. there were three waies beſide to aske counſell of God, which are mentioned together, 1. Sam. 28. 6. by dreames, urim, and prophets; 2. The ſecond way was by dreames and viſions, as the Lord ſpake to the elder Patriarkes: but this way God ſeldome revealed his will by, after he ſent them prophets: and for theſe viſions they uſed to prepare themſelves by faſting and prayer, Dan. 10. 3. 3. They uſed in hard and difficult matters to ſeeke unto the prophets, as Saul went to Samuel, 1. King. 9. Ieroboam ſent his wife to Ahiah the Prophet, 1 King. 14. Theſe Prophets had ſuch matters revealed unto them three waies: 1. The Lord inſtructed them aforehand, as he did Samuel, before Saul came at him. 2. Sometime at the ſame inſtant, when they were conſulted with: as the Angel of God ſpake to Eliah, 2. King. 1. 15. 3. Sometime the Prophet preſently gave no anſwer, but waited upon God by prayer, as Dan. 9. or ſtirred himſelfe up extraordinarily that the ſpirit might come upon them, as Eliſha did, 2. King. 3. 15. 4. They alſo conſulted with God by the prieſt, who asked counſell of God for them by his Vrim: as Abiathar applyed the Ephod for David, 1. Sam. 23. 9. & 30. 7. Now the Prieſt received anſwer by the Ephod: not as the Hebrewes fable, by ſome writing written in the foulds and pleats of the Vrim, the ſentence or anſwer of God: nor as Ioſephus ſuppoſeth, by the extraordinary ſhining of the ſtones in the Vrim: which miraculous kind of anſwering he confeſſeth to have ceaſed two hundred yeares before his time, 3. antiquit. Iudaic. for how could the ſhining of the ſtones be a ſigne in ſuch variety of matters which were demanded of the prieſts: and more than two hundred yeares before Ioſephs time, who lived vnder Domitian, were ſuch gifts of prophecy ceaſed: as under Iudas Maccabeus, 1 Maccab. 4. 46. yea long before that the Church complained, We ſee not our ſignes, there is not one prophet more, Pſal. 74. 9. And further, the Scripture would not have been ſilent, in ſetting downe ſuch a miraculous gift. Therefore God did otherwiſe reveale unto the prieſt, and inſpire him with the knowledge of his will, by the illumination of his minde: for ſo Vrim ſignifieth illumination, Perer.

How the will of God was revealed to the Prophets.

How the Lord anſwered the prieſt by his Vrim or Ephod.

QUEST. XXXIII. How the elder is ſaid to ſerve the yonger.

Verſ. 23. Two manner of people ſhall be divided out of thy bowels, &c. the greater ſhall ſerve the leſſe. 1. The Hebrewes apply this text againſt the Empire of the Romans: whoſe Emperors they ſay came of the Idumeans, as Iulius Ceſar, & the reſt that ſucceeded him: who though they held the Iewes in ſubjection, in the end ſhould be deſtroyed, ſic David Kimhi, Rabbi Salomon, ex citat. Perer. 2. But the right literall meaning is of the Idumeans, and Iſraelites, the poſterity of Eſau and Iacob: for ſo we read that the Idumeans were ſubdued unto Iſrael by King David, 2. Sam. 8. 14. and ſo continued to the reign of Iotham, Mercer. 3. Neither were the Iſraelites onely ſuperiour in temporall dominion, but alſo in ſpiritual bleſſings: for they were the viſible Church of God, Edom was cut off, Calvin. 4. Spiritually by two people doe ſignifie the carnall Iewes, ſubdued unto the Chriſtians; being yet themſelves the elect people, Auguſt. lib. 16 de civitat. c. 25. Againe, by the ſtriving of Eſau and Iacob in their mothers wombe is ſignified the continuall fight in the wombe of the Church, betweene the true and carnall profeſſors which are ſaid to be the greater, becauſe they are more in number: but as the greater here did ſerve the leſſe, ſo the wicked, while they perſecute the righteous, quibus nocere volunt, proſunt plurimum, ſibi ipsi maxime nocent: they profit those whom they goe about to hurt, hurting themselves most, Augustin. serm. de tempor. 78. Beside, Origen draweth from hence this mysticall sense, understanding these two people to be within vs; and this strife and combat to be betweene the flesh and the spirit, vertue and vice, hom. 12. in Genes.

QUEST. XXXIV. How Iacob was sanctified in his mothers wombe.

Further, whereas Iacob strove with Esau in his mothers wombe, which was an extraordinary motion and worke of Gods spirit: here ariseth a question, whether Iacob were sanctified in his mothers wombe? which doubt, not resolved, but onely expounded by Peterius, may thus briefly receive satisfaction: 1. that first, if sanctification be taken for an actuall and inherent holinesse, so neither Iacob nor any other were sanctified, but onely Christ: in which sense the Angel saith to Marie, That holy thing which shall be borne of thee, shall be called the sonne of God, Luke 1. 35. 2. There is also a certaine holinesse ascribed to all the children of the faithfull, because they are within the covenant, 1. Cor. 7. vers. 4. whereby they are distinguished from the seed of unbeleevers: Iacob was sanctified otherwise than thus. 3. There is a particular sanctification, that is, a setting apart, or preparing of a thing to some speciall use: as Paul was separated from his mothers wombe in the purpose of God to preach the Gospell, Galath. 1. 15. Thus also was Iacob sanctified and separated to be the father of the people of God. 4. A thing also is said to be sanctified, when any extraordinary worke or motion is wrought upon it by the spirit of God: as Iohn Baptist was sanctified in his mothers wombe, when as at the voice of Maries Salutation, the Babe sprang in his mothers belly, Luk. 1. 44. and thus Iacob also was sanctified and stirred by the spirit to wrestle with his brother: not that he had any sense or understanding in fighting against the carnall generation, but he was used as an instrument by the spirit to prefigure that state and condition of the people of God which should be resisted and wrestled against by the world.

QUEST. XXXV. Esau why so called.

Vers. 25. HE that came out first was red, &c. 1. In that Esau came out red, it betokened his bloody disposition; in comming forth all hayrie, as a beast, it shewed his savage and cruell nature, Mayer. 2. This birth of Esau was extraordinary: for children are borne usually with haire only on the head, eyelids, and eye browes: in the other parts it groweth afterward: and such hairy conceptions are not without much griefe and trouble, causing loathsomenes in the stomacke, heart-burning, and such like, Mayer. 3. Hee was called Esau, that is, already made and perfect, of the word guasah, to make, which is actively to be taken, that he came forth with haire, as a perfect man, not actively, as though he should be diligent and prompt in his businesse, Mercer. 4. He had three names, Esau, because he was compleat, Edom of the red pottage, and Seir, that is haire, Perer.

QUEST. XXXVI. Of Iacobs holding Esau by the heele, what it signifieth.

Vers. 26. AFterward came his brother out, and his hand held Esau, &c. 1. It is not to be supposed, that Iacob at the time of the birth, as he came forth, held Esau by the heele, and that one birth immediately followed another, for this had beene against the common course, the head of the infant first coming forth, and might have put the mother in danger: but it is like rather, that Iacob before his birth put forth his hand, holding his brothers heele, which by the midwife was put into his place againe, and not long after a while he was borne also, and came out orderly with his head first, Mercer. 2. for so is the ordinary and naturall manner, for the head of the infant to appeare first: to come out footling, that is, with the feet first, is against nature, as Nero was borne: and hereupon, they which were borne with such difficulty, had the surname of Agrippa. Varro writeth, that the infant in the wombe is pitched upon his head with his feet upward, as a tree hath the branches uppermost, Perer. 3. Hee was called Iacob, of Akeb, which signifieth to supplant, taking it in the proper sense, because he held Esau by the heele, but in the metaphoricall, to deceive, as Esau wresteth the word, to bring his brother into hatred, Genes. 27. yet this name was a prediction of that which fell out afterward, that Iacob should supplant and ouerrow his brother, Perer. 4. The conceit of Kaf is but weake, that Iacob was first conceived in his mothers wombe, though Esau were borne first, and that therefore the birthright did belong unto him: the right of birthright consisted not in the priority of time, but the election of grace. 5. Yet this is strange in Iacobs birth, as Aben Ezra noteth: that Iacob putting forth his hand, did breake that rimme or skin wherein the infant is inclosed, which did prognosticate, that he would breake in upon his brothers birthright.

QUEST. XXXVII. Of the divers studie and profession of life in Esau and Iacob.

Vers. 27. ESau was a cunning hunter, &c. 1. Hunters and hunting in Scripture, are for the most part taken in the worst sense, as Nimrod is called a mighty hunter, not because this exercise is unlawfull, but for that it is more suitable to men of fierce nature, Mayer. 2. Otherwise the delight in it is lawfull and commendable, both profitable to keepe the body in health by moderate exercise, as to prepare and accustome it to labour, and make it fit and serviceable for warre, Perer. 3. Iacob was a plaine man without fraud, and lived a quiet life, dwelling at home, which the Hebrew more expound, of frequenting the tents of Sem and Heber for knowledge: but it is a description of those which keepe cattell and follow tents, as in this sense Gen. 4. 20. Iabal is said to be the father of them that dwell in Tents, which have cattell. Ion. 4. Esau is said to be a man of the field, not as the Latine translateth, an husbandman, but one continually conversant in the field, because of his game, a field man, as the Septuagint.

5. By

5. By the lives and diſpoſitions of theſe two, Gregorie noteth the divers ſtudies of worldly men, that [illegible] after the pleaſures of this life, as Eſau did, and of holy men, that give themſelves to the contemplation and ſtudie of vertue with Iacob, lib. 5. moral.

Quest. XXXVIII. Why Iſaack loved Eſau.

Verſ. 28. Iſaack loved Eſau, &c. 1. By this we ſee that parents are carried with blind affection, to [illegible] ſie thoſe children which are evill conditioned, Muſcul. 2. But Iſaack is not ſaid ſimply to love Eſau, but for his veniſon ſake, he loved not his evill conditions, Cajetan. 3. He loved him, becauſe he ſaw him active and well exerciſed, his forward qualities he thought might in time be allayed. 4. Some thinke that Eſau by his flattery inſinuated himſelfe, and ſo doe make a metaphor of theſe words, hunting was in his mouth; but the other ſenſe is more agreeable, Mercer. 5. Rebecca loved Iacob, not ſo much thereunto inclined by the oracle received, as mooved by the gentle and obedient behaviour of Iacob. Mercer.

Quest. XXXIX. Of Iacobs red pottage, and Eſaus greedie demanding of it.

Hebrewes uncertaine and bold collections.

Verſ. 30. Eſau ſaid to Iacob let me eat, &c. 1. It is but a toy deviſed here of the Hebrewes, that Abraham died this very day, when Eſau ſold his birth-right, when he was 15. yeares old, leſt he ſhould live to ſee the wicked manners of Eſau: for upon this day they ſay Eſau killed a man, and raviſhed a woman betrothed: and Iacob ſod lentils they ſay, which uſed to bee ſet before thoſe which mourne for the dead, thereby conjecturing, that he mourned for Abraham: But theſe are unneceſſary conceits, having no ground in Scripture: ex Mercer. 2. This was rather the uſuall food which Iacob prepared for himſelfe; for if it had beene common for the whole houſe, Eſau might have had other acceſſe unto it, Perer. 3. Eſau was very hungry as hunters commonly are, and ſeemed to be very impatient and unſatiable: for 1. he ſaith feed me, or let me ſwallow at once (ſo the word lagnas ſignifieth, and only found in this place) as Camels are fed, by caſting gobbets into their mouth. 2. Beſide for haſte he doubleth the word, this red red, Mercer. 3. He ſaith he muſt die if he have it not: as men of appetite cannot governe themſelves, but they muſt die, if their humour be not ſatisfied, Perer. 4. The Hebrewes note, that as Eſau was red, ſo he delighted in red things: in red pottage, (which beſide the redneſſe of the lentiles, might be coloured with ſaffron, or ſuch like) he dwelt alſo in a red ſoyle, called thereupon Idumea, &c. Mercer. 5. Although this may ſeeme to be but a light matter, which paſſed betweene Eſau and Iacob, yet conſidering that they were of diſcretion to know what they did, and Eſau was of yeares and ſtrength to follow hunting till hee was wearie, Iun. and beſide his parents upon this occaſion gave him a name Edom, Calvin, this action was governed by Gods providence, and the prophecie began now to take place, The elder ſhall ſerve the younger.

Quest. XL. Whether Iacob offended in cauſing Eſau to ſell his birthright.

Verſ. 31. Sell me now thy birthright. 1. Iacob may be thought to have dealt cruelly with Eſau and uncharitably, that would give him no releeſe being ready to die, but upon ſuch hard conditions: but the anſwer is, that Eſau coveted Iacobs pottage, not of neceſſity, for there was other meat in the houſe, whereby he might have ſatisfied his hunger, but of an unſatiable greedineſſe. 2. But Iacob was too covetous to cauſe Eſau to ſell for ſo ſmall a triſle ſo rich a thing as his birthright, which included many privileges, as the priority and government of his brethren, a double portion to the reſt, the prieſthood and right to ſacrifice, Exod. 19. 22. and 24. 5. and beſide was a type and figure of everlaſting life. Parabl. here the anſwer is not as the Hebrewes thinke, that Iacob gave a greater ſumme, and this onely as an earneſt, for no ſuch thing appeareth in the Scripture: but the true anſwer is this, that Iacob knew by the inſtruction of his mother, that the birthright by Gods appointment belonged unto him, therefore as a wiſe man he taketh this occaſion to recover his right from him that was an uſurper of it.

Whether Iacob did well to buy Eſaus birthright.

3. But ſeeing this birthright was a ſacred thing, for otherwiſe Eſau ſhould not be counted a profane perſon for ſelling it, how could Iacob buy it without ſinne? Anſwer. Iacob intelligitur ſuam vexationem redimere: Iacob did but redeeme his owne vexation; he buyeth not a thing which was not belonging to him, but onely recovereth that which was his owne: and this is not ſimoniacal in ſacred things, for a man may redeeme his quietneſſe, and peaceable poſſeſſion: 4. But ſeeing Eſau ſinned in ſelling his birthright, how could Iacob be without ſinne? yet, Iacob offended not, being hereunto no doubt ſtirred and incited by the ſpirit of God, and ſparing from his owne belly to obtaine ſuch a bleſſing, preferring things ſpirituall before temporall: but Eſau ſinned, in ſetting ſo light by the bleſſing of God, as ſhall appeare in the next queſtion, Mer. yet this extraordinary fact of Iacob is not to be drawne into imitation.

Quest. XLI. Whether before the law the firſt borne did alwaies exerciſe prieſthood.

BUt whether the prieſthood did goe with the birthright, and that the firſt borne did execute the prieſts office, it is queſtioned among the learned: for the ſolution whereof, 1. I neither thinke with the Hebrewes, that the firſt borne of the family alwayes had the preheminence of the prieſthood: for Abel the younger brother offered ſacrifice as well as Cain. 2. Nekber with Oleaſter, that this was not practiſed, whoſe opinion is that the prieſthood was not due to the firſt borne before the law of Aaron in force: for the contrary is evident, Exod. 24. 5. 3. Neither do I wholly aſſent to Hierome, who thinkes that omnes primogeniti ex ſtirpe Noe, that all the firſt borne of Noahs ſtocke were prieſts, epiſt. 126. ad Evag. for then Japheth rather then Sem ſhould have had that prerogative: for hee was elder than Sem, but borne in the 500. yeare of Noahs age, Gen. 5. 32. Sem two yeare after, Gen. 11. 10. yet Sem was the Prieſt of the moſt high God, ſuppoſed to be Melchiſedeck: and Noah ſaith, Bleſſed be the Lord God of Sem, Gen. 9. 26. 4. Neither doth the Apoſtle call Eſau prophane only as Pererius thinketh, becauſe he ſold the Prieſthood annexed to the birth-right: for it was a holy thing in reſpect of the ſpirituall bleſſing annexed unto it: In thy ſeed ſhall all the nations of the earth be bleſſed, Gen. 22. 18. 5. This then is our opinion rather, that before Moſes, the father of the houſe was the Prieſt for the family: as wee read that Iob every day offered ſacrifice for his ſonnes: but after the father was deceaſed, then the firſt borne ſucceeded both in the inheritance and prieſthood: and ſo after Iſaacks deceaſe, the birth-right ſhould alſo have conveyed with it the Prieſthood, Mercer. But that ordinance, that the firſt borne ſhould exerciſe the Prieſthood and offer ſacrifice, though he were not the father of the family, is no older than Moſes, Exod. 19. 22. 24. 5. Who then were ſanctified and ſet apart unto God, Exod. 13. 2.

QUEST. XXXVII. How many wayes Eſau offended in ſelling his birth-right.

Verſ. 32. LOe I am almoſt dead, &c. Eſau diverſly offended in ſelling his birth-right. 1. Becauſe he eſteemeth his birth-right only by the preſent commodity and pleaſure of this life: for whether he meane in reſpect of his daily danger in hunting, he was ſubject to death, as Iun. Or generally ſpeake of his mortality, as Mercer. Or, which is moſt like, of his preſent faintneſſe, Calvin. Hee onely limiteth his birth-right to this life, as though it could not profit him afterward: whereupon the Hebrewes gather, that hee denied the reſurrection. 2. Eſau offended in his intemperancy and ravenous deſire, that preferred his belly before ſo great and rich a birth-right. 3. In that for ſo meane a value hee would forgoe ſuch an inheritance: for whereas Aben Ezra would excuſe the matter, becauſe Iſaack was now become very poore, and therefore Eſau ſet the leſſe by his patrimony; it hath no ground at all: for whereas Abraham was very rich, and left all to Iſaack, and God bleſſed Iſaack beſide, how is it like that Iſaack in ſo ſhort a time could bee waſted? 4. Another ſinne was Eſau his profanenеſſe noted by the Apoſtle, Heb. 12. 16. that parted with a ſpirituall bleſſing for a temporall and momentany pleaſure. 5. His unthankfulneſſe to God appeareth, in that he no more regarded the dignity of the firſt borne given unto him. 6. His obſtinacy, in that he repented not his folly, but after he had done, went away careleſſe: and therefore it is ſaid Eſau contemned his birth-right, verſ. 34. 7. His falſhood and perfidious nature appeareth, who though hee had paſſed over his birth-right to Iacob with an oath; yet ſeemed to make but a ſcoffe of it, and purpoſed not in his heart to performe it, Perer. Hebrewes fancies.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the immortality of the ſoule.

Verſ. 8. WAs gathered to his people. Theodoret from hence well concludeth the immortality of the ſoule, and the hope of the reſurrection: for if men wholly periſh, and did not paſſe to another life, Moſes would not have ſaid, He was gathered to his people: qu. 109. in Geneſ. our Saviour alſo uſeth the like argument, to prove that Abraham was alive to God: becauſe the Lord calleth himſelfe the God of Iſaack, Abraham, and Iacob; God is not the God of the dead, but the living, Matth. 22. 23.

2 Doct. Order of time not alwayes obſerved in the ſacred hiſtories.

Verſ. 20. ISaack was 40. yeare old, &c. Whereas Moſes ſetteth downe the death of Abraham, and of Iſmael, before he deſcribeth the birth of Eſau and Iacob, which was 15. yeare before Abrahams death, and 63. yeares before Iſmael died; for Abraham lived 175. Iſmael 137. yeares, and where Iſaack was younger than Abraham by 100. and than Iſmael by 14. they are found to have lived after the birth of theſe twins: from hence then it is evident, that the order of time is not alwayes obſerved in the ſacred hiſtories, but that ſometime is ſet downe firſt, which was done laſt.

3. Doct. Againſt the caſting of mens nativities.

Verſ. 23. THe elder ſhall ſerve the younger. This example is urged by Auguſtine againſt the Genethliakes, that is, caſters of mens nativities: for hereby the vanity of their obſervations appeareth, in that the two twins conceived at once, and borne together, were of ſuch divers natures and qualities, Auguſt. de Ciuit. Dei lib. 4. c. 5. And whereas they anſwer, that in the birth of twins there may bee great diverſity, by reaſon of the ſwift motion of the planets, which change their aſpects and conjunctions every moment: one Nigidius Figulus would demonſtrate by the example of a wheele, which while it was ſwiftly carried about, he marked twice with inke; which markes, when the wheele had left running, were found not a little farre aſunder: whereby he would inſinuate, that in a ſmall diſtance of time, a great part of the celeſtiall globe may be turned about. But to this fanſie Auguſtine anſwereth, that if the celeſtiall motions be ſo ſwift, and continue not in one ſtay, then hardly can any man diſcerne, under what conſtellation any is borne: and Gregory thus wittily derideth their follies; that if Eſau and Iacob were not therefore borne under one conſtellation, becauſe one came forth after another: by the ſame reaſon, neither can any be borne under one conſtellation, becauſe hee is not borne all at once, but one part after another. Hom. 10. ſup. Ezech.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against Limbus patrum.

Verſ. 8. WAS gathered to his people, &c. This the Popiſh writers do underſtand of the fathers in Limbus patrum, whither Abraham alſo went: ſic Lyran. in Gen. 49. Rupert. lib. 6. in Gen. cap. [illegible]

Aug. in epiſt. 99. Contra. 1. The place to the which Abraham went, is called Abrahams boſome, Luke 16, which Auguſtine by no meanes thinketh to have beene a member or part of hell, as they make Limbus. 2. The Apoſtle ſheweth to what people the faithfull are gathered: Ye are come, &c. to the company of innumerable Angels, &c. to the ſpirits of juſt and perfect men, Heb. 12. 22, 23. Where then the ſpirits of juſt men were, there alſo were the Angels: for ſo we read that Lazarus ſoule was carried by the Angels into Abrahams boſome: But the Angels are not in Limbus patrum; upon this reaſon Lyranus refuſeth the interpretation of Auguſtine and Toſtatus, who by this people to the which Abraham was gathered, underſtand the ſociety of Angels, which is in no place but heaven: Lyranus alſo holding that all the juſt men from the beginning of the world went to Limbus, is confuted by Paulus Burgenſ. who ſaith, that Abraham was the firſt that went to Limbus, becauſe of him firſt this phraſe is uſed in Scripture, That he was gathered to his people. Thus we ſee that theſe Patrons of Limbus cannot agree among themſelves: for what certainty of opinion can there be, which is not grounded upon Scripture?

Aug. quæſt. in Gen. 168. Toſtat. in 25. Gen. Lyran. in 49. Gen.

2. Confut. Election is not of good works foreſeene.

Verſ. 23. THE elder ſhall ſerve the younger. S. Paul inferreth upon this text, that wee are not elected by workes, but according to the purpoſe of him that calleth, Rom. 9. 11. here then the errour of the Pelagians is confuted, who taught that men were elected for their good workes fore-ſeene of God before: But this errour is repugnant to Scripture, Eph. 1. 4. He hath choſen us in him, that we ſhould be holy: he ſaith not, becauſe we were holy: ſo that good workes are not a precedent cauſe of our election, but a conſequent effect thereof.

3. Confut. The ſoules merited not before they came into the body.

HEre alſo that errour aſcribed to Origen is overthrowne, who thought that the ſoules have a being before the bodies, and that they are diſpoſed of in this life, according to the merit of the former life which they lived in before they entred into the body: for the Apoſtle expounding this place, ſaith, before they had done either good or evill: and immediately before, yet the children were yet borne, Rom. 9. 11. therefore before they were borne they had neither done good nor evill.

4. Confut. S. Paul alleageth the examples of Eſau and Iacob, not for temporall election, or figuratively onely of eternall, but originally and properly.

IT is therefore evident, 1. That neither Moſes writing this prophecie, The elder ſhall ſerve the younger, did not only ſpeake of the externall inheritance and preeminence of Iacob before Eſau, neither did Paul ſo underſtand Moſes: for then the example had not beene pertinent to S. Pauls purpoſe, who goeth about to prove theſe two things; that all are not the children of promiſe which are the children of Abraham after the fleſh, which he ſhewed by the inſtance of Iſmael and Iſaack, verſ. 7. The other point is, that Gods election is of grace, not by workes, as appeareth in the example of Eſau and Iacob: wherefore the one was hated of God, the other loved, before they had done good or evill. If the Apoſtle then had brought in the example of temporall election, it had been impertinent, ſeeing thorowout the Chapter he treateth of eternall. 2. Neither yet was this outward preheminence of Iacob, and refuſall of Eſau, a ſigne onely and figure of their eternall election and reprobation, as Lyranus in 1. Malach. And therefore not directly implied in the words, but ſo applied by the Apoſtle: for, as the Preacher ſaith, No man knoweth either love or hatred of all that is before them, Eccleſ. 9. 4. that is, Gods love or hatred is not diſcerned by the condition of outward things. 3. Neither is it the literall and hiſtoricall ſenſe only, to ſhew that Eſau was temporally rejected: but S. Paul by his divine ſpirit doth draw it to a myſticall ſenſe, as Pererius thinketh, in 25. Genes. quæſt. 45. for S. Paul underſtandeth Moſes no otherwiſe than Malachy did: Eſau have I hated, Iacob have I loved, chap. 1. 1. who out of Moſes words inferreth a concluſion of Gods everlaſting love toward Iacob. 4. Wherefore the truth is, that the very literall and proper ſenſe of theſe words, The elder ſhall ſerve the younger, written firſt by Moſes and cited by S. Paul, doth principally deſcribe the everlaſting ſtate or condition before God; and are eſpecially to be referred to the celeſtiall inheritance: but ſecondarily, the promiſe of the externall inheritance of Canaan is here alſo comprehended. This may be made evident by theſe two reaſons: 1. That is the proper ſenſe of the place, which is principally and chiefly intended by the Spirit: but ſo is this ſpirituall ſenſe: as the Prophet expoundeth this place of Gods eternall love and hatred of Iacob and Eſau: 2. That is the proper ſenſe of the place, from the which an argument is framed and a concluſion inferred: but out of this ſpirituall ſenſe concerning everlaſting election, the Apoſtle reaſoneth and concludeth election to be only of grace, not by workes: Ergo, it is the proper ſenſe.

6. Pl[illegible]

6. Places of Morall observation.

1. Observ. The reconciliation of brethren.

Vers. 9. His sonne Isaack and Ismael buried him. They which were separated during their fathers life, are now united and reconciled in his death: which teacheth us, that brethren, which have beene long at variance, should yet, when the time of mourning for their father commeth, returne in affection, Muscul. Not as Esau, that intended when his father was dead, to execute his malice toward his brother, Gen. 27.41.

2. Observ. To continue and persevere in prayer.

Vers. 21. Isaack prayed to the Lord for his wife. It seemeth, seeing Rebeccah continued barren twenty yeares (for Isaack was maried at 40. and was 60. yeares old when Esau and Iacob were borne) that Isaack continued many yeares in prayer, and waited from moneth to moneth, from yeare to yeare, till the Lord had condescended to his prayer: whereby wee are taught, that wee should not give over in our prayers, neither limit God to heare us within a time, but still patiently expect his gracious pleasure: as the Apostle exhorteth that wee should pray continually, 1 Thes. 5.17. Mercer.

3. Observ. Gods will many times revealed to the weaker sort.

Vers. 28. Isaack loved Esau, &c. Rebeccah was better affected toward the chosen seed, than Isaack was: so was Sarahs heart toward Isaack, but Abraham loved Ismael: whereby wee see, that many times God revealeth his will to the more infirme sex: and as S. Paul saith, chuseth the weake things of the world, to confound the strong, 1 Cor. 1.17. Muscul.

4. Observ. Of frugality in meats and drinkes.

Vers. 29. NOw Iacob sod pottage, &c. By this we may see, how frugall and sparing the diet of those godly Patriarkes was; Iacob here contented himselfe with lentill pottage. These lentils came from Egypt, and was the usuall food in Alexandria, for young and old, which was commonly vendible in their Tabernes, Gell. lib. 17.c. 18. from thence the use of lentils became very common in other countries, the Philosopher Taurus used to sup with them, and Zeno the Stoike prescribed to his schollers, how they should seeth and dresse their lentils, with the twelfth part of Coriander seed, Athen. lib. 4. The like frugality and parsimony was used in famous countries among the Gentiles. The Arcadians lived of akornes, the Argives of apples, the Athenians of figs, the Tyrinthians of peares, the Indians of canes, the Carmanes of palmes, the Sauromatians of millet; the Persians, nasturtio, of cresses. These examples ought to make Christians ashamed, who use to pamper their bellies, and feed their fansies with curious delights, and exquisite dainties, Peter. S. Paul giveth a rule for this: meats for the belly, the belly for meats, God shall destroy both it and them, 1 Cor. 6.13. that therefore men should not bee so carefull to feed and fill their bellies with dainty meat and costly meats, seeing they both must fall to corruption. Ælian. de var. histor. lib. 3.

5. Observ. Against prophane persons that sell heaven for earthly pleasures.

Vers. 33. HE sold his birth-right. Esau, that for a messe of red pottage did part with his birth-right, is a president and patterne of all those which for the momentany pleasures and profits of this life, doe sell and lose their hope of eternall life, Mercer. As that rich glutton, Luke 16. which purchased his ease and pleasure in this life, with the everlasting paine and torment of his soule afterward: for this cause is Esau called a prophane person, Heb. 12.16. which for one portion of meat sold his birth-right.

CHAP. XXVI.

1. The Argument or Contents.

FIrst, in this Chapter is shewed the occasion of Isaacks going to Gerar: which was by reason of the famine, vers. 1. And Gods Commandement, vers. 2, 3. with the renewing of the promise made to Abraham, 4, 5.

Secondly, this Chapter treateth of Isaacks abode and dwelling in Gerar, with such things as there happened. 1. The question that arose about his wife, vers. 7. to 12. 2. The envy of the Philistims against Isaack, because hee prospered and waxed rich, 13. to 18. 3. The contention betweene Isaacks servants and the Philistims concerning certaine wells, vers. 18. to vers. 23.

Thirdly, there is declared the departure of Isaack from Gerar, to dwell in Beersheba, and the covenant made betweene him and Abimelech, vers. 23. to the end.

3. The Explanation of doubtfull queſtions.

Quest. I. Whether this Abimelech were the ſame with whom Abraham had to deale.

Verſ. 1. And there was a famine in the land, &c. 1. This other famine in Abrahams time, was that famine mentioned chap. 12. where Abraham went downe into Ægypt, Mercer. for then when Abraham ſojourned in Gerar, there is no famine ſpoken of, which Pererius ſuppoſeth to have been the cauſe of Abrahams going thither. 2. This Abimelech might be either the ſame, with whom Abraham had to deale, who might bee now not above an hundred yeare old, or another King of that name: for the Kings of Gerar were called by the name of Abimelech, as the Kings of Ægypt, Pharaohs: Phicol alſo might be the name of office, or the ſame man might ſerve the father and ſonne. Mercer. 3. Therefore we need not with Auguſtine, quæſt. 75. in Geneſ. to thinke this ſtory to have beene done before, and to be ſet downe by way of recapitulation: for it ſeemeth that Abraham was now dead: otherwiſe he ſhould have beene conſtrained alſo to have ſojourned for the famine: and Iſaack was now not an hundred yeare old: ſeeing he was 60. at Eſaus birth, who in the end of this chapter, at forty takes a wife, Perer. 4. Iſaack went to Gerar, thinking not there to ſtay, but to goe downe to Ægypt, if the Lord had not otherwiſe charged him: for Egypt, by reaſon of the over-flowing of Nilus, which made the ground both fat and moiſt, was very fruitfull and fertile, Pererius.

Quest. II. How and when God appeared to Iſaack.

Verſ. 2. For the Lord appeared unto him, &c. 1. Some think that God appeared unto him not by dreame, becauſe it is not expreſſed, but by open viſion, as Cajetan: but it skilleth not how God appeared, certaine it is, that he had a viſion. 2. The Lord appeared not ſo often to Iſaack, as to Abraham, becauſe the promiſes were to be but renewed and confirmed to him, Mercer. 3. It ſeemeth that this viſion was ſhewed to Iſaack before he tooke his journey, and purpoſed to goe into Ægypt: and that the Lord at firſt named not the place, where he would have him ſtay, but onely in generall, abide in the land which I ſhall ſhew thee: as the Lord ſaid to Abraham, Geneſ. 12. 1. and that herein he had ſome particular direction afterward: ſo that the firſt verſe is ſet downe by way of anticipation, Mercer.

Quest. III. Why the Lord would not have Abraham goe downe into Ægypt.

Verſ. 2. Goe not downe to Ægypt. 1. Iſaack is forbidden to goe downe to Ægypt, not becauſe he was to conſecrate unto God, and therefore was not to goe out of Paleſtina, as the Hebrews: for Chanaan being now peſtered with ſuch wicked inhabitants, was no holier than other Countries. 2. But either the Lord did keepe him from Ægypt, leſt he might have beene intangled with the pleaſures of that country, Calvin. 3. Or corrupted with the vices of the inhabitants, Mercer. 4. Or rather becauſe the Lord had purpoſed that Iacob and his ſeed ſhould goe downe to Ægypt, and there be kept in ſervitude: the Lord would not have Iſaack prevent that determined captivity: for when Abraham ſojourned in Ægypt, God had not yet revealed ſo much to Abraham concerning the hard entertainment of his ſeed, which followed afterward, chap. 15.

Quest. IV. Of Abrahams obedience, and whether it were greater than Iſaacks.

Verſ. 5. Becauſe that Abraham obeyed my voyce, &c. 1. Auguſtine concludeth from hence that Abrahams faith and obedience was greater than Iſaacks, becauſe all is granted for Abrahams ſake. lib. 16. de civitat. Dei, c. 36. Abraham indeed had the priority of faith and obedience, and therefore is called the father of the faithfull: but to make an unequall compariſon of theſe three Patriarkes, whom the Scripture doth conſort together, Exod. 32. 13. remember Abraham, Iſaack, and Iacob thy ſervants, we have no warrant, they might be all excellent in their kinde. 2. Neither doe wee approve here the Hebrew collection collection, that Abraham kept all the rites and ceremonies of Moſes law before it was given: many we grant he obſerved, as the Sabbath, offering of ſacrifices, the difference of cleane and uncleane beaſts, but not all: Mercer. 3. The Cabaliſts curious obſervations are not here worth the rehearſing: who by the ten words of this verſe underſtand the decalogue: and by the firſt word of the verſe, quechebh, which noteth 172. they inſinuate the yeares of Abrahams life, who all this time from three yeares of his infancy knew and worſhipped God: and beſide they ſay, there are juſt 172. words in the decalogue. 4. Abrahams obedience is expreſſed in theſe particulars: 1. In keeping Gods ordinances, that is, his ſpeciall Commandements, as in leaving his countrey, in caſting out the bond-woman, in ſacrificing his ſonne. 2. By Commandements, are underſtood the precepts of the morall law. 3. By ſtatutes or ceremonies, circumciſion, ſacrifices, and ſuch other rites: 4. By lawes, the documents of faith, and religion, wherein he exerciſed and trained up his houſhold, Mercerus.

Cabaliſts curious obſervations.

QUEST. V. Why Iſaack ſtayeth in Gerar.

Verſ. 6. SO Iſaack dwelt in Gerar. 1. Though Gerar were a more barren countrey than Egypt, and it is not unlike, but that the famine raigned and raged there alſo: yet God ſtayeth him there, that Iſaack might have experience of Gods providence, who was able even in a land of want to provide for him. 2. It is fit alſo he ſhould ſtay in Gerar which belonged unto the land of Canaan promiſed, Mercer. 3. This verſe is one of the 14. that conſiſteth only of three words.

Cabaliſts.

QUEST. VI. Iſaacks infirmity in cauſing his wife to diſſemble.

Verſ. 7. SHe is my ſiſter, &c. Iſaack falleth into the ſame infirmity which Abraham twice before committed, in giving counſell to his wife to diſſemble.

1. Neither Abraham nor Iſaack can bee excuſed, becauſe they were Prophets, and did fore-ſee what ſhould enſue: for all the actions of the Prophets were not propheticall: and this had beene to preſume of Gods power, to faile in the meanes, and to truſt for deliverance from God.

2. Neither doth this excuſe Abraham and Iſaack here, that he would ſpecially provide for his life, becauſe of the promiſed ſeed, for as he beleeved Gods promiſe, ſo hee needed not to have doubted, but that God by lawfull meanes would have preſerved his life.

3. Neither, as Lyranus, becauſe the Kings did not take their wives, till they had beene a yeare before eſpoused, as we read of the Kings of Perſia, did Abraham thinke that within a yeares ſpace God would provide: for this pompous cuſtome of Kings came in afterward.

4. Neither can Iſaack be excuſed, as Auguſtine thinketh, becauſe Rebecca was indeed his ſiſter, that is, his neere German: for in ſaying ſhe was his ſiſter he denieth her to be his wife.

Lib. 22. de civit. Dei. c. 46.

5. Wherefore it muſt needs be confeſſed, that this was Iſaacks weakneſſe, as Abrahams before; not only in his diſſimulation, which was the more tolerable, it tending not to the hurt of any other, though not juſtifiable, Mercer. But chiefly, becauſe he doth as much as in him lieth, proſtitute his wives chaſtity, and bring her into danger: and ſo Ramban confeſſeth that Abraham before herein grievouſly offended. But Iſaacks offence is greater, for that he could not take heed or be warned by domeſticall examples, Muſcul.

QUEST. VII. How Iſaack ſported with Rebeccah.

Verſ. 1. HE ſaw Iſaack ſporting or playing. 1. The Hebrewes thinke that Abimelech ſaw Iſaack carnally knowing his wife: and ſo they expound that of Iſmael, Gen. 21. 8. where the ſame word metzahek is uſed, that Iſmael ſported, that is, lay with other women: thus thinketh Lyranus. 2. But it is more like that Iſaack uſed ſome familiar geſture and ſigne of love, which was comely with his wife, but not with his ſiſter: and thus Auguſtine ſaith that holy men may ſometime deſcend ad fœminei ſexus infirmitatem, to the infirmity of that ſex, and hee compareth it to the fathers playing with children, as Ælianus maketh mention of Socrates and Ageſilaus, and Architas Tarentinus, how they uſed to ſport and recreate themſelves with children: lib. 12. de var. hiſtor. 3. Auguſtine further doth allegorize this ſporting of Iſaack: Quid ſordum, ſi Propheta Dei carnale aliquid luſit, ut eum caperet affectus uxoris, cùm ipſum Dei verbum caro factum ſit, ut habitaret in nobis? What marvell if the Prophet of God did ſport carnally, to pleaſe his wife, ſeeing the word of God became fleſh to dwell with us? But we need not ſo farre to fetch allegories, the hiſtoricall ſenſe is plaine and full enough.

Auguſt. in loco citato.

QUEST. VIII. Of the great increaſe that Iſaack had of his ſeed.

Verſ. 12. AFterward Iſaack ſowed in the land, &c. 1. Iſaack ſowed not in any ground of his owne, which he had purchaſed, or bought with his money: for verſ. 17. hee removeth and departeth thence: but he hired ground for his preſent uſe, Calvin. Mercer. 2. Hee found an hundred meaſures, that is in reſpect of others, or ſo much more than he expected, or than that ground was wont to yeeld, but an hundred meaſures for one which hee had ſowed, Perer. 3. The Septuagint read an hundred of barley, taking the word, for ſhegnarim ſignifieth meaſures, or eſtimation, ſegnarim, barley, Mercer. It was before wheat which he did ſow for the uſe and ſuſtentation of his family, or he had this increaſe generally in all the graine which hee did ſow. 4. Forrein writers doe make mention of greater increaſe. Herodotus ſaith, the countrey of the Euheſperites yeeldeth 100. fold, of the Cynipians 300. fold, lib. 4. Plinius writeth, that in Byzacium in Africa, for one buſhell of ſeed they receive 150. of increaſe: out of the ſame place, the governour ſent to Auguſtus Cæſar 400. ſtalkes which came of one graine, lib. 18. c. 10. But theſe were moſt fruitfull ſoyles, that gave this increaſe in ſeaſonable yeares: whereas this countrey was barren, where Isaack did sow, and in the time of famine: and therefore this increase was admirable, Perer.

Quest. IX. Of the valley of Gerar where Isaack pitched his tents.

Vers. 17. Isaack departed and pitched his tents in the valley of Gerar, &c. 1. Though the word (nachal) signifieth a valley, or brooke; yet it is not fitly here translated a brooke, as the Latine Translater readeth, and Pererius justifieth the same: for there was no need to digge wels where the water ran: neither is it like these pits were made to containe the water that came downe, as Perer. But in digging they searched for water, and at the length found a spring, vers. 19. 2. Neither yet was it a fruitfull valley, where Isaack now pitched his tents: for then he needed not to have digged so many wels. 3. But it is like to have beene a dale, thorow the which the hasty raine that fell, did run: and so by reason of the sand and gravell, which was carried downe, it seemeth it was a barren plat, neglected of the inhabitants, wherein Isaack might dwell without envy, Muscul.

Quest. X. Of the wels of water first digged by Abraham, and after by Isaack.

Vers. 18. And Isaack returned and digged, &c. The meaning is not that Isaack returned to Gerar to dig the wels againe, which his father had digged before, as both the English translations read: for to returne to dig, is nothing else but to dig againe, as Iunius translateth. 2. Neither were these other wels, beside those mentioned vers. 15. as Ramban, Mercer. For wee doe not read, that Abraham ever dwelt in this barren dale of Gerar. 3. But as Rasi thinketh, these were the same wels before mentioned, which Abraham had first digged, and the Philistims stopped, and Isaack renewed them, calling them by the same names, vers. 33. this was done before he came from Gerar: and departing thence he diggeth new wels in the dale, and calleth them by new names, though some thinke he giveth new names upon new occasions, to the old wels, Calvin. Mercer. 4. He digged the wels of Abraham againe: both for more certainty to find water, and the labour was easier, and he had better right unto them, seeing his father possessed them before. 5. Origen allegorizeth this story, comparing the Evangelists and Apostles to Isaack, which revived the wels of doctrine, which the Patriarkes and Prophets had first digged: and by the fountaine of living water, he understandeth the true sense of the Scripture, which we should digge for: hom. 12. and 13. in Genes. 6. The Hebrewes also have devised here divers allegories: some, by these three wels understanding the three Temples, the one built by Salomon, destroyed by the Chaldeans, the other rectified after the captivity, and demolished by the Romans, the third they referre to the time of their Messias, when they promise to their nation (rehoboth) that is, roomth and liberty: some by the wels renewed by Isaack, understand the Proselytes converted to the knowledge of God by Abraham, and corrupted by the Philistims, whom Isaack againe restoreth: ex Mercer. But these fabulous allegories are not much to be regarded.

Hebre wes fables.

Quest. XI. How the Lord protecteth his, and is their peculiar God.

Vers. 24. The Lord appeared unto him the same night, &c. 1. Whether God appeared unto Isaack, being awake, as Lippoman, or asleepe, as Tostatus, it is not certaine out of the text: Isaack had some infallible signe, whereby he was assured of Gods presence, Mercer. 2. The Lord calleth himselfe the God of Abraham, as being his peculiar God, in respect of Gods speciall care and protection of Abraham, and Abrahams singular faith and obedience toward God: like as the heathen had their nationall gods, which indeed were no gods: the Assyrians worshipped Belus, the Egyptians Isis, the Tyrians Baal, the Athenians Minerva, the Samians Iuno, the Lemnians Vulcan, the Romans Quirinus, &c. But the Lord Creator of heaven and earth is the peculiar God of Abraham, and of the faithfull, Pererius. 3. The Lord promiseth to be with Isaack, that is, to protect him: God protecteth his foure wayes. 1. By giving wisdome to foresee and prevent dangers. 2. By preventing the occasions, and delivering from the imminent perils. 3. By repressing the rage of Satan and his ministers. 4. By giving strength and patience to endure trouble, Perer.

The divers gods of the heathen.

Quest. XII. Why Abimelech with the rest came to Isaack.

Vers. 26. Then came Abimelech, &c. 1. Some thinke it was not the same Abimelech which made a covenant with Abraham so long before, well nigh 80. yeares, but his son bearing the same name Abimelech, which signifieth, my father the King, might be a common name to all the Kings of Gerar: and so might Phicol (which signifieth, the mouth of all, bee a title proper to the Captaines of the Army) Muscul. But it is rather like that it was the same Abimelech (because of the same chiefe Captaine Phicol) who might bee now somewhat above 100. yeares old. 2. Ahuzzah was a proper name of one of his chiefe friends, not a nowne collective, betokening the college or company of his friends, as Onkelos, Iunius, Tostat. 3. Abimeleeh commeth a farre journey, not of love or good will, but partly pricked in conscience, for the wrongs which he had offered to Isaack, Chrysost. hom. 52. in Gen. partly providing for their posterity, that Isaack would doe them no hurt, Mercer. 4. Origen, by these three that came to Isaack, understandeth the tripartite wisdome of the Gentiles, the morall, naturall, rationall, which dissenting at the first from the Christian faith, were afterward reconciled to it: hom. 14. in Genes.

Ques

QUEST. XIII. Why Iſaack made a feaſt to Abimelech and his company.

Verſ. 30. HE made them a feaſt. 1. Iſaack did this of a ſimple and ſincere affection, that they might know there remained no grudge or purpoſe of revenge in his minde: for to invite unto feaſts is a ſigne of remitting and forgetting of former wrongs: as Auguſtus Cæſar did bid Catullus the railing Poet to ſupper, in token he had forgiven him, though Alexander diſſemblingly brought Philotas to his table, to have the better opportunity to murther him: as Abſolom ſerved his brother Ammon. 2. Some thinke that the next morning the oath before betweene them made, was againe ratified: Mer. But it is more like, that the oath was deferred till the next morning, as being the fitteſt time for ſerious conſultations: it was the Perſians barbarous manner, in the middeſt of their cups to adviſe of their weightieſt affaires, Perer.

QUEST. XIV. Wherefore the well is called Shibah.

Verſ. 33. SO he called it Shiba. 1. Some interpret this word abundance or ſaturity, becauſe of the plenty of water that was found, as Hierome, who findeth fault with the Septuagint, becauſe they tranſlate it, oath. But ſabang ſignifieth to abound, not ſhabang, which is here uſed. 2. It is more like, that this was both the ſame well which Abraham digged, and the ſame name derived from the oath which was made betweene Iſaack and Abimelech, as before betweene Abraham and Abimelech: for ſo this ſtory ſaith, that Iſaack gave them the ſame names which his father gave them, verſ. 18. Mercer. Calvin.

QUEST. XV. Of the marriage of Eſau.

Verſ. 34. WHen Eſau was forty yeare old, &c. 1. The Hebrewes thinke, that Eſau till hee was forty yeare old, gave himſelfe to a vitious and a licentious life, which may well be: and that to imitate his father, who was married at forty, he doth the like. 2. This his marrying into the ſtocke of Canaan, was abdicationis præludium, a fore-runner of his caſting off, and miſſing of the bleſſing, as it followeth in the next Chapter, Calvin. 3. Toſtatus thinketh that in the forty yeare of Eſau, which was the hundred of Iſaack, Sem died: but Pererius thinking to correct his overſight, falleth into a greater errour, referring the death of Sem, to the 50. of Eſau, and 100. of Iſaack: whereas they are both in a great errour, for Sem died in the 50. yeare of Iſaacks life, 60. yeare before this time: which was 502. yeares after the floud.

A great errour in Chronology.

QUEST. XVI. The evill qualities of Eſau his wives.

Verſ. 35. THey were a griefe of minde. 1. Some read rebellious, of marah, to rebell, ſic Chald. But it rather commeth of marra, to be bitter. 2. And ſo were the wives of Eſau bitter unto Iſaack and Rebekah: and a great offence of mind unto them, both in reſpect of their corrupt manners, and their diverſe profeſſion, being given to idolatry, as the Canaanites were, Tharg. Hieroſol.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. God maketh rich.

Verſ. 12. THe Lord bleſſed him. Gods bleſſing is given as a reaſon of Iſaacks increaſing and growing rich: whereupon Auguſtine noteth, Etiam ipſa bona temporalia nec dari poſſe, nec ſperari debere, &c. niſi ab uno Deo: That theſe temporall goods cannot be given or hoped for, but from the only God, quæſt. 76. in Geneſ. as the wiſe man ſaith, Prov. 10. 22. The bleſſing of the Lord maketh rich.

2. Doct. The ſoules of the righteous live with God.

Verſ. 24. I am the God of Abraham. Abraham was now dead, and yet the Lord profeſſeth himſelfe to be his God: whereby we are taught, that the ſoules of the righteous after this life, doe live with God: for as our Saviour ſaith, He is not the God of the dead, but of the living, Matth. 22. 32. Muſcul.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Againſt the breaking of covenants.

Verſ. 15. THe Philiſtims filled all the wels, &c. Though that Abimelech had made a covenant with Abraham concerning the well, Gen. 21. 30. yet after Abrahams death, they goe from the covenant; ſuch are the enemies of the Church, of whom the Prophet ſpeaketh, Iſa. 33. 8. He hath broken the covenant: he regardeth no man: ſuch are the Romaniſts, which hold, that faith is not to be kept with heretikes: they brake the ſafe conduct granted to Iohn Hus, and Hierome of Prage, Mercer.

2. Confut. Of reſtoring the ancient doctrine with the ancient names.

Verſ. 18. HE gave them the ſame names which his father gave them. The Philiſtims both ſtopped the ancient wels, and aboliſhed the names, Iſaack reſtoreth both: ſo the Church of Rome hath aboliſhed both the true ancient doctrine of the Sacraments, as alſo taken away the name thereof: calling it by an idolatrous name of their owne invention, of the Maſſe, Muſcul. We therefore with Iſaack have reſtored the pure doctrine of the ancient primitive Church, together with the names, as the Communion, the Lords ſupper, the Lords day, &c. As the Prophet ſaith, Aske for the old way, which is the good way, and walke therein, Ierem. 6. 16.

6. Places

6. Places of morall obſervation.

1. Obſerv. Not to imitate our fathers infirmities.

Verſ. 7. HE ſaid, ſhe is my ſiſter. Abraham before had offended in the ſame kinde, and yet Iſaack cannot take heed: ſo apt children are to imitate the infirmities of their parents, Mercer. But we ſhould rather learne to decline from our parents errings, as the Prophet ſaith, If he beget a ſonne, that ſeeth all his fathers ſinnes, &c. and feareth, neither doth the like, &c. Ezek. 18.14.

2. Obſerv. The puniſhment of adultery.

Verſ. 11. HE that toucheth this man, or his wife, ſhall dye the death. Thus by the light of nature they were taught, that adultery was a grievous ſinne: and Abimelech pronounceth the ſentence of death againſt ſuch as ſhould violate another mans wife: as the Lord had ſaid before to Abimelech, Thou art but dead, becauſe of the woman which thou haſt taken, Geneſ. 20. verſ. 3.

3. Obſerv. Adverſity and proſperity tempered together.

Verſ. 12. Iſaack ſowed, &c. Thus the Lord tempereth adverſity and proſperity, ſorrow and joy together; like as the night and day, ſummer and winter, doe one ſucceed another: Iſaack after theſe grievous tentations, concerning his wife, is increaſed and bleſſed of God: likewiſe, verſ. 20. when his ſervants had ſtrived for two wels, they peaceably enjoy the third, calling it Rehoboth, roomth: as the Pſalme ſaith, Weeping may abide in the evening, but joy commeth in the morning, Pſal. 30.5. Muſcul.

4. Obſerv. Not good to make haſte to be rich.

Verſ. 13. THE man waxed mighty, and ſtill increaſed. Iſaack was not made rich at once, but hee increaſed by degrees: for the wiſe man ſaith, He that maketh haſte to be rich, ſhall not be innocent, Prov. 28.20. Men ſhould not therefore ſtrive ſuddenly to be rich, but wait patiently for his bleſſing, Prov.

5. Obſerv. Envy for good things.

Verſ. 14. THE Philiſtims had envy at him, &c. They had no reaſon to envy at him, and to ſend him away, whom they ſaw to bee bleſſed of God. But as Chryſoſtome ſaith, Ita ſe habet invidia, nihil cum ratione operatur: Such is the nature of envy, it doth nothing with reaſon: Bonis proximi magis quam propriis malis intabeſcit invidia: Envy rather pineth at other mens goods, than her owne evill, Hom. 31. in Gen. Such was the envy of Cain toward Abel, that ſlew him becauſe his owne workes were evill, and his brothers good, 1 Ioh. 3.12.

6. Obſerv. The Kingdome of God muſt firſt be ſought.

Verſ. 25. HE built an altar, &c. Firſt Moſes maketh mention of the building of an altar for the ſervice of God, and afterward of the digging of the well: which ſheweth, that firſt of all, things muſt be ſought that belong to the worſhip of God: as our Saviour ſaith, Seek ye firſt the Kingdome of God, and the righteouſneſſe thereof, &c. Calvin.

CHAP. XXVII.

1. The Argument or Contents.

THis Chapter ſheweth the purpoſe of Iſaack intending to bleſſe Eſau, verſ. 1. to 5. and the diſpoſing of the bleſſing to Iacob by Gods providence: and the preventing or diſappointing of Eſau, in the reſt of the Chapter: where concerning Iacobs obtaining of the bleſſing, we are to conſider, 1. The meanes, which was the counſell and device of Rebeckah, verſ. 5. to 18. 2. The execution or putting of the ſame in practice by Iacob, verſ. 18. to 27. 3. The ſucceſſe which God gave unto it, Iſaack giveth Iacob the bleſſing, verſ. 27. to verſ. 30.

In the rejecting of Eſau, 1. his griefe and ſorrow is expreſſed for the loſſe, verſ. 31. to 37. 2. his importunity to receive a bleſſing of his father, which hee had, to verſ. 41. 3. His hatred toward Iacob, becauſe of the bleſſing, and his malicious purpoſe to take away his life, verſ. 41. 4. Iacobs deliverance from his brothers cruelty, by departing into Meſopotamia, through the counſell of his mother.

3. The Explanation of doubtfull queſtions.

Quest. I. Of the cauſe of Iſaacks blindneſſe, and of his age.

Verſ. 1. Iſaack was old, and his eyes dimme: verſ. 2. I know not the day of my death, &c. 1. Iſaacks blindneſſe neither was cauſed by the ſmoke of the ſacrifices, which Eſaus wives offered to their idols, as the Hebrewes: nor yet was he by any extraordinary worke of God ſmitten blind, although God diſpoſed of his blindneſſe ſo, that thereby his purpoſe tooke place concerning Iacob: but Iſaack was now very old, being of 137. yeares: and blindneſſe is incident to old age, as other infirmities of the ſenſes, as of the hearing, the taſte, as Barzillai confeſſeth to David, 2 Sam. 19. Moſes example, whoſe eyes were not dim, at 120. yeares, Deut. 34. 7. is extraordinary. 2. Iſaack thinketh his end at hand: not as the Hebrewes thinke, becauſe he was within five yeares of his mothers age, that is, 123. Whereas Sarah died at 127. for Iſaack was now 137. yeares of age, Iacob being now 77. yeare old, at what time hee went into Meſopotamia, as is ſhewed before, qu. 19. in chap. 25. But Iſaack, who lived after this 43. yeares, doth daily meditate of his end, Mercer. Perer. 3. Though Iſaack was blind and weake in his eyes, yet it ſeemeth his body was of a ſtrong conſtitution, ſeeing he was able to eat of wild fleſh, which is of harder digeſtion, Pererius.

Quest. II. Wherefore Iſaack biddeth Eſau prepare him meat which he did love.

Verſ. 4. Make me ſome ſavoury meat, that my ſoule may bleſſe thee, &c. 1. Some thinke, that it was the manner of thoſe dayes, that the eldeſt, before he received his fathers bleſſing, did performe ſome ſervice: Lyran. But this no where appeareth in Scripture. 2. Some thinke, that this was done, that Eſau might ſeeme to deſerve his fathers bleſſing: Thom. Anglic. But ſpirituall bleſſings, ſuch as Iſaack beſtowed upon Iacob, cannot be merited by temporall ſervice. 3. Gregory compareth the Jewes to Eſau, which ſought by their owne workes to pleaſe God: the Gentiles to Iacob, that found a more compendious way by faith, Hom. 6. in Ezechiel. 4. Some by Eſaus portion of meat, to the which a ſpirituall bleſſing is promiſed, doe ſignifie the duty of the people, in paying temporall things, for receiving ſpirituall. 5. Rupertus by Iſaack promiſing a bleſſing for a temporall meat, ſhadoweth forth ſuch Biſhops in the Church, as doe for temporall rewards ſell ſpirituall bleſſings. 6. But Iſaack blind in eyes, and blind in affection, doth herein ſhew his partiall love to Eſau: the Lord in his ſecret providence over-ruling this action, and diſpoſing this occaſion to the effecting of his owne purpoſe.

Quest. III. Why Iſaack preferred Eſau for the bleſſing before Iacob.

Verſ. 4. That my ſoule may bleſſe thee, &c. 1. Neither is it like, as Ramban and other Hebrewes thinke, that Rebecca only knew the divine oracle concerning Iacob, and had not yet communicated it to Iſaack. 2. Nor yet that Iſaack underſtood the oracle otherwiſe than Rebecca did, that Eſau was preferred for the birthright, becauſe Iacob held him by the heele, and would have hindred his firſt comming out, if he could not. 3. But Iſaack rather of a carnall affection, forgetting what ſentence God had given before of his two ſonnes, doth favour Eſau for ſome temporall regard, and ſo we read, that the Prophets of God were deceived till they received further direction from God, as Samuel in the choyce of David, 1 Sam. 16. Mercer. 4. Yet this equality is obſerved, that both the parents doe not affect the one, and altogether neglect the other: but as Ambroſe ſaith, Mater deferat affectum, pater judicium: mater circa minorem teneatur pietate propendeat, pater circa ſeniorem naturæ honorificentiam ſervet: The mother ſheweth affection, the father judgement: ſhe tenderly affected toward the younger: the father giveth the honour of nature to the elder, lib. 2. de Iacob c. 2. Perer.

Quest. IV. Why Iacob is bidden to bring two kids.

Verſ. 9. Bring me thence two kids. 1. Not as though Rebecca had her flocke by her ſelfe, as receiving two kids every day of Iſaack for her dowry, as the Hebrewes imagine: 2. Neither, was one for meat, the other for the paſſeover, which was not yet inſtituted. 3. But hee brought two, that the daintieſt morſels might be culled out of both, and that if the one were not dreſſed to Iſaacks liking, the other might. Mercer. Rupertus by the two kids underſtandeth the profeſſion of the two Teſtaments, the Old and the New: but this is forced.

Quest.

QUEST. V. Of Rebeccahs confidence.

Verſ. 13. Vpon me be the curſe, &c. 1. Iacob, though in generall perſwaded of Gods promiſe, that it ſhould take effect, yet faileth in particular, doubtfull of the ſucceſſe of this meanes. 2. And Rebeccah, not of a womanly raſhneſſe, as Aben Ezra thinketh, thus ſaith, but looking to the truth of Gods promiſe, ſhe doubteth not of the conveying of the bleſſing, Mercer.

QUEST. VI. What cloathes of Eſau Rebeccah tooke.

Verſ. 14. Rebecca tooke faire cloathes of her elder ſonne Eſau, &c. 1. I will let paſſe the allegories hereupon framed: as how Ambroſe underſtandeth by theſe cloathes put upon Iacob, the Scriptures taken from the Jewes, and given to the Gentiles: and Auguſtine applieth it to Chriſt, who was clothed with our ſinnes, as Iacob with Eſau his rough garments, ex Perer. 2. Theſe faire cloathes were neither prieſtly garments, for the firſt-borne did not execute the prieſthood while his father lived: neither were they Iſaacks garments, which he had worne in his fathers houſe: much leſſe thoſe garments of skin, which were made for Adam, at the ſight whereof the beaſts did flye away: which afterward Nimrod did weare, whom Eſau ſlew, and tooke his garments: theſe are but Jewiſh fables: but it was the rayment properly made for Eſau, which were rather in Rebeccahs cuſtody, than in his wives, whom hee ſaw to be diſpleaſing to his parents, Mercer.

Hebrewes fables.

QUEST. VII. Whether Iacob offended in his diſſimulation.

HEre further a queſtion is moved, whether Iacob ſinned in diſſembling himſelfe to be Eſau: 1. Some excuſe Iacob herein, becauſe Iacob non ſtudio nocendi eoniexit fraudem, did uſe fraud, but without a fraudulent mind, or deſire to hurt, having reſpect to the promiſe of God, Chryſoſt. hom. 53. in Geneſ. 2. Some becauſe primogeniti benedictionem non per fraudem ſurripuit, ſed ſibi debitam accepit, hee did not by fraud ſteale the bleſſing, but received it as due, Gregor. hom. 6. in Ezech. 3. Auguſtine excuſeth Iacobs fraud, becauſe it was done in myſtery. 4. Toſtatus, becauſe Rebecca, ſpiritu Dei mota, being moved by the Spirit, perſwaded Iacob. 5. Some make a difference betweene diſſimulation or lying in words, which no way is lawfull, and diſſembling in behaviour, which may bee excuſed: becauſe words doe properly expreſſe the minde, the behaviour and geſture but accidentally, Perer. 6. All theſe wayes doe make Iacobs diſſimulation ſome way excuſable, but not ſimply juſtifiable: for although the will and purpoſe of God were thus brought to paſſe, yet there was ſome failing in the meanes; though the action in generall intendment was good, yet the execution wanted not particular error, Mercer. Muſcul.

QUEST. VIII. Of divers kinds of diſſimulation: and whether it be lawfull upon any occaſion to diſſemble.

BUt for the further explanation of this point: there are divers kinds of diſſimulation: one is unlawfull, when as one diſſembleth to anothers hurt, either in the breach of charity, as Merchants in buying and ſelling, or the hindrance of faith, and with offence, as Peter by his diſſimulation cauſed the Gentiles to doe like the Jewes, Galath. 2. There are three kinds of diſſimulation tolerable, and commendable. 1. When it is done for deliverance out of danger, without the hurt of another, as David by faining himſelfe mad, eſcaped, 1 Sam. 21. after this manner, the Phyſitian by a prudent diſſimulation deceiveth his patient for his health. 2. When one diſſembleth to profit his brother, as Ioſeph cauſed his plate to bee put into his brothers ſackes mouth: whereby they were brought to know themſelves: our Saviour made ſhew, as though he would have gone further, to try the humanity of the two Diſciples. 3. When ſome common ſervice is to be performed to the Church or Common wealth: of which ſort are the ſtratagems and policies uſed in warre: by ſuch meanes Ioſue circumvented the men of Hai, and ſurpriſed their City, Ioſu. 8. 4. There is another kind of diſſimulation, which commeth by the extraordinary motion of Gods Spirit, as the Hebrewes pretending to borrow of the Ægyptians, robbed them. 5. Iacobs diſſimulation may thus be excuſed, becauſe Gods extraordinary worke was in it, though not his ſpeciall motion: it faileth in the other point, for it ſeemeth to tend to the hurt both of Iſaack, deceiving him, and of Eſau, depriving him of his bleſſing. 6. The reaſon why diſſimulation in outward geſture, if it faile not in the end, is tolerable, is this: becauſe the meaning of the ſpeech is in the ſpeaker, and therefore if he tell a lye, he cannot bee guiltleſſe: but the meaning of the geſture is in him that doth interpret it to his owne underſtanding, ſo that the party is freed: and if Iacob only had diſſembled his habit, and not in his ſpeech, in ſaying he was Eſau, his fault had beene the leſſe or none at all.

QUEST. IX. Whether Iacob lied unto Iſaack, and in lying ſinned.

Verſ. 19. I am Eſau thy firſt-borne: divers have laboured to excuſe Iacob, and to cleare him of the ſinne of lying: 1. Some thinke that Iacob indeed lied to his father, but that therein he ſinned not: becauſe ſome kind of lye is by them approved: of this opinion is Origen, who ſaith that a man, cui neceſſitas incumbit mentiendi, ſic uti debet mendacio, ut condimento: which is urged to lye, may ſometime uſe a lye as ſauce: likewiſe Caſſianus: Ita mendacio utendum, quaſi ei natura inſit elebori: A man muſt uſe a lye as the Phyſitians uſe elleborus, that is, in caſe of extremity onely: which opinion they ſeeme to have borrowed from Plato, who alloweth Magiſtrates (though not private men) hoſtium, vel civium cauſa mentiri, to lye to deceive the enemy, or to profit a citizen: lib. 3. de publie. But the Scripture condemneth all kinde of lying: the Apoſtle ſaith, No lye is of the truth, 1 Iohn 21. 22. that is, of God: but the Devill is the father of lyes and when hee ſpeaketh a lye, hee ſpeaketh of his owne, Iohn 8. 44. therefore the true Virgins and ſervants of Chriſt are thus deſcribed: In whoſe mouth there is found no guile, Apocal. 14. 5. Beſide, that which is evill of it ſelfe in the kinde thereof, cannot any wayes be good: a lye is contrary to the order of nature, which hath given unto man the voyce and words to expreſſe his minde and the meaning of the heart: Now for authority, againſt Plato we may ſet Ariſtotle, who ſaith, that a lye is in it ſelfe evill and wicked, lib. 4. Ethicor. c. 7. and Pythagoras was wont to ſay, that in theſe two things wee are made like unto God, in telling the truth, and beſtowing of benefits: Ælian. lib. 12. Againſt Origen and Caſſianus we may oppoſe Auguſtine, who condemneth all kind of lying, even that which is called jocoſum, a lye in ſport: libr. cont. mendacium, and Gregory, who upon thoſe words of Iob 27. 3. As long as my breath is in me, &c. my lips ſhall ſpeake no wickednesſe, nor my tongue utter deceit: inferreth, that omne mendacium eſt iniquitas, every lye is iniquity, ex Peter. All lying ſinfull.

2. Some thinke that Iacob lied to his father, but that he ſinned not, becauſe hee did it by the revelation and counſell of God: ſo Chryſoſtome ſaith, Ne conſidera, quod mendacia erant, &c. Conſider not that they were lyes, which Iacob told, but that God willing to have the prediction fulfilled, diſpenſed and diſpoſed all things: hom. 53. in Geneſ. Of the ſame opinion are Gabriel Biel in 3. diſtinct. 38. and Petrus Aliacenſ. Familiari conſilio Spiritus excuſantur: They are excuſed by the familiar counſell of God, 1. Senten. qu. 12. Whether Iacob lyed to his father.

Cauſa. 1. If God did perſwade Iacob to lye, then hee ſhould be the author of lying, and ſo of ſinne: 2. This will ſhake the credit of the Scriptures and holy writers, if it bee granted that God inſpireth lies. 3. Neither doth it appeare, that this counſell was of God, but of Rebeccahs owne device.

Verſ. 8. Heare my voyce my ſonne, in that which I command thee. 4. If Iacob had received any revelation from God, he would not have beene ſo doubtfull as hee was to enterpriſe this matter. 5. God indeed ordered and diſpoſed of this meanes, and made it worke to effect his owne purpoſe: but God diſpoſeth of many things to a good end, which he ordained not, neither commanded.

3. Some thinke that Iacob lied not at all to Iſaack, and therefore ſinned not: 1. Auguſtine excuſeth Iacobs ſpeech by the myſticall ſenſe: where he ſaith, I am Eſau, he ſaith, if it be referred to Iacobs perſon, it is a lye: if to Iacobs body, that is, the Church, it is true: for as the Scripture ſaith, Many ſhall come from the Eaſt and Weſt, &c. and ſit downe with Abraham, Iſaack and Iacob in the kingdome of heaven, and the children of the kingdome ſhall be caſt out, Matth. 8. 11, 12. and ſo the younger taketh away the birth-right of the elder. 2. Theodoret ſaith Iacob was Eſau, becauſe he had bought his birth-right. 3. So Thom. Anglic. that as Chriſt ſaid Iohn Baptiſt was Elias, not in perſon, but in office and vertue, ſo Iacob ſaith he was Eſau, in regard of his prerogative and birth-right. 4. Some excuſe Iacob, that he ſhould call himſelfe Eſau, which ſignifieth made or perfect, ſignifying that he was the making, that is, the ſonne of Iſaack, and the firſt borne by the decree of God, Perer. Theodoret qu. 30. in Gen.

Cauſa. 1. A myſticall or figurative ſenſe in Scripture is not to be admitted, where the hiſtoricall may without any inconvenience be received, as here it may; for to grant that Iacob might fall into this infirmity, is no abſurdity, ſeeing holy men in Scripture are detected of greater faults; and Saint Peter is reproved of Saint Paul for his diſſimulation, Galath. 2.

2. Iacob ſaith not only, I am thy firſt borne, but Eſau thy firſt borne, verſ. 19. and as Cajetan noteth, hee ſaith, he is Eſau, v. 24. without the addition of the firſt borne; therefore the ſecond anſwer is not ſufficient.

3. The example of Iohn Baptiſt is not alike, for there they which heard our Saviour, did know that hee was not Elias perſon, but ſome other ſimilitude in reſpect of his office and gifts; but here Iſaack underſtandeth Iacob to ſpeake of the perſon of Eſau, and therefore biddeth him come neare, that he might feele him; they which excuſe this fact of Iacobs by that of Raphael to Toby, who ſaid he was Azarias the ſonne of Ananias the great, would juſtifie one lye by another.

4. Eſau was ſo called, for that he was perfectly borne: and therefore Iacob could not in that ſenſe name himſelfe Eſau; and though he had, yet he had deceived Iſaack who inquireth ſtill after the perſon of Eſau.

5. Neither, becauſe Iſaack, after he perceived the fraud, was not angry with Iacob, neither did revoke the bleſſing pronounced; or becauſe the Scripture ſaith, that Iacob was a plaine or ſimple man; or for that God appeared afterward to Iacob; doth all this prove, that Iacob committed not a lye; as Thomas Anglic. objecteth. For 1. God caſteth not off his becauſe of ſome infirmity, neither doth an action awry degenerate from a mans uprightneſſe and ſimplicity, and it is confeſſed, that God over-ruled this action, and diſpoſed of it according to his owne purpoſe, as God can turne and apply evill actions to a good end: yet this cannot exempt Iacob from diſſimulation.

6. Though this ſpeech of Iacob, I am Eſau thy firſt borne, could find ſome excuſe, yet the other can hardly be made good; I have done as thou badeſt mee, and eat of my veniſon; for neither had Iſaack given the charge to Iacob, but to Eſau; neither was that fleſh, which Iacob brought, got in hunting; ſome would have it underſtood of ſome other thing that Iſaack had given to Iacob in charge: ſome ſay that Iacob regarded his fathers generall intention, which was to employ his firſt borne in that ſervice, and to give him the bleſſing, and that firſt borne was himſelfe, Cajetan. But who ſeeth not, how farre fetcht theſe interpretations are; for it is cleare that Iacob ſpeaketh of his fathers bidding in action, not in intention; and he intended as he ſpake, to bleſſe Eſau and not Iacob; Perer. himſelfe confeſſeth, that theſe two laſt ſpeeches of Iacob can very hardly be excuſed from untruth, howſoever he thinketh the firſt may: in Gen. tract. 57. Iacob proved to have lied to Iſaack.

Therefore the beſt ſolution of this queſtion is, that Iacob told an officious lye to his father: 1. As is evident by his three ſpeeches; I am Eſau thy firſt borne, and I have done as thou badeſt mee, and eat of my veniſon; for none of all theſe are true. 2. Yet was not this diſſimulation of Iacob either injurious to Iſaack, for he he in this his errour perceived the purpose of God, and was content the blessing should stand; nor yet pro-judiciall to Esau, who in effect lost nothing due unto him, but only the right by this meanes was restored to Iacob. 3. God useth Iacobs infirmity, and maketh it to serve his owne purpose: this lye then of Iacobs, though in respect of these circumstances it be extenuated, yet is not justified, nor yet to bee drawne into example: of this opinion are our best writers, Calvin, Muscul, Mercer, Luther; and of the other side, Lyranus, Tostatus, Cajetan, Lippoman.

QUEST. IX. Of the midwives excuse made to Pharaoh.

HEre because the example of the midwives, which made that excuse to Pharao, in preserving the children lives, is somewhat like to this of Iacob, I will briefly shew what is to be thought thereof.

1. Gregory thinketh, they lied, saying to Pharaoh, The Hebrew women are lively, and are delivered before the midwife come at them, Exod. 2.19. and therefore they only received a temporall reward: it is said the Lord made them houses, & ulterius, quod expectarent mercedis suæ præmium non haberent: and therefore should looke for no further reward, lib. 18. moral. Contra. But it is further added: The midwives feared God, and the Scripture pronounceth them blessed, that feare the Lord, Psal. 112. 1. And none are blessed without the assurance of everlasting life.

2. Thomas Aquinas saith, that in respect of their feare and reverence of God, they were everlastingly rewarded: but for that externall act of lying, they received onely a temporall reward, In 2.2. qu. 100. art. 1. ad tim. Contra. But the act of lying is simply evill, and therefore is worthy of no reward: God prospered the midwives, not for their dissembling, but because they feared God, and refused to destroy the infants.

3. Some commend the midwives for their disobeying of Pharaohs cruell edict, but blame them for their dissembling, Genevens. annotat.

4. But seeing the Scripture commendeth this fact of the midwives, I thinke rather that they spake the truth, and that the Lord gave extraordinary strength to the Hebrew women in this extremity, to be delivered with speed, because of the danger. As for that reward, in building of them houses: it is to be referred rather to the increasing and propagation of the Israelites, than to the midwives: as the 20. verse sheweth, God prospered the midwives, and the people were multiplied, Iun.

QUEST. X. How divers examples in Scripture may be defended from lying.

NOw, that we may know how to discerne of such examples in Scripture, which are produced by those which defend lying; whether they are to be thought to have lyed, these rules must be observed: 1. It is one thing to conceale the truth, another to lie: as Abraham did hide the truth, when he said Sarah was his sister. 2. It is one thing to lie, another to speake figuratively: as it is said, the seed of Abraham should be multiplied as the sand of the sea, Gen. 21. 3. A sentence may be uttered in a mysticall or allegoricall sense without any lye or untruth: as our Saviour saith, I will dissolve this temple, and build it in three dayes, Iohn 2. hee spake of the temple of his body. 4. Though divers holy men and women be commended in Scripture, we must not thinke that straightway all they did or said is commendable: but as their doings were imperfect, so in their sayings also they might erre, Perer.

QUEST. XI. How Isaack was deceived in all his senses.

Vers. 20. HOw hast thou found it so quickly? &c. 1. Two things gave occasion of suspition to Isaack, to enquire whether it were Esau his sonne: the voyce of Iacob, and his so soone returne. 2. Isaack was thus inquisitive, because he intended to blesse Esau, whom he affected, because he was serviceable and obsequious, and provided his fathers diet, and therefore intended to bestow his best blessing upon him, Perer. 3. He mistrusteth his sight, because it was dimme, and his eares being heavy, and thinketh to try out the matter by his feeling, as Thomas would not beleeve, till he had first felt Christs side. The Rabbines brewes say Isaack used beside the sense of tasting in his meat, and of smelling the odour of the garments, and so used all his senses, Mercer. 4. Yet God did astonish and dull all his senses, to shew that mans purpose cannot stand against the counsell of God, and partly that Isaack thereby might bee rebuked for his preposterous love to Esau, Calvin.

QUEST. XII. Why the Lord suffered Isaack to be deceived.

Vers. 23. FOr hee knew him not. 1. Isaack though hee suspected somewhat, was put out of doubt by his feeling, and smelling, by that opinion he had of Iacobs simplicity, and for that hee thought he had spoken in secret to Esau, without any others privitie. 2. It pleased God that Isaack should be thus deceived, (beside the reasons before alleaged) that we might know, Nullum hominem plenam habuisse notitiam, &c. That no man ever had a fulnesse of knowledge but Christ, Hierom. epist. 125. And Gregory hereby thinketh the calling of the Gentiles to be prefigured: as it is in the Psalme, A people which I have not knowne, shall serve me, Psal. 18. hom. 6. in Ezech. 3. It seemed good also unto God, that the blessing should be conveyed to Iacob by this meanes: 1. That the manifold wisdome of God may appeare, in bringing his purpose to passe by divers meanes and wayes. 2. That his provident care toward Iacob might hereby be made manifest. 3. And the Lord would worke it this sodaine way, rather than by revelation to Isaack, Esau a furious man, if his father had willingly given away the blessing, should have been incensed against his parents, Pererius.

QUE

Quest. XIII. Why Iſaack compareth his ſonne to the ſmell of a field.

Verſ. 27. The ſmell of my ſonne is as the ſmell of a field, &c. 1. Iſaack by the preſent ſmell of Eſaus garments, which ſavoured of the field, taketh occaſion, as by an externall ſigne to utter a ſpirituall bleſſing, Mercer. And as every man borroweth ſimilitudes from his trade, as the mariner, the ſouldier, and ſuch like; ſo here Iſaack bleſſeth by the ſimilitude of the field wherein Eſau was exerciſed: as Hierome noteth of Amos, who beginneth his prophecie thus, The Lord ſhall roare from Sion, Amos 1. 2. becauſe he being a field-man, kept the woods where the Lions roared. 2. The field is commended for three things, pleaſure in the variety of flowers to the eye, ſweetneſſe of the fragrant odours to the ſmell, abundance and fruitfulneſſe of corne, wine, oyle, to the taſte; who knoweth not the pleaſant ſavour of the fields in the ſpring, of the corne in harveſt, and of a vineyard in the time of vintage, Perer. 3. Gregorie by the ſmell of a field garniſhed with divers flowers, underſtandeth the variety of gifts, and the graces of Gods ſpirit in the Church: Ambroſe maketh Iacob this field repleniſhed with divers vertues. 4. Some thinke that theſe garments kept this ſavour which they had in paradiſe, being ſuppoſed to be the ſame that Adam did weare; but theſe are but Jewiſh fables: they were either perfumed garments, or Rebekah might of purpoſe make them ſweet: or it is moſt like they ſavoured of the freſh ſprings and flowers, it being now Spring time, (as Aben Ezra thinketh) thorow the which Eſau was accuſtomed to walke.

Quest. XIV. The meaning of Iſaacks bleſſing upon Iacob.

Verſ. 28. God give thee of the dew of heaven. 1. Iſaack doth not only pray, as Ioſephus ſetteth it downe, or wiſh well to his ſonne, as R. Levi, but this ſpeech is a certaine prophecie and declaration of the bleſſing which ſhould fall upon Iacob and his poſterity, Luther. Mercer. 2. Here are foure bleſſings contained, 1. Of abundance: 2. Of victory: 3. Of domeſticall preeminence: 4. Of outward proſperity, Curſed be he that curſeth, &c. Perer. 3. He maketh mention of the dew of heaven, eſpecially in regard of the drie and thirſty Countrey of Canaan, where they have no raine but twice in the yeare, in ſeed time in the moneth of October, and in May which is called the latter raine; and therefore the earth was chiefly moyſtened with dewes, Perer. By his brethren and ſonnes of his mother the poſterity of Eſau is underſtood, which Iſaack unwittingly pronounceth of Eſau; for Iacob, whom he bleſſeth, was yet unmaried. 4. But this bleſſing was not fulfilled in Iacobs time, who rather was ſubject to his brother Eſau, yet in his poſterity, to the which Iacobs faith looked, it came to paſſe: for the Idumeans were ſervants to the Iſraelites. 5. This benediction is diverſly allegorized. Gregory by the dew of heaven underſtandeth the contemplative life; by the fatneſſe of the earth, the active. Theodoret, the divinity and humanity of Chriſt; Rupertus by the dew, interpreteth the grace of Gods ſpirit: by the fatneſſe of the earth, the opening of the heart.

Quest. XV. Of the cauſe of Iſaacks feare.

Verſ. 33. Iſaack was ſtricken with a marvellous great feare. 1. Not as the Hebrewes fable, becauſe hee ſaw Eſau accurſed for ever, ſeeing hell wide open to receive him. 2. Neither as Cajetane, did it proceed of a ſtrife in Iſaacks minde, betweene his love toward Eſau, and Gods will revealed concerning Iacob: for Iſaack is reſolved the bleſſing ſhall ſtand. 3. And it is more than to marvell, as the Latine text addeth, Vltra quam credi poteſt admirans; Marvelling beyond meaſure. 4. But Iſaack feared and was troubled, (being as in a trance and ecſtaſie, as the Septuagint and Auguſtine read, wherein the will of God was revealed to him) becauſe he had beene ſo groſſely deceived, in not remembring how the Lord had choſen Iacob before Eſau, Calvin. And this feare was as a ſtay and bridle to Iſaack not to reverſe the bleſſing pronounced, Iun.

Quest. XVI. How Iſaack ſaith Iacob came with ſubtilty.

Verſ. 35. Thy brother came with ſubtilty, &c. 1. We need neither with Toſtatus to excuſe Iacobs fraud and craft, that herein he offended not at all: 2. Nor with Lippomanus, to juſtifie Iacobs deceit, who maketh three kinds of fraud: one eruditionis, of inſtruction, as was the thruſting of Ioſephs cup into Benjamins ſacke: another noxia deceptionis, of hurtfull deceit, as the Prophet of Bethel deceived the man of God, 1 King. 13. The third, inſpirationis divinæ, by divine inſpiration, as this of Iacobs was: ſo he maketh three kinds of ſimulation or diſſembling; una providentiæ, one of providence, which Ioſua uſed againſt Hai: altera doctrinæ, the other of doctrine, as Chriſt made as though he would have gone further: tertia calliditatis, the third of deceit, as the devill can transforme himſelfe into an Angell of light: quarta ſignificationis, the fourth of ſignification, as this was of Iacob: for as is ſhewed before, Iacobs infirmity in this diſſimulation (though it pleaſed God to uſe the ſame to effect his purpoſe) cannot be wholly defended. 3. Nor yet will ſtay about the word, as Lyranus ſaith (mirmah) ſometime ſignifieth prudence, wiſdome, as the Chaldee tranſlateth: and in the civill law, there is a title, de dolo malo, of evill craft; whereby it may bee gathered, that all deceit is not evill. 4. Neither yet will wee aggravate Iacobs overſight with ſome, who thinke, that for this lie made to Iſaack, his ſonnes lyed unto him concerning Ioſeph, which they had a puniſhment. 5. But we take the word as it properly ſignifieth, for deceit and fraud: though Iacob to pleaſe his ſonne committeth ſome overſight in transferring the fault upon Iacob, Iunius. And yet though there were a fraud, and error perſonæ, errour of the perſon, which is ſufficient to disanull other civill contracts: yet for as much as God ratified the blessing thus pronounced ignorantly by Isaack, the sentence was to stand, Perer.

Quest. XVI. Esau falsly chargeth Iacob.

Vers. 36. Was he not justly called Iacob? 1. Esau doth cavill at Iacobs name, which was not given him in respect of any such supplanting, but because he held Esau by the heele. 2. He lyeth in saying, he tooke away my birth-right, for Esau sold it unto him, and confirmed it with an oath, Mercer. 3. Neither did hee take away his blessing for having the birth-right, the blessing did justly belong unto him: for the birth-right and blessing could not be divided and separated, Mercer. Iun.

Quest. XVII. Why Isaack had but one blessing.

Vers. 38. Hast thou but one blessing? 1. True it is, that principall blessing which carried with it the spirituall promises in Christ, was but one, because Christ is one: Esau by joyning himselfe to Iacob might have beene partaker of this blessing, but apart by himselfe hee could not, because without the Church there is no salvation, Mercer. 2. For this cause Ismael was excluded Abrahams house, that the blessing might remaine in Isaack: so Esau is excluded, and Iacob made the heire of blessing. But Iacob gave a blessing to all his children, because they all belonged to the visible Church; yet the most principall blessing was promised unto Iudah, of whom the Messiah should come. 3. Though there be no speciall mention of any such blessing given by Abraham to Isaack: yet it is not like that Abraham was wanting therein: and the manifest promises so often renewed concerning Isaack, the ejection of Ismael, and sending away of all the rest of Abrahams children, might stand in stead thereof. 4. Though the blessing of all parents, specially such as feare God, be effectuall toward their children: yet the ancient Patriarks and Prophets, that were the founders of the people of God, had speciall prerogative in blessing, as Isaack, Iacob, Moses, &c. Perer. 5. Esau doth not desire a peece onely of the blessing, Isaack having made mention of two blessings, vers. 37. his preeminence over his brethren, and abundance of wheat and wine: the Hebrewes thinke that Esau yeelded the preeminence, but desired the other to be given him: neither doth he desire to be partaker with his brother in his blessing, or to have some other blessing given him, as Perer. But he coveteth the whole blessing, both envying that his brother should be preferred before him, Philo. and of a lightnesse of minde, thinking that the blessing might be reversed, Mercer.

Difference betweene the blessing of the Patriarks and other parents.

Quest. XVIII. Of Esaus teares, that they found no repentance.

Vers. 38. Esau lift up his voice and wept, &c. 1. Whereas the Apostle, Heb. 12. saith hereupon, that Esau found no place of repentance, though he sought it with teares: it is not understood of Esaus repentance, as Thom. Aquin. expoundeth: which because it was rather for a temporall losse, than for his sinnes, tooke no place. But the Apostle meaneth, that Isaack repented not of that which he had done to Iacob, notwithstanding Esaus teares: in like sense the gifts of God are said to be without repentance, Rom. 11. 29. that is, God doth not repent to change his decree, sic Beza, ex nostris, Cajetan, Perer. 2. When the Apostle saith he was rejected, he meaneth from the greater blessing which belonged to the birth-right and inheritance; for Esau obtained of his father the smaller blessing. 3. Esaus teares proceeded of envie toward his brother, not of any true sorrow: for he doth not acknowledge any fault in himselfe, but layeth all the fault upon his brother, vers. 36. and beside, he upon this hated his brother, and purposed to kill him, vers. 41. which is not the fruit of true repentance; and therefore it is no marvell that it was not accepted with God, Calvin.

Quest. XIX. Of the blessing which Isaack gave to Esau.

Vers. 39. Behold the fatnesse of the earth, &c. Isaack indueth Esau also with a temporall blessing, but with some restraint. 1. First here is omitted, plenty of wheat and wine, which was given before to Iacob; whereby is signified, that Esaus Countrey should not abound with such plenty as Iacobs, Perer. 2. In Iacobs blessing it was added, God give thee of the dew of heaven: but here no mention is made of God: so the meaning is, that Iacobs posterity should depend upon God for these externall blessings, so should not Esaus race, Mercer. 3. There is a spirituall blessing pronounced to Iacob, they shall be blessed that blesse thee, which is omitted here. 4. Where the Prophet saith, I hated Esau, and made his mountaines waste, Malach. 1. 3. Idumea was a desart and barren Countrey in respect of Canaan; yet in it selfe it was not void of some fatnesse and fruitfulnesse, as here Isaack promiseth, Calvin.

Quest. XX. Of Esaus subjection to Iacob, and the casting off of his yoke.

Vers. 40. By thy sword shalt thou live, &c. 1. That is, both Esau should get his living by the sword, Mercer. and his posterity, the Idumeans, should bee a savage and cruell people, Calvin. 2. He should serve his brother, which came to passe in their posterity seven hundred yeares after this prophecie, in Davids time, who subdued Edom, and put garrisons there, 2 Sam. 8. 14. Ambrose noteth this for a benefit, that Esau was made Iacobs servant; Intemperanti profecit sobrium, & prudenti improbum servire obedire: He set the sober over the intemperate, and appointed the foolish to serve the wise, lib. 2. de Iacob. 3. Thou shalt get the mastery: some translate, when thou hast mourned, and referre it to that heavy time when the idolatrous King of Moab sacrificed the King of Edoms sonne, and not long after the Edomites shaked off the yoke of the Israelites, sic Iun. in hanc locum: which reading is better: for the word here used, in hiphel, signifieth to mourne, or to be humbled, as Psal. 55. 2. I mourne in my prayer: the Edomites also they had served Israel some foure hundred and fifteene yeares, in the dayes of Ioram Iehosophats son, they departed from Iuda, and made them a King of their owne, 2 King. 8. 20. and in this liberty they continued eight hundred yeares, till the time of Hircanus, who subdued them, and made them to be circumcised. But after this Herod the sonne of Antipater, an Idumean, obteined to be King of the Jewes: so that in him also after a sort the Edomites got the mastery over Iudah, Perer.

QUEST. XXIII. Of Esaus purpose to kill Iacob.

Vers. 41. THe dayes of mourning for my father, &c. 1. That which joyned and reconciled Ismael and Isaack, the death and buriall of Abraham, doth encourage Esau to kill his brother, Muscul. 2. Yet it was but a fained mourning which he would afford his father, seeing he purposed to slay his brother Calvin. 3. He would not doe it so long as his father lived, lest he should accurse him, and deprive him of all blessings: so he refrained for feare, not of conscience, Mercer. 4. He onely maketh mention of mourning for his father: it should seeme that he little regarded his mother, whom he ought equally to have reverenced, Perer.

QUEST. XXIV. How Rebeccah knew of Esaus bloudy purpose.

Vers. 42. IT was told Rebeckah. 1. Though it be said that Esau thought in his minde to kill Iacob, yet it is like that hee could not conceale or dissemble his murderous heart, but uttered it in the hearing of his wives, or some other, by which meanes it is more like it came to Rebeckahs knowledge, than by revelation, as Augustine thinketh: because the words are, it was told or reported to Rebeckah, Mercer. 2. She called Iacob, or sent for him, who (as the Hebrewes thinke) had hid himselfe for feare of his brother. 3. Esau his hatred was such, that he could not be satisfied nor comforted but by the death of Iacob, thinking then to recover his birth-right againe.

QUEST. XXV. Of Rebeccahs counsell given to Iacob to escape away.

Vers. 44. TArrie there a few dayes, &c. 1. Yet Iacob stayed twenty yeares, a longer time than Rebeckah supposed: of which long stay the frowardnesse of Laban was a cause: some thinke because of these words it is said of Iacob, when he had served seven yeares for Rachel, they seemed unto him but a few dayes, &c. Gen. 29. 20. yet not his mothers words, but the love of Rachel made that time seeme so short, Mercer. 2. She thinketh that Iacobs absence, and the continuance of time, would allay Esaus implacable wrath: some mens anger is soone kindled, and as soone abated: such Aristotle calleth Acrecholos, extreme chollericke men: others doe keepe wrath long, whom he nameth Picrocholos, of their bitter choller; and such was Esaus his anger. 3. Rebeccah promiseth to send for Iacob, which the Hebrewes thinke she performed, in sending her nurse Deborah to him, which died in Iacobs house after his returne, Gen. 35. 9. 4. She feareth to be deprived of them both in one day, not because, as the Hebrewes thinke, as they were borne together, they died together: but lest that if Esau killed Iacob, she knew Gods justice would overtake the other, Mercer.

Whether Rebeccah sent for Iacob.

3. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. We must be cloathed with Christ righteousnesse.

Vers. 15. SHe cloathed Iacob, &c. Like as Iacob being apparelled with faire perfumed garments was accepted of his father: so we cannot be pleasing unto God unlesse we be cloathed with the righteousnesse of Christ: as the Apostle saith, Not having mine owne righteousnesse, but that which is through the faith of Christ, Calvin. in vers. 27.

2. Doct. The Patriarks by temporall blessings were stirred up to seeke for spirituall.

Vers. 28. GOd give thee of the dew of heaven, &c. The Fathers rested not in these temporall blessings, but thereby as by certaine degrees were to ascend higher, and be brought to the meditation of heavenly things, Mercer. As the Apostle sheweth, If they had been mindfull of that Country from whence they came out, they had leasure to have returned, but now they desire a better, that is an heavenly, Heb. 11. 16.

3. Doct. Election not of works, but of grace.

Vers. 30. THen came Esau from hunting. If Esau and Iacobs works be compared here together; we shall see that Esau doth nothing but praise-worthy: he obeyeth his fathers minde, taketh great paines to hunt for flesh, he carefully maketh it ready: but contrariwise Iacob dissembleth, hee offereth kidds flesh for venison, maketh himselfe Esau, deceiveth his father: and this difference is set forth to this end, to shew that election standeth not by works, but is of grace, Calvin. As Saint Paul saith, That the purpose of God might remaine according to election, not by works, by him that calleth, Rom. 9. 11.

4 Doct. The efficacie of the blessing dependeth not upon the minister, but the word of God.

Vers. 33. I have blessed him, therefore he shall be blessed. Though Isaac ignorantly had pronounced the blessing upon Iacob, yet it remained effectuall and of force: so they which blesse and pronounce remission of sinnes in the name of God, though they be weake men, and compassed with infirmities, yet their sentence shall stand, being agreeable to the will of God: the force thereof depends not upon their ministery, but upon the word of God; whatsoever ye binde in earth shall be bound in heaven, &c. Mat. 18. 18. Calvin.

5. Doct. The Iewes supplications, why not heard.

Vers. 38. HE lift up his voice and wept. Esau, because he sought a blessing apart to himselfe, and scorned to associate himselfe to Iacob, to whom the promise was made, could not prevaile with his teares: so the Jewes, notwithstanding their prayers, fastings, howlings, lamentations powred forth unto God, are not heard, because they refuse the true Messiah, and seeke a way by themselves to goe unto heaven, Luther.

6. Doct. The meanes which serve under Gods providence must not be neglected.

Vers. 43. ARise and flie to Haran, &c. Rebecca, though she was fully assured that Iacob should have the blessing and inheritance, yet she is carefull to use the means, and not immediately to depend upon Gods providence: whereby we are taught, that as we are not to relie upon the meanes which the Lord setteth before us for our deliverance, and for the perfitting of his good pleasure toward us, yet we must not neglect them: our Saviour promised to be with his Disciples to the end of the world, yet he wisheth them, if they be persecuted in one City, to flie to another, Matth. 10. 23.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Saint Peter reproved for his dissimulation.

Vers. 19. I Am Esau thy first borne, &c. Pererius well collecteth, that it is not necessary to exempt Iacob here from a veniall sinne, seeing that Saint Peter, who was not inferiour in grace and knowledge, is noted for his dissimulation, and thereof reproved by Saint Paul, in 27. Gen. Numer. 46. consenting to the opinion of Hierome, who would excuse Peter from all fault, and thinketh that all that discourse was but a set match betweene them: to this opinion the Rhemists seeme to incline, Galath. 2. Sect. 9. but it is confuted by Augustine, Epist. 19. who discusseth this point at large with Hierome; saith he, Quæ fronte alterum reprehendit, quod ipse committit? With what face could Saint Paul have reprehended that in another which he did himselfe? if so this had beene a set match betweene them, Epist. 11.

2. Confut. Against the authority of the booke of Tobie.

Pererius would excuse this dissimulation of Iacob, saying, I am Esau, &c. by that of the Angell, who to Tobie inquiring of his tribe and kindred, answered, I am Azarias of Ananias the great, Tobie 5. 12. for as this speech was figurative, that the Angell was not the sonne of Ananias so called, but of the grace of God, which is signified by that word: and so Iacob meaneth that he was not Esau in person, but in respect of his prerogative: Contra. Thus he hath shaped a defence of one lie by another: for the Angell saith, he was of Ananias, and of thy brethren: he meaneth then that Ananias, which was of kindred with Tobie; And this is one reason which impaireth the credit of this Booke, because the Angell is brought in lying, which is not the use of the holy Angels in the Canonicall Scripture.

3. Confut. Sacraments depend not upon the intention of the minister.

Vers. 23. WHerefore he blessed him, &c. The blessing which Isaack pronounceth loseth not his force by his ignorance or wrong intention, who purposed to blesse Esau and not Iacob, but upon the promise and word of God; whereby is confuted that point of popish doctrine, that the sacraments depend upon the intention of the minister; as though it were in mans power to frustrate the institution of God, Calvin. The Apostle saith, Shall their unbeleefe make the faith of God without effect, Rom. 3. neither shall the unbeleeving or not rightly intending minister frustrate the force of the Sacrament.

4. Confut. Against the errour of the Chiliastes.

Vers. 28. GOd give thee of the dew of heaven, and the fatnesse of the earth. Upon this place, with the like, Tertullian foundeth his errour, which is called of the Chiliastes, that Christ shall reigne with the Saints a thousand yeares here upon the earth: Verùmque indulgentiæ exemplum: sæculum illum justum est Deo illic exultare famulos, ubi sunt ipsius nomine afflicti, &c. here saith Tertullian, in the blessing upon Iacob, both are promised, the joyes of heaven and of earth: and it is just with God that his servants should there rejoyce, where they were for his name afflicted, Lib. 3. cont. Marcion. Contra. Isaack here prophesieth not of the state of the Church after this life, but in this world: unlesse they will say, that in the next life we shall have wheat and wine, which are here mentioned: neither doth it follow, that because they suffered in earth, they should there also bee rewarded: but as the Israelites were afflicted in Egypt and recompensed in Canaan; so the faithfull for their travell and labour in the earth, shall finde rest in heaven.

5. Confut. Obedience for feare of punishment not commendable.

Vers. 41. THe dayes of mourning for my father will come shortly, &c. Esau forbeareth a while from slaying his brother, not of any conscience, but for feare of his fathers curse & displeasure: we see then that obedience which is caused for feare of punishment, is but a forced obedience, nor of any acceptation with God, which notwithstanding is so much commended of the Papists, Calvin. Saint Paul saith, Love is the fulfilling of the Law, Rom. 13. 10. they then which doe not yeeld their service of love, doe not keep and fulfill the Law.

6. Pla

6. Places of Morall observation.

1. Observ. The meditation of death profitable.

Vers. 2. I know not the day of my death: The ignorance of the time of our end ought to stirre us up to watchfulnesse, and to make all things strait with God and the world: as here Isaack resolveth to hasten the blessing of his sonne, because of the uncertainty of his end, Muscul. for our Saviour exhorteth us to watch, because we know not when the Master of the house will come, Mark. 13.35.

2. Observ. Parents curse how much to be feared.

Vers. 12. So shall I bring a curse upon mee, and not a blessing, &c. Iacob is afraid to purchase his fathers curse, whereunto the Scripture attributeth much: we read how heavie Noahs curse was upon Chem: Augustine reporteth a strange story of a woman of Cæsarea in Cappadocia, who after the death of her husband, receiving wrong at the hand of her children, which were ten in number, seven sonnes and three daughters, accursed them all: whereupon presently they were all stricken with a shaking and trembling of all their parts, and for shame they dispersed themselves into divers Countries; of which number, two, Pallus and Paladia, a brother and sister came to Hippo, Lib. 27. de Civit. Dei, cap. 8.

A fearfull example out of Augustine, of ten children accursed by their mother.

3. Observ. God must be sought and sued unto in time.

Vers. 34. Bless me also my father, &c. Esau came too late for the blessing which was bestowed before: and he comming out of time, (another having prevented him) could not obtaine it, no not with teares: we must seeke the Lord therefore in time, and enter in while the doore is open, lest if we stay till the doore be shut upon us, we remaine without; so the Prophet saith, Seeke the Lord while he may be found, call upon him while he is neare, Isay 55.6. Calvin.

4. Observ. Outward blessings common to the just and unjust.

Vers. 39. The fatnesse of the earth shall be thy dwelling, &c. Esau is blessed with temporall gifts, as the fatnesse of the earth, as Iacob was before; so that wee see that these externall blessings of the world are granted as well to the ungodly as the righteous; as our Saviour saith, That God sendeth raine upon the just and unjust, Matth. 5.45. Perer. Which teacheth us that we should not much care for these outward things, but desire the best and more principall gifts.

5. Observ. Persecution for righteousnesse sake.

Vers. 43. Flee to Haran, &c. Iacob is constrained to flee and shift for himselfe because of the blessing: so while the faithfull doe seeke for the Kingdome of heaven, and spirituall things, they must make account to finde hard entertainment in the world, Calvin. But Christ hath given us a comfort; Blessed are they which suffer persecution for righteousnesse sake, Matth. 5.10.

6. Observ. Gods promises to be expected with patience.

Vers. 44. Whether, whereas Iacob which hath the blessing, is driven from his fathers house, and is constrained to serve twenty years under an hard master: and Esau in the meane time had the rule of his fathers house, prospered and became a mighty man: and yet for all this, neither Rebeckah nor Iacob despaired of Gods promise, or doubted of the blessing: it teacheth us, that although the wicked doe for a while flourish in the world, we should not doubt but that God in his good time will performe his promise toward his, Mercer.

7. Observ. Injuries must first be forgotten, and then forgiven.

Vers. 45. Till thy brothers wrath be turned away, &c. and he forget, &c. The forgetfulnesse of wrongs bringeth forth forgivenesse: but where injuries are remembred, they are hardly remitted, Muscul. We must therefore forget, and then forgive: as Ioseph did forget all the wrongs that his brethren had done unto him, and considered how the Lord turned it to his good, Gen. 50.20.

8. Observ. Wives must not exasperate or provoke their husbands.

Vers. 46. I am weary of my life for the daughters of Heth. Rebeckah as a wise and discreet woman, not willing to grieve her husband, concealeth from him the malicious hatred of Esau toward Iacob, and pretendeth another cause of sending away Iacob, namely, to provide him a wife from her owne kindred, and not to match into so wicked a race as Esau had done, Mercer. By which example women should learne, that as their husbands ought not to be bitter to them, so they againe should not exasperate their husbands with quicke words, or froward deeds: as Sarah obeyed Abraham, and called him Lord, 1 Pet. 3.6. she did with milde and dutifull words seeke to please him.

3. The explanation of doubtfull queſtions.

QUEST. I. Why Iſaack biddeth Iacob goe into Meſopotamia.

Verſ. 2. ARiſe, get thee to Padan-Aram. 1. Iſaack herein followeth the counſell of Rebeckah, to ſend Iacob into Meſopotamia; being perſwaded it came from God, as Abraham was bidden before to heare the voice of Sarah, Iun. 2. Though Abraham would not ſuffer Iſaack to goe into that Country, yet Iacob is commanded by his father: both becauſe by this meanes he ſhould eſcape the danger threatned by his brother, and for that there was no ſuch feare, leſt Iacob ſhould not returne, ſeeing there was of his kindred already planted in Canaan, and therefore his wives that he ſhould marry would be the more willing to come with him: but Iſaacks caſe differed in both theſe points. 3. Iſaack reneweth the ſame bleſſing in effect which he had given before to Iacob for his further ſtrengthening, leſt Iacob might have thought that the bleſſing which he had obtained by craft, was of the leſſe force.

QUEST. II. Why Rebeckah is ſaid to be the mother of Iacob and Eſau.

Verſ. 5. Iacob and Eſaus mother. 1. Neither as Raſi, is it hard to gheſſe wherefore Eſau is added. 2. (as Rambam) becauſe ſhe is called Iacobs mother before, is ſhe now ſaid to be the mother of both to avoid ſuſpition of parriality. 3. Nor yet becauſe as the Hebrewes imagine, Iacob and Eſau were twins and lay wrapped in the ſame skinne, contrary to the ordinary courſe. 4. Or to aſſure Iacob of deliverance from danger, ſeeing he went to his uncles houſe, to whom they were both alike deare. 5. But Eſau is added to make way for the ſtory following, where mention is made of Eſau, according to the manner of the Hebrew ſpeech, Iun. 6. As alſo by the preferring of Iacob before Eſau, it appeareth, that Iſaacks judgment was altered, and that now he gave the preeminence to Iacob.

QUEST. III. Why Mahalath is ſaid to be the ſiſter of Nebaioth.

Verſ. 9. Siſter of Nebaioth. 1. Nebaioth is added, not for that he was her brother alſo by the mother, and the reſt were not. 2. Nor yet onely becauſe he was the eldeſt ſonne, and moſt renowned amongſt his brethren. 3. But he is named as the chiefe of Iſmaels houſe, who was now dead, and the government committed to his eldeſt ſonne Nebaioth: for Iacob was now 77. yeares old when he went into Meſopotamia, in the 63. yeare of whoſe age Iſmael died, who was fourteene yeares elder than Iſaack, and lived 137. yeares: and Iſaack was 60. yeares elder than Iacob: ſo that Iſmaels 137. yeare, doth fall in Iacobs 63. yeare: ſee more of this, Queſt. 20. in chap. 25.

QUEST. IV. Why Eſau marrieth Iſmaels daughter.

Verſ. 9. HE tooke unto his wives Mahalah, &c. 1. Which was not as Rupertus thinketh, Quo magis offenderet, to offend his parents the more: for then he would have married againe from the Canaanites

Canaanites. 2. Neither yet chiefly did he it for multiplication of his seed, that he might therein be equall to his brother, Marlorat. 3. But Esaus chiefest intent was to please his father in this marriage, because Ismael was his fathers brother. But Esau tooke not a right course herein, seeing he both multiplied wives, and ioyned himselfe into the stocke of him that was of the bond-woman, and belonged not to the covenant, Masorius.

QUEST. V. Whether Bethel where Iacob slept and pitched a stone, were the same City with Ierusalem.

Vers. 11. HE came unto a certaine place. The Hebrewes thinke that this place where Iacob rested was the Mount Moriah, where Abraham offered Isaack, where afterward also the Temple was built: of the same opinion are Lyranus, Cajetanus, and before them Augustine, quæst. 83. in Gen. But this conceit hath no ground at all, and many reasons make against it. 1. This place was neare to Bethel, but Bethel was farre from Jerusalem; as may appeare by Ieroboams act, who set up two golden Calves, one in Dan, another in Bethel, to the intent that the people should not goe up to Jerusalem to sacrifice, 2 King. 12. 29. 2. Jerusalem was the possession of the children of Benjamin, Bethel belonged to Ioseph, Iud. 1. 21, 22. therefore they were not the same City. If any object that there were two Cities called by the name of Bethel, as the Rabbines thinke, and that one of them is numbred among the Cities that fell to Benjamin, Iosu. 18. 22. yet in the same place, vers. 28. Ierusalem is reckoned for another City of Benjamin apart: Jerusalem then and Bethel are still two Cities. 3. Borchardus which himselfe spent many years in viewing the land of Canaan, sheweth that Bethel could not be Jerusalem, because this stone which Iacob erected, and Deborahs monument were then to be seene, not at Jerusalem, but beside the towne called Bethel, Perer.

QUEST. VI. Why Iacob slept all night in the field.

Vers. 11. HE came to a certaine place. 1. The Hebrewes fable that Iacob went from Beersabee to Charan in one day, as they affirme the like of Abrahams servant: and because in this verse the word Maccom is thrice named, some of them understand the three Temples that should be built, some the three principall feasts: but these things have no ground. 2. Some say that the Sunne did set miraculously under his time: Iosephus thinketh that Iacob durst not goe to the City because of the envie of the Inhabitants: but the reason why he lay in the field all night, is because it was late before he came thither: Ibi dormivit, ubi nox eum comprehendit; There he slept, as Chrysostome saith, where the night overtooke him, Hom. 54. in Gen. Hebrewes fables.

QUEST. VII. Why Iacob went so meanly furnished for his journey.

HE tooke of the stones and laid under his head. Abraham sent his servant with camels and other company to attend him, with jewels of gold, but Isaack sendeth forth Iacob alone, with a staffe; wherein of the reasons may be these: 1. I will omit the allegories of Augustine, who by Iacob going with a staffe without a wife, understandeth Christ by his Crosse redeeming the Church, Serm. 79. de tempor. of Ruperte, who by Iacobs poverty setteth forth the small preparation of the Apostles, sent forth to preach the Gospell with a scrip and a staffe: or of Gregory, who saith, that in itinere dormire, to sleepe in the way with Iacob, is to sequester the minde from the cogitation of earthly things: and caput in lapide ponere, est Christo mente inhærere; to lay the head upon a stone, is with the minde to cleave to Christ, Lib. 4. Moral. But these indeed are the causes. Theodoret saith, Vt manifestius divina providentia declararetur, that Gods providence might more fully appeare toward Iacob: who himselfe thanketh God, that whereas he went out with his staffe, he returned with bands, Gen. 32. 10. 2. Another reason is this, Iacob went secretly and not accompanied, Vt molimen fratris conatus declinaret, that he might the better avoid the practices of his brother, Thom. Anglic. 3. Beside it may be an example of labour, patience, and frugality to the servants of God, ex Perer.

QUEST. VIII. The divers expositions of Iacobs ladder.

Vers. 12. THen he dreamed, and behold there stood a ladder upon the earth, &c. 1. Some by this ladder understand the genealogie of Christ: Saint Luke setting forth the same by descending from Adam downward, Saint Matthew by ascending from Ioseph upward. 2. Augustine by God standing upon the ladder, understandeth Christ hanging upon the Crosse: by the Angels ascending, the Preachers handling mysticall doctrines; by the Angels descending, Preachers applying themselves to morall doctrine, Serm. 79. de tempore. 3. Some by this ladder interpret the Church, which is the gate of heaven, without the which there is no salvation. 4. Some by this ladder insinuate a Christian profession, in the which are divers degrees and vertues to rise by: by the Angels ascending, such are understood as are given to contemplation: by the Angels descending, such as follow an active and practicall life. 5. Philo Iudæus by this ladder describeth the soule of man: the head he maketh the understanding, the feet the affections: the ascending & descending is the discourse of the reason: sometime he expoundeth it to be the continuall state of the world, wherein as in a ladder, some ascend and are advanced, some descend and are dishonoured, ex Perer. 6. But the proper and literall meaning of the ladder is, to set forth Gods providence, both in generall, whereby he governeth all things in heaven and in earth, Psal. 113. 6. The degrees of the ladder are the divers meanes which God useth: the Angels ascending and descending, are the ministring spirits, which God sendeth forth for the execution of his will: even the Heathen Poet Homer by like similitude of a golden chaine, which Jupiter sent downe from heaven to earth, describeth the divine divine providence. And in particular, the speciall care which the Lord had of Iacob to protect him in his journey, is by this ladder exemplified. The ladder is the way that Iacob was to goe, the Angels ascending and descending, doe conduct him backward and forward: God standeth upon the top of the ladder, ruling all by his providence, Iun. For whereas foure things troubled Iacob, his departure from his parents, his leaving of his Countrey, his solitary journey, his poverty: the Lord doth give him spirituall comfort against them all: I will be thy keeper; I will give thee this land; he saw Angels ascending and descending to be his companions: and thou shalt spread abroad to the East and West, &c. Perer. 7. This ladder also in a mysticall signification betokeneth Christ, as he himselfe expoundeth, Ioh. 1. 51. and specially in these points: 1. The two natures of Christ are expressed, who above is God of his father, beneath is man out of Iacobs loynes. 2. Christs office is described, who is the onely way and the ladder whereby we ascend to heaven, Calvin. 3. The Angels ascending and descending, are the blessed spirits, which first ministred to the person of Christ, Ioh. 1. 51. And secondly, doe minister for the good of his body, namely the elect, Heb. 1. 14.

QUEST. IX. How in Iacob all the world should be blessed.

Vers. 14. Thou shalt spread abroad to the West, to the East. 1. This is first understood of the possession of the large Countrey of Canaan, which was extended toward the foure parts of heaven: and secondarily it is referred to the spirituall posterity of Iacob, that should bee dispersed thoroweout the world, Mercer. 2. Whereas it is said, In thee, and in thy seed; he sheweth how in Iacob all Nations should be blessed, because of him should come the promised seed, Calvin.

QUEST. X. What things were promised to Iacob.

Vers. 15. I will never forsake thee, &c. 1. Because these promises made to Iacob in Christ, were not only temporall, but spirituall; not onely concerning this life, but the next, 1 Tim. 4. 8. Iun. 2. Whatsoever thou goest, which is not to bee taken largely, but with this restraint, so long as hee walked in the wayes of God, the Lord promiseth to be his guide, Muscul. 3. Till I have fulfilled all I have promised thee: not onely these things which the Lord now spake, as Mercer. but which Isaack promised and pronounced unto Iacob, vers. 3, 4. Iun. yea and all those promises made to Abraham and his seed, were made likewise to Iacob, Rasi.

QUEST. XI. How the Lord is said to be in one place more then another.

Vers. 16. The Lord is in this place, and I was not aware, &c. 1. God in respect of his power and local presence is every where alike: but in respect of some speciall declaration of his presence he is more in one place than another, as in some apparition and vision: as the Lord bid Moses put off his shooes because the ground was holy where the Lord then appeared, Exod. 3. so in the Tabernacle where the Lord gave answers in the Poole of Bethesda, where the Angell stirred the waters, the Lord was present after a speciall manner: as he is also in the assemblies and congregations of his servants: and as here in this heavenly apparition to Iacob, Perer. 2. The Hebrewes imagine that Iacob for the space of fourteen yeares, while he was in Ebers house, never almost lay downe, but watched, giving himselfe to meditation, and therefore reproveth himselfe now for sleeping: but that this is a fable, I have shewed before Gen. 25. quest. 20. 3. And I was not aware. So the Lord to the faithfull performeth more than they could conceive and expect, Calv. And the servants of God perceive not at the first that which in processe of time is revealed unto them, as it is said of Samuel, that at the first he knew not the Lord, neither was the word of God revealed to him, 1 Sam. 3. 4. that is, in such familiar manner as afterward the Lord shewed himself in, Gregor. lib. 2. in 1 Sam. 4. Bernard excellently sheweth the difference of Gods presence: Est in omni loco, &c. sed aliter atque aliter: apud homines malos est puniens & dissimulans, apud electos operans & servans, apud superos pascens & cubans, apud inferos damnans & arguens, &c. God is every where, but after a diverse manner: he is among the wicked punishing, yet forbearing, among the elect working and saving, in heaven refreshing and dwelling, in hell condemning and reproving, Serm. 6. de Dedication. Eccles. &c.

Hebrewes fables.

God revealeth not himselfe all at once to his servants.

QUEST. XIII. Why Iacob called the place fearefull.

Vers. 17. How fearefull is this place? 1. Three things were here wrought upon Iacob; while he slept he had a vision, when he awaked he had the revelation and understanding of the vision, and beside a reverent feare came upon him, Cajetan. 2. Which feare was not in respect of any danger, from which the Lord promised to deliver him, Mercer. nor yet such a feare as the wicked are stricken with, but a reverent feare, such as the godly have when they enter into Gods presence, Muscul. 3. This place was the Mount Moriah, as some think, where afterward the Temple was built, for Bethel and Jerusalem were distant, as is shewed before, quest. 5. neither is here Bethel a name appellative, but proper, given to that City which was called Luz before, vers. 19. but that fable of the Hebrewes, that the Mount Moriah removed from his place, and went before Iacob, is ridiculous, ex Mercer. 4. He calleth it a fearefull place, and the house of God, both because God there appeared, and the heavens opened, and for that hee thought it a meet place to be consecrated to the worship of God, Iun. and it may well signifie the Church of God where the Lord doth reveale himselfe to his servants, Rupertus.

Hebrewes fables.

QUEST.

Quest. XIII. Of the stone which Iacob powred oyle upon.

Vers. 18. HE tooke the stone that was under his head. 1. These were neither twelve stones, according to the number of the twelve tribes, which did all grow into one, as the Hebrewes imagine: neither were they many stones, as Iosephus: for though he gathered divers stones about his head, as Iunius collecteth out of the 11. vers. yet one was fittest for Iacob to rest his head on, and to reare for a pillar, Mercer. 2. The oyle did not fall from heaven, as the Hebrewes, nor yet is it like he had it from Luz: but it was such as he carried with him for his refreshing in his journey, and whereof there was great plentie in that Countrey, Mercer. Hebrewes fancies.

Quest. XIV. Whether Iacob did well in setting up a pillar, and anointing it with oyle.

Set up a pillar, and powred oyle. 1. The word is matseba, a pillar, of iatsab, which signifieth to stand: three sorts there were of such pillars: some for religious uses, forbidden Levit. 26. 1. some for morall, to put the people in minde of some benefit, as the twelve stones pitched in Jordan: some for evill uses, as Absolons pillar, which he set up to keepe a memoriall of him. 2. The Gentiles used superstitiously to power oyle upon stones: but Iacob taketh not this usage from them: it is more like that Satan brought the Gentiles superstitiously to counterfeit those holy rites, which holy men consecrated unto God: and againe, the Gentiles did adore and worship such stones, as Arnobius confesseth of himselfe, when he was yet an idolater, when he saw a smooth stone anointed with oyle, Tanquam inesset vis presens adulabar, affabar; I did speake unto it, and flatter it, as though some present vertue were in it. But Iacob ascribeth no divine vertue unto this stone, Perer. 3. Whereas they are forbidden to reare up any pillar, Levit. 26. 1. this fact of Iacob was long before the promulgation of that law: and besides they are forbidden to erect any such pillar to bow downe unto it: they might set up stones and pillars for commemoration of some worthy fact, as Iosua pitched the stones in Jordan, but not for adoration: and so Iacob here doth set up this stone for a remembrance of this vision, as also he doth consecrate it with oyle, as peculiar for the service of God, for in the same place he afterward built an Altar to God, Gen. 35. 7. but he was farre off from any superstitious opinion of this stone. 4. Augustine findeth out here a greater mystery, making this stone anointed with oyle, a figure of Christ, who is so called of his anointing, Lib. 16. de Civit. Dei, cap. 38.

Quest. XV. Whether the City of Luz were built at this time.

Vers. 19. NOtwithstanding the name of the City was called Luz. 1. There is another word (ulam) which signifieth certainly, truly, which the Septuagint unskilfully joyne with Luz, and make of both one corrupt name, Vlamamam. 2. Some thinke that there was here no City at this time, but that Luz was built long after, Calvin. But the text it selfe sheweth, that at this time there was a City, and that Iacob being overtaken of the night, lodged abroad in the field, Mercer. 3. Neither yet as some thinke, did Iacob lodge in the City, for the towne would have afforded him a softer pillow: and whereas Iacob saith, that God appeared unto him at Luz, Gen. 48. 3. he meaneth not the towne it selfe precisely, but comprehendeth under that name, the field where he lodged, that belonged unto the City Luz.

Quest. XVI. Luz and Bethel, whether one City or divers.

HE called the name of the place Bethel, &c. A question is here moved, whether Luz and Bethel were all one City, seeing that the border of Iosephs inheritance, Iosu. 16. 2. is said to goe from Bethel to Luz: for the solution whereof: 1. It is not like that Luz and Bethel were two Cities at the first, which being neere together were joyned into one, and two principall parts of the same City retained the names of Luz and Bethel, sic Tostat. Lyran. 2. Neither were there two Bethels, one in the tribe of Ephraim, another of Benjamins lot, as Chimhi thinketh, and Genevens. in anwot. Iosua 18. 13. for Bethel was bordering onely upon Ephraim, but within the lot of Benjamin, Iosu. 16. 2. Iosu. 18. 21. 3. Neither was this Bethel as some thinke, belonging first to Ephraim, and then fell to Benjamins lot, for no such thing appeareth, but that originally it was allotted to Benjamin, Iosu. 18. 22. 4. Nor yet need we to say with Peterius, that Bethel taken two wayes, strictly, for the very place where God appeared to Iacob, excluding the City; and largely, as comprehending the City & all together. 5. But the truth is, that there were two Cities called by the name of Luz, one that ancient towne whose name was changed into Bethel, another after-ward built by one that went into the land of the Hittites, which kept the name of Luz still, Iud. 1. 26. and this is that spoken of in the place objected, Iosu. 16. 2. Beth-el in Luz. 6. This Bethel by the Prophet Hosea is called Bethaven, 4. 15. that is, the house of iniquity, because Ieroboam there set up his golden calfe, 1 King. 12. and not farre from Bethel was there a place called Bethaven, Iosua 7. 2. which name, the other relation concurring, was translated to Bethel, Perer.

Quest. XVII. How Iacob vowes that the Lord shall be his God.

Vers. 21. IF God will be with me, &c. 1. Iacob was farre off from conditioning with God, that he should no otherwise be his God, than if he performed these things. 2. Neither doth Iacob here utter infirmity, as doubtfull of the performance of these things. 3. Nor yet doth he thus say, as though he thought the promise of God conditionall, that he would not otherwise be his God unlesse he performed these things, Perer. for God expresseth no condition in his promise. 4. Nor yet need we answer, that Iacob doth not vow the generall worship of God, whereunto he was bound by his profession, having received ceived circumcision, but a speciall service, in consecrating that place to Gods service, and offering of tythes: or that it is lawfull for a man to tie himselfe by a new bond to performe that to God which he is otherwise bound to doe; as the Prophet David saith, Psal. 119.126. I have sworne and will performe it, that I will keepe thy righteous judgements: both these answers are true, though not pertinent to this place, ex Perer. 5. Wherefore Iacob doth not bring this forth as a condition, If God will be with me? this particle (si) is not here a conditionall, but a word of time, as it is taken, vers. 15. until, if, that is, when I have performed, &c. so is it taken here, when God hath beene with me, and kept me in this journey, Iun. Mercer. and the words following are not to be read, then the Lord shall be my God: but, when the Lord hath beene my God: so they are not parcell of the vow, which is compleate in the 22. vers. but they are part of the reason of this vow, Rasi, Iun.

Quest. XVIII. To whom Iacob voweth to pay the tenth.

Vers. 22. I will give the tenth. 1. Some thinke that he payed the tenth to Sem or Eber: but Sem died before Iacob was borne: and Eber also was dead many yeares before this, in the 19. yeare of Iacob, who is now supposed to have beene 77. yeare old. 2. Therefore this giving of tithe was nothing else but the consecrating of the tenth part of his goods to be bestowed in building of Altars, and in sacrifices for the service of God: and such things as are devoted to religious uses, are truly said to be given unto God, sic Cajetan. Mercer. 3. Some Hebrewes referre this to the consecrating of Levi to the Priesthood: but (as Aben Ezra) not men, but cattell and beasts used to be tithed.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. The ministery of Angels.

Vers. 12. The Angell of God went up and downe. By this is expressed the ministery of the Angels, that are continually imployed for the good of the elect: they ascend to report our necessities, they descend to be ministers of Gods mercies; as the Apostle saith, Are they not all ministring spirits, sent forth to minister for their sakes that shall be heires of salvation? Heb. 1.14.

2. Doct. How Gods providence is seene in permitting evill to be done in the world.

HEreby also is set forth Gods providence that watcheth over all things; for the Lord standeth upon the top of this ladder, whereby is signified the administration and government of the world. Against which providence, whereas it is objected that many evill things are committed in the world, in the which the Lord is no way consenting: Thomas Aquinas answereth, that although some defects are against the particular nature of things, yet they are for the good of the universall; and therefore as Augustine saith, Deus non sineret malum esse in operibus suis, nisi esset tam omnipotens, ut faceret etiam de malo: God would not suffer evill to be in his works, if he did not know how to turne evill unto good. But it will be said, God ought to draw men against their will unto good. Dionysius answereth, Non est providentia divina violare naturam, sed est conjusque naturæ conservatrix: Gods providence doth not change or violate nature, but is the preserver of nature: leaving to things indued with reason to follow their owne will and inclination, Lib. de Divin. nominib. cap. 4. par. 4.

3. Doct. How God forsaketh not the elect finally.

Vers. 15. I will not forsake thee, &c. Gods promises to his servants are so stable and firme in Christ, that they are sure finally not to be forsaken; as the Lord said to Iosua, I will never faile thee nor forsake thee, Heb. 13.4. Calvin.

4. Doct. Lawfull to vow.

How vowes should be made.

Vers. 20. If God will be with me, &c. By Iacobs vowing, both their error is condemned that take away the use of all vowes from Christians, and their superstition that vow not as they ought; for Iacob 1. directeth his vowes to God, the papists vow unto Saints. 2. He voweth to testifie his thankfulnesse, they vow to merit. 3. He voweth such things as were in his power, as to pay tithe; they such things as are beyond their reach, as single life, where the gift is not. 4. Iacob voweth such things as God commanded, they vow things of their owne inventing, as to goe in pilgrimage, to fast with bread and water, to go with idols, and such like; concerning the which we may say with the Prophet, who required this at your hands? Isay 1.12. Calvin.

5. Doct. Signes called by the names of the things.

Vers. 22. This stone shall be the house of God. This stone was not Gods house, but a monument or signe of the place of Gods worship, for there Iacob to fulfill this vow, afterward at his returne built an Altar to God, Gen. 35.7. Thus by a metonymie, that which is proper to the thing, is given to the signe in which sense the bread in the Eucharist, is called the body of Christ, Marlor.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. How the Angels are reporters of our prayers unto God, and yet no mediators.

Vers. 12. LOe the Angels of God ascended and descended upon it. Hence Pererius would gather, that the Angels descended from heaven to reveale unto us the counsels of God, and to execute his will, so their office is by ascending to report unto God our prayers, vowes, and necessities, in Gen. 25. number. 29.

We grant, that the Angels doe report unto God the affaires of the world, and the acts and gests of men, and so their supplications in generall: but this they doe as messengers, not as mediators. The Prophet Zachary sheweth a distinct office of the Angelicall spirits, and Jesus Christ, there called the Angell of the Lord: they returne this answer to Christ, We have gone thorow the world, and behold, all the world sitteth still, and is at rest. But the Angell of the Lord, Christ the Mediator of his Church, steppeth forth and prayeth, O Lord of hosts, how long wilt thou be unmercifull to Ierusalem! Zach. 1. 12. So then, though the Angels be witnesses of our devotion, and beholders of our teares and plaints, they have no office of mediation, neither have we any warrant to pray unto them.

2. Confut. Against the Platonists, that make three kinds of providence.

Vers. 12. There stood a ladder upon the earth, and the top reached to heaven. Gods providence then descendeth from heaven to earth: contrary to the opinion of the Platonists, noted by Gregor. Nyssen. lib. 8. de provident. cap. 3. who make three kinds of providence, the first of God, in taking care onely for things celestiall and spirituall, and the generall causes of other things in the world: the second they attributed to the second ranke of gods, who provided for all things betweene the Moone and the earth: the third they yeelded to the spirits who governed the actions of men. But the Scripture teacheth us, that all things in heaven and earth are ruled by Gods providence, in so much that a sparrow cannot fall upon the ground without the will of God, Matth. 10. 29. as the Prophet David also saith, Who is like unto the Lord our God, that hath his dwelling on high, who abaseth himselfe to behold things in the heaven, and the earth? Psal. 113. 5, 6.

3. Confut. Iacobs Ladder doth not signifie the monasticall profession.

Pererius interpreteth this ladder out of a counterfeit peece of Bernard, to be the discipline of Monasticall life, and namely, the way and rule of Benets order, whereby the founder of that order S. Benedict went to heaven, number. 34. Contra. 1. First then it is requisite, if this ladder signifieth Monasticall discipline, that he which first saw it, should have beene a professed Monke: but I thinke they will not say that Iacob was a Monke: the most speciall part of which profession consisteth in the vow of single life. 2. Christ himselfe standeth upon the top of this ladder, to whom the way and ladder is directed: he then that climbeth this ladder must ascend by faith in Christ; but the Monks thinke to climbe up to heaven by their merits. 3. Iacob was a figure of Christ, upon whom the Angels of God should ascend and descend, Ioh. 1. 51. it is great presumption then to put Benet in Christs place, that Iacob should bee a figure of him. 4. This ladder sheweth the way that every true Israelite of Iacob should ascend by: but every true Israelite and Christian is not a Monke.

4. Confut. Philo confuted concerning the ascending and descending of soules.

Philo understandeth the ayre to be this ladder: Basis terra, cœlum caput; The earth is the foot of this ladder, the heaven is the head or top: the Angels are the soules, Quas aer habet stellis pares, which the ayre filled with, equall to the starres in number: some of these descend into the bodies, some ascend: Alia ad corpora recurrunt, Some returne to the bodies againe: thus Philo Platonizeth, Lib. de somniis. In this device of Philo three notable errours are discovered: 1. The ayre is not the seat or region of soules, but the spirits of the just are in heaven where Jesus Christ is, and the holy Angels, Heb. 12. 22, 23, 24. 2. The soules had no being before their bodies, that they should descend into them as from another place: God formeth the spirit of man within him, Zachar. 12. 1. 3. Neither doe the soules once separated from the bodies, returne any more to cohabit in earthly and mortall bodies: The spirit returneth to God that gave it, Eccles. 12. 7.

5. Confut. Against the Helvidians.

Vers. 15. I will not forsake thee till I have performed, &c. The Helvidians, because it is said that Ioseph knew not Mary till she had brought forth her first-borne sonne, Matth. 1. 25. would gather thereupon, that he knew her after ward: they may as well conclude here, that after God had performed to Iacob that which he promised, that he did forsake him then, Musc.

6. Confut. Temples have no inherent holinesse, but in regard of the use.

Vers. 17. This is no other but Gods house, &c. This proveth not that Temples and Churches are more holy places in themselves, which is the opinion of the Romanists. 1. Their Temples being filled with idolatry, are prophane and unholy. 2. Though before Christs comming the Lord chose a speciall place where he would have sacrifices offered, and not in any place beside, and so some places were were privileged with a legall kinde of ſanctity, more than others: yet now ſince that Chriſt hath every where opened heaven to the prayers of the faithfull, that diſtinction remaineth not. 3. Even Bethel retained not an inherent holineſſe, but in reſpect of the religious uſe: for after that it was by Ieroboam defiled with Idolatry, it was no more Bethel, the houſe of God, but Bethaven, the houſe of iniquity.

7. Confut. Againſt the anointing of Altars.

Verſ. 18. HE powred oyle upon the top of it, &c. Hence Rabanus groundeth that ſuperſtitious uſe of anointing the Altar with oyle: Altare poſt aſperſionem aquæ Chryſmate ungitur ad imitationem Patriarchæ Iacob; The Altar after the ſprinkling of water is anointed with Chryſme, after the imitation of the Patriarke Iacob, Lib. de inſtitut. Clericor. cap. 45. Contra. 1. The ceremonies of the law, which were figures and ſhadowes of things to come, are not meet ornaments for the Goſpell, ſuch were their waſhings, anointings, ſacrifices, and other rites: they were ſhadowes of things to come, but the body is Chriſt, Coloſ. 2. 17. The body then being come, what need the ſhadow? 2. The ſame ointment that Chriſt was anointed with, his members alſo receive: but that was a ſpirituall unction, Luk. 4. 18. The ſpirit of the Lord is upon me, becauſe he hath anointed me. Of this anointing the Apoſtle ſpeaketh: Yee have an ointment from him that is holy, and ye have knowne all things, 1 Ioh. 2. 20. 3. But if Iacobs anointing muſt be a patterne, why doe they alſo ſprinkle water, which he did not? Iacob alſo uſed profane and common oyle, ſuch as he carried for his journey; but their oyle muſt be hallowed firſt and conſecrated: Iacob here maketh no Altar, but ſetteth up a pillar for a monument: why doe not they by the ſame example powre oyle upon their Croſſes and Pillars in the high-way?

8. Confut. Bethel become Bethaven, and Rome Babel.

Verſ. 19. HE called the name of that place Bethel. Yet afterward when it was prophaned by idolatry it was called by the Prophets Bethaven, the houſe of iniquity: we need not therefore marvell if that Rome, ſometime the Church of God, bee now become Babel, the fountaine of corrupt doctrine, the place and ſeat of Antichriſt: they cannot ſhew ſuch warrant for the conſecration of Rome as the Scripture ſpeaketh for Bethel, which of the houſe of God was made an habitation of filthy Idols, and ſo is Rome, Muſcul.

6. Places of morall obſervation.

1. Obſerv. We muſt not amend one errour by another.

Verſ. 9. THen went Eſau to Iſhmael, &c. Eſau in ſtead of correcting his former errour, in taking his wives from the daughters of Canaan, committeth another, in matching into the ſtocke of Iſhmael, that was alſo a ſtranger from the covenant: he thought he ſhould pleaſe his father, though he did not thorowly reforme himſelfe, if he came a little nearer: ſuch is the reformation of hypocrites, who thinke they have done well if they can dawbe over their ſinnes, and ſet ſome colour upon them by a pretended reformation: as Herod did, Who ſeemed to reverence Iohn, and when he heard him, he did many things, and heard him gladly, Mark. 6. 30. Mercer. Calvin.

2. Obſerv. Patience and labour to be endured for vertue.

Verſ. 11. HE tooke of the ſtones of the place, and laid under his head. Iacob is ſet forth unto us as a ſingular example of labour and patience: who both lay hard, and fared courſly by the way. Philo noteth hereupon, Non decet virtutis ſectatorem vita delicata, &c. A delicate life becommeth not a follower of vertue. This example ſerveth to reprove thoſe who place their whole felicity in this life, in dainty fare, lying in ſoft beds, and other ſuch delicacies: which was the happineſſe of that rich glutton Luk. 16. Beſide, this example doth teach us, that if we have the like hard entertainment in the world, we ſhould comfort our ſelves by the example of Iacob, Calvin. So Saint Paul ſaith, I have learned, in whatſoever ſtate I am, therewith to be content: I can be abaſed, and I can abound, Phil. 3. 12.

3. Obſerv. We muſt alwayes be going forward in our Chriſtian courſe.

Verſ. 12. THe Angels went up and downe. None of them were ſeene to ſtand ſtill upon the ladder, but were in continuall motion, either aſcending or deſcending: which teacheth us, that in our Chriſtian profeſſion we ſhould be alway going forward: Qui non proficiunt, neceſſario deficiunt; They that goe not forward, goe backward: the Angels either aſcend or deſcend, Perer. The Wiſe man ſaith, He that is ſlothfull in his worke, is even the brother of a great waſter, Prov. 18. 9. He that buildeth not up in Chriſtian profeſſion, pulleth downe.

4. Obſerv. Reverent behaviour to be uſed in the Church of God.

Verſ. 17. HE was afraid and ſaid, how fearfull is this place? &c. Iacob perceiving that God was preſent, and that the place where he was was Gods houſe, becauſe the Lord had there ſhewed himſelfe, he doth ſtirre up himſelfe to a reverent feare, as being in the ſight and preſence of God: which example doth teach us how we ought to behave our ſelves reverently and humbly in the Lords houſe. Bernard well ſaith, Terribilis plane locus, dignus omni reverentia, quem fideles inhabitant, quem Angeli frequentant, quem ſola præſentia Dominus dignatur: A fearefull place indeed, and worthy of all reverence where the faithfull inhabit, the Angels frequent, God himſelfe vouchſafeth to be preſent: as the firſt Adam (ſaith he) was placed in Paradiſe to keep it: Ita ſecundus Adam verſatur in Eccleſia ſanctorum, as ſpouſe, caſtodit assistant; so the second Adam is conversant in the congregation of the Saints, to be working there, and watching over them: Bernar. serm. 6. de dedication. The Prophet David saith, I will come into thine house in the multitude of thy mercies, and in thy feare will I worship toward thy holy temple: Psal. 5. 7.

5. Observ. To be content with our estate.

Vers. 19. If he will give me bread to eat, cloathes to put on, &c. Iacob requireth not any superfluous or unnecessary thing, but onely needfull and sufficient provision: like as the Prophet prayeth, Give me not poverty, nor riches, but feed me with food convenient, Pro. 30. 8. We learne hereby to be contented with a little, and not to covet abundance: there is a saying, Cui parum non est satis, nihil est satis: to him a little sufficeth not, nothing will suffice: the Apostle saith, Godlinesse is great riches, if a man be content with that he hath, 1 Tim. 6. 6.

CHAP. XXIX.

1. The Argument and Contents.

IN this chapter, first is declared the entertainment of Iacob into Labans house: where wee have, 1. his communication with the shepheards, verse 1. to 9. 2. his salutation of Rachel, verse 9, to 13. 3. his manner of receiving into Labans house.

Secondly, Iacob covenanteth with Laban for Rachel, and serveth first seven yeares, then Leah is given for Rachel by Labans craft, after he serveth seven yeare more to enjoy Rachel, verse. 16. to 30.

Thirdly, the issue and fruit of Iacobs marriage is expressed, the barrennesse of Rachel, and the fruitfulnesse of Leah in bringing forth unto Iacob foure sonnes: and the cause hereof is shewed, because Leah was despised.

3. The Explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. Of the three flockes, and the stone laid upon the wels mouth.

2. THree flocks of sheepe lay there, &c. there was a great stone upon the wels mouth, &c. 1. I will omit the allegories that are here devised: the Hebrewes by the three flocks, understand people, Levites, and Priests, three orders in Israel: others by the stone would have signified the stone of the Pharises, which was an impediment to the knowledge of the law. 2. They used to lay that stone upon the wels mouth, not only to preserue men from danger by falling into it, but to keepe water, that it might not be troubled or corrupted: for it seemeth, there was great scarcity of water in that country, Mercer.

QUEST. II. Of Rachels keeping her fathers sheepe.

6. Rachel came with her fathers sheepe. 1. So was it the fashion of that country, to set their daughters to keepe their sheepe: as the seven daughters of Reuel Moses father in law did, Exod. 2. 16. Rachel seemeth thereof to have her name, which signifieth a sheepe, Mastul. 2. Rachel was beautyfull, and Leah stayd at home, for that shee was the elder, and now marriageable, or because she had weake eyes, which might not endure the sunne, Mercer.

QUEST. III. Whether Iacob rolled away the stone alone.

10. HE rolled away the stone: 1. Some thinke, that he with the rest did remove this stone, Ian. 2. But it is rather like that Iacob did it alone, being now a man of perfect strength, seventy seven yeares of age, whereas the other might be youths, and some maidens: as also Iacob casting affection to Rachel might put forth his strength to shew her pleasure, and to insinuate himselfe. Mercer.

QUEST. IV. Of divers kinds of kissing and whether it were lightnesse in Iacob to kisse Rachel.

Vers. 11. And Iacob kissed Rachel, &c. 1. We reade of divers kinds of kisses: 1. one an unchaste kisse, such as harlots use, Prov. 7. 13. 2. a modest kisse used among kindred, as Isaack kissed Iacob, Gen. 27. Iacob here kisseth Rachel. 3. a kisse of courtesie, as they used to salute strangers, and to entertaine them into their house, Luk. 7. 45. Our Saviour saith to the Pharisee, thou gavest me no kisse. This kinde of kissing was much used among the Romanes, who used one to kisse another in the way, insomuch, that Tyberius Cæsar, as Suetonius writeth, did forbid it by a publike edict. 4. They used also among the Romanes a kisse of triall, the kinsfolks used to kisse the women, to see if they had drunke any wine, which was not lawfull amongst them: as Plinie maketh mention of Egnatius Mecennius, that killed his wife for drinking of wine out of a tun, and yet he was by Romulus acquitted of the murder, lib. 14. cap. 14. 5. There was a fraudulent kisse, such as Iudas gave that betrayed Christ. 6. There was an holy kisse, which the Christians did use one to give to another in their holy assemblies, in token of love, before they received the sacrament: whereof Saint Paul speaketh: Greet one another with an holy kisse. 2. Corinth. 13. 12. ex Peter.

2. Iosephus misreporteth this story, that Rachel wept and fell upon Iacobs necke, whereas it was Iacob, lib. 1. antiquit. 3. Lest it might be thought a light part in Iacob to kisse a woman unknowne, I agree unto Aben Ezra, that here we must admit an hysteron proteron, for first Iacob told Rachel who he was, as it followeth in the next verse, before he kissed her, Mercer. 4. Augustine allegorizeth this fact of Iacob, that as he first watered Rachels flocke before he kissed her, sic nisi per aquam baptismi, &c. so unlesse by baptisme the people of God obtaine remission of sins, osculum accipere a Christo, 1. pacem ejus habere non meretur, they cannot obtaine a kisse from Christ, that is, injoy his peace, serm. 80. de temp.

QUEST. V. Why Iacob wept.

Vers. 11. Lift up his voyce and wept, &c. Iacob weepeth for joy that he had so happily continued his long and painfull a journey, not as Esau wept for griefe, Genes. 27. 2. The Hebrewes dote that he wept, because he had no giftes to bestow upon Rachel, as Eliezer did upon Rebecca, Gen. they further imagine, that Iacob came forth accompanied with servants, camels, and gifts, but that was robbed of all be Eliphaz Esaus eldest sonne by the way, who yet spared his life: but these are It is like that Rebecca sent Iacob away privily because of Esau, lest he should have lyen in waite for 3. So likewise they imagine that Laban came forth hastily to meet Iacob, thinking that he had as richly furnished as Eleezer, whom Abraham sent: and seeing no companie, at the last he kissed to trie if he had any pearles in his mouth: and finding nothing, that thereupon he saith, my bone and my flesh, that he had no other cause now to give him entertainement, but that he was kinsman.

Hebrewes fables.

QUEST. VI. Whether Leah were bleare-eyed.

Vers. 17. Leah was tender eyed. 1. Not faire eyed, as Oukelos translateth, as though Leah had not comely but her eye, but Rachel was all comely. 2. Not yet was she lippis oculis, bleare-eyed as the Latine translateth, and Tostatus expoundeth, fluebat crassus humor quotidie ex oculis, ut esset 1. similis lachrimanti, that there issued out of her eyes continually a thick humor, so that she was bleare-eyed if she continually wept: the word is raccoth, tender: her eyes seemed to have beene dull and heavy, which made her pore-blinde, or to looke a squint, which is a great deformity in a woman. 3. This her infirmity came not by continuall weeping, as the Hebrewes imagine, lest she should have beene given to Esau to wife: for it is like, that they had not yet heard so much as of the name of Esau: but this weakenesse of her sight might proceed from her weake constitution, whose name may seeme to have been derived of laah, which is to wax faint, or feeble, Mercer.

QUEST. VII. Why Iacob served seven yeares for Rachel.

Vers. 18. I will serve thee seven yeares for Rachel thy younger daughter, &c. 1. It was the use in countries, as afterward among the Grecians and Romanes, for the husband to give his wife, and to give unto her or her parents and friendes some gifts. Among the Germans espousals were not good if the husband gave not the wife her dowrie, Tacit. de morib. Germ. the Germans did use for a paire of oxen to buy their wives, Strab. lib. 15. the Massilians were not to give above of dowry above 100 peeces of gold: the Cretenſians halfe their goods: the ancient French gave as they received: the Saxons gave unto their wives parents, 300. shillings, Perer. 2. The like custome in Israel, David espoused his wife for 100. foreskins of the Philistims, 2. Sam. 3. 14. the Prophet bought his wife for 15. peeces of silver, and an homer of barley, &c. c. 3. 2. Iacob, because he had not to give, offered his service. 3. He himselfe setteth downe the time of 7. yeares, not as the Hebrewes dote because Rachel was now but 5. yeare old, and therefore he would stay till she were marriageable: likelike, that a maiden of 5. yeare old could keep her fathers sheep: but Iacob knowing Labans covet-

The manner of espousals.

doth covenant for a reasonable time of service, Mercer. 4. Laban dealeth subtilly with Iacob, not simply promising Rachel, but saying it is better, &c. for he had even now that crafty fetch to marry Leah first. 5. The 7. yeares seemed but a few daies to Iacob, not during the time of his service, because he comforted himselfe with the hope of his love, sic Calvin. they seemed not long in his judgement, but in his affection, Perer. but after the time was over, Mercer. 6. Rupertus hath here a fit allegorie, making Iacob a type of Christ, who came in the forme of a servant, and indured much travaile and labour in the daies of his flesh, to marry himselfe to Rachel of the Gentiles, yet first offering himselfe to Leah the Synagogue of the Iewes, ex Perer.

Labans craft.

QUEST. VIII. Whether Iacobs love toward Rachel were inordinate.

Vers. 18. Iacob loved Rachel. 1. He loved her because shee was beautifull and comely: for of the three corporall blessings, strength, health, beauty, this hath the preheminence. Plato called it the principality of nature, Socrates, a tyranny not long, Aristotle, a greater commendation than all Epistles. 2. Iacob though he might herein shew some infirmity, he simply offended not, for to desire beauty to be a provocation of lust, is unlawfull: but to affect it to this end, for more loving society and procreation of children, and where it is accompanied with vertue, all which here concurred in Rachel, is excusible: for as meat pleaseth better in a cleane dish, so vertue in comely persons is more amiable, Hugo. and some actions there are that without some delight cannot be so well affected: as eating of meats, learning of arts: such is the matrimoniall society, Augustine: yea holy men may faile in some circumstances of vertuous actions, as in the zeale of justice, in the workes of charity, in the love of their spouses, which defects are excused by the lawfulnesse of the actions, and the exercise of other vertues, Pem. ex Thom. Anglic.

Beauty how far to be respected in marriage.

QUEST. IX. How Iacobs terme was ended.

Vers. 21. Give me my wife, &c. for my terme is ended. 1. Not which Rebeckah his mother did set him, neither speaketh he of the terme of his owne yeares, that by reason of his age, he could stay no longer, to have any children, Iun. but he meaneth his seven yeares of service were expired. 2. It is therefore unlike, that in the beginning of the seven yeares this was done, as R. Levi, or before the seven yeares compleat, as Ramban: for Laban being an hard man, would remit nothing of the time agreed upon.

QUEST. X. Of marriage feasts, and why Laban made a feast.

Vers. 22. Laban gathered together all the men of the place, &c. 1. Not all, but many of the neighbours were called together: for thus in Scripture often generall speeches are restrained: Genes. 41. by all countries came to Egypt to buy corne, that is, very many. 2. This company was called together, not to advise with Laban, how to deceive Iacob, as some Hebrewes thinke, for Laban was craftie enough of himselfe, Mercer. but that Iacob before so many witnesses should not goe back from that marriage, wherein he should be deceived, Calvin. 3. This solemnitie of marriage though it be not of the substance thereof, yet for more honestie and decency, and for the ratifying of marriage, and to avoyd secret contracts, it is very fit to be used, Tostatus. 4. It was the laudable manner of those times, to make marriage feasts, as appeareth both in the old and new testament: Iud. 14. 10 Sampson made a feast at his marriage; our Saviour vouchsafed to be present at the marriage feast, John 2. and this custome may very well be retained so it be used with moderation, that the concourse of unruly company be prevented, and excesse avoyded; therefore Plato prescribeth at marriage feasts, not above five friends of each side, and as many himselfes to be called together, but to be drunken with wine he counteth it maxime alienum in nuptiis, & dissonum omnibus decentibus matrimonium, Perer.

Abuses to be avoyded in marriage feasts.

QUEST. XI. Of Labans fraud in suborning Leah.

Vers. 23. When the even was come, he tooke Leah, &c. 1. Their manner was to bring the spouse home at night, and covered with a veile, for modesty and shamefastnesse; which was the cause that Iacob knew not Leah at his first going in unto her; and it is like that she was silent all night, lest she should have beene discerned, and her silence he imputed to her modesty; some thinke that Iacob came not neare her, but continued all night in prayer, but it is unlike, seeing that Iacob had longed seven yeares for this marriage. 2. Leah cannot be here excused, who was in fault, yet drawn into it by her father counsell, and desirous also herselfe to be married to such a worthy man, Perer. and she might thinke that Iacob and her father were agreed. 3. But Laban was in the greatest fault, and therefore Iacob doth expostulate with him. 1. He is unjust of his promise in not giving Rachel betimes to Iacob. 2. He dissembleth, excusing himselfe by the custome. 3. He offereth wrong to his daughter, to cause her to commit adultery. 4. And to Iacob, in thrusting upon him a woman whom hee desired not. 5. Though there were such a custome, he should have stood upon it in time, when Rachel was espoused: now the custome could not serve to violate the law of nature, to cause Iacob to commit adultery, being betroathed already to another, Perer.

How Leah was not discerned of Iacob.

QUEST. XII. Whether Iacob fulfilled seven daies or yeares before Rachel was given him.

Vers. 27. Fulfill seven for her. 1. Some understand this of seven yeares, for the word Shabang is sometime taken for seven daies, sometime for seven yeares, Merlin. Varab. Genebrard. This is not like, for Rachel was given to Iacob first, and then he served seven yeares for Rachel, but if if it should be taken for seven yeares, then Iacob should not have had his wife till these seven were fulfilled, vers. 28. 2. But it is better understood of daies, as Hierome expounds it: ut septem dies prompti matrimonii sororis explerit, that he fulfilled seven daies for the marriage of the elder sister: Hieron. traditum, in Genes. for it was the manner to keepe the marriage feast 7. daies, Iud. 14. 15. 17. Augustine yeeldeth this reason, valde iniquum fuisset Iacob fallaciter deceptum differre alios septem annos: it had beene most unjust to deferre Iacob so craftily deceived seven yeares longer, qu. 89. in Genes.

QUEST. XIII. Iacobs multiplicity of marriage, no argument of his intemperance.

Vers. 29. LAban also gave Rachel his daughter Bilhah, &c. Laban gave unto both his daughters handmaids, both to attend and wait upon them, as also to be a solace and comfort unto them in a strange country whither they were to goe, Perer. 2. These afterward were joyned unto Iacob for procreation, beside either Laban or Iacobs intention: and in that Iacob had two wives and two concubines, it argueth not his intemperancie. 1. Because he intended onely to marry Rachel, & praeter eam voluisse eum Leam accidisse, and that Lea was given unto him beside his minde. 2. Iacob also in this multiplicitie of marriage, chiefly propounded to himselfe the procreation and multiplying of his seed. 3. He took his maids, not of his owne minde, sed ut conjugem placaret, but to please his wives, that they might have children by them. 4. And againe it must be considered, tunc temporis non datam fuisse legem, quae multiplices nuptias prohiberet, that there was at that time no law which did forbid multiplicity of marriage, Theodoret. qu. 84. in Gen. ex citat. Perer.

QUEST. XIV. At what time Leahs foure eldest children were borne.

Vers. 34. HIs name was called Levi, 35. shee called his name Iehudah. 1. The Hebrewes fable, Michael called from heaven to Levi, and gave him that name, and endued him with gifts fit for the Priesthood: and further, Leah now having borne three children, saith her husband should be joyned unto her, because she had borne her part of the twelve sons, which she as a propheresse did foresee should be borne unto Iacob, of his two wives and two handmaids: but these are fabulous and vaine conjectures: they also in the name Iehudah, doe include Iehovah, the letter Daleth being added in the fourth place, because he was the fourth son: but these light collections are not to be stood upon. 2. Some thinke that these children began to be borne in the beginning of the first seven yeares, as R. Levi: but the text overthroweth that conceit, for Iacob went not into Lea, till he had ended his terme of seven yeares, vers. 27. Some thinke that these and the rest of the children were borne to Iacob in the last seven yeares, and the six yeares beside of Iacobs service: but the story is otherwise, that all Iacobs children were borne before he entred into a new covenant to stay still with Laban, his two seven yeares being expired, Genes. 30. But it is more probable, that all Iacobs children, only Benjamin excepted, that was borne in the land of Canaan, that is, eleven sonnes and one daughter, were brought forth in the compasse of the last seven yeares: for it is not necessary to assigne their birth successively, one to be borne after another, but that their mothers might be with childe at once: and so it is not improbable, that foure women in seven yeares might bring forth 11. or 12. children, Mercer.

Hebrewes fables.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. God directeth even the least actions of his servants.

Vers. 1. IAcob lift up his feet: that is, he went cheerefully and willingly: and in that mention is made of so small an action, as the lifting up of his feet, we learne, that even the least and most ordinary actions of the faithfull are directed by the spirit of God, and guided by his providence, Mercer. and our Saviour taketh knowledge of Nathaniels sitting under the figge tree, Ioh. 1. 48. so the Apostle saith, that all things worke together for the best, to them that love God, Rom. 8. 28.

2. Doct. Men may hold the truth in generall, and yet faile in particular.

Vers. 15. SHouldest thou serve me for nought? Laban here speaketh reason, and seemeth to know what is just and right, but afterward he failed, and recompenced Iacob but meanely for his faithfull service? as Iacob complaineth, Thou hast changed my wages ten times, Gen. 31. 41. Thus we see that carnall men may hold generall principles aright, but when it commeth to their owne particulars then they are blinded with selfe-love, Calvin. So dealt Herod with Iohn Baptist: he did acknowledge him to be a just and holy man, yet to please his wives daughter, commanded him to be beheaded.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Customs were to be pretended where greater enormities are admitted.

Vers. 26. IT is not the manner of this place, to give the younger before the elder. He pretendeth a custome in the lesse matter, in the meane time he transgresseth the custome and all good order in a matter of greatest importance, in thrusting upon a man in the night one sister for another: thus after the like manner the Romanists object the customs of the Church against the marriage of Ministers, whom they call and in the meane time they breake all good order, while for want of the due remedie, fornication and uncleane lust is suffered to be practised amongst them, Mayerne.

2. Confut. Iacobs polygamie and marriage of two sisters, unjustifiable.

Verse 30. SO entred he into Rachel also. This multiplicity of wives which is called polygamie, is diversly excused. 1. Augustine saith, Nulla lege prohibebatur, it was forbidden by no law; quando non erat, crimen non erat: It was no fault, when the custome was so; as in times past it was a shame for the Romans to have talares tunicas, side garments, but now every one of honest sort doth weare them, Aug. lib. 22. cont. Faust. c. 47.

Contra. 1. Though there were no written law in those times, yet their owne conscience grounded upon the law of nature, and the faithfull traditions of the fathers, might have discerned it to be a fault: seeing that God in the beginning for one Adam made but one Eve, and Lamech of the wicked race is the first found in Scripture to have had two wives. 2. And though custome may be pretended for many wives, yet to marry two sisters there was no such custome, Mercer. 3. The example of long garments is nothing like: for it is a thing indifferent, which may be thought comely or uncomely, as time and place doth vary: but that which is simply unlawfull, and against the first institution, as polygamie is, cannot become just by any custome.

2. Some say that polygamie is after a sort against nature, yet so as it may be dispensed with, as it is like after the flood, to Noah this indulgence was given, Peter. in 29. Gen. numer. 32.

Contra. 1. If Noah had beene dispensed with for many wives, then had there beene greatest cause to have used that liberty: and if polygamie for propagation were tolerable, God might have preserved in the ark as many men as women. 2. Against a written law and institution as this is of having one wife, Gen. 2. 24. A man shall leave father and mother, and cleave to his wife, not wives; a dispensation cannot be admitted.

3. Divers allegories are made of Iacobs two wives: Augustine by Leah, figureth the people of the Iewes, by Rachel the Gentiles. Rupertus saith contrary, that Rachel was a type of the Iewes, Leah of the Gentiles August. ser. 80. de tempor. Rup. in Gen. 29. Gregorie by Leah interpreteth the active life, by Rachel the contemplative, Homil. 14. in Ezech. ix Peter.

Contra. 1. By the diversitie of these allegories it appeareth, they are mens collections, and humane devices, and therefore cannot exclude the transgression of a divine ordinance. 2. And though these allegories might be warranted by the Scripture, yet thereby is not the fact justified: Christs comming for the redemption of mankind is compared to the comming of a theefe; yet I trust thereby is not meant the sinfull approching of a proved. 3. Thus then is the resolution of this question: 1. that Iacob was guiltie of no sinne in that not double, but quadruple marriage, yea and the same incestuous in the marriage of two sisters. 2. yet Labans fault was greater than Iacobs, who by his craft induced him unto it. 3. God in his deepe providence used this oversight of Iacob, as a meanes greatly to increase and multiplie Iacob and the rest of the Patriarkes, in their manners and generall example of life, but not in those particular acts, such as these, are to be imitated Mayerne.

How farre the fathers are to be imitated.

6. Places of morall observation.

1. Observ. Education of children in labour.

Vers. 9. Rachel came with her fathers sheepe, for shee kept them. Thus in that simple age did they bring up their children, not idly and wantonly, but in labour and houshold workes: Laban had many servants beside in his house, yet he setteth this faire damzell to keepe his sheepe: though this be not an example now to men of good sort and place, thus to employ their daughters, for the particulars; yet they should follow it so far to provide that their children be industriously brought up, and not to give them the reines of licentious libertie. Thus we reade, that Sonnes and Sons were with their father Zebedee in a ship mending their nets, Matth. 4. Ioseph was brought up in the workes of his owne vocation: Moses was a shepheard: Dauid a keeper of sheepe: Amos a herdman, &c.

2. Observ. Service of love.

Vers. 15. Though thou be my brother, shouldest thou serve me for nought? Labans was willing to retaine Iacob still, because he was a faithfull servant: which is a teaching instruction now adaies, to think they may lay out their monie to purchase them servants, whom they love of kinne unto them: whereas the meanest may thus be procured to their businesse, Luther. But Saint Paul giveth a rule for servants, whether they serve their masters or not, Ephes. 6. 5. Servants be obedient to your masters in singlenesse, &c.

3. Observ. Love of parents.

Vers. 20. Iacob loved Rachel. Notwithstanding Iacobs love unto Rachel, yet he forsaketh her not, when he governed action toward her: having the feare of God before his eyes, and being exercised in continuall labour, forgetfulness, which might be in him to his disadvantage, Peter. An example may be to all parents, that they love their children, and be carefull for their behaviour.

4 Observ.

4. Observ. Neglect of wife or husband, in scripture is counted hatred.

Vers. 31. When the Lord saw that Leah was hated or despised, &c. Yet was she not simply hated, for Iacob performed unto her matrimoniall duties, but lesse respected than Rachel: thus the Scripture counteth the neglect of wife or husband hatred: It is not then enough, not to break forth into capitall hatred, but they must one be heartily affected to another, Calvin. Husbands love your wives, as Christ loved his Church, and gave himselfe for it, Ephes. 5. 25.

5. Observ. God crosseth mens prepostorous affections.

Vers. 31. But Rachel was barren. Thus the Lord useth to chastise and correct the prepostorous affections of his servants: as Iacobs love with Rachels barrennesse: as God did qualifie Ionas joy in delighting too much in the shadow of his gourd, by causing it to wither.

6. Observ. Wives must seeke to please their husbands.

Vers. 32. Now my husband will love me: Leah desireth nothing more than to please her husband, and to use all meanes to procure his love: so should wives seeke to content their husbands, and to forbeare all things that might grieve them, Calvin. Therefore Saint Peter especially commendeth in women a meeke and quiet spirit, 1 Pet. 3. 4.

7. Observ. As Gods blessings are multiplied, so our praises of him should increase.

Vers. 35. Now will I praise the Lord: She had praised the Lord before, at the birth of Reuben, The Lord hath looked upon my tribulation: and of Simeon, The Lord hath heard that I was hated: but now upon the occasion of a new benefit, she praiseth him againe: which teacheth us, that as Gods mercies are multiplied toward us, so we should increase and goe forward in giving of thanks: the Prophet saith, Sing unto the Lord a new song, Isay 42. 10. Calvin.

CHAP. XXX.

1. The Argument and Contents.

FIrst, in this chapter Moses sheweth how Iacob was increased with eight sonnes, partly by his wives maids, partly by his wives: by Rachels maid two, Dan and Nephthali, by Leahs two, vers. 9. to 14. then by his wives, first by Leah three, and a daughter expressed, since agreed with Rachel for her sonnes mandrakes, vers. 14. then by Rachel one, vers. 23. Secondly, how Iacob increased in substance: where Iacob entreth into covenant with Laban, to have all the party-coloured and spotted sheepe for his wages, to vers. 39. then Iacobs device is expressed, how the strongest sheepe were spotted, vers. 36. lastly, the good successe that Iacob had in this device, vers. 43.

3. The Explanation of doubtfull questions.

Quest. I. Whether Rachel envied her sister.

Vers. 1. Rachel envied her sister. 1. Some thinke that this was a kind of zeale, rather than envie, she grieved rather at her owne infecundity or barrennesse, than that her sister was fruitfull. Pererius. 2. But the text is evident, that shee envied her sister: shee was offended, that her sister was fruitfull and she barren. Neither is there any inconvenience to yeeld to those holy women their infirmities, they were not Angels, Mercer. chavah, signifieth both to envie, and strive with emulation or zeale.

Quest. II. Of Rachels impatient and immoderate desire of children.

Give me children or else I die. 1. She saith not so, as though Iacob of purpose had restrained his naturall force, as R. Levi. 2. Neither is it her meaning that Iacob should by his prayer obtaine children for her, as Isaack had done for Rebecca, for then Iacob would not have beene angry with her. Why did she thus say, as though she did not know that God was the giver of children, which she confesseth, vers. 6. God hath given sentence on my side. 4. But thus in her womanly heat she breaketh out, though the fault was in her husband, feeling she should otherwise die, either for griefe, or that she should be good be dead, as beare no children. Mercer. and that her name by this meanes should die with her. Pererius. 3. Three reasons made her so desirous of children. 1. That she might envy for her sisters happiness. 2. That she might be the more deare to her husband. 3. Because of the promised seed. Perer.

Quest. III. Of the causes of barrennesse.

Vers. 2. Iacob was angry and said, Am I in Gods stead, &c. 1. There are naturall causes of sterility or barrennesse either some originall defects in the birth, as some are borne unapt for generation, or else they come by diseases, sometime the constitution of the body is an impediment, as in fat bodies, where nature is turned into the nutriment of the body : Aristot. lib. 2. de generat. animal. c. 2. 2. There is a supernaturall cause of barrennesse, when it pleaseth God to restraine the wombe, as in the women of Abimelech house, Genes. 20. 18. Foure keyes he keepes and shuts all in Gods hand, which the Lord hath not committed to any other, either Angell or Seraphim : the key of raine, Deuter. 28. 12. The Lord shall open unto thee his good treasure, the heaven to give raine : the key of food, Psal. 104. 28. Thou openest thy hand and they are filled: the key of the wombe, the key of the grave, when the dead shall be raised: Perer. ex Tharg. Hierosolym. 3. Plato himselfe confesseth, that procreation was the gift of God : Quamvis in mortali animante fiat, vestamen divina est, & pregnans & genitura ab immortali Deo manat, though it be done in mortall creatures, yet it is a divine thing procured by an immortall power : Plat. in Symp. Procreation the gift and worke of God.

Quest. IV. In what sense Rachel said, She shall bow upon my knees.

She shall bow upon my knees. 1. Not as though Rachel should be her midwife or nurse, as Onkelos. 2. Or that by her example Rachel should the sooner conceive, as the Hebrewes. 3. But as it followeth, Rachel might have children by her maid, for the children of the bond-maids were counted as the dames: her meaning is, that she might dandle them upon her knees, and play with them as children with their children : so Isahs phrase taken, Isay 66. 12. then shall ye suckle, ye shall be borne upon her sides, and be joyfull upon her knees. Epiphanius doth fitly allegorize this saying of Rachel, lib. 7. in Genes. 36. as they which Bilha brought forth, were borne upon Rachels knees : sic qui per ecclesiæ evidentiæ audivit verbum, susceptus Ecclesiæ veræ confessionem fidei, & ita nihil differt à filiis : so he that hath heard the preaching of sincere teachers, holding the true faith of the Church, may differ nothing from the lawfull children of the Church, as the sonnes of Iacobs concubines received their inheritance, and had their lots among their brethren.

Quest.

Quest. IV. Whether Ruben brought unto his mother mandrakes.

Vers. 14. Give me of thy sonnes mandrakes, &c. 1. It is most like that they were rather a plant and sweet flowers, where with they used to strew their husbands bed, than that which is called mandrakes, for these reasons: 1. Ruben was now but a child of 5. or 6. yeares old, not above, (for he was borne in the beginning of the 7. last yeares) and therefore had no discretion to make choice of flowers for their vertue, but for their colour or smell. 2. It was now wheat harvest, the spring time, which in those countries was in the beginning of May, when the Mandrake apples are not ripe: for so the Septuagint read, Mandrake apples. 3. The Mandrakes have a strong smell, which the Arabians call Iabrochin of the ranke savour of goats: whereas these herbs called dudaim are commended for their sweet smell, Cant. 7. 13. The mandrakes have given a smell, and in our gates are all sweet things, Iun.

Mandrakes have a strong savour.

2. Whereas Augustine saith of the mandrakes, Rem comperi pulchram, & suaveolentem, saporem fœdum: I found them to be faire in show, sweet in smell, unsavoury in taste lib. 21. con. Faust. c. 56. he may speake of some kind of mandrakes, which grew in those hot countries in Africa, which might have a more fresh smell: but otherwise concerning the mandrakes knowne to us, Plinie a diligent searcher of the nature of herbes saith, Odor ejus gravis, sed radicis & malis gravior, vim sic noxiæ vires, gravedinem afferunt: The smell is very strong, specially of the root and apple: the force thereof very hurtfull: the very smell bringeth heavinesse, Plin. lib. 25. c. 13. Levinus Lemnius confirmeth this by experience, that by laying a mandrake apple in his studie, he became so drousie, that he could not shake it off till the apple was removed, lib. de herb.

Epiph. in philolog. c. 4. Mandrakes whether their vertue is to make women conceive.

3. Epiphanius thinketh that the mandrake inciteth and provoketh either man or woman to lust: and is held that they have vertue to cause women to conceive: and that Rachel desired them for that end. 1. But Augustine refuseth this reason, because Rachel notwithstanding her mandrakes, conceived not. 2. Neither would Leah, having now ceased to beare, have given them away if they had any such vertue, Mercer. 3. Galen saith, that Mandragoras is cold in the third degree, lib. 7. simplicium Medicamentorum, therefore it is unapt for conception. 4. Methiolus therefore saith it is a fable, that the root of Mandrake representeth the shape of a man, and is good to make women to conceive, and thinketh that such as are bearing such a shape, are made by art of coseners that goe about to deceive, ex Pario.

Of the description of mandragoras.

4. Concerning the fashion and kinde of this herbe, R. David saith, that there are two sorts of them, the white is the male, the blacke the female: in them both three parts are most notable, the leaves, fruit, and root: Dioscorides saith, that the leaves of the female are somewhat lesse than lettice, and greene and of a strong smell: the leaves of the male are bigger, and of a white colour: the apple of the female as big as an hasle nut, like to fruit of the service tree, of wan colour, of the male the same as bigge againe, of a saffron colour: the root is twofold, sometimes threefold, winding one within another, blacke without, white within, Dioscor. lib. 4. c. 61. Pythagoras called it anthropomorphon, because it perfectly representeth a mans shape, but hath some semblance of the trunk of a mans body without armes, Methiolus.

The vertue & operation of Mandrakes.

5. The properties of the Mandragoras are these: 1. By reason of the coldnesse thereof, it casteth into a dead sleepe that eat or smell thereof: and therefore Physitians use it, when they cut or sear, to stupifie the sense. 2. If it be taken in the weight of a dram, it depriveth of the use of reason, Dios. 3. It is drunke against the venome of serpents, Plin. lib. 25. c. 13. 4. The seed thereof is good to put in the place of conception, and to stay the immoderate flux of the monethly course: and therefore it may accidens helpe toward conception, especially in fervent climates and hot countries, Renr. ex Lemnio.

6. Some thinke then that these flowers were mandrakes, which is not like, as is shewed before: some take them to be lilies, as Oleaster, some for violets, as Ortelius: some for inchanted or love-herbes: but Rachel would not use any such: It is uncertaine what flowers they were, Mercer. It is more probable that they were amabiles flores, amiable and lovely flowers both for smell and sight, as Iunius, and the word dudaim well answereth thereto, being derived of dadah, beloved.

Quest. V. Whether Iacobs wives gave the children their names.

Vers. 20. She called his name Zebulun. 1. Some thinke that Iacob gave the names and not his wives, Iun. Genes. 29. 35. 2. Some, that Iacob knowing his wives to have the gifts of prophecie, as may appeare by the event, that answered to these names, in the severall blessings given unto them, Gen. 49. did suffer his wives to give them names. 3. But it is most like that Iacob consented with them in imposing of these names, Mercer.

Quest. VI. Of Dinah, whence she was named, and when borne.

Vers. 21. After that she bare a daughter, &c. 1. Some thinke that Iacob had other daughters besides Dinah, but that is not like, seeing no mention is made but onely of Dinah, Calvin. 2. Her name signifieth iudgement or contention, which name might be given to Dinah, because of the contention which fell out with the Sichemites by reason of her, Mercer. 3. But whether this Dinah were Iacobs wife is uncertaine, and whereas the Hebrewes imagine, that this Dinah and Zebulun were borne at once, and that Dinah in her mothers wombe was a male, that at the prayer of Leah who pitied her sister Rachel, which as yet had borne no children at all, lest she should have been fied: these are but idle and fabulous fansies, wherein these blinde Rabbines are so much exercised. 4. This Dinah was borne next before Ioseph: whom some affirme to have beene borne before Gad, Asser, Issachar, Zebulun, Dinah: But the course of the story will not beare it, for betweene Ioseph and Benjamin, Iacob had not any of his children borne.

Hebrewes fables.

Quest. VII. Of the time of Ioseph's birth and age.

Vers. 25. As soone as Rachel had borne Ioseph, &c. 1. Hence it is evident, that Ioseph was borne in the end of Iacobs 14. yeares service, for immediately upon the birth of Ioseph, Iacob consulted with Laban about his departure; but after this Iacob covenanteth to serve six yeares longer for his sheep, Gen. 31. 41. these 14. yeares before the birth of Ioseph some would have to prefigure those 14. yeares which Ioseph indured in Egypt, before he was exalted: for he was sixteen yeare old when he was sold into Egypt, 30. yeares old when he stood before Pharao, Mercer. 2. Upon this account of Iosephs age, it further is collected, that Ioseph was 39. when Iacob was 130. for Ioseph was 30. when he came before Pharao, Gen. 41. 46. then passed seven yeares of plenty, and two yeares of dearth, Genes. 45. 11. when Iacob came downe into Egypt, who was then 130. yeares old, Genes. 47. 9. If Iacob were 130. at Iosephs 49. then when Ioseph was borne, Iacob was 91. then 14. yeare before that, when Iacob went downe into Mesopotamia, he must be 77. and 7. yeares after, when he married his wives, he was 84. thirteene yeares after that when he had served 7. yeares more for his wives, and six for his sheepe, he was 97. yeares old, Perer.

Quest. VIII. Laban whether he be divined of Iacob.

Vers. 27. I have found by experience. 1. The word is nachesh, which the Septuagint translate, I have conjectured, oemisamen, as Augures use to doe, and this kinde of conjecture was made by serpents: nachesh with double camets, is a serpent, with double patach, it signifieth the conjecture made by serpents. 2. But this word also signifieth to know or learne by experience, as it is used, Gen. 44. 5. Ioseph by his drinking cup, found in the mouth of Benjamins sacke, had experience of them, as his steward saith. 3. Therefore Theodorets observation is here unnecessary, that Moses setteth downe, verba impiorum, the words of the wicked, as they spake them, as here Labans divination, as though he had divined by his idols. 4. As also hee giveth the like instance of Leah, that she should use the prophane word of fortune, verse 11. saying good lucke, ghad: which some take for Iupiters starre, some for Mercurie, or Mars, alledging that place, Isa. 65. 11. They furnish their drinke offerings to Gad: where it is more fitly translated a number, as the other clause sheweth, they have prepared a table for the multitude: and so is it to be taken here, a number commeth: 1. for so the name Gad answereth to Iacobs prophecie, Gen. 49. 19. Gad, gedudh: Gad, an army shall overcome him, &c. he is therefore called Gad, because Leah saw an army of children was comming, as Leah imputeth the procreation of her children to the Lords blessing, Gen. 29. 32, 33. therefore she was far off from imputing it to fortune, or to the stars, much lesse to give her child a superstitious and idolatrous name, which Iacob would not have suffered, Calvin.

Leah doth not name her son Gad of fortune.

Quest. IX. How Laban blessed at Iacobs feet.

Vers. 30. The Lord hath blessed thee by my comming. The Hebrew phrase is, at my feet. 1. which is not understood of Iacob going and comming about his businesse, but of his comming to Labans house, since which time God blessed him. 2. Some thinke that Iacob meaneth, that since his comming God had given Laban sonnes, whereas hee had none before, because Rachel kept his sheepe, Mercer. it may well bee that in fourteene yeares space Laban might also be increased with sonnes, which are mentioned afterwards, Gen. 31. 1. but Iacob meaneth the increase of Labans wealth: the little which thou haddest is increased, &c. 3. Hence was taken up that proverb used in Africa: homo boni pedis, a man of a good foot, that is, whose comming is prosperous, who in the African language was called Namphanio: which name was given to a famous Martyr of Africa, derided by one Maximus a Grammarian, but defended by Augustine, epist. 44. Si vocabulum interpretamur, non aliud significat, quam hominem boni pedis; If we interpret the name, it signifieth nothing else but a man of a good foot. 4. Rupertus fitly applyeth this to Christ, shewing how that ad Christi introitum divites effectus est mundus, the whole world was enriched and blessed at the comming of Christ, Perer.

Quest. X. What kinde of colours the sheepe were of which were sorted out for Iacob.

Vers. 32. Separate thou all the sheepe with little spots, &c. 1. There are three words used to expresse the party-coloured cattle, that should fall to Iacobs share; naqued, which signifieth that which is marked with small spots, and therefore it is expressed by another word, baraadh, Gen. 31. 10. spotted with haile or ashes. The Septuagint translate in both places, varia, dispersed or sprinkled with spots. The other word is talu, that which is marked with great spots, as Iosh. 9. 5. the same word is used to signifie peeced or clouted shoes: which where they are worne, are mended with patches, Mercer. to this kinde of great spotted, belongeth gnaracadh, used vers. 35. spotted in the binding places or legges, for gnacadh, and naqued, are compared together, Genes. 31. 8. Therefore Olaster is deceived that taketh naqued for the great spotted, talu for the lesse spotted: this word talu, vers. 35. is translated by the 70. melanopoikilon, whitish, where there are white markes, as is expressed, vers. 35. The third word is chum, not blacke as some read, for they belonged to Laban, nonnul. or yellowish, but rather browne, as of a foot-colour; which is caused by smoake and heat, for so chum signifieth heate: the 70. read melan: all the sheepe and goats then either sprinkled, or ring-streaked, or of a duskish colour, were separated for Iacob, Mercer. 2. The Iacob hath not only the parti-coloured goats but sheep also.

2. The Septuagint reade so, as though they which were parti-coloured among the goats onely should be his reward: but the 35. verse maketh the matter plaine, that the meaning is, that the spotted both among the goats and sheepe should be Iacobs part, Pererius.

3. Neither must these three colours be restrained, as though the darke or browne colour belonged to the lambs, the small and little spotted to the goats, as may seeme to be gathered out of the 32. verse: but the meaning is, that all either lambs, or goats of any of those colours should be divided from the rest: but the browne colour is given to the lambes as most usuall among them, the spotted to the goats for the same reason, Mercer.

Most particoloured sheepe in Palestine.

4. Herein appeareth Gods providence toward Iacob, that whereas the white and blacke sheepe were most set by in Mesopotamia, the particoloured in Palestina, (and therefore the shepherds are called Nechodim, Amos 1. 1. that is, keepers of spotted cattell, Mercer.) it so falleth out that Iacob being to returne into Canaan, is increased with that kinde of sheepe, Perer.

5. Concerning other greater cattell, Iacob also was very rich in them: he had camels and asses, verse 43. yet those he had not from Laban in this bargaine, neither had he charge but only of the smaller cattell: these of the greater sort Iacob had by his owne purchase, and exchange for smaller cattell, Perer.

Quest. XI. How Iacobs righteousnesse answereth for him.

Vers. 33. My righteousnesse shall answer, or testifie for me to morrow, or hereafter, &c. 1. As yesterday is taken for the time past, Gen. 31. 2. so to morrow is used for the time to come, a part for the whole: as the Apostle saith, Iesus Christ, yester day, and to day, and the same for ever. 2. Some refer the words following to justice, when it shall come for my reward before thee, Calvin. But the better meaning is in the second person, when thou shalt come to my reward, that is, to see and examine it: and the words before thee, must be joyned with the first clause: my righteousnesse shall answer for me, before thee, Mercer. Iun. 3. He speaketh not of his righteousnesse in generall for the time past, but in this particular, for the time to come, as it followeth in this verse, that if he found any thing with Iacob, but particoloured according to the agreement, he should count it as theft. 4. And Iacob doth as it were answer a secret objection: it may seeme improbable, that whereas the cattell of one colour are given mee to keepe, they should bring forth particoloured: God that seeth my justice and innocency, shall give sentence on my side by an extraordinary blessing, Muscul. 5. Iacob doth not absolutely stand upon his justice before God, but onely urgeth his innocency and faithfulnesse, in his service toward Laban. In like manner David cleareth himselfe; Iudge me O Lord according to my innocency, &c. Psal. 7. 8. Muscul. Pon.

Quest. XII. Whether Iacob dealt fraudulently with Laban, concerning his particoloured sheepe.

But whereas Iacob saith, my righteousnesse shall make answer for mee, it may be questioned, whether this were a plaine and just part in Iacob, by the device of the pilled and straked rods, to deceive Laban and inrich himselfe? the solution of which question is this: 1. That Iacob did not this of his owne head, but by Gods direction, Genes. 31. 10. But who knoweth not that God being Lord of all, may transferre the right of things from one to another, where no other inferior title or property is challenged: as God gave the land of the Canaanites the ancient possessors thereof, to the Israelites, Calvin. Mercer. 2. Iacob by this meanes doth recover but his owne, which was due unto him in a double right, both in respect of his 20. yeares service, all which time he served without wages: so Iacob saith, yee know that I have served your father with all my might, but your father hath deceived mee, and changed my wages ten times, Gen. 31. 6, 7. As also in regard of his wives dowry, which complaine of their father hardnesse: have we any more portion or inheritance in our fathers house, doth he not count us as strangers, hath he sold us? &c. therefore all the riches which God hath taken from our father is ours and our children's, Gen. 31. 14, 16. It is lawfull therefore for one by his cunning and industry to recover his goods, which he cannot otherwise get, especially Gods direction concurring withall: as the Israelites borrowed of the Egyptians their best things, which were but a due recompence for their long service. 3. The saying is, volenti non fit injuria, a wrong is not done to him that is willing withall. It was thus agreed betweene Laban and Iacob: and Laban tractatus est prosue ingenio, Laban is handled in his kinde, Calvin. for hee thought by this meanes to have gained to himselfe, and to have sent away Iacob with nothing: and it was a thing very unlikely, that sheepe all of one colour (such as Iacob onely had in his keeping) should bring forth particoloured. 4. The meanes which Iacob used, was not artificiall or fraudulent, but naturall, not depending of mans skill, but Gods blessing: therefore Iacob chooseth that for his wages, which not by mans wit, but Gods working was to take effect, Mercer. Thus the author of this device, Iacobs righteousnesse, Labans covetous and cousening minde, and the meanes being laid together, will cleare Iacob in action of fraudulent and unjust dealing.

Quest. XIII. Of the corrupt reading of the vulgar Latine.

Vers. 35. And all that had white in them, and all that had blacke, &c. The Latine text is here very corrupt, reading thus: all the sorts of one colour that is, of white and blacke, he delivered into the hands of his sonnes: which reading is contrary to the originall, that saith, the spotted onely with white or particoloured and the dunkish or blacke, were given to Labans sonnes to keep, and they which were of one colour to Iacob. 2. The Romanists would justifie their vulgar Latine, some understanding by Labans children, Iacobs sonnes, for they were Labans after a sort: but this cannot be, for Ruben Iacobs eldest sonne was not now above six yeares old, borne in the first yeare of the second seven: and therefore Iacobs

…n were not being ſo young fit to guide the flocks, Mercer. and beſide Laban might have thought …t the father and ſonnes might have conſpired to deceive him. 2. Wherefore Lyranus and Toſtatus, …liking this firſt ſolution have deviſed another, that this is underſtood not of the firſt diviſion of the …cks, when indeede none but the parti-coloured were committed to Labans ſonnes, but of the ſecond …ision, after that the eawes had lambes, when Laban came to view which were of one colour, which …diverſ, and then he tooke the whole coloured ſheep, as belonging to him, and gave them to the charge …his ſonnes. Contra. 1. It appeareth not, but that after the firſt ſeparation of the flocks, whereof ſome …re committed to Iacob, ſome to Labans children, all thoſe which were under Iacobs charge, together …th their increaſe, continued with Iacob ſtill, and he ſeparated the party coloured from the reſt, and the …e within view and ſight of the other, verſ. 40. whereas the flocks firſt divided were three daies jour… verſ. 36. 2. This diviſion mentioned, verſ. 35. was the very ſame day, wherein this agree… was made, and therefore it was the firſt, not the ſecond diviſion. 3. If this were admitted, then the …ebrew text ſhould be convinced of falſity, which readeth not, the flocks of one colour, but, all that had …ite ſtakes in them: that is, were ſpotted with white.

3. Wherefore we doubt not rather to refuſe the Latine tranſlation as corrupt and divers from the He…ew, and the Septuagint, with the Chalde in this place; and approove rather the judgement of …ſtinian, who giveth this cenſure of the Latine tranſlators: Scito prudens Lector, quod univerſa hac pars …rſus eſt ad finem capituli, apud latinum interpretem paraphraſis eſt, potius quam textus, &c. Vnderſtand …ſcreet reader, that all this part of the text to the end the Chapter, with the Latine interpreter, is …araphraſis rather than the text. And a little after he ſaith: Antiquus interpres, neſcitur, quo ſpiritu hac …ſummoverit: Wee cannot tell, with what ſpirit the old interpretor hath thus ſummed the text; Cu… in hunc locum. The Latine tranſlation refuſed of the Romans themſelves.

QVEST. XIV. Of the divers meanes which Iacob uſed to make the ſheepe to bring forth party-coloured.

Vers. 37. THen Iacob tooke rods, &c. Iacob uſed three induſtrious meanes to cauſe the ſheepe to bring forth partycoloured: 1. He uſeth pilled and ſtraked rods, and puttеth them in the wate…ing places, at ſuch time as the ſheepe were in heat, that is, in ramming time. Hierom ſheweth the cauſe: …x duplici deſiderio, dum avide bibunt, & aſcendunтur a maribus, tales fœtus conciperent, quales umbras …rum in aquarum ſpeculo contemplabantur, tradition. in Geneſ. That of a double deſire, while both …y, drinke greedily, and were coupled with the males, they might be conceived with ſuch young, as …y ſaw the ſhadowes of the rams in the water: for the coloured rods made alſo the ſhadow of the rams …appeare party-coloured. 2. Another policie which Iacob uſeth is ſet forth, verſ. 40. that he ſet the …rticoloured ſheep before, and Labans whole coloured ſheep behinde, and turned their face toward …e parti-coloured; but his owne ſheep that were of divers colours, he turned not toward Labans: and …is he did not alwayes, but in ramming time, that Labans ſheep by the ſight of the parti-coloured …ight bring forth like unto them: this is the right meaning of the verſe, which is corruptly tranſlated by …e Septuagint, and Latine: the Chalde alſo and Genevenſ. doe tranſpoſe theſe words, among the ſheep of …aban, and joyne them with the parti-coloured, &c. whereas there were none ſuch in Labans flocke: and …herefore this clauſe muſt be inſerted thus in the beginning of the ſentence, And turned the face of the …ep which were in the flocke of Laban, &c. as the Bil. tranſlation readeth, ſic Iun. Mercer. Vatabl.

3. Iacobs third device is expreſſed, verſ. 42. Iacob put the rods into the gutters onely, in the ram…ing time of the ſtronger ſheepe, that is in the firſt ſeaſon of their coupling, as Oukelos expoundeth, …hich is ſuppoſed to be in the ſpring, when the ſheep were lively and ſtrong, Muſcul. Mercer. Luther. The …eaker ſheepe conceived in the autumne, and then Iacob put not in the rods, not to deceive Laban, that …hen he came he ſhould not ſee them, as Kimbi thinketh, for Laban uſed not to come to take a view of …e ſheepe in ramming, but in lambing time: but Iacob uſed thus to doe, that Laban might have ſome in…reaſe of his colour, although by this meanes the ſtronger fell out to be Iacobs.

QVEST. XV. Whether Iacobs device were by miracle or by the workes of nature.

THis device of Iacob by the ſight of particoloured rods, to cauſe the eawes and goats to be conci…ved with young of the like colour. 1. Is neither to bee held altogether miraculous as Chryſoſtome …inketh, non erat juxta naturæ ordinem quod fiebat, &c. it was not according to the courſe of nature that …as done, but miraculous and beyond natures worke, hom. 57. in Geneſ. much leſſe doe we receive the …ridiculous conceit of one Hoſaias an Hebrew, that the eawes conceived alone without the males, by the …ght only of the rods in the water, ex Mercer. 2. Neither do we aſcribe this altogether to the work of na…re, although the cogitation and conceit of the minde be very much in the forming of ſhapes, and there…re as Plinie noteth, plures in homine quam in cæteris animalibus differentiæ, there are more diverſities of …apes among men, than bruit beaſts, becauſe of the variety of their conceits, lib. 7. c. 12. Galen writeth of a …oman, that by beholding of a faire picture, by a deformed husband had a faire childe, libr. de theriaca. …elius writeth of a Queene that upon the like conceit brought forth an Æthiopian. Hypocrates ma…e mention of a woman that being delivered of a beautifull childe, much unlike both the parents, ſhould …ve beene condemned of adultery, but was freed by a learned Phyſitian that imputed it to a picture, …ich ſhe had in her ſight, ex Peter. The Hebrews report of an Æthiopian that had a faire child, and a Ra… being asked the reaſon thereof, ſhewed the cauſe to be a white table that was in her ſight, at the time …f conceiving. The like report is, that a woman brought forth a mouſe, becauſe a mouſe chanced to run be…re her, when ſhe was with childe, Mercer. The like operation hath the object of the ſight in bruit beaſts for Strange births procured by the conceit and fancie of the minde.

for this cauſe, the faſhion is in Spaine to ſet before the mares when they are horſed, the moſt good beaſts of that kinde, Muſcul. The like practice is uſed by the Dove-maſters, that they may have a breed of faire pigeons, Iſydor. libr. 12. Etimolog. Although then that nature had her worke, yet we cannot ſay that nature wholly did it. 3. Wherefore God wrought here together with nature, and that after an extraordinary manner: firſt, becauſe this deviſe was revealed vnto Iacob by the Angell of God in a dreame, Geneſ. 31. 11. Secondly God gave a rare effect to this deviſe that it failed not, whereas if it had beene according to the ordinary worke of nature, there might have beene ſome charge and alteration: and it is well noted by Valetius: that both the male and female concurred in the ſame imagination and fantaſie of the parti-coloured, which was the cauſe that they alwaies brought forth of the ſame colour. lib. de ſacr. philoſ. c. 11.

QUEST. XVI. Of the naturall reaſon why the imagination ſhould be ſo ſtrong to worke upon the body.

NOw further, that we may ſee the naturall reaſon, why that Iacobs ſheepe brought forth parti-coloured. 1. That ſheepe by drinking of certaine waters, doe change the colour of their wooll, Ariſtotle maketh mention: as there is a River in Aſſyria called Pſychrus, of that coldneſſe, which maketh the ſheepe that drinke thereof to yeane blacke lambs: in Arcandria there are two rivers, the one maketh the ſheepe white, the other blacke: the river Scamander doth dye them yellow. Ariſtot. lib. hiſtor. animal. c. 12. But this alteration is cauſed by the matter and quality of the water being received and drunke, whereas Iacobs ſheepe conceived by the very ſight. 2. The phantaſie and affection is ſtrong to worke upon it owne body, ſometime upon another: children have beene bewitched by the malitious ſight of thoſe that have intended them hurt, ſome by immoderate joy have preſently dyed, as Philippides the Comicall Poet, for his unexpected victory of his fellow Poets: and a woman for the returne of her ſonne, whom ſhee ſuppoſed to have beene ſlaine in the warres, in the extremity of joy ended her life as the Romane hiſtories teſtifie: hence it is that the very ſight of that, which goeth against the ſtomacke procureth vomit, ſome by the ſeeing of others bloud have ſounded: others for feare looking downe from a ſteepe place have tumbled downe, they which are ſtrucken with ſudden feare doe looke pale in their face, their hands tremble, their voyce is taken away, and all the body is diſtempered: this is the operation of the conceit of parents in the conception of their children, which cauſeth ſuch variety of ſhapes, of colour, geſture, ex Marſil. ficin. lib. 13. de Platon. Theolog. cap. 1. 3. As we ſee by experience that the imagination of the minde doth bring forth ſuch effects in the body, ſo the reaſons thereof may be yeelded to be theſe. 1. The power and dominion, which the ſoule hath over the body, the one being moover and ſtirrer, the other the thing mooved: the ſoule is to the body as the workeman to his worke which he frameth and faſhioneth according to the idea, and conceit of the mind, and ſo it is in the conception and generation of children, Teſta. q. 10. in c. 30. 2. Another reaſon may be taken from the nature and property of imagination, Imaginari non eſt neque animi, neque corporis, ſed conjuncti, to imagine not proper to the ſoule or body apart, but to them both together, as the reſt of the affections of love, hatred and the like are: the mind then is like to that which it imagineth, and the body with the phantaſie begetteth that which is like to it ſelfe, ſo it commeth to paſſe, that the likeneſſe, which the phantaſie imagineth the body begetteth, Valleſ. 3. A third reaſon is, from the nature and power of the ſeed, which as it floweth from all the parts of the body, and therefore worketh materially the ſimilitude of the ſame parts, ſo alſo is it procured by the minde and phantaſie and therefore expreſſeth alſo that quality at the birth, which was in the minde from whom it was ſent, Perer. ex Valleſ.

The force and power of the affections.

4. Places of Doctrine.

Doct. 1. Abrahams ſeed begotten by the power of God.

Verſ. 21. GOd opened her womb, &c. In that God made Leah and Rachel fruitfull, of whom came the promiſed ſeed, it ſheweth that it was not the worke of nature, but the gift of God, Muſcul. And as Abrahams carnall ſeed was propagated by God, ſo much more the Spirituall which are borne, not of bloud, nor of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man, but of God, Iohn 1. 13.

Doct. 2. The children of the barren wombe moſt excellent.

Verſ. 24. SHe called his name Ioſeph: as the children of the barren are noted in Scripture to have been moſt excellent, as Iſaack of Sarah, Ioſeph of Rachel, Samuel of Anna, Iohn Baptiſt of Elizabeth, Muſcul. ſo alſo they which have beene begotten of ſpirituall barrenneſſe, that is converted from a ſinfull life, have prooved moſt excellent inſtruments, as Zacheus, Luke 19. and S. Paul of a perſecutor made an Apoſtle.

Doct. 3. Wives not to be married without conſent of parents.

Verſ. 26. GIve me my wives and children, &c. They were already Iacobs wives and children, yet he craveth leave of his father in law that he may peaceably depart with them: this condemneth their preposterous courſe, that adventure to take away mens daughters, and make them their wives againſt the minde and without the conſent of their parents, Muſcul. whereas the Apoſtle leaveth the diſpoſing of the virgin in mariage, wholy to the diſpoſition of the father, 1 Cor. 7. 38.

Doct.

4. Doct. The house of God must be provided for by tithes and other revenues.

Vers. 30. When shall I travell for mine house also? As Iacob first served Laban for nought, contenting himselfe with the marriage of Leah and Rachel, but afterward hee expected wages, to provide for his house: so Rupertus doth fitly allegorize this place: at the first the Apostles preached the Gospell freely to win unto Christ Leah of the Iewes, and Rachel of the Gentiles: But now it is the ordinance of Christ, that as Laban provided for Iacobs house, so the Church by the care of Christian magistrates should bee endowed with tithes and revenues for the maintenance thereof: as the Apostle saith, The Lord hath ordained that they which preach the Gospell, should live of the Gospell, 1 Cor. 9. 14.

5. Doct. Married persons must take heed of brutish fantasies.

Vers. 37. Then he put the rods which he had pilled, &c. Seeing that the fantasie of the mind, procured by the object of the sight, or some other cogitation, in the time of conception, is of such force to fashion the birth: it becommeth men and women, not to come together with bestiall appetites, and unclean imaginations, (for by such meanes, monstrous & mishapen births are often procured) but then chiefly to have holy thoughts, and cleane cogitations, Mercer. And that then most of all they may fulfill that saying of the Apostle: That husbands dwell with their wives as men of knowledge, 1 Pet. 3. 7.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Against the invocation of Saints.

Vers. 2. Am I in Gods stead, &c. Iacob thus answering Rachel, that called to him, to give her children, as though hee were God, may sufficiently confute the blindnesse of all those which invocate Saints, and call upon them for helpe: We may verily think, that if God so thought good, that they should make answer, they would say as Iacob did to Rachel, Are we in Gods stead? Muscul. And as our Saviour said to the Iewes, There is one which accuseth you, even Moses, in whom ye trust, Ioh. 5. 45. so the Saints, whom the Romanists superstitiously worship, will be their accusers.

2. Confut. Against the slander of the Manichees.

Vers. 16. I have bought thee with my sonnes mandrakes: Faustus that wicked Manichee hereupon taketh occasion to open his blasphemous mouth, habuisse inter se velut quatuor scorta certamen, quam eorum ad concubitum raperet: that Iacobs wives as foure strumpets did strive betweene themselves who should lye with him: Augustine here answereth, 1. Nulla ancillarum virum ab altera rapuit: none of them did seek to have their husband from another: but Iacob kept his turnes, and observed an order, when to goe in to his wives: for what need the one to have hired out the other, Vt si ardo esset alterius, &c. If it had not been so, &c. 2. Ipsas feminas nihil aliud in concubitu appetisse, &c. It is certaine that these women coveted nothing else but children, in companying with their husbands, and therefore being barren themselves, or willing to beate, they substituted their maids. 3. Si concupiscentiæ, non justitiæ fuisset servus Iacob, nonne per omnem diem in voluptatem illius noctis æstuasset, &c. If Iacob had not beene a servant of justice, rather than of his owne concupiscence, he would all the day long have thought upon the pleasure of that night, when he was to lodge with the same: this sheweth then, that Iacob being content to change the course, and to goe in to her, which was lesse loved, was not a man given to fleshly concupiscence, but only sought the propagation of his seed: sic August. lib. 22. cont. Faust. c. 18.

6. Morall Observations.

1. Observ. To preferre the glory of God before love of wife and children, &c.

Vers. 2. Iacobs anger was kindled against Rachel. Though Iacob loved Rachel well, yet when hee seeth Gods glory to be hindred, he forbeareth her not, but is incensed against her, which teacheth us, that we ought to preferre the glory of God before the love of parents, wife, or children, Mercer. As our Saviour saith, If any man come unto me, and hate not his father, mother, wife, children, &c. he cannot be my Disciple, Luke 14. 26.

2. Observ. Not to rejoyce in evill.

Vers. 18. God hath given mee my reward, because I gave my maid to my husband, &c. Although Leah gave her maid to her husband of a good intention, only for procreation, yet because it was with lust and prophanation of holy matrimony, which God had ordained, shee offended rather therein, than was to expect a reward. Thus many times men flatter themselves in their sinnes, and thinke that they are rewarded of God, when they doe evill, Calvin. As Micah having made him house-gods, and entertained a Levite, thus vaunted himselfe: Now I know the Lord will be good unto me, because I have a Levite to my Priest, Iud. 17. 13.

3. Obſerv. Continency in marriage.

Verſ. 16. AND Leah ſaid, come in to me, &c. Both Iacobs continency here appeareth, that did not giue himſelfe to carnall appetite, without moderation, but obſerved certaine times, when he paid his debt unto his wives, Perer. As alſo the modeſty of thoſe matrons is manifeſt herein, who offered themſelves to goe in to their husband, but expected till he came in to them: Muſcul. This is that which the Apoſtle ſaith, That every one ſhould know how to poſſeſſe his veſſell in holineſſe and honour, not in the luſt of concupiſcence, 1 Theſſal. 4. 5.

4. Obſerv. The time appointed of God, not to be prevented.

Verſ. 26. GIVE my wives and my children, &c. Iacob though he knew, that he was to returne into his countrey, yet preventeth the time which God had appointed, for hee yet ſtayed ſix yeares longer: ſo many times the children of God through their haſte, doe run before the time which God hath ſet: as Moſes being ordained to be the deliverer of Iſrael, yet ſhewing himſelfe before his time, was conſtrained to ſave himſelfe by flying, Mercer.

5. Obſerv. Choyce to be made of good ſervants.

Verſ. 27. I Perceive the Lord hath bleſſed me for thy ſake. Thus alſo was Potiphars houſe bleſſed becauſe of Ioſeph, Gen. 39. 3. Maſters therefore ſhould have a ſpeciall care to make choyce of godly ſervants, that God may bleſſe the worke under their hands, Perer.

CHAP. XXXI.

1. The Contents.

IN this Chapter, firſt we have Iacobs departure from Laban, with his wives, and children and cattell: where wee have, 1. The occaſion that moved Iacob, the murmuring of Labans ſonnes, and change of Labans countenance, verſ. 1, 2. 2. The Commandement of God for Iacobs departure, verſ. 3. 3. Iacobs conſultation with his wives: firſt he maketh report of his faithfull ſervice, verſ. 6. Labans churliſh dealing, verſ. 7, 8. of Gods bleſſing, verſ. 10. to verſ. 14. then his wives give their conſent, verſ. 14. to 15. 4. Iacob departeth, he and his, verſ. 17. to 22.

Secondly, there is deſcribed Labans purſuit, and expoſtulation with Iacob: where is ſet forth Labans accuſation, and Iacobs recrimination. 1. Laban accuſeth Iacob of two things, the ſecret carrying away of his daughters, verſ. 26, 27. the ſtealing away of his gods, verſ. 30. Iacob defendeth himſelfe, in ſhewing the cauſe why he went away ſecretly, verſ. 31. in giving Laban leave to ſearch for his gods, which he did, but findeth them not, by reaſon of Rachels excuſe, to verſ. 36. 2. Iacob againe accuſeth Laban for his hard dealing, making profeſſion of his great travell and faithfull ſervice, and Gods bleſſing, to 42. then Laban yeeldeth himſelfe, verſ. 43.

Thirdly, there is declared in this Chapter, how Iacob and Laban make a covenant together: 1. The covenant it ſelfe is expreſſed, verſ. 49. to 52. 2. The ratification of it of each ſide by an oath, and ceremonie. Laban ſweareth by the God of Nahor, 53. and together with Iacob, maketh an heape of ſtones, verſ. 48. Iacob ſweareth by the feare of his father Iſaack, 53. and offereth ſacrifice, verſ. 54, 55.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

Quest. I. How Laban had changed Iacobs wages ten times.

Gen. 7. HE hath changed my wages ten times. 1. Neither Cajetans exposition is to bee received, that his wages was not so often changed, but it is (saith he) an hyperbolicall speech: for where the words may be taken properly, what need a figure to be admitted? 2. Rasi is in the other extreme, who taketh the word monim, here used, for ten peeces of coine, so that he would have his wages changed ten times ten times, that is, an hundred times. 3. Hierome taketh it literally, and so doth Augustine, that he was conceived twice every yeare, for the five last, the first not counted, because twice in every yeare in Italy, and twice in Mesopotamia, the Ewes have young: as Hierome alleageth out of Virgil; bis gravida pecudes, bis tonsis cadit agnus oviles, twice with young. 4. The Septuag. read, for ten times or turnes, ten lambs: which Augustine would follow, because a lamb may be taken for the lambing time: as arista, an eare of corne, is taken for harvest: and so their meaning should be, that Iacob was deceived ten lambing times, q. 95. in Genes. But it is more likely that the Septuag. translated the word monim, μνᾶν, money: which by the Scribes, was made ἀμνᾶν, by the addition of one letter: ex Mercer. 5. Wherefore I rather thinke, that here a certaine number is taken for an uncertaine: that neither lesse than ten times Iacob was deceived, nor yet just so many times: but that he was very often beguiled at Labans hand: as the Lord saith, That the Israelites had tempted him ten times, Num. 14. 22. and Iob complaineth of his friends, that they had ten times reproved him, Iob 19. 2. that is, often. Mercer.

Quest. II. Whence Iacob had his first particoloured goats that he saw in a dreame.

Gen. 12. SEe all the he goats leaping upon the she goats, that are particoloured, &c. That are particoloured, must be referred to the he goats, not to the females, because gnacedim is of the masculine gender: this difference is well observed by the Greeke and Latine translators, Iun. Mercer. and therefore our English translations are herein faulty, that apply it to the she goats. But here the question is, from whence Iacob had these particoloured goats, that leaped upon the females: 1. Neither had Iacob these particoloured by miracle, as the Hebrewes affirme, that an Angell brought them from Labans flocke. 2. Neither did he borrow them of other shepherds, for that had beene a fraud. 3. Neither did he put his owne particoloured, after they were increased, to Labans white cattell: for then he needed not to have used the device of rods, and beside it had beene a fraud. 4. Nor yet are they called particoloured, because they so appeared in the water, while they leaped upon the ewes, by reason of the pide and straked rods that were in the gutters: 5 Nor yet are they so named in respect of the issue and effect, because they had particoloured lambs, as if the rams that leaped the sheepe had beene of that colour, as Mercer. 6. But this vision is to be referred to the beginning of this particoloured breed, but at once sheweth to Iacob the great store of them like to be, that he should have particoloured both male and female of his owne, in such abundance, that they should ingender among themselves, and grow into flocks.

QUEST. III. Whether it were an Angell that ſpake unto Iacob in Bethel.

Verſ. 13. I Am the God of Bethel, &c. 1. Theſe two viſions, though reported together to Iacobs wives, yet were not ſhewed at once to Iacob, but at ſundry times: the one concerning the partition of cattell, 6. yeares before: but the other for his returne, in the end of the 6. yeare, immediately before departure from Laban, verſ. 3. Mercer. 2. This Angell was not any miniſtring Spirit, which ſpake in the name of God, as ſome thinke, Mer. 3. But it was Chriſt himſelfe, for here hee is called the God of Bethel, and in that viſion, beſide the Angels aſcending and deſcending, the Lord himſelfe ſtood at the top of the ladder, who ſpake to Iacob: Chriſt Jeſus then was the great Angell of Gods preſence, that appeared before to Iacob in Bethel, and now againe ſpeaketh to him in viſion.

QUEST. IV. Why Rachel is ſet before Leah, and ſpeaketh firſt.

Verſ. 14. THen anſwered Rachel and Leah: 1. Rachel is named before Leah, as before, verſ. 4. becauſe ſhe was Iacobs principall wife, the chiefe matron of the houſe; Leah was thruſt upon him undeſired: for this cauſe afterward in the forme of bleſſing, which they uſed toward Ruth, Rachel is preferred before Leah, even by the Bethlemites, that came of Iudah, of Leah, Ruth 4. 11. 2. Hebrewes note this as a preſumptuous part in Rachel to ſpeak before her elder ſiſter, and therefore they ſay, ſhe died for it: but the truth is, the ſingular number is here uſed for the plurall: and this anſwer, though it might be made by Rachel, was with the conſent of both. 3. In that they ſay, All the riches which God hath taken, &c. ours and our childrens, they doe ſomewhat obſcure Gods bleſſing, as though God had given them but their due, in as much as they being Labans daughters, together with their children, had intereſt in his goods. Calvin. Mercer.

QUEST. V. Of the reaſons that made Iacobs wives willing to depart.

Verſ. 14. HAve we any more portion? &c. Iacobs wives uſe foure reaſons of their willingneſſe to depart, three domeſticall, and one divine. 1. Becauſe they looked now for no more portion in their fathers houſe, than that which they had gotten, they had no reaſon to ſtay any longer: they ſay not, as ſome read, Have we not yet any portion? &c. for they had a great part by Gods providence out of their fathers ſubſtance, as they confeſſe, verſ. 16. 2. He hath ſold us: he hath beene unkind to us, ſetting us forth with no dowry, but ſelling us for 14. yeares ſervice, and making a gaine and advantage thereof to himſelfe. 3. They ſay, Should he ſtill eat up our money? that is, ſhould we remaine here ſtill, and ſuffer him to devour our ſubſtance? ſome doe otherwiſe read, And hath eaten up our money, referring it to the time paſt, whereas he had ſold them, for Iacobs ſervice, the price or money, that is, Iacobs labour he took to himſelfe. Mercer. But the other reading is better: which the particle gam, etiam, alſo, doth imply: ſhould hee yet ſtill, devoure, &c. 4. The divine reaſon, which they uſe, is from the Commandement of God, verſ. 16. Whatſoever God hath ſaid unto thee, doe it.

QUEST. VI. What the teraphim were which Rachel ſtole from Laban.

Verſ. 19. RAchel ſtole her fathers idols: the word is teraphim: 1. Some by theſe teraphim, underſtand the Prieſtly ornaments and implements that belong to ſacrificing: becauſe Oſe 3. 4. the Prophet ſaith, the children of Iſrael ſhall remaine a long time without Ephod and Teraphim: Hieron. q. 113. ad Marcel. But in this place the Prophet ſheweth, that the children ſhall bee without any forme of Church or common-wealth, even ſuch, as when it was deformed with teraphim, worſhip of idols, &c. 2. Some thinke that the teraphim were other pictures and reſemblances, than of men, as Aquila tranſlateth them, morphomata, figures, ſhapes: but that teraphim had an humane ſhape, appeareth, 1 Sam. 19. where Michol put an image in the bed, in ſtead of David. 3. Some thinke that the teraphim, was made of the head of the firſt borne child, which was embawmed and ſo kept, from the which by the working of the devill they received anſwers, Lyran. But if teraphim had beene ſuch a thing, it is not like Rachel would have ſtollen it away. 4. Some thinke that they were certaine images, which they conſecrated for divination, from whence they received anſwers, R. Kimhi: and they did repreſent the head of a man, made of ſome kind of metall: ſuch a head Albertus Magnus had, which Thomas Aquinas his ſcholler brake, Toſta. hereupon they derive the word from the roor, raphaph, which ſignifieth, remiſſe, weake, becauſe the oracles which they gave, were many times uncertaine and falſe. It is true, that ſome teraphim were uſed for this purpoſe to conſult withall: as Zachar. 10. 2. The teraphim have ſpoken vanity: but yet all were not ſo uſed, as the teraphim which was in Davids houſe. 5. And yet upon this example it cannot bee gathered, that there were ſome teraphim, which were not idols: as Ramban inferreth, and Perer. numer. 4. for although David himſelfe were farre from idolatry, and idols in Sauls time were publikely removed, yet there might be ſome reliques of ſuperſtition privately remaining: and this in Davids houſe might bee ſecretly kept by Michol without Davids knowledge, or it was as an implement not regarded, Mercer. 6. Wherefore it is moſt like, that theſe teraphim did reſemble an humane ſhape, and that they were conſecrated to ſuperſtitious uſes, as thoſe idols of Laban were, which he therefore afterward called his gods, verſ. 30.

QUEST. VII. Wherefore Rachel ſtole away her fathers idols.

IT is further queſtioned, wherefore Rachel ſtole away Labans idols. 1. Not as ſome thinke, that Laban ſhould not conſult with them, to know which way Iacob was gone: ſic Aben Ezra, Toſ. for though Laban miſſed them preſently, that is to be imputed to his ſuperſtition, who did often viſit [illegible] idols. 2. Neither did Rachel this, to revoke her father from idolatry, as Rab. Salomon, to whom give conſent, Baſil, Nazianzene, Theodoret, for then ſhee needed not to have beene aſhamed of her fact: neither would Iacob ſo ſharply have cenſured the fact to bee worthy of death. 3. Nor yet did Rachel ſteale them away being made of ſome precious metall, that it might be ſome recompence unto her for part of her dowry, Perer. numer. 7. for this had beene plaine theft. 4. Neither yet, as Ioſephus thinketh, did Rachel carry away her fathers gods, that if he ſhould purſue after them, haberet, quo confugeret, veniam impetraturа, ſhe might have recourſe unto them, to aske pardon, and to appeaſe her fathers wrath: for this had beene plaine idolatry. 5. Nor yet was this done by way of myſtery: as Gregory collecteth: that as Laban found not his idols with Iacob: ſic diabolus oſtenſis mundi theſauris, in Redemptore noſtro veſtigia terrena concupiſcentia non invenit: ſo the devill, having ſhewed the treaſures of the world, did not finde in our Redeemer any foot-ſteps of earthly concupiſcence, &c. 6. But it is moſt like that Rachel, though much reformed, and reclaimed from her fathers ſuperſtition by her husbands inſtruction, yet was ſomewhat touched therewith ſtill: and therefore of a ſuperſtitious mind did take away her fathers idols: and hereof it was, that long after this, Iacob reforming his houſe, cauſed all the ſtrange gods to be removed: ſic Chryſoſtom. hom. 47. in Geneſ. Mercerus, Calvin.

Quest. VIII. Whether Rachel were any thing addicted to ſuperſtitious worſhip.

But ſome are of contrary opinion, that Rachel was not at all addicted to her fathers ſuperſtition: whoſe reaſons are theſe: 1. Becauſe Rachel did worſhip God, and prayed unto him, Geneſ. 29. 22. God remembred Rachel and heard her: and if ſhe had purpoſed to worſhip theſe idols, ſhe would not have uſed them ſo irreverently to have ſate upon them, &c. Theodoret. qu. 89. in Geneſ. Cont. Though Rachel were a worſhipper of God, yet ſhe might have her imperfections: and ſome reliques of ſuperſtition might remaine: Iacobs family profeſſed the worſhip of God, and yet there were found amongſt them ſtrange Gods, Geneſ. 35. 4. Neither is Rachels geſture to bee much regarded in ſuch a neceſſity: rather her ſuperſtitious minde may therein appeare, how ſhe was addicted to thoſe images, ſeeing ſhe ſought excuſes, to keepe them ſtill: her manner of ſitting was no ſigne of irreverence, but it ſerved for an excuſe, both to pacifie her fathers wrath, which ſhe feared, and to with-hold thoſe ſuperſtitious monuments ſtill which ſhe loved: 2. Wherefore it is more like, that Rachel was not free from all touch of ſuperſtition: both becauſe ſhe had beene a long time trained up under a ſuperſtitious father, and could not ſo eaſily forget her manner of education, though much qualified with Iacobs inſtruction: as alſo for that, wee reade that a good while after, ſuch images and mammets were found in Iacobs houſe, Gen. 35. which are like to have beene theſe which Rachel had ſtollen from her father: ſic Chryſoſtom. ex pontifi. Cajetan. Oleaſter. ex noſtris, Muſculus, Mercer. Calvin.

Quest. IX. How Iacob is ſaid to have ſtollen away Labans heart.

Verſ. 20. THus Iacob ſtole away the heart of Laban, &c. 1. This word is not taken, as 2 Sam. 15. 6. where it is ſaid, that Abſolon ſtole away the heart of the people from David: the meaning cannot be ſo here, for Labans heart was not toward Iacob. 2. Neither, becauſe Rachel had ſtollen away his terafim, where Labans heart was: for Iacob yet knew not that. 3. Neither yet is it ſo ſaid, becauſe the hope of Labans heart was gone, Iacob being departed, who was ſo profitable to him. 4. But becauſe Iacob gave no notice of his going, he is ſaid to ſteale away his heart, that is, to deceive and diſappoint him, and ſecretly convey himſelfe away: It is therefore rather to bee read, to ſteale away from his heart: for ſo the word Lebb, ſometime ſignifieth, as Gen 44. 4. when they went out of the city, jatzu, eeth, hagner.

Quest. X. What river it was that Iacob paſſed.

Verſ. 21. HE paſſed the river, that is, Euphrates. 1. Sometime it is called the great river, Ioſu. 1. 4. ſometime, the river, without any addition, Ioſu. 24. 3. and in this place. 2. For three cauſes is the river called great, and ſo much celebrated in Scripture. 1. For that it was the greateſt river beſide Nilus that was knowne to the Jewes. 2. For that it was one of the rivers of Paradiſe. 3. Becauſe it was the bounds of that large land of Canaan promiſed to Abrahams ſeed, Geneſ. 15. 18. Perer. 3. Iacob is ſaid to paſſe the river, as declining the ordinary way, fearing leſt Laban might overtake him, Mercer.

Quest. XI. How the 7. dayes of Labans purſuit are to be accounted.

Verſ. 23. HE followed after him 7. dayes journey. 1. Theſe 7. dayes muſt not bee accounted from Iacobs firſt ſetting forth, as Raſi thinketh: for Iacob being three dayes journey from Laban, who was now gone to sheare his sheepe, verſ. 19. which were removed 3. dayes journey from Iacobs flocke, verſ. 30. 36. while the meſſenges went to tell Laban, Iacob was gone 3. dayes journey: and ſo was in all 6. dayes journey before Laban: by this reckoning Laban ſhould overtake Iacob in one day, from Carras to Gilead, which was not poſſible: Laban then overtooke Iacob the ſeventh day, after that he himſelfe ſet forward, that is, 13. dayes after Iacobs departure, Muſcul. 2. Neither with Ramban need wee ſuppoſe, that Laban returned to Carras his City, which was in the middeſt betweene the two flockes, as hee thinketh, to take his friends with him, and ſo to purſue Iacob: for the City was not farre off from the place where Iacob kept his sheepe, whence hee ſent for his wives into the field, verſ. 4. and therefore it could not be leſſe than 3. dayes journey from Laban: who is more like, for greater haſte and expedition, to take a journey from the place, whither the newes was brought him. 3. Though Iacob was ſix dayes journey before Laban, he might well overtake him in ſeven dayes, both becauſe Iacob was encumbred with his children and cattell, and could not drive faſt, and for that hee had pitched his tents in Gilead, there purpoſing to refreſh himſelfe, ſuppoſing the danger and feare of Labans purſuit to be over, Mercer.

QUEST. XII. How Laban is charged neither to ſpeake good or evill.

Verſ. 24. TAke heed thou ſpeake not ought ſave good, &c. The Hebrew phraſe is from good to evill. 1. Which is not to begin with good words and end with evill, as Onkelos ſeemeth to take it. 2. Nor yet is he forbidden only not to ſpeak evil, as the Latine and Septuagint, with others. 3. But he is forbidden to ſpeak any thing at all, either good or bad, either faire words or foule, not ſimply, but concerning Iacobs returne againe into Meſopotamia: and ſo Laban accordingly forbeareth to ſpeake any thing at all of that matter: the like phraſe is uſed, Gen. 24. 50. Mercer. Iun.

QUEST. XIII. When God appeared to Laban, and where he pitched his tents.

Verſ. 25. THen Laban overtooke Iacob. 1. This viſion, which Laban had, was not in the beginning of his journey as ſome thinke, but in the ſame night that he came to Gilead: for ſo he ſaith: Yeſternight, or the laſt night, (for ſo the word eemeſh ſignifieth) the God of your Father appeared unto me: when he was now purpoſed to bee revenged of Iacob, the Lord ſtaied him. 2. They pitched their tents both in the ſame mount not farre aſunder: ſome ſay Iacob was in the top of the hill, Laban in the bottome, ſome affirme the contrary, but this is uncertaine, Mercer. It is moſt like, that Iacob ſeeing Laban to approach, ſet himſelfe in as good order as he could, doubting the worſt, Muſcul.

QUEST. XIV. How Iacob ſaith, let him not live.

Verſ. 32. WIth whom thou findeſt thy gods, let him not live, &c. 1. Not, as though he ſhould ſay, I will kill him with mine owne hand. 2. Neither by vertue of this curſe, as the Hebrewes note, did Rachel afterward dye an untimely death: for Iacob knew not that ſhe had them. 3. But either they are words of imprecation, whereby Iacob wiſheth that God would ſhew his judgements upon him, that had committed that theft, Mercer. Or elſe he giveth power to Laban, even to take away their life, Calvin.

QUEST. XV. Of the divers takings of the word brother in Scripture.

SEarch before our brethren. 1. Hierome noteth, that the word brother is foure wayes taken in Scripture: 1. For them that are ſo by nature and properly, as Iacob and Eſau were brethren. 2. For them of the ſame nation, as the Iſraelites were all brethren, Act. 7. 26. 3. They that were of one kindred were called brethren: as Abraham ſaith to Lot, Wee are brethren, Geneſ. 13. 8. 4. They that are of the ſame Chriſtian faith and profeſſion: 1 Cor. 5. 11. If any that is called a brother, &c. 2. By brethren here we underſtand not with Hierome, Iacobs children, which were yet of ſmall diſcretion: Ruben the eldeſt not being above 13. yeare old: nor yet ſome other of his wives kindred, that Iacob brought away with him out of Meſopotamia, for they had beene no competent Judges in this caſe: but the brethren were thoſe whom Laban brought with him of his kindred, verſ. 23. to whom Iacob referreth the judgement of this matter, Mercer.

Who are underſtood to be Iacobs brethrē.

QUEST. XVI. Of the order in Labans ſearching of the tents.

Verſ. 33. THen came Laban into Iacobs tent. 1. Neither as Raſi thinketh, had Iacob and Rachel one tent: for the text ſheweth, that Laban went firſt into Iacobs tent, and then into Leahs, and from thence to Rachels. 2. Though laſt mention bee made of Rachels tent, that is becauſe there the idols were hid: Laban laſt of all ſearched the maids tents: and out of Leahs tent he went into Rachels, Mercer.

QUEST. XVII. Of Rachels excuſe.

Verſ. 35. THe cuſtome of women is upon me. 1. Not that women, while their monethly cuſtome is upon them, are not able to riſe: but many times they are beſide that infirmity troubled with the head-ake, and are ſtomacke-ſicke, and not fit to be diſquieted. 2. As alſo they counted women in that caſe in times paſt uncleane, they would neither talke with them, nor ſuffer them to breathe upon them: which might be the cauſe that Laban anſwereth not a word to his daughter, but goeth preſently out of her tent. hereof the word niddah, that ſignifieth an uncleane woman, is derived of nadah, which is, to remove, or ſend farre off: becauſe women at that ſeaſon were ſeparated from the company of others, Mercer. 3. Rachel made this excuſe, not either in deteſtation of the Idols, vouchſafing them no better place than a Camels litter, nor yet ſo much of love to keepe them, as of feare becauſe of the preſent danger: in the meane time Laban by this excuſe was blinded and deluded.

QUEST. XVIII. Whom Iacob meaneth by the feare of Iſaack.

Verſ. 42. THe feare of Iſaack. 1. Iacob neither meaneth that feare of Iſaack, when his father would have offered him up in ſacrifice, as ſome interpret, for tha was but a naturall feare of death: his patience and obedience was more commendable at that time than his feare. 2. Neither doth Iacob ſpeake of his owne feare and reverence toward his father. 3. Nor yet of Iſaacks feare or worſhip of God. 4. Or of Iſaacks feare and care for the proſperity of his ſonne Iacob; all theſe are here unproper to be matched with the God of Abraham. 5. But feare is taken here not actively, but paſſively, for God himſelfe that is feared, Calvin. who ſometime is called by names effectivè, in reſpect of the effect: ſo is God called our ſtrength, our health, ſalvation; or objectivè, by way of object; ſo is God called our hope our love, our joy, our feare, because he is the object of all these, Perer. Rasi thinketh, that hee is called not the God, but feare of Isaack, because Isaack was yet living, and God doth not call himselfe by the living: but this is a false note, for Gen. 28.13. he is called the God of Isaack: some doe in this difference of names, note a distinction of the persons; and understand the God of Abraham to bee the father, the feare of Isaack to be Christ, of whom he was a speciall type. This collection may bee admitted, Mercer. So then by the feare of Isaack, Iacob meaneth the God whom Isaack feared and worshipped: having a reference to that feare also, whereby Isaack was restrained from revoking the blessing given to Iacob, Gen. 27. 33.

QUEST. XIX. Of the Syrian name which Laban gave, and of the use of that language in the Scripture.

Vers. 47. Laban called it Iegar-sahadutha, &c. 1. Laban though he came of Thare the father of Abraham, in whose family the Hebrew tongue was preserved, yet dwelling among the Syrians, he learned both their language and manners, and therefore calleth this place by a Syrian name: but Iacob by an Hebrew, who most used himselfe to that tongue, and so did his wives, that gave their children not Syrian, but Hebrew names, Calvin. 2. These Syrian words are only found in Genesis, and the rest of the books of Moses, and beside, one whole verse, Ierem. 10. and certaine chapters in Ezra and Daniel, after the Syrian dialect: which is an honour, as the Hebrewes note, where with the Syrian language is dignified, in that it is inserred into the holy Scriptures, and therefore is not to be neglected, Mercer. 3. Whereas vers. 48. it is said, Laban called it Galeed, (whereas Iacob gave it that name, not Laban,) Moses reporteth the sense of the name, in the Hebrew tongue, which Laban gave.

QUEST. XX. Of the mountaine of Gilead.

Vers. 47. Iacob called it Galeed. 1. This name Galeed, or with some smal change of points, called Gilead, is before mentioned, vers. 25. under that name, not as yet given unto that place, but now imposed by this occasion: which is interpreted, an heape of witnesse: so called of the heape of stones which was made as witnesse of the league betweene Iacob and Laban. 2. There was one Gilead the sonne of Machir of Manasses, of whom came the Gileadites, Numb. 26. 29. but he gave not the first name to this mountaine. 3. This mountaine Gilead is the greatest of all beyond Jordan, it is in length 50. miles: and as it is continued, and runneth along, it receiveth divers names: from Arnon to the City Cedar, it is called Galaad: then to Bozra, it is named Seir, afterward Hermon: and so reaching to Damascus, it is joyned to Libanus: and therefore as Hierome saith, Lebanon is called the head or beginning of Galeed, Ier. 22. 6. Perer.

QUEST. XXI. Of the name Misphah, and of divers places so called.

Vers. 49. He called it Misphah. 1. The Latine translator doth wholly omit this word, the Septuagint maketh it a name appellative, not proper, calling it a vision: which Augustine referreth to that vision, wherein by the way God appeared to Laban. But this Mispah was another proper name given unto the same place: of the word tsaphah, to behold, whereof the reason is given in this verse: The Lord looke betweene me and thee. 2. Of this Mispah, which signifieth a looking or watch-tower, the whole countrey is called the land of Mispah, under the hill Hermon, Iosu. 11. 3. There were three other places of that name, a City in Juda, Iosu. 15. 38. another belonging to Benjamin, Iosu. 18. 26. a third in the land of Moab, 1 Sam. 22. 3.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Wives and husbands to be preferred before parents.

Vers. 17. Whatsoever God hath said unto thee, doe it. Iacobs wives are willing to leave and forsake their fathers house, and to goe with their husband: for so the Scripture saith, Therefore shall a man leave father and mother, and cleave to his wife, Gen. 2. 24.

2. Doct. Office of carefull Pastors.

Vers. 38. The rams of thy flocke have I not eaten, &c. Iacob is an example of a vigilant and carefull Pastor: hee watched day and night to keepe his flocke, but hee made no spoile or havocke of them: Such ought good pastors to bee, not to feed themselves, but the flocke, as S. Peter saith, 1 Pet. 5. 2.

3. Doct. Polygamy unlawfull.

Vers. 50. If thou shalt take wives beside my daughters. Laban himselfe though upon a covetous mind hee thrust many wives upon Iacob, yet by the light of naturall reason condemneth the multiplying of wives: Thou shalt not vex my daughters: the taking then of other wives, is a vexation of them: this maketh against their obstinate blindnesse, that would maintaine polygamy: if they would appeale to Laban, he would be a Judge against them, Calvin. But our Saviour Christ the Judge of us all, hath given us a rule, They two shall be one flesh, Matth. 9. 2. two then, not many can be made one flesh.

4. Doct.

4. Doct. Of the blind and superstitious devotion of idolaters.

Vers. 47. THou hast searched all my stuffe. Such is the blind rage of idolaters, as here we see in Laban: he leaveth no corners unsought: he giveth no credit to Iacobs protestation, nor yet sheweth any reverent affection to his daughters, but tosseth and tumbleth all their stuffe: and all this was, to find out his house-gods: such blind devotion was in Micah, that howled and cried after the children of Dan, because they had carried away his images, Ind. 18. Such foolish superstition reigneth at this day among the Romanists, that doe more cruelly punish the least wrong done to their dumbe idols, than which are offered to their brethren the living images of God.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against the worshipping of idols for remembrance.

Vers. 30. THou hast stollen my gods. Laban was not so blockish, to thinke that those idols were indeed his gods, or that his gods could be stollen away: for hee afterward speaketh of the God of Abraham, and the God of Nachor, vers. 53. but he calleth them his gods, because hee made them in the remembrance of God, or hee looked towards them when he prayed to God, Vatab. Calvin. This taketh away that vaine pretence of superstitious Romanists, who would excuse their idolatry, because they do not worship the idols themselves, but them whose images and representations they are: for Laban did no more, Calvin.

2. Confut. Images and idols, where they are adored, all one.

FUrther let it be noted, that the word teraphim, images, is translated by the Septuagint and Latine interpreter, idols: yet Onkelos readeth, tsalmanaia, images, of tselem, which signifieth an image: whence is inferred, that an image and idoll is all one: contrary to the conceit of the Papists, that doe distinguish betweene the name of images and idols: which indeed being turned to a religious, or rather irreligious use, are all one.

3. Confut. Disparity of religion maketh not a nullity of marriage.

BEside, in that Rachel stole here fathers gods, it is evident that Laban was an idolater: yet Iacob refused not to marry his daughters: and this marriage was firme and sure: whereupon Cajetanus saith, Hic quoque prudens lector habes, quod disparitas cultus non est ex naturali jure impediens conjugium: thou hast, discreet reader, that the disparity of religion is no impediment by the law of nature to marriage: he collecteth well: yet Catharinus another of that side, calleth it impium dogma, an impious opinion. Catharinus annot. in Cajetan. But Cajetanus opinion may be justified, both by example in Scripture: as Moses married Sephora, Samson Dalila, David Maacha, which were of idolatrous parents: as also by S. Pauls doctrine, who would have the beleeving partie not to put away his unbeleeving wife, 1 Cor. 7. 12. which sheweth that the marriage of such is sound and good, and not against the law of nature, though it be not safe nor convenient.

4. Confut. Antiquity no good rule for religion.

Vers. 53. THe God of Abraham, the God of Nahor, the God of their father, &c. Laban pretendeth antiquity for his God, whom his father and grand-father worshipped, yea, and Abraham also, who at the beginning before his calling was given to the same superstitious worship. But Iacob sweareth by the feare of his father Isaack: hee riseth up no higher, neither to grandfather, nor grandfathers father, and yet he doubteth not, but that he worshipped God aright: wherefore antiquity is no good rule for religion: neither is it a warrant for us to be of the same religion which our fathers and grandfathers were before us, Calvin.

6. Morall Observations.

1. Observ. Afflictions make us thinke of our heavenly Canaan.

Vers. 1. NOw he heard the words of Labans sonnes, &c. Iacob, if hee had not perceived some discontentment in Laban and his sonnes against him, would not so soone have bethought himselfe of returning into Canaan: these crosses therefore and domesticall wrongs doe awake him and rouse him up and bring Canaan to his remembrance: In like manner the Lord useth by afflictions and troubles to awake his servants, that otherwise would be drowned in the pleasures of this life, and so prepare them for the heavenly Canaan, Calvin. As the Prophet David saith, before I was afflicted, I went astray, Psal. 119. 67.

2. Observ. The wicked have no power to hurt the servants of God.

Vers. 7. God suffered him not to hurt mee. The wicked may band themselves, and bend their strength against the servants of Christ, but they shall have no more power to hurt them, or to prevail against them, than shall be to Gods glory, and his servants good: Calvin. As our Saviour saith, My father is greater than all, and none is able to take them out of my fathers hands, Ioh. 10. 29.

3. Obser-

3. Observ. The Lord delivereth in the time of extremity.

Vers. 24. GOd came to Laban the Aramite in a dreame, &c. Laban was now come to mount Gilead, where Iacob was, with a malicious purpose toward him: but the Lord stayeth him, being now ready to have done him some mischiefe: thus the Lord sheweth his power in the deliverance of his children, even in the time of greatest extremity, Mercer. Thus God turned Esaus heart, comming with a band of men against Iacob, Gen. 33. thus God delivered David from Saul in the wildernesse of Maon, when Saul with his men had almost compassed him in, 1 Sam. 24. 26.

4. Observ. A good conscience a bulwarke against slanderous reports.

Vers. 30. WHy hast thou stollen my gods? this is the portion of the righteous in this world, to be slandered, and evill reported of: as Iacob here is made a theefe: thus we must be tried, by honour, dishonour, by evill report and good report, as deceivers, and yet true: as the Apostle saith, 2 Cor. 6. 8. but a good conscience is a sufficient bulwarke against all such assaults of slanderous tongues: as Saint Paul saith, As touching me I passe very little to be judged of you, or of mans judgement, nor I judge not my selfe, I know nothing by my selfe, 1 Cor. 4. 2.

5. Observ. Not to be forward to undertake for others honesty.

Vers. 32. WIth whom thou findest thy gods, let him not live: Iacob was too confident, and presumed too much of the innocency of his servants, and the rest of his family in this case: which teacheth us, that we ought not to be too ready to answer and undertake for the honesty and innocency of others, unlesse we be of a sure ground, least it afterward turne to our rebuke, Calvin. As the wise man saith: He that praiseth his friend with a loud voyce, rising early in the morning, it shall be counted to him as a curse, Prov. 27. 14.

CHAP. XXXII.

1. The Argument or Contents.

THis Chapter consisteth of two principall parts:

First, Iacobs feare of his brother Esau is expressed, vers. 7. with the occasion thereof, the message sent to his brother, and the returne thereof, which was full of suspition, vers. 3. to vers. 6.

Secondly, is shewed how Iacob was comforted against this feare: which comfort was of two sorts: humane, divine. Humane, either religious by faithfull prayer, which consisteth on Iacobs behalfe, of the confession of his unworthinesse, vers. 9, 10. on Gods behalfe, of the certainty of his promise made to Iacob, to vers. 13. or politike: Iacob divideth his company into two parts, vers. 7. he sendeth presents to appease his brothers wrath, vers. 14. to vers. 22.

The divine comfort was by the vision of Angels, vers. 1, 2. by wrestling and prevailing with an Angell: where these things are declared, 1. Iacobs wrestling and prevailing, vers. 24, 25. 2. His infirmity of halting upon the same, vers. 26. 3. The blessing of Iacob with the change of his name, to vers. 30. 4. The custome of the Israelites upon this accident of Iacobs halting, vers. 32.

3. The explanation of doubtfull places.

QUEST. I. Whether this vision of Angels were sensible or spirituall.

Vers. 1. THe Angels of God met him. 1. This is the third vision that Iacob had, the first was of the ladder, and the Angels ascending and descending upon it, as he went into Mesopotamia: the other of the particoloured rams leaping upon the ewes, while hee was in Mesopotamia: the third of the Angels now at his returning home. 2. But this apparition of the Angels, was not by a spirituall vision, and in dreame, as Cajetan and Pererius, but it was sensible and visible, for they appeared in the habit of heavenly souldiers: as the like apparition was shewed to the Prophets servant, 1 King. 6. Mercer. 3. The Hebrewes note, that Iacob knew these to be the same Angels, which he saw in vision to ascend and descend upon the ladder. 4. And whereas Iacob is not said to meet them, but they to meet Iacob: therein appeareth the dignity and preeminence of the Saints, whom the Angels are ready to attend upon, Mercer.

QUEST. II. Whether two armies only of Angels appeared to Iacob.

Vers. 2. HE called the place Mahanaim, which word is of the duall number, and signifieth two armies: 1. Not as though God made one army, and the Angels another. 2. Or as though Iacob had at the first taken one company to be against him, the other with him, as some Hebrewes: for hee knew them at the first to be Gods Angels. 3. Neither were these two companies of Angels, the one that brought him out of Mesopotamia, the other that now received him into the land of Canaan, as Rasi: for these companies of Angels did all meet Iacob, and offered their protection. 4. Nor yet hath Iacob relation in this name to the hoast and company, that made one, and the Angels hoast, which was the other, as Iunius: for Iacob had reason to name the place, by his hoast. 5. But the duall number is here taken for the plurall: as the like word Mahanaim is used, Cantic. 6. 12. so that Iacob saw not precisely two armies of Angels, one before another behind, but he was compassed round with them: & beside the forme of the dual number is often applied to proper names, though no reason can be yeelded of it, as Ephraim, Misraim, & so may it bee here, Mercer.

QUEST. III. Of the message which Iacob sent to Esau.

Vers. 3. IAcob sent messengers to Esau his brother. 1. R. Carus thinketh that Iacob sent Angels of his message to Esau: for the word malachim signifieth the Angels, vers. 1. and generally messengers: but this is too curious: for if Iacob had sent Angels, hee would not have given them Commandement and instructions, what to say, as he doth. 2. Esau was now removed from his father, before Iacob came, Gen. 36. 6. and it may be he had thereof intelligence from his mother, Calvin. He being now growne rich, and seeing his wives were an offence to his parents, but most of all desiring his owne liberty, might remove into the land of Seir: Calvin. The country being neere adjoyning to Beersheba, where Isaack dwelt. Mercer. 3. He sendeth to Esau, 1. Because hee must needs passe by his countrey; 2. And nameth himselfe his servant, not thereby renouncing his blessing, but yeelding temporall subjection for a time, as David did to Saul, though he were even then the annointed King. 3. He maketh mention of his sojourning with Laban, not so much to excuse the matter; that he had not all this while sought to be reconciled to his brother, as R. Carus, as to report unto his brother, what the state and condition of his life had been, who as yet might be ignorant of it, Mercer. 4. He also speaketh of his cattell and riches, that Esau should not thinke that he sought unto him for any need, but only to have his favour.

QUEST. IV. Whether Esau came with 400. men, as an enemy or a friend.

Vers. 6. THe messengers came againe to Iacob. 1. Some thinke the messengers spake not at all to Esau, because they were afraid, meeting him with foure hundred men: but it is not like that Esau had notice of Iacobs comming, but first from him by his Messengers. 2. Neither did Esau come thus accompanied to make ostentation only of his power, Musculus. 3. Or to give his brother more honourable entertainment, Calvin. Mercer. For he needed not then to have brought so many with him, and he would have sent him some kind message before. 4. Wherefore it is more like, that Esau prepared himselfe to be revenged of Iacob: as may appeare by Iacobs great feare, which was not without cause, and hereby also the power of God is more set forth, that could in the very way change the purpose and counsell of Esau.

QUEST. V. Of the divers takings of this word in Scripture.

Vers. 10. WIth my staffe came I over: the phrase is, in my staffe: this preposition in, is diversly taken in Scripture. 1. In is taken for with, as Luk. 1. 75. to serve him in holinesse, that is, with holinesse: and so it is taken here. 2. In, for by, Psal. 63. 11. all that sweare in, that is, by him, shall rejoyce. 3. for through, noting power and helpe: Act. 7. 28. in him (that is, by him) we live, and move, and have our being. 4. In, for to, Psal. 136. 8. hee made the sunne in potestatem, for, or to rule the day. 5. In, for because, Ezek. 5. 5. they shall fall in their iniquity, that is, because of their iniquity. 6. In, for against, Psal. 44. 5. by thy name have we troden downe those that rose in nos, against us. 7. In, for in stead: Psal. 31. 2. be unto mee, in domum refugii, for, or in stead of an house of defence. 8. In, for among: John 1. 16. the word was made flesh, and dwelt in nobis, among us. 9. In, for with: 1 Peter 5. 2. feed the flocke, qui in vobis, which is in you, that is, which is committed to your care. 10. In, for of: Habbac. 2. 14. woe to him that buildeth a towne, in, that is, of blood. 11. In, for before, or at: in the name of Iesu shall every knee bow, that is, at or before the name of Jesus, Philip. 2, 12 in for under, Psal. 91. 1. he that dwelleth in the secret, &c. that is, under: ex Perer.

QUES

Quest. VI. The cauſe of Iacobs feare.

Vers. 11. I feare him, leſt he will come and ſmite me, &c. Seeing that Iacob had the Lords promiſe for his ſafety, Geneſ. 31.3. Returne into the land of thy fathers, and I will be with thee: how commeth it to paſſe, that Iacob is ſo greatly afraid? for anſwer whereunto, I neither thinke with Auguſtine, qu. 102. in Geneſ. that Iacob feared not his owne deliverance, but that it ſhould not bee without great ſlaughter; for even ſo feareth concerning himſelfe, leſt hee will come and ſmite me. 2. Neither as Lyranus, was Iacob thus afraid, becauſe hee was to goe thorow his brothers countrey, where hee and his might bee eaſily ſurprized; Pererius thinketh, that Edom was not in Iacobs way, being entred into the land of Canaan already, hee to goe unto Beerſeba or Hebron, where Iſaack dwelt, which was in the ſouth part of Canaan, the way was by Idumea, which lay ſouth to Canaan, Mercer. But this was not onely Iacobs feare: for Eſau commeth with 400. men, even out of his owne territory, had beene able to have ſpoyled Iacob and his company. 3. Nor yet did Iacob doubt of Gods promiſe, leſt by reaſon of ſome ſinnes which he might have committed in idolatrous Labans houſe, it ſhould be ſuſpended, as Lyranus againe thinketh; for Gods promiſe was abſolute, and renewed to Iacob at his departure out of Meſopotamia. 4. Neither was this only a naturall and involuntary feare, ſuch as wiſe men naturally are ſubject unto upon a ſtrange accident, as upon the noiſe of thunder, and ſome ſudden evill meſſage: but they doe recover themſelves againe; whereas fooliſh men do continue in the ſame feare ſtill, as Epictetus the Stoike diſtinguiſheth of feare; but this was a judiciall and ſeiled feare in Iacob as may appeare by his carefull preparation. 5. Wherefore we muſt confeſſe that Iacob ſheweth his weakneſſe and infirmity; that although looking to Gods promiſe hee had good hope, yet turning himſelfe to the preſent danger, he feared; Iacob while he prepareth himſelfe, as the Hebrewes note, for three things, for warre, for prayer, for gifts, therein doth well; (for we muſt uſe all good meanes, as working under Gods providence,) yet in that he was perplexed with ſuch a great feare, it was infirmity, Calvin. Mercer.

Quest. VII. What preſent it was that came to Iacobs hand.

Vers. 13. HE tooke of that which came to hand. 1. Not without any choyce, as we uſe to ſay, that which commeth next to hand; as Muſcul. For it is not like that he would ſend a preſent of his worſt cattell. 2. Some thinke he meaneth thoſe cattell which came under his owne hand, which he had the keeping of himſelfe; for ſo the paſtorall charge is ſignified, ſometime by the feet, Geneſ. 30.13. ſometime by the hand, Geneſ. 32.16. and by the rod, Levit. 27.32. ſic Ium. 3. But the plainer ſenſe is, that he ſent a preſent of ſuch things which came into his hand, that is, were in his power: ſuch as he had, he ſent; he had no ſilver or gold to ſend, but cattell, Mercer.

Quest. VIII. Of divers kinds of gifts.

Vers. 13. A Preſent for Eſau his brother; There are ſix ſorts of preſents or gifts. 1. Charitable gifts beſtowed upon the poore, ſuch as Cornelius gifts were, Act. 10. 2. Choyce gifts beſtowed upon thoſe whom we chiefly love; as Abrahams gifts to Iſaack, and Ioſephs to Benjamin. 3. Politike gifts, for the maintaining of friendſhip, ſuch as Felix looked for at Pauls hand, Act. 24. 27. 4. Covetous gifts, when by giving a little, one hopeth to obtaine a greater benefit, as the men of Tyrus and Sidon, by ſuch gifts perſwaded Blaſtus Herods chamberlaine to be a mediator for their peace, becauſe their countrey was nouriſhed by the Kings land, Act. 12.20. 5. There are gratulatory gifts, which one friend ſendeth to another, to rejoyce with them, as the Jewes were commanded to doe, to teſtifie their joy for their deliverance from Hamans conſpiracy, Eſther 9.22. ſuch a preſent did the King of Babel ſend to Hezekiah, after hee was recovered from his ſickneſſe, 2 King. 20.12. 6. There are gifts of honour, teſtifying reverence and ſubjection; ſuch preſents the three wiſe men offered to Chriſt; ſuch are the religious gifts employed for the ſervice and honour of God. 7. There are gifts of pacification, to appeaſe the wrath of ſuch as are offended; of which kind Iacobs gift here, Muſcul.

Quest. IX. Of the number and kind of the cattell which Iacob ſent.

Vers. 14. Two hundred ſhe goats. 1. The whole number of all the cattell which Iacob ſent, was 550. and ſo many were the ſacrifices in the law, which were offered the whole yeare, as the Hebrewes reckon: beſide they obſerve that every word of this verſe endeth in Mem, the like is found Num. 19. and theſe letters they will have to ſignifie the eight Kings of Edom, Geneſ. 36. before there were any in Iſrael. Further, they obſerve that Iacob in great diſcretion, knowing the nature of the cattell, did thus ſort out male and female; allotting one he goat to ten ſhe goats, and one ram to ten ewes; but of labouring cattell one bullock to foure cowes; of camels which are more employed, for every female a male; for ſo they make the camels with their colts, to be but thirty in all; fifteene female, and fifteene male Camels, which are the colts: of the aſſes, which were not ſo much uſed for carriage as the Camels, there are aſſigned two females, one male foale. 3. The Hebrewes are yet more curious in ſetting downe the times of coupling and comming together of creatures; as for aſſes once in a weeke, camels once in 30. dayes; they preſcribe alſo for men; for labourers twice in a weeke, for thoſe that labour not, oftner; but theſe curioſities, preſſing theſe matters ſo farre, doe but bewray the ſalacity and wantonneſſe of their nation; and therefore they may be better omitted: ex Mercer.

Hebrewes curious obſervations.

Quest.

Quest. X. Of the ford Iabbock.

Verſ. 20. HE roſe up the ſame night. 1. This is not the ſame night mentioned verſ. 13. but the night following; the day comming betweene was ſent in ſorting out the cattell which Iacob ſent a preſent to Eſau. 2. This ford Jabbock is in the borders of the Ammonites, running betweene Philadelphia and Geraſa, and falleth into Jordan, Hierom: ſome would have it ſo called of abuk, which ſignifieth to ſtrive or wraſtle, becauſe Iacob there wraſtled with God, which word is uſed verſ. 24. Muſculus rather commeth of bakak, which is, to empty, becauſe it was emptied into Jordan: and in this place it ſeeme that Iacob was neare to Jordan, where the two rivers joyned: becauſe he ſaith, verſ. 5, 10. I came this Iordan, Mercer. 3. Whereas there is mention made but of Iacobs eleven children, whereas he had eleven ſonnes and one daughter Dinah: the Hebrewes thinke that Iacob locked her up in a cheſt, conjecture that it fell out as a puniſhment to Iacob, that ſhe was defloured of the Sichemites, becauſe refuſed to give her to Eſau to wife, who might have brought him to ſome goodneſſe: but theſe are volous conjectures: Dinah is omitted, becauſe of her ſex: the Scripture is not ſo carefull to take account of the women: and beſide ſhe was the youngeſt but Ioſeph, not above ſix or ſeven yeare old, Moreover neither was Dinah a mother of the Iſraelites, as theſe eleven were fathers, and therefore not to diligently remembred.

Why mention is here made only of Iacobs eleven children

Hebrewes conceits,

Quest. XI. Iacobs fight not ſpirituall or in viſion, but reall and corporall.

Verſ. 24. There wreſtled a man with him to the breaking of the day. 1. This wreſtling of God in the neſſe of a man with Iacob, was neither ſpirituall only, as Hierome ſeemeth to think upon words of Saint Paul, Epheſ. 6. 12. We wreſtle not againſt fleſh and blood, but againſt powers and princes &c. 2. Neither was it done in dreame, as R. Levi, who thinketh that Iacobs thigh might be hurt upon other occaſion, as by the wearineſſe of his travell, and the cold in the night: and that hee dreamed of ſame hurt. But Iacob had little liſt to ſleepe, being in ſuch feare of his brother: likewiſe the continuance the wreſtling till the morning, the reall and ſenſible hurt of his thigh, the impoſition of a new name, the ſtimony of the Prophet Hoſee, He had power over the Angell and prevailed, hee wept and prayed Hoſ. 12. 4. all theſe arguments doe evidently ſhew, that this was a corporall and reall wreſtling. 3. Neither was it only corporall, but ſpirituall alſo: for Iacob did as well contend by the ſtrength of his Faith, as the force of his body, Mercerus.

Quest. XII. It was a good, not an evill Angell that Iacob wreſtled with.

FUrther, a queſtion is moved, what manner of Angell this was, with whom Iacob wreſtled. 1. Origen thinketh he did ſtrive againſt ſome of the ſpirituall adverſaries, ſuch as Saint Paul calleth Principalities and powers, and ſpirituall wickedneſſes, Epheſ. 6. 12. and that he was aſſiſted by a good Angell, their Periarch. Procopius reporteth the opinion of ſome, that ſay it was the devill in Eſaus likeneſſe, that had ſtrived againſt Iacob, and that by the power of an Angell he overcame, who leſt he ſhould aſcribe this victory to his owne ſtrength, ſmote him upon the thigh: the Hebrewes ſay it was Sammael, Eſaus evill Angell that contended with Iacob for the bleſſing. 2. But theſe are untrue and improbable aſſertions: 1. Here is mention made but of one that Iacob wreſtled with. 2. Hee that he wreſtled with, was the ſame that bleſſed him. 3. He that ſtrived with him, was the ſame that touched his thigh. Ergo, it was a good, not an evill Angell: for an evill Angell would not have bleſſed him, Mercer. Perer.

Quest. XIII. Whether it were a miniſtring ſpirit, or God Chriſt with whom Iacob wreſtled.

NEither was this any of the miniſtring Angels, but Chriſt the Son of God, here called a man, becauſe he ſo appeared. Pererius ſtriveth to prove that it was an Angell, and not Chriſt. 1. Hoſea calleth him an Angell without any addition, 12. 4. but when Chriſt is called an Angell, ſome other word is added, as the Angell of the covenant, Malach. 3. 1. Cont. In that place the Prophet ſheweth, that by the Angell we muſt underſtand God: for he ſaith, He had power with God, and he had power over the Angell: and he found him in Bethel: the Angell, with whom Iacob wreſtled, was the ſame that ſpake to him in Bethel, but he was God, Gen. 31. 13. I am the God of Bethel. Neither alwayes is an epithete added, when Chriſt is called an Angell: as Gen. 48. 16. Iacob ſaith, The Angell which hath delivered mee from all evill bleſſe the children. But this Angell without any other addition is elſe-where called the God of Bethel. 2. If at any time in the old Teſtament the ſonne of God appeared, it is moſt like in mount Sinai, when the Law was given, which was the moſt famous and Noble apparition of all: but S. Steven ſaith, Yee have received the Law by the ordinance of Angels, Act. 7. 53. Angels then appeared, not Chriſt, Perer. Cont. The Angels were miniſtring Spirits, giving attendance, and executing their office, at the delivering of the Law: but is no good argument, the Law was given by the Angels, Ergo not by Chriſt: for S. Paul affirmeth both, was ordained by Angels in the hand of a Mediator, Galat. 3. 19. the miniſtery was of the Angels, the Author of Chriſt. 3. If Chriſt had appeared at any time, then there was greateſt cauſe, when word was ſent to Mary of the incarnation of the Sonne of God, both becauſe of the worthineſſe of that myſtery, and dignity of the perſon, to whom that meſſage was brought, Contra. 1. It was not fit that the Sonne of God himſelf ſhould be the Meſſenger of his owne comming into the world: Princes uſe to ſend their Miniſters and Officers before, to bring tidings of their comming: and it was fit that this great Prince ſhould ſend his Angels before, that it might appeare, that he was even Lord of the Angels. 2. There was greater reaſon, that the ſame Angell Gabriel, who was the firſt revealer of this prophecie to Daniel, concerning the Meſſias

Da.

Dan. 9. should also be the messenger for the accomplishment and fulfilling thereof. 3. Neither was Mary as yet so worthy a person to be preferred before all the holy Patriarks and Prophets, the progenitors of Christ: for this dignity to be made the mother of Christ, came not of her worthinesse, but of Gods speciall grace: as the Angell saluteth her, Haile Mary, kecharitomene, freely beloved. Wherefore the better opinion is, that this Angell which here wrestled with Iacob, was Christ the Son of God: 1. because he blesseth Iacob; but God blesseth, and not Angels: 2. He saith, thou hast had power with God; and Iacob saith, I have seene God face to face; therefore it was God and not an Angell. 3. This was the God of Bethel, Gen. 31. 13. Hos. 12. 4. Of this opinion are the ancient writers, Tertull. lib. 2. contr. Marcion. Hilar. lib. 4. de Trinitat. Ambros. lib. 1. de fi. de Gloriosa, & cap. 7. Hieron. and of the new, Calvin. Mercer. Iunius in haut locum, with others.

QUEST. XIV. The Angell indeed wrestled with Iacob.

Vers. 24. THere wrestled. Some thinke that this properly was not a wrestling, but that Iacob perceiving him to be an Angell, hangeth upon him and would not let him goe, as the Disciples held Christ, and would not suffer him to goe from them, Luk. 24. for Thom. Anglic. And Rupertus hereupon frameth an allegory; that as Iacob here would not let the Angell goe till he had blessed him; so God perceiving his departure to the Israelites, was held by the prayers of the faithfull, till such time as Messiah came, the blessing of the world, Rupert. lib. 8. comment. in Genes. But it was indeede a very proper wrestling and combat that Iacob had with the Angell. 1. The word abak, signifieth dust, because the wrestlers use to raise dust, Mercer. Oleaster saith, it signifieth a vapour or exhalation; as we see sweat and vapours to come from their face and body that run or wrestle: the word in either sense properly signifieth wrestling. 2. The hurt that Iacob felt in his thigh, sheweth that there was some fighting and wrestling betweene them: and indeed that place of the thigh, or huckle-bone, or hip, is most used in wrestling. The Angell saith, thou hast prevailed with God, the reason whereof is expressed, vers. 25. He saw he could not prevaile against him, &c. therefore he strived or wrestled.

QUEST. XV. How it is said, he could not prevaile against Iacob.

Vers. 25. WHen he saw he could not prevaile. 1. Not that either God gave unto Iacob greater strength to resist, than the Angell had to assault him, as some of the Hebrewes thinke, that it was but an Angell, and so had no greater power than God permitted him: for so was no such Angell, as is shewed before. 2. Neither as Cajetane thinketh; Factum ut Angelus assumeret corpus in quo non posset vincere. It came so to passe that the Angell assumed a body in such manner as he could not be able to overcome Iacob. 3. Neither as Tostatus; Angelus fingebat se non posse superare: The Angell fained that he could not overcome Iacob: for I have declared before, that it was Christ himselfe, and not an Angell that wrestled with Iacob. 4. Wherefore in that it is said, when he saw, here the Lord descendeth to our capacities, as he knew before the event of this combat, and what he had purposed to doe: the experience then of knowing is taken for Gods knowledge, Calvin. and the Lord with the blast of his mouth had beene able to have confounded Iacob. But he could not prevaile, &c. that is, the Lord did but fight in and against Iacob, to give Iacob strength to resist: and so in Iacob he overcometh, dum scipsum fortiorem facit, and so in overcoming himselfe, Calvin. Thus infeebled God could not prevaile against Iacob, because he would not be destitute of his power according to his owne will and purpose: thus the Angell said to Lot, I can do nothing till thou be come thither, Gen. 19. 22. and the Lord to Moses thus saith, Let me alone, &c. Exod. 32. 10. Hereby the Lord sheweth how effectuall the faith and prayer of his servants are; which as it were binde the Lords hands, and doe give us victory (in a manner) against himselfe.

QUEST. XVI. In what place of the thigh Iacob was put out.

Vers. 25. HE touched the hollow of his thigh. 1. This word signifieth the inward or broad part of the thigh, as the Septuagints read. 2. Neither yet was the huckle-bone put out of joynt, as some thinke, for then could not he without great paine and griefe to Iacob. 3. But whereas the word caph, which signifieth the hollow, and so is taken for the palme of the hand, and sole of the foote: here it properly betokeneth the hollow bone into the which the huckle-bone called ischion runneth: we may name it the pan of the huckle-bone: this hollow bone was not out of joynt, but fearefully hanged from the sinew or nerve that goeth out of the pan or hollow into the huckle-bone which was hurt, as is expressed, vers. 32. Wherefore the next day it was perfectly recovered of this hurt, contrary to whom Iunius subscribeth. Because cap. 33. 18. it is said that Iacob came safe to Sichem: I thinke rather with Mercerus, that Iacob was not perfectly recovered of this griefe and halting till his dying day, though not always alike, for the remembrance of this thing: and it may so appeare further, for that presently upon this accident they did forbeare to eat the sinew of the thigh which shrunke: whereto the halting of Iacob being continually in their sight might be a greater motive: and this sinew being taken up in Iacobs time, was received of his posterity the Israelites. Further, in that he came safe to Sechem, thereby is signified his deliverance from the danger which he feared by his brother Esau, rather than the recovering of his hurt.

QUEST. XVIII. Wherefore it is pleased God that Iacob should halt upon the hurt in the thigh.

Why the hollow of Iacobs thigh was touched. 1. Augustine by Iacobs feare, the one halting, the other going right, understandeth two sorts of people among the Jewes, the unbelievers that halted in their faith, and believed not in Christ, and those which believed in him: Iacob overcomming signifieth the Jewes that prevailed against Christ in putting him to death, but in being blessed he signifieth those which worshipped Christ, and were blessed of him, serm. 80. de tempor. 2. Gregory understandeth by the halting foot, the infirmity of the flesh, by the other, the vigour of the spirit; for so in the children of God, as our Saviour saith to his Apostles, The spirit is ready, but the flesh is weake, sic Muscul. 3. But the best application of the text is, that Iacob was strickē with this infirmity, that he should have an humble and lowly opinion of himselfe, not to ascribe this victory to his owne strength: So for the same cause Saint Paul confesseth of himselfe, Lest I should be exalted out of measure through the abundance of revelations, there was given unto me a pricke in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me, because I should not bee exalted above measure, 2 Cor. 12. To the same end was Iacob touched with this infirmity, lest he might have beene too much lifted up by these heavenly visions, and this great victory which he obtained, Mercer. Calvin.

QUEST. XIX. Why the Angell desireth to depart because of the morning.

Vers. 26. LEt me goe, for the morning appeareth. 1. Not as though the Angell was now to goe to the rest of the blessed company of the Angels, to sing their morning hymne unto God, as the Hebrewes imagine: for the Angels not onely in the morning, but at other times are exercised in praising of God. 2. But the Angell thus speaketh according to the custome of men, having now taken the forme and shape of a man, as though he had haste to other businesse, and leaving Iacob also to his affaires. 3. And also because the Angell would not have this vision descryed and discerned of others, seeing it specially concerned Iacob; and that Iacob should not be too curious in gazing and looking upon that humane shape wherein this great Angell Christ appeared, Mercer.

QUEST. XX. Why Iacob desireth the Angell to blesse him.

I Will not let thee goe unlesse thou blesse me. 1. Not as though this were Esaus Angell, and Iacob would have him to confirme the blessing, and consent unto it, for evill Angels blesse not. 2. Nor as some other Hebrewes, as though Iacob would have his antagonist acknowledge him to be the superiour, and to have the better: for Iacob perceiveth that it was an Angell, and therefore would not strive for superiority with him. 3. Neither doth Iacob desire to know his fatum, or destinie, as Iosephus saith, what should happen unto him in his whole life, for Iacob was not so curious. 4. But Iacob well perceiving that he with whom hee wrestled was greater then himselfe, desireth to be blessed of him, for the lesse is blessed of the greater, Heb. 7. 7. And Hilarie beside noteth, that Iacob acknowledged him with whom he wrestled to be the Sonne of God, that should become man for us; Tenes in lucta tua hominem, sed hic tibi homo Deus: Thou dost grapple with a man, but this man is God, lib. 5. de Trinitat. and therefore Iacob desireth to be blessed of him, in whom all the world should be blessed.

QUEST. XXI. Of the name Israel, and the true derivation thereof.

Vers. 28. THy name shall be no more called Iacob, but Israel, &c. 1. He asketh Iacobs name, not because he knew it not, but that by Iacobs answer the Lord might take occasion of the change of his name. 2. Neither was he so called Israel, as that he should no more be named Iacob, for he is also stiled so called, but his name Israel is hereby declared to be the more excellent and worthy name, which was so given unto the whole nation of his posterity, Mercer. 3. The name Israel, 1. doth not signifie, that he stood against an Angell, as Iosephus deriveth it, and Hierome therefore reproveth him: although Iosephus keepeth the sense of the name. 2. Neither is it interpreted, a man seeing God; for then should Iod be inserted in the beginning, and it should be expressed Isroel, not Israel, with shin having a right point. This interpretation is also confused by Hierome, though approved by divers of the ancient writers, as Gregory, Basil, Nazianzen, Chrysostome, with others. 3. Neither doth it betoken one that is right, or directed of God, as Hierome sometime is of opinion; whereupon he thinketh, that Genesis is called in Hebrew, of the right, that is, of Abraham, Isaack, Iacob, comment. in Isay 44. for then this word should be derived from jashar, and so we should say Isroel, not Israel, Mercer. 4. But the Lord himselfe giveth the interpretation of this name, Thou hast prevailed with God: and so to come of Sara, which is to prevaile, or have rule: so the Septuag. translate: ἰσχυσας, thou hast had strength with God; and therefore should not doubt but that he might also prevaile with men, as before with Laban, so now with Esau.

QUEST. XXII. Why the Lord refuseth to tell Iacob his name.

Vers. 29. TEll me I pray thee thy name, &c. The Lord here, as also the Angell, Iud. 13. refuseth to tell his name. 1. Not for that as Rab thinketh, the Angels have no certaine or fixed names, but names which are continually changed according to their divers ministeries whereof they are named. 2. Not as Tostatus, because the Angels have no proper names to be distinguished by, but are discerned one from another by their nature and essence: for this notwithstanding in Scripture, for our understanding, they are called by their names. 3. Nor yet because some thinke, if the names of Angels were knowne, they could come at our call: this is but a fansie of Magicians, ex Mercer. 4. But the Lord doth not utter his name, thereby staying Iacobs further curiosity, and insinuating unto him, that his name, which is higher and greater then could of him then be comprehended: and hereupon the Latine text, and the Septuag. τὸ θαυμαστον, which is wonderfull; which words are supplied out of the 13. of Iudges, Mercer. beside, the time was not yet come, whereby the Lord would make himselfe knowne by his name Iehovah as unto Moses, Exod. 6. 3. and therefore Iacob should content himselfe with that revelation of God, which the Lord vouchsafed unto him, Calvin.

QUEST. XXIII. What manner of blessing was bestowed upon Iacob.

Vers. 29. HE blessed him there. 1. This was neither as the Hebrewes imagine, that this Angell confirmed onely and ratified the blessing pronounced before by Isaach. 2. Neither yet as the Anglicus, was the imposition of this new name the benediction here spoken of. 3. But the Lord did expressely blesse Iacob, most like in that forme and manner wherein he blessed Abraham, Isaack the Nations of the world be blessed, Luther. and more particularly, what this blessing was may be gathered out of the 35. chap. vers. 10, 11. whereas the imposition of Iacobs new name is repeated, so also it is like a commemoration of the same blessing, Mercer.

QUEST. XXIII. Of the place called Peniel.

Vers. 30. Iacob called the name of the place Peniel. 1. As before Iacob to testifie his thankfulnesse, called the place Bethel, where he saw the vision of the ladder: so he calleth this place Peniel, that his posterity by that name might call to remembrance this heavenly vision in that place shewed to their father. 2. The Latine readeth Phanuel, but the word is Peniel, with e, not a, and without an aspiration: it is called here both Peniel and Penuel, which both signifie the face of God. 3. In this place afterward was builded a City called Penuel, whose tower Gedeon brake downe, because they denied him bread, Iud. 8. 17. but it was reedified by Ieroboam, 1 King. 12. 25. it was situate by Jorden, Iud. 8. 4. 8. and belonged to the tribe of Gad. Strabo maketh mention of a City joyned to Tripolis, called the face of God, where the mountaine Libanus endeth, Lib. 16.

QUEST. XXIV. How Iacob saw God face to face.

I Have seene God face to face. 1. Not that Iacob saw the majestie and essence of God, which never any mortall man hath seene. 2. Nor yet in respect of any outward figure or representation is he said to see him face to face, as Thom. Aquin. p. 1. qu. 12. ar. 11. for God is said to talke face to face with Israel, Deut. 5. 4. and yet there was no image or representation seene, Deut. 4. 15. 3. But Iacob saw him face to face, that is, more clearely and manifestly than at any time before, Calvin. or he saw him, præsens præsentem, he himselfe talked with God present: as God is said to speake to Moses mouth to mouth, Num. 12. Mercer.

QUEST. XXV. How Iacobs life was preserved after he had seene God.

And my life is preserved, &c. 1. It was the common opinion of those times, that they should not live after they had seene God: as Iud. 1. 12. Manoah saith, we shall surely die because we have seene God: therefore they rejoyced, when after they had seene God their life was preserved: as Iacob doth in this place, and Hagar, Gen. 16. 13. 2. But therein they were deceived, thinking when an Angell had appeared unto them, that they had seene the very Majestie of God himselfe, which cannot be seene of any mortall creature: and therefore the Lord saith to Moses, No man shall see me and live: that is, in this life: as the Lord also saith, no man hath seene God at any time, Ioh. 1. 18. therefore Augustine saith, Videri Deus in hac vita potest, vbi non vivatur, est huic mortali vita moriendum: God can be seene onely in that life, wherein if we live, we must first die unto this life.

QUEST. XXVI. Of the Iewes custome in not eating of sinewes.

Therefore the children of Israel eat not of the sinew, &c. 1. This custome was not taken up of the Iewes of any superstition, which that simple age was not given unto, but of a remembrance of this which befell Iacob according to the pedagogie and rudiments of that time. 2. Neither did the Iewes abstaine from the eating of all sinewes, as Rupertus thinketh, but one of the sinewes of the hinder parts: and because they knew not where these sinewes lie, they doe refraine from the eating of the flesh also of the haunch and hinder parts: which custome, Iosephus saith, remained till his time. 3. Whether Iacob were stricken in the right or left thigh is uncertaine: but it is most like in the right, where a mans strength chiefly lieth, and that he might better beare in minde this combate.

QUEST. XXVII. The sinew why it is said to shrinke.

Vers. 32. Of the sinew that shranke. 1. It is a toy of some Hebrewes that would have this to be the sinew where the fore-skin is, for that could not have caused Iacob to halt, as Abrew rightly answereth, Mercer. 2. Some doe translate, the sinew lifted up, of nasha, because the thigh that halteth seemeth to be lift up: some derive it of nashath, which is to be wanting: as Iunius first translateth, Nervum defectivum: the short wanting or failing sinew, because it is shorter than his fellowes: but in his last edition he readeth, Nervum mutationis, the borrowed sinew, of the root nasha, which is to borrow, because certaine sinewes are as it were borrowed out of the pan of the huckle-bone, and communicated to the round or whirle-bone. Mercerus deriveth the word of nashah, which signifieth to forget; as though the sinew or nerve had forgotten his place, and to doe his office. But the more received reading is the sinew or sinew, i. indurum, which shranke or waxed feeble: for so nashah also signifieth to remove, or give over: and so vers. 25. it is said the hollow of Iacobs thigh was loosed out of his place.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Not one Angell, but many appointed for every one of the elect.

Vers. 1. THe Angels of God met him. Iacob then had many Angels to attend upon him and to guard him; therefore it is but a conceit, that every man hath one particular Angell appointed for keeper, or that speciall Angels are assigned to Countreyes as their quarters; seeing that Iacob here many Angels, even an hoast and armie of them deputed of God for his preservation. Calvin. as the like saith, He shall give his Angels charge over thee, to keepe thee in all thy wayes. Psal. 91. 11.

4. Doct. The parts of prayer.

Vers. 10. I am not worthy. Iacobs prayer ſtandeth of three parts, which are required alſo in our prayers. 1. His thankſgiving and commendation of Gods benefits. 2. His humility in acknowledging his owne unworthineſſe. 3. His petition and requeſt, Mercerus; ſo the Apoſtle joyneth together giving of thanks, ſupplications, prayers, 1 Tim. 2.

5. Doct. We muſt truſt in God and not refuſe the meanes.

Vers. 13. He tooke of that which came to hand. Although Iacob doubted not of Gods protection according to his promiſe, yet he wiſely uſeth all the meanes which he could devile to ſooth his brothers favour, by ſending a preſent, and to provide for his ſafety: whereby we doe learne, that we muſt not immediately depend upon Gods providence, but carefully uſe the meanes which the Lord hath for our deliverance from danger, or confirmation in his promiſes: therefore Ahaz is ſaid to grieve God, for that he refuſed to aske a ſigne of God for the better aſſurance of their deliverance, Iſay 7. 13.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Againſt merits.

Vers. 10. I am not worthy, or leſſe than all thy mercies. Iacob aſcribeth nothing to his merit or worthineſſe, but ackowledgeth all to have proceeded of Gods mercie. Thus our Saviour teacheth his Diſciples humbly to confeſſe of themſelves; when you have done all that is commanded you, ſay yee are unprofitable ſervants, Luk. 17. 10. Muſcul. The popiſh doctrine then of merits is not agreeable to Iacobs faith. And if the benefits of this life cannot be merited, much leſſe the Kingdome of heaven.

2. Confut. That Angels are not mediators or impetrators of grace and bleſſing.

Vers. 29. He bleſſed him there, &c. Theodoret alleageth this as a reaſon that this was not an Angel but the Sonne of God that wreſtled with Iacob, becauſe it belonged not to Angels, but to God to bleſſe. Pererius taketh upon him to confute Theodorets reaſons, affirming, that Angels though they bleſſe not as Authors of any grace, yet a bleſſing may be aſked of them as the impetrators and procurers for the ſame at the hands of God; and therefore Saint Iohn wiſheth grace and peace to you from him that was, and is, and is to come, and from the ſeven ſpirits which are before the throne, Apocal. 1. 4. from the ſeven Angels: In Gen. 32. quæſt. 28. 29.

Contra. 1. Spirituall bleſſings are conferred either by the author thereof, which is onely God, or by the Mediator thereof, which is onely Chriſt, or by the miniſters or inſtruments thereof, which may be as well Angels as men; for as Iſaak bleſſed Iacob, and Iacob his ſonnes, miniſterially onely, as being Gods mouth to pronounce them; ſo Angels likewiſe may be meſſengers or miniſters of God to bleſſe, and not otherwiſe. 1. For every good gift commeth from God, Iam. 1. 17. 2. Neither are the Angels ſued unto for any ſpirituall or temporall bleſſing, but onely God. If any of you lacke wiſedome, let him aſke it of God, Iam. 1. 5. and our Saviour ſaith, Whatſoever yee ſhall aske the father in my name, he will give it you, Ioh. 16. 23. a promiſe is made to them that aske in Chriſts name, and not otherwiſe: neither doe we read that any of the ancient Patriarks or Prophets became ſuters to the Angels for any bleſſing. 3. Whereas in the Revelation, by the ſeven ſpirits we muſt underſtand the holy ſpirit of God, with his ſeven graces; for the ſeven ſpirits are the ſeven lamps of fire burning before the throne, Revel. 4. 5. they are the ſeven eyes of the Lambe, Revel. 5. 6. the Angels are not the eyes, that is, the wiſdome or knowledge of the Lambe, but the holy Ghoſt, which dwelleth in him bodily, Coloſ. 2. 9. that is, ſubſtantially, eſſentially: And whereas he urgeth that phraſe, Which are before the throne, whereby a miniſteriall office ſhould be expreſſed, this collection is not ſound; for both in Daniel 7. 13. Chriſt is brought before Antients of dayes; and in the Revelation 8. 2. he is the Angell that ſtood before the Altar. Neither doth Saint Pauls ſalutations both he with grace and peace from any other than from God the Father, and the Lord Ieſus; nor yet Saint Iohn 2. Epiſt. verſ. 2. this forme of benediction then here uſed muſt be expounded by the like place of Scripture.

The Angels not underſtood by the ſeven ſpirits, Revel. 1. 4.

6. Places of exhortation.

1. Exhort. Prayer in extremity availeable.

Vers. 9. Moreover Iacob ſaid, O God of my father Abraham. Iacob being driven to a great ſtreight, betaketh himſelfe unto God by earneſt prayer: and ſo indeed the prayers of the faithfull when they are powred forth in their neceſſity, are much availeable with God, Luther. as it is in the Pſalme, Call upon me in the day of trouble and I will deliver thee, Pſal. 50. 15.

2. Exhort. The hope of our celeſtiall inheritance to be preferred before all worldly things.

Vers. 14. Two hundred ſhe goats, &c. The ſumme of Iacobs preſent which hee ſent to Eſau conſiſted of five ſundred and fifty cattell of divers kinds, as is ſhewed before, verſ. 9. hee ſent to retourne his quiet passage and returne into the land of Canaan, which was promised to him and his seed for an everlasting inheritance: which teacheth us that we should preferre our heavenly inheritance before all earthly and worldly possessions, Calvin. As Saint Paul counteth all things losse, and even as dung, that he might win Christ, Philip. 3. 8.

3. Exhort. With innocency we must joyne wisdome and prudence.

Vers. 13. Present for his brother. Iacob as a wise and circumspect man, useth all meanes for his owne safety. 1. He sendeth an humble message to his brother. 2. When that would not speed, he divideth his company into two parts, that if Esau did smite the one, the other might escape. 3. He sendeth a liberall present to make a way to insinuate himselfe to his brothers favour. Thus according to our Saviours rule, we should be as wise as Serpents, and innocent as Doves, Matth. 10. 16. Mercer.

4. Exhort. Importunity in our prayers acceptable to God.

Vers. 26. I will not let thee goe till thou blesse me. Iacobs importunity in striving and not giving over, both obtaineth victory, and procureth a blessing: so should we strive in our prayers with God, as Saint Paul saith of Epaphras, Coloss. 4. 12. And Moses was so instant with God in his earnest prayers for Israel, that the Lord at his request suspended the judgements which hee had thought to have brought upon them because of their idolatry, Exod. 32. Luther.

5. Exhort. Against curiosity.

Vers. 29. WHerefore now dost thou aske my name? Iacob is reproved for his curiosity, that could not bee contented with this heavenly vision, and sensible apparition, glorious victory, and honourable name given unto him, but would enquire further as touching the Angels name. Wee learne then to bee contented with such measure of knowledge as it pleaseth God to reveale unto us in his word, and not curiously to inquire after hid matters, Calvin. The Disciples were reproved for gazing up into heaven, Act. 2. neither shall it be any profit for us to exercise our selves in difficult and curious questions.

6. Exhort. Not rashly to judge those which have defects or infirmities in their bodies.

Halted upon his thigh. We see then that the servants of God may have infirmities in their bodies, which are inflicted of God, not as punishments of their sinne, but corrections for their good: Leah was blinde, Iacob halting, Leah squint eyed, Moses stammering, Mephibosheth lame, we ought not rashly to judge of those which have any infirmity or defect in their body, Mosel. It was the Disciples rashnesse, for the which they are reproved of Christ, to judge the blinde man punished for his, or his parents sinne, Ioh. 9. 2.

CHAP. XXXIII.

1. The Contents.

Here Iacobs Harper is set forth, first, Iacobs meeting of Esau, and the manner thereof: Secondly, Iacobs departure from him. In the first part, on Iacobs behalfe wee have his wisedome, in placing of his wives and children in order, vers. 1, 2. his humility, in his often bowing himselfe seven times: in speech, hee calleth himselfe Esaus servant, vers. 5. and saith he had seene his face, as if he had seene the face of God, vers. 10. his liberality, in forcing his brother Esau to take his present, vers. 11.

In Esau we are to consider his humanity, in imbracing Iacob, vers. 4. his courtesie, in that he would have company with him, vers. 12, 15. In Iacobs departure there is expressed his acts domesticall, in building an house for himselfe, and booths for his cattell, vers. 17. Sichemitish or civill, in buying a parcell of ground; religious, in erecting an Altar, vers. 20.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

Quest. I. The order of Iacobs company, and the reason thereof.

Vers.1. HE divided the children, &c. Iacob doth dispose his company in order, not onely for [illegible] and comelinesse sake, but both to move commiseration and pitie in Esau, when he saw the mothers with their children, as also to this end, that if he smote one company with the sword, the other might escape, and therefore he placeth the dearest unto him, Rachel with Ioseph in the last place, as the best from danger, Mercer. 2. But whereas Ioseph of Rachel, is preferred before Iudah of Leah, it is answered, that as yet it was not revealed unto him that the Messiah should come of Iudah: and [illegible] also proved a most excellent man, Calvin. 3. Iacob goeth first himselfe ready to be offered up in stead for the safety of the flocke, therein shewing himselfe an example of a good Pastor, Calvin.

Quest. II. To whom Iacob bowed himself, and wherefore.

Vers.3. HE bowed seven times to the ground. 1. He adored not or worshipped God in this inclining or bowing of himselfe, as some thinke, but he bowed himselfe to his brother, as the text [illegible]eth, Mercer. 2. There were divers fashions used in bending and bowing of the body; sometime by bowing of the head, and inclining of the body, sometime by bowing of the knee, 1 *King.*19.18. sometime

Of divers kinds of bowing the body.

kissing the hand, as *Iob.*31.27. If my mouth did kisse my hand, that is, if I adore the Sunne when he [illegible] as this use is retained still in salutations to kisse the hand: sometime they bowed the body to the ground as Nathan did to David, 1 *King.*1.23. and Iacob in this place to Esau, Perer. 3. Neither doth [illegible] this meanes betray or give over his birth-right, in calling himselfe Esaus servant, but he is content to do this temporall service to Esau, not doubting but the promise should be fulfilled in his posterity: [illegible] deed the Idumeans did serve the Israelites from Davids time to Ioram, an hundred and twenty years, the Israelites never served the Idumeans, Mercer.

Quest. III. Whether Esau were in truth reconciled to Iacob.

Vers. 4. THen Esau came to meet him. 1. Some Hebrewes thinke that Esau did but dissemble his affection at this time. 2. But it is more like that Esaus heart was changed by the special work of God; some doe gather so, because the word vejecabechehu, which signifieth, He kissed him, is [illegible] throughout, of which sort the Masorites note but fifteene: But it is otherwise collected, both by the circumstances here used, Esau runneth to meet Iacob, he embraceth him, kisseth him, and weepeth: and we reade not of any hatred after this shewed to Iacob, but that they were perfectly reconciled, and [illegible] buried their father together, *Gen.*35.29. 3. But whereas some inferre hereupon, that Esau being thus [illegible] to be reconciled to Iacob, did follow his fathers precepts and doctrine, and therefore doubt not but [illegible] he was saved, it cannot be hence concluded; certaine it is that Esaus posterity did wholly fall away [illegible] the worship of God, Mercer.

Quest. IV. Why Ioseph is named before Rachel.

Vers.7. AFter Ioseph and Rachel drew neere, &c. 1. Ioseph is not put before Rachel, that he might [illegible] her from Esau his rage and violence, lest hee might desire her being a beautifull woman, R. Salomon: for Ioseph was but six yeare old, and therefore not able to preserve his mother from any attempts. 2. Some thinke because Ioseph was Rachels onely sonne, and dearely beloved of her, he is named first, Mercer. 3. But it is more like, that Ioseph being the youngest of all the rest, went before his mother, as mothers use to put their little ones first, and so he is named according to his place, &c.

Quest.

Quest. V. Why Esau refused Iacobs present.

Vers. 8. WHat meanest thou by all this drove? &c. 1. The Hebrewes note, that Esau his questions are short, Iacobs answers large: because it is the manner of proud stately men to speake briefly, and hardly to bring forth halfe their words: and beside, Iacob often in his speech maketh mention of God, so doth not Esau. 2. Esau asketh not whose droves these were, as ignorant thereof, but because he would in Iacobs presence take occasion to refuse the present, Iun. 3. It seemeth that Esau had not accepted of the present by the way which Iacob had sent before, not as Rambam thinketh, as though the messengers were afraid of Esaus company, and so fled away: neither did Esau refuse it of hatred to his brother, for Iacobs prayer was heard, and it began presently to take effect: neither yet doth Esau in refusing the present, yeeld therein the birth-right to Iacob, but he deferreth the receit thereof till he came to Seir, that he might shew his brotherly affection frankly and freely, not purchased before, or procured by any gift or present, Iun.

Quest. VI. How Iacob saith he had seene the face of Esau as the face of God.

Vers. 10. I Have seene thy face, as if I had seene the face of God. 1. Iacob flattereth not as some thinke, to insinuate himselfe to his brother, sic Tostat. but he speaketh from his heart. 2. Neither, as the Hebrewes, doth Iacob to terrifie his brother make mention of that vision wherein he saw the Angell face to face. 3. Nor yet doth he meane as the Chalde readeth, that he had seene the face, as of some great or excellent man. 4. Nor as Augustine conjectureth, by the name of God here doth hee understand such as the gods of the Gentiles were; Sic non præjudicatur honori Dei; And so these words doe not prejudice the honour of the true God, in that he resembleth Esaus face to the face of God, quæst. 105. in Genes. for Iacob was farre off from assuming into his mouth the name of the heathen gods. 5. But in the effect Iacob saith thus much, that he acknowledged this to be Gods worke, that Esau was thus reconciled toward him: and the friendly countenance of his brother hee taketh as an argument of the favour of God toward him, Mercer. Calvin. Iun.

Quest. VII. By what reason Iacob perswaded Esau to accept of his present.

Vers. 11. TAke my blessing. Iacob useth divers reasons to perswade Esau to take his present: 1. Take it of my hand, that is, who am thy brother, Marlor. 2. He calleth it a blessing, not in the passive sense, as where with God had blessed him, but in the active, they used to blesse in the offering of their sacrifices, this therefore should be a signe of perfect reconciliation, that thereby they should take occasion mutually to blesse another, Mercer. 3. It is brought thee, that is, I have sorted it out, and appointed it for thee, let me not lose my labour. 4. I have enough, God hath blessed me: it shall be no hinderance unto mee if thou accept of my present, Vatab.

Quest. VIII. Whether Iacob lied in saying he would goe to mount Seir to his brother.

Vers. 14. TIll I come to my Lord into Seir. 1. Some thinke that Iacob did goe to Seir to his brother, though it be not mentioned in the story: but it appeareth by Iacobs excuse, that if he feared company his brother in the way, he had greater cause to feare his brother at home in his owne country. 2. Some thinke that this was officiosum mendacium, an officious lie, Tostat. and that Iacob promised one thing, and purposed another, Calvin. But where the Patriarks acts may otherwise be defended, we should not easily yeeld them to be infirmities. 3. The Hebrewes make a mystery here, as where Iacob saith, Let my Lord goe before, and I will follow; they apply it to Esaus posterity, who had the government of Kings 600. yeares before Israel had any King: and in that Iacob promiseth to goe up to Seir, they figure the accomplishment thereof till the comming of Messiah, according to the prophesie of Obadiah, vers. 21. The Saviours shall come up to mount Sion, to judge the mount of Esau. But it is evident that Iacob here hath no such mysticall meaning, speaking of his owne comming, in his owne person. 4. Wherefore it is rather like that Iacob did thinke to goe to Seir, and so purposed, but yet conditionally, if God would, if he should see nothing to the contrary, Iun. As all such promises are hypothetically and conditionall; and that upon better reasons he afterward changed his minde, or was otherwise directed by the Lord, Lyranus. So Saint Paul purposed to goe into Spaine, but it is like that he was otherwise letted and came not Quest. IX. Whether Saint Paul according to his purpose were ever in Spaine.

ANd here by the way, though it be the opinion of divers ancient writers, as of Cyrillus, Athanasius, Chrysostome, Hieronue, to whom subscribe Tostatus, Petavius, that Saint Paul according to his determination was in Spaine: yet it is more probable, that being otherwise hindered hee arrived not there: 1. Because he purposed to passe by Rome into Spaine, Rom. 15. 28. and to be brought on his way thitherward by the disciples of Rome, vers. 24. But when Saint Paul came to Rome, he remained as a prisoner in his house, having a souldier appointed to keepe him, and so continued two yeares, Act. 28. 16, 30. therefore it is not like that he was at liberty then to hold his purpose. 2. Saint Paul being at Rome, if he were thence delivered, which is uncertaine, did visit the East Churches presently, Heb. 13. 19. that I may restore to you more quickly; and purposed to continue and remaine with them, Philip. 1. 25. This I trust I shall abide, and with you all continue. If he quickly and speedily returned to the East Churches, and continued with them, it is not like that hee went so farre West-ward. It was an usuall thing with the Apostle to faile in these purposes, in disposing of his journeyes; sometime otherwise directed by Gods spirit, Act. 16.7. sometime letted by Satan, 1 Thessalon. 2.18. sometime upon better reason altering his owne purpose, 2 Corinth. 1.15,23. he stayed his journey which he had determined to Corinth: in like sort the Apostles determination to goe into Spaine might upon some other accident be changed. 4.0 this judgement is Gelasius, Paulus cum ad Hispanos se promisisset iturum, dispositione divina subjectus parum ex causis, implere non potuit quod promisit, C. 22.9.2.c.5. Paul promising to goe into Spaine, being occupied in other greater causes by the divine disposition, could not performe that which he had promised: to him subscribeth Tho. Aquin. cap. 15. ad Roman.

the

QUEST. X. Whether Iacob came to Salem.

Vers. 18. HE came safe to Sechem, &c. 1. Some reade, he came to Salem a City of Sechem, as the Chaldee Paraphrase, and Latine translator, and Mercer. but it were superfluous in the same place to call a City by two names. 2. This Salem some would have to be Silo, as some Hebrewes: some take it for Hierusalem, as Iosephus; some for Melchisedecks towne, as Hierome; where the ruines of Melchisedecks Palace were to be seene in his time: some will have this Salem to be that Salem spoken of, Ioh. 3.23. where Iohn Baptist baptized: and that Salem and Sichem were names of that same City first called Salem, afterward Sichem, Tostat. But all these opinions are uncertaine. Silo and Sechem were two distinct places. Iud. 21.19. Salem Melchisedecks towne was Jerusalem, Psal. 76.2. In Shalem is his Tabernacle, his dwelling in Sion: and if Sichem were the new name, Salem the old, it should in the Gospell be called by the new name rather than the old: and that Salem was a divers place from Sechem, called Sychar, is evident. Salem was in Judea, Ioh. 3.23. and our Saviour leaving Judea came to Sychar or Sichem, Iohn 4. Salem might be then another towne beside Jerusalem, called Salem, but not the same with Sichem. 3. Wherefore the better reading is, that Iacob came safe and in peace to Sechem: not for that he was now secure from taking, as the Hebrewes imagine: which in part remained still as a monument of that combate with the Angell: but he came safe late in respect of the danger which he feared from the hands of Esau.

Salem and Sichem whether one place.

QUEST. XI. Whether Iacob did well in buying a peece of ground of the Sichemites.

Vers. 19. HE bought a parcell of ground, &c. Although Iacob had a promise to possesse and inherit the whole land of Canaan, yet this purchase which he made did neither shew any infidelitie in him, neither did he in so doing depart from his right. 1. He did it for his necessity of dwelling, as Abraham had done the like before for buriall. 2. The time of fulfilling the promise was not yet come, therefore Iacob at this time, while the Canaanites were possessors of this land, doth not prejudice his right in buying this parcell, Mercer. 3. It was no great parcell of ground that he could buy for a little money, nor yet very fruitfull, being in the sight and view of the City, Calvin.

QUEST. XII. Whether Iacob bought his ground for money or lambs.

Vers. 19. FOR an hundred peeces of money. 1. Some read, for an hundred lambs; for the word chesita signifieth both money and a lambe, sic Septuag. Chald. Oleaster. and so they would have the word taken, Iob 42.11. where every one of Iobs friends gave him a lamb. But it is more like they gave him every one a peece of money, which was a greater gift, and more suitable to the other gift of a golden of gold. 2. Some of the Hebrewes affirme that the Arabians call money chesita, but the Scripture is not to begge or borrow words or phrases from them. 3. Wherefore it is like that this kesita was a kinde of money that was stamped with the marke or print of a lambe, and thereof was so called, as with us, Angels are so named of the stampe or print set upon the gold.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Honour to be given to evill magistrates.

Vers. 3. I Acob bowed himselfe seven times. It is a will then to yeeld externall honour to evill magistrates that are in authority, as here Iacob doth to Esau. Mercer. as Saint Paul saith, Give to all their due, tribute to whom tribute, custome to whom custome, &c. honour to whom honour belongeth. And at this time there were none other but heathen rulers: Mordechai indeed refused to bow the knee to Haman, because it was more than a civill reverence which that proud man expected: and beside he was an Agagite or Amalekite, which was a Nation accursed of God, Exod. 17.14.

2. Doct. God turneth the heart.

Vers. 4. ESAU ran to meet him. Thus wee see, that God is not onely a searcher of the heart, but a worker and changer of it: as here Esaus heart is altered, of an enemie bee suddenly becometh a friend: wherefore the Wiseman saith, That God turneth the hearts of Kings, as the rivers of waters is ruled and turned by the hearts of man, Prov. 21.1.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against humane inventions.

Vers. 20. HE set up there an Altar. Iacob inventeth not, neither bringeth in new ceremonies into Gods worship, but such as he had received from the instruction of his fathers, directed by the spirit of God: such was the building of Altars to sacrifice upon: by this the Romanists are reproved, which have thrust into Gods service so many humane inventions, Calvin. and so our Saviours rebuke falleth upon them, They teach for doctrines the commandement of men, Mark. 7. 3.

2. Confut. The sacred signes called by the name of the things.

Vers. 20. HE called it the mighty God. If this reading be received, we see that the signes are named by the things: as here the Altar is called of God, and Moses nameth his Altar, The banner my Exod. 17. 15. so the Prophet saith, the name of new Jerusalem shall be, The Lord is there, Ezech. 48. 35. We need not marvell then if the bread in the Eucharist be called the body of Christ.

6. Morall observations.

1. Morall. To be contented with our estate.

Vers. 11. GOd hath had mercy on me, therefore I have all things. So Saint Paul saith, I have learned in Phil. 4. 11. whatsoever state I am, therewith to be contented, I can be abased, I can abound, &c. I am able to do all things through the help of Christ, which strengtheneth me, Philip. 4. 13.

2. Morall. Gods worship to be advanced in families.

Vers. 1. HE set up there an Altar. Iacob having setled himselfe, and pitched his Tabernacle, hath a speciall care to set forward Gods worship, and doth consecrate as it were a Chapell and Altar to God: wherein Iacob may be an example to all householders, that they should exercise and traine up their families in the service of God, and season all their worldly affaires with a relish of religion: as the Apostle saith, I will that men pray every where, lifting up pure hands, &c.

CHAP. XXXIV.

1. The Method and Contents.

Heb. 13. 4. Conjugium honorabile.

FIrst in this Chapter is set forth the ravishing of Dinah by Sechem, with the occasion thereof, vers. 1. the sequele, he desireth her to be his wife, vers. 3, 4. Secondly, the punishment is described, which was brought upon the whole City for this fact: this punishment is devised, then executed: 1. In the device, 1. We have the motive, the griefe of Iacob, and wrath of his sonnes. 2. The occasion, the offer of mariage by Hemor and Sechem, vers. 8, 13. 3. The device is propounded, vers. 13. to 18. assented unto by Hemor, vers. 18, 19. perswaded to his Citizens, to vers. 25. Then it is cruelly executed by Simeon and Levi, vers. 25, to 30. Thirdly, there followeth the expostulation of Iacob with his sonnes, and their excuse, vers. 30, 31.

2. The divers readings.

Vers. 2. which he bare to Iacob: this clause is wanting in the Latine translation. H. det.

Vers. 2. forced or ravished her. H. G. defiled her. G. humbled her. S. P. afflicted her. Tignonah, to afflict. diff. vers.

S.a. v. 29. their little ones and their wives they led captive. H. all their bodies and houshold-stuffe, and their wives they carried captive, and spoiled whatsoever was in the Citie and house. S. and all their goods they carried away, their children and wives, and whatsoever was in the houses: cæter.

T.h.g.r. v. 30. you have made me odious. H. made me evill before the inhabitants. S. put enmity betweene me and the Canaanites, &c. (h. caused me to stinke or to be abhorred: cæt. baash, to stinke.

3. The explication of doubtfull questions.

Quest. I. Of the age of Dinah, when she was deflowred of Sechem.

Vers. 1. Then Dinah. 1. Neither is the opinion of Alexander Polyhistor, in Eusebius probable, that Dinah at the time of her ravishing was but ten yeeres old: for she was at this time marriageable, and therefore above these yeeres: and whereas the same Author saith, that Iacob remained in Mesopotamia ten yeeres after hee came out of Mesopotamia, as Euseb. reporteth his opinion, lib. 9. de præp. Evangel, it would follow that Dinah was borne in the land of Canaan in Succoth, where Iacob dwelt before he came to Sechem, and not in Mesopotamia, contrary to the Scripture. 2 Neither is Cajetans conjecture sound, that Dinah was but three or foure yeeres old, when Iacob came out of Mesopotamia: for all Iacobs children were borne in the second seven yeeres of his service for his wives, before the last seven yeeres of service for his sheepe, as may appeare, Gen. 30. 25. 3. Neither yet need wee with the Hebrewes to affirme, that Iacobs children were borne every one at seven moneths: for admitting the ordinary time of nine moneths of childe-bearing: Leah beginning to beare in the eighth yeere, the first or second seven, might have her first foure children in three yeeres: then allow a yeere of intermission, in other two sonnes, and one daughter, she might have in somewhat more than two yeeres. 4. Where the truer opinion is, that Dinah was six or seven yeeres old at Iacobs departure from Mesopotamia, that she was now fourteene or fifteene yeeres old, for Ioseph borne at the same time of Rachel, presently after this exploit are said to be seventeene yeares old, Gen. 37. 2. Simeon and Levi are supposed to have beene the one 21. the other 22. yeares of age, or thereabout: so that the time of Iacobs abode in Succoth and Sechem, might be seven or eight yeares, Perer. Mercer.

Quest. II. Why Dinah is said to be the daughter of Leah.

Hebrewes uncertaine collections.

The daughter of Leah. 1. The Hebrewes note shee was her mothers right daughter, for as she went forth to meet her husband to have him turne in unto her, Genes. 30. 16. so Dinah goeth forth also and to be seene; and therefore it is added, the daughter of Leah, but this is too hard a censure for Dinah: this addition is annexed as answerable to the story before, Gen. 30. 21. 2. Many other uncertaine collections the Hebrewes make here: some say that this Dinah was Iobs wife: some say she remained a widow in her brethrens house: some, that Simeon buried her in the land of Canaan: some, that she went into Egypt, (which is true,) and that her bones were transported into Canaan, Mercer. 3. Ioseph saith that the women of Sichem at this time kept a solemne feast, which was the cause that Dinah was desirous to goe and see them, Mercer.

Quest. III. Whether it were lawfull for the Hebrewes to give their daughters to the uncircumcised.

Vers. 14. We cannot doe this thing, to give our sister to an uncircumcised man, &c. 1. Though Abraham had not any direct precept, as Cajetane thinketh, not to joyne in mariage with the uncircumcised: for both Isaack tooke Rebeccah, Iacob Leah and Rachel to wife, which came of uncircumcised parents. 2. Yet it seemeth that they would not give their daughters to the uncircumcised, though they did take of the daughters of the uncircumcised to themselves. 3. And it is further to be considered that they speake not in this place simply of marying with the uncircumcised, but joyning to be one people with them: which they could not doe with those which were uncircumcised.

Quest. IV. Whether Simeon and Levi their cruell act may be in part or in whole excused.

Vers. 25. And the third day when they were sore, two of Iacobs sonnes, Simeon and Levi. 1. Some Hebrewes excuse Simeon and Levi their fact, because Hemor and Sichem first went about to breake the covenant, thinking to spoile them of that they had: for thus they say, Shall not their substance be ours? vers. 23. Contra. 1. But it appeareth not that Hemor and Sichem went about any such thing: they thus speake either to perswade the people, who most respect their profit, Mercer. or they meant that by trading or having entercourse with them, they should in a manner possesse their goods, Ferus. 2. But if it were so, onely Hemor and Sichem had beene guilty of the violating of this league, there was no cause to punish the whole Citie. 3. And although they had reason to revenge themselves, yet such a cruell massacre cannot be justified.

2. Ramban excuseth this fact, thinking that by the decrees of Noah, if the Magistrates punished not adultery, others might: but who seeth not what confusion and disorder this doctrine would bring in, that every private man should take upon him to bee a punisher of sinne. The Apostle saith, the power or magistrate beareth not the sword for nought, Rom. 13. 4. It is peculiar then to him to exercise the sword.

3. Philo allegorizeth this story: by Dinah, which signifieth judgement, understanding the soule, by Sichem the sonne of Hemor, (which is interpreted an Asse) the brutish affections: from the which Simeon and Levi the sonnes of prudence deliver the soule, Lib. de migration. Abrah. But these allegories being devised onely, and not warranted by Scripture, cannot give any defence to such rage and violence.

4. Some doe but in part excuse Simeon and Levi; which may be considered on Gods behalfe, and so the punishment was just: or on the behalfe of the Sichemites, who also for consenting unto that grievous sinne, were justly also punished: but on the behalfe of Simeon and Levi, because they did it craftily, this judgement was unjust, sic Carthusian. in libr. Judith. But this allegation maketh nothing for the justifying of Simeon and Levi their enterprise, for God knoweth how to turne mens wicked acts to his glory: neither did these furious men aime at any such end, but sought to satisfie their revengefull minde. Simeon and Levi, who hee to be excused in part.

5. Some goe yet further; that this act was not unjust, quoad rem, in respect of the thing, because the Sichemites had grievously sinned; but quoad modum, they did it fraudulently, Cajetan. others say, primum motum, that the first motion to commit this slaughter was of God: but they in the execution did excedere, exceed measure, Thom. Anglic. Cont. But Iacob condemneth not onely the execution, but the very first device and counsell; Into their secret let not my soule come, Gen. 49. 6. therefore the very first thought and device was evill, and therefore not of God.

6. Some proceed yet further, and altogether defend both their fact, and the manner thereof, calling their craft and dissimulation a prudent caution: their reasons are these; 1. Because all the Sichemites were consenting unto that wickednesse, and therefore they deserved punishment. Cont. 1. It cannot bee affirmed that all the Sichemites were consenting to the sinne of Sichem: their fault was, because of a carnall minde for their owne profit they received circumcision. 2. And though the whole City had herein offended, yet Simeon and Levi had no such calling or commission to put them to the sword. Reasons for the justification of Simeon and Levi their acts answered.

2. The place is objected, Iudith 9. 2. where the Lord is said to have given unto Simeon a sword to take vengeance upon the strangers, that opened the wombe of the virgin: and vers. 4. Which were moved with thy zeale. Contra. Though Simeon and Levi were ministers of Gods justice upon the Sichemites for their sinne, yet they did it not without sinne: and therefore against this booke, which is no Scripture, where their zeale is commended, I oppose the sentence and censure of Iacob, who saith, That they did it in their owne will; therefore not by the motion of Gods spirit: and Cursed be their wrath, Gen. 49. 7. but if they had done it in zeale, they were rather to be blessed.

3. They further reason thus; that if Simeon and Levi had committed such an unlawfull act, Iacob would have more sharply reproved them. Contra. Iacob partly considered the justice of God upon the Sichemites, for the outrage committed against Dinah, partly hee was moved with her complaint and mone for the losse of her virginity, partly he gave place for the time to the rage of his sonnes that were in their fury; and this was the cause of so easie a reprehension, Mercer.

4. But we reade of no restitution which Iacob caused to be made of the goods of the Sichemites taken away, which Iacob would have done if the act had beene unlawfull; for he saith, He got it from the Amorite (that is, the fields and possessions of the Sichemites) by his sword and bow, Gen. 48. 22. Contra. 1. It is not unlike, but that many of the persons, as the women and children taken captive were returned, (for they could not all remaine in Iacobs house,) and together with them much of the goods. 2. The rest, together with the ground, though first unjustly had, it pleased God should remaine unto Iacob, as a recompence for the injurie done to his daughter, as the Hebrewes tooke of the Egyptians, jewels of silver and of gold, without any restitution thereof, in respect of their long and hard service; yet neither this fact of theirs, nor the other of Iacobs is here to be imitated. Mercer. 3. Iacob is said to get it with his sword, not as though he joyned with his sonnes in the action, or after consented unto it, but because he by force and armes was ready to defend the possession of that ground from the invasion of the Canaanites, whom God did strike with a feare, they attempted nothing against Iacob or his sonnes, Gen. 35. 5. Mercer.

5. Wherefore the best solution of this question is, that although Simeon and Levi were ministers of Gods justice secretly working, yet both the act and the manner thereof, in respect of the instruments and executioners was unlawfull. 1. Because they attempted this thing without the counsell or knowledge of Iacob, whom this wrong most concerned in the ravishing of his daughter: for Iacob saith, Into their secret my soule enter not, Gen. 49. 7. 2. They dissembled, propounding a condition, as though they would enter into a league with them, and yet meant it not. 3. They make religion a cloake of their cruelty, and abuse circumcision to that end, the ordinance of God; yet Ioseph somewhat to hide the nakednesse of the fathers of that Nation, in his narration omitteth to make mention of this craft. 4. They put the whole City to the sword, even those which were innocent. 5. They take them being sore upon their cutting and circumcising, when they were rather to be pitied. 6. They spare not Hemor and Sichem, who offered to make them satisfaction by marrying Dinah, and giving her dowry which they should set. 7. Then they spoile the City, not contenting themselves only with the goods, but they carried away the women & children captives. 8. As much in them lay, they brought Iacob and all his into danger to bee destroyed and consumed of the inhabitants. 9. They being reproved of their father, do not acknowledge, but justifie their fact, Perer. Calvin. The circumstances of the cruell acts of Simeon and Levi weighed.

It appeareth then that Simeon and Levi diverslly sinned in this cruell act: whereof Iacob giveth this censure, Simeon and Levi, brethren (in evill) the instruments of cruelty are in their habitations: into their secret let not my soule come: in their wrath they slew a man, and in their selfe-will they digged downe a wall: cursed cursed bee their wrath, &c. I will divide them in Iacob, &c. Genes. 49. 6, 7. In which words Iacob first setteth downe their sinne, then the punishment. Their sinnes were these: 1. That in their habitations they devised mischiefe, and sought out how to be revenged, dealing deceitfully. 2. They communed together in their wrath. 3. They did it of a selfe-will, of a furious minde, without any direction from God or good counsell. 4. They enterprised this fact without the counsell or advice of their father. 5. They digged downe a wall to enter in to rob and spoyle them of their goods.

Iacobs sentence against Simeon and Levi explained.

Their punishment is, they are accursed: and the fruit of this curse is, they are divided in Iacob, for neither had Simeon any possession by himselfe, but intermingled with Iudah; and Levi was dispersed among his brethren. By this then it is evident, that Iacob wholly condemneth this outragious fact of his sonnes, and in nothing approveth it. But whereas some would make this sentence of Iacob prophetical, and referre it to the Levites, and Priests of Levi, and the Scribes, who were most of Simeons tribe, who are here accursed for putting Christ to death: It is cleare that Iacob speaketh of an act done and past, and denounceth the sentence of malediction and division against it. Now it is not like that the punishment should goe before the fault. But Simeon and Levi were divided in Iacob, long before Christ came into the world, and was put to death by the Priests and Scribes.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Mariage not to be contracted with men of divers profession.

Vers. 14. WE cannot doe this thing, to give our sister to an uncircumcised man, &c. This is agreeable to the Apostles doctrine, Be not unequally yoked with infidels, for what fellowship hath righteousnesse with unrighteousnesse, &c. 2 Cor. 6. 6. No league or friendship, much lesse mariage is to be made or enterprised with men of a divers profession, Calvin.

2. Doct. Gods judgements may be just, when the ministers thereof are wicked.

Vers. 25. THey slew every male. Simeon and Levi, the captaines and chiefe in this savage exploit, slew all the males that were men to the sword, for the children were carried away captive: which was a just reward upon the City for the sinne of Shechem, although the instruments and ministers thereof did evill. We see then that Gods judgements are just, when notwithstanding the meanes whereby they are executed cannot be justified: as the triall and affliction of Iob, as it proceeded from God was good, yet Satan the worker, or rather minister thereof, did it of malice.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Mariage not without the parents consent.

Vers. 4. THen said Shechem to his father Hamor, give me this maid to wife. Shechem would not have a wife but by the consent and leave of his father; and this generally was the practice of those dayes: Abraham provided a wife for his son Isaack; Laban gave his daughters in mariage to Iacob. Which condemneth then the practice of the Church of Rome, where it is an ordinary thing for children to be contracted and marry without their parents consent, Musculus.

2. Confut. Against election by works.

Vers. 25. Simeon and Levi tooke either of them his sword. Simeon and Levi, two fathers of the Israelites, and the one chosen out from his brethren to execute the priest-hood, we see what their owne merits and works were, they were guilty of much bloud. God chose them not then for their owne worthinesse, but for his owne mercy sake. So saith Moses, The Lord did not set his love upon you, nor chose you because, &c. but because the Lord loved you, Deut. 7. 8. So the Apostle concludeth by the example of Esau and Iacob, whom the Lord had chosen, and refused the other, before they had done either good or evill: That the purpose of God might remaine according to election, not by works, but by him that calleth. Rom. 9. 11. This maketh against the doctrine of the Church of Rome, who ascribe election to the foresight of faith and works, Rhemist. Heb. 5. sect. 7.

6. Places of exhortation and morall use.

1. Morall. That fathers should not suffer their daughters to straye from home.

Vers. 1. DInah went to see the daughters of the Country. Bernard hereupon this noteth. Spectasti, otiose non spectaris: tu curiose spectas, sed curiosus spectaris: thou beholdest others vainly, but thou art not beheld in vaine: thou art curious in seeing others, and art more curious thy selfe. We see what followed: Dinahs wanton and curious gazing upon others, gave occasion to one unchaste and adulterous eye to lust after her: therefore it is not good to give maidens their liberty, or to suffer them to wander from home, or lightly to behave themselves, which hath beene, and is the occasion of much evill: so the Apostle chargeth that young women should be discreet, chaste, keeping at home. Calvin.

2. Morall.

2. Mor. Sinne committed in the Church and among Christians the more grievous.

Vers. 7. HE had wrought folly in Israel, &c. Although no place have any privilege or exemption for sinne: yet it is most heinous to perpetrate and commit wickednesse in or against the Church of God: Adultery, fornication, uncleanesse, is odious even among the Gentiles: but it is most abhominable among Christians: As the prophet upbraideth Ierusalem, Sodome thy sister hath not done, neither she and her daughters, as thou and thy daughters, Ezech. 16. 48.

3. Mor. Fornication to be recompenced by marriage.

Vers. 3. HIs heart clave unto her. Shechem having forced Dinah, doth not then hate her, and cast her off, 2. Amnon did Thamar his sister: but his love is the more kindled toward her, and he seeketh her for his wife: which example doth condemne the wicked lust of many, which having once satisfied their filthy desire, seeke not to make satisfaction by marriage.

4. Mor. Spirituall love should be more fervent then carnall.

Vers. 10. THe young man deferred not to doe the thing, &c. Shechem to obtaine his love, spareth no cost, nor yet refuseth any labour: hee accepteth of the hard condition of circumcision: which teacheth that if carnall love be so forcible, our spirituall love toward Christ should be much more effectuall: that we should contemne all things in respect of him, and refuse no labour, nor spare cost to gaine Christ, as S. Paul counted all things dung to win Christ, Philip. 3. 8.

Vers. 23. 5. Mor. Religion must not be professed for gaine, but for Religions sake.

Shall not their flock, and substance be ours? They accept of circumcision not of any love to the worship of God, but of a covetous mind for their owne profit, for the which cause God was displeased. It is therefore a dangerous thing to dally with God, and to make religion a cloake for covetous and carnall affections. 2. Paul noteth some, that thinke gaine to be godlinesse, 1. Tim. 6. 5. they which professe the Gospel, not for conscience, but for gaine and advantage, Oberlin.

CHAP. XXXV.

1. The Contents.

IN this chapter first are declared such things as befell Iacob to vers. 23. then mention is made of his sons, their names, and number, and of the burriall of his father, vers. 23. to the end.

The things which concerne Iacob specially are set forth by the places where they were done. 1. In Sechem God appeareth to Iacob, and biddeth him goe to Bethel, vers. 1. then Iacob reformeth his house, and hideth their strange gods under an oake, vers. 2. to 5. then he taketh his journey prosperously. 2. In Bethel Debborah dieth, and is buried under an oake, vers. 7. 8. And there God appeareth to him againe, and confirmeth the promise made: where Iacob builded an altar for a memoriall, vers. 9. to. vers. 15. 3. Unto Ephrah Rachel dieth in travaile, Benjamin is borne, Iacob setteth up a pillar, to vers. 21. 4. In Migdal-eder Reuben lay with Bilha, vers. 21. 22.

2. The diverse readings.

2. Iacob, his whole house being called together, said. H. Iacob said to his house, and all that were with him, H. det.

3. He was my helpe in the way, which I walked. C. he was with me in the way, &c. eater. Ch. mut.

4. They gave Iacob the Idols of the people. C. strange gods, cet. the gods of strange people. T. for strange, T. r. eher, is put in the singular number, and so cannot be the substantive to gods, elohe, which is in the plurall.

8. Debborah died, and was buried with H. S. under an oake. eater. elah, signifieth both differ. sig. an oake and a plaine. Iacob called the name of it Elbethel. S. Elbethel is the house of God. S. ad.

And God ascended from him in the place where he spake with him. eater.

15. And he called the name of the place Bethel. H. Iacob called the name of the place, where God spake with him, H. det.
Bethel. eater.

21. And stretched his tent beyond the tower of Eder. This is transposed out of the 22. vers. and inserted S. transf.
in which clause the rest have not.

16. He came in the spring to the ground, which leadeth to Ephrata. H. when he came neare to Cibrath, to H. S. cor.

T. B. r. come to Ephrata. S. there was a fields breadth or space of ground to come to Ephrata. C. T. B. about halfe a daies journey. G. about a mile. P. be. Cibrath, of Barah, to ear, which signifieth a space of ground which may be gone before the time of the first eating or baiting.

H. C. app. f. pr. S. ad. S. c. v. 21. He pitched his tents beyond the tower of the flocke. H. C. the tower of Eder. tel. Migdal Eder.
v. 22. Israel heard it, and it seemed evil in his sight. S. and Israel heard it. cat.
v. 27. to Mamre a citie of the field. S. kiriah-Arbe. B. a citie of Arbeh. caet.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

Quest. I. How the Lord spake to Iacob and when.

Vers. 1. THen God said to Iacob. 1. Whether God spake to Iacob by dreame or manifest vision is not expressed: whether way we take, there is no inconvenience: but it is most like that God spake to Iacob immediatly, as he used to doe to the patriarkes, without the ministery of prophets. 2. This was some thirty yeares after God had appeared to Iacob in Bethel: for he had beene 20. yeares in Labans house, 8. yeares in Sichem, 2. yeares in his journey, so that he was now about 106 yeares old: whereupon Rambam thinketh, that God punished Iacob in the ravishing of his daughter, because he had forgotten his vow, and so long deferred it, ex Mercer.

Quest. II. What strange Gods Iacob putteth away, and why so called.

Vers. 2. PVt away the strange Gods, &c. 1. These might be those idols which Rachel stole from Laban, as also such as were taken in the spoyle of the city of Sichem, Mercer. 2. Iacob neither winked at the superstition of Rachel, of a blind love toward her, as Calvin. neither needed he, instructed by revelation of this misdemeanour of his house, as Rupertus. Iacob was not like a stranger in his owne house, but that it might otherwise come to his notice. 3. They are called strange Gods, not because they estranged mens minds from God, or because they were the idols of devils, that were alienissimi, estranged in affection from men, Paret, or because they were strange, that is, unknown Gods, that were not able to helpe in the time of adversity, as Hebrai: but because they were the Gods of strange people from Israel: and so are the words truly translated, the Gods of strange people, &c.

Quest. III. Why Iacob did choose to bury, not to burne the idols.

Vers. 4. AND Iacob hid them under an oake, &c. 1. This is not to be imputed to Iacobs infirmity, that he burned not those idols, but buried them, as Calvin. 2. Nor yet did he burie them, because the matter thereof might afterwards serve for some profitable use: as some thinke that Iacob melted them, and imployed them toward the building of the temple, histor. scholastic. 3. Nor yet did Iacob melted them into one lumpe, and after buried them in a deep pit, as Tostatus. 4. But it is like that Iacob for haste of his journey, wanted opportunity to consume them with fire, Cajetanus: he chose in silence to burie them, for feare further to offend and exasperate the Canaanites, Mercer. did it in a secret and unknowne place, that his familie should not dote after them againe, &c.

Quest. IV. Why mention is made of the death of Deborah, Rebeckahs nurse.

Vers. 8. Deborah Rebeckahs nurse died, &c. 1. She is called Rebeckahs nurse, not because she suckled her, but was her bringer up and instructer. 2. Deborah was at this time about what age: for it was 170. yeares, since she came first with Rebeckah into Canaan, when shee may well be supposed to have beene 50. yeare old, having the charge and government of Rebeckah. 3. It is very like that Rebeckah was now departed, for otherwise Deborah would not have left her so long as she did. 4. There is no mention of Rebeckahs death, not because she was buried obscurely and in the night, as the Hebrews imagine, Isaack being blind, and none to bury her but Esau: but it is the use of Scripture to make rare mention of the death of women: in this place Deborahs death is recorded as an accident that fell out by the way, Mercer.

Quest. V. How Deborah came to be in Iacobs company.

NOw whereas the question is moved, how Deborah came to be in Iacobs company. 1. Neither is it like, that after she had accompanied Rebeckah into Canaan, she went back againe, and was so curious to goe and see Rebeckah, as Chrysostome: for shee was sent with Rebeckah to remaine with her. 2. Neither did she goe with Iacob at the first, when he went into Mesopotamia, as Calvin. for he went alone in Bethel. 3. Neither was she sent as a messenger to fetch Iacob out of Mesopotamia, as Rambam brewes: for he returned at Gods commandement, not at his mothers call. 4. Neither, as Rambam to be supposed, that Rebeckah had more nurses then one. 5. But it is like, that Deborah was sent to meet Iacob, being returned, Mercer. or went to him of her owne accord, after Rebeckahs death, Cajetan.

Quest. VI. Of the number of the visions wherein God appeared to Iacob.

Vers. 9. And God againe, God appeared unto Iacob, &c. Not as though this were the second vision (in all) that Iacob had: but it was another vision beside that mentioned in the beginning of the chapter where he is bid to goe up to Bethel: or it was the second time that God appeared unto him in Bethel: for otherwise, to count all the visions that Iacob had, this was in number the seventh. 1. God appeared unto him in Bethel, in the vision of the ladder. 2. When in a dreame he was shewed the parti-coloured sheepe, Genes. 31.11. 3. When the Lord bade him returne into his owne countrey, Gen. 31.3. 4. When the Angels met him, Gen. 32. 2. 5. When the Angell wrestled with him. 6. When God bid him goe up to Bethel. 7. God appeared againe unto him in Bethel, Perer.

QUEST. VII. Whether the name of Israel is here new imposed, or but renewed.

Vers. 10. THy name shall be no more called Iacob, but Israel, &c. 1. Neither is this the same vision which Iacob had when he wrestled with the Angel, (as Oleaster) because the same name is imposed: for the text saith, that God appeared againe to Iacob, vers. 9. that is, in Bethel. 2. Neither as Hierome thinketh, was the name of Iacob onely foretold then, and imposed now, tradit in Genes. as Peters name is changed, Iohn 1. but actually given him, Matth. 12. 16. Thom. Anglic. for before this, Iacob is twice called by the name of Israel, Genes. 33.10. and Gen. 34.7.3. Neither (as Tostatus, and Lyranus thinke) is the same name imposed in both places, but upon divers reasons: for in the first place hee is called Israel, because hee prevailed with God, and therefore much more with men, to signifie his fortitude in the active life: but here is named Israel, that is, seeing God, in respect of the contemplative life, the which he had now atchived: But there appeared no difference at all in the reason and signification of the name: for as there by the name Israel hee is comforted and fortified against Esau, so here against the Canaanites, that thought to have revenged the slaughter of the Sichemites. 4. Wherefore wee say, that the same name upon the like occasion is here imposed: and that this is but a repetition and confirmation of the other vision: and thereupon Iacob being confident, doth now more openly call himselfe Israel, Mercer. Iun. And so it is not unusuall in Scripture, to have the same promises often repeated: as those made to Abraham, of the multiplying of his seed, and possessing of the land of Canaan, which were often revived and renewed, as Gen. 15.17.22. Perer.

QUEST. VIII. How it is said thy name shall bee no more called Iacob.

FVrther, whereas the Lord saith, thy name shall be no more called Iacob, and yet hee is afterward called Iacob. 1. Augustine thinketh, that he was called Iacob in respect of this life onely, where he should wrestle (as his name signifieth) with many temptations: but hee was called Israel in respect of the life to come, quæst. 114. in Gen. But this solution beeing mysticall, and this mutation of Iacobs name historicall, satisfieth not. Much like is the solution of Tostatus, that he was called Iacob in respect of his active life, but Israel for his contemplative: neither is this answer sufficient, to say he should be called by both names, but in a diverse sense: for the text denieth unto him the name of Iacob any more. 3. Nor yet doe wee approve the solution of Cajetan. Vatab. that for vltra, no more, put in, tantum, thou shalt not onely be called Iacob: for thus the text is forced. 4. Pererius thus interpreteth; not that he should be so much called by the name Israel, as have the thing thereby signified, as strength and power with God: as it is said of Christ, he should be called Emanuel, that is, God with vs: yet was not Christ so called, who was indeed God with vs: But this sense is not so proper, for Iacob was usually called by the name of Israel. Therefore the meaning is rather this: that although the name of Iacob should remaine, yet the last was more honourable and excellent, and should obscure that other, Muscul. Mercer. 1. In respect of the author: the name Iacob was given by men, the name Israel by God: 2. In signification it was more excellent: Iacob signifieth a supplanter, because hee held Esau by the heele: but Israel is interpreted, one that prevailed with God: 3. The name Israel was given to the whole nation and posteritie of Iacob: who of Israel, were called Israelites, not of Iacob, Iacobites.

QUEST. IX. What Kings came out of Iacobs loynes.

Vers. 11. KIngs shall come out of thy loynes, &c. 1. The Hebrewes specially referre it to Saul and Isboseth that were Kings of Benjamin, and to the tribes of Ephraim and Manasses. 2. But because that Saul and his house were rejected of God, and the kingdome of Israel was but an usurpation: it is specially to be applied to David and the other kings of Iudah, Calvin. 3. It may also be understood of the kings of the Gentiles converted to the faith, who spiritually were borne of Iacob, Mercer. 4. These nations that came out of Iacobs loynes, were the twelve tribes, that multiplied & increased as so many severall nations.

QUEST. X. How the land of Canaan is given to Iacob.

Vers. 12. I will give the land, &c. 1. Iacob possessed this promised land in faith, his posteritie afterward actually entred into it. 2. The Hebrewes here understand an oath, that God sware unto Iacob, as Moses saith, Exod. 32. 13. Remember Abraham, Isaack, and Iacob, thy servants to whom thou sware'st, &c. but here no oath is expressed: the Lords word and promise includeth a secret oath: and that oath with the Lord expressely made to Abraham, concerned also his seed, Mercer. 3. The land is here promised to all Iacobs seed: but it was to Abraham restrained in Isaack, Ismael being excluded; to Isaack limited to Iacob, Esau excluded.

QUEST. XI. How the Lord is ſaid to have aſcended from Iacob.

Verſ. 13. GOd aſcended from him, or over him in the place, &c. 1. God in reſpect of us is ſaid to aſce and deſcend (who otherwiſe filleth every place with his maieſtie and preſence) when ſheweth any viſible figue of his glorie, as here to Iacob, Mercer. 2. The word is, magnal, over or upon whereupon the Hebrews note, that the righteous are as the Lords chariot, wherein he is as it were Mercer. 3. This aſcending of God, was truly fulfilled in Chriſt, who aſcending in perſon to his father, eth vs by faith after him, and with his divine preſence ſtill comforteth his Church. Calvin. 4. Where added, in the place where he talked with him, &c. it ſheweth the dignitie and prerogatiue of Bethel, Iacob, for the ſame cauſe ſo much honoured: as alſo how familiar unto Iacob theſe heauenly viſions were that Iacob without aſtoniſhment could perceive the Lord aſcending from him, Mercer.

QUEST. XII. What place Bethel was which Iacob the ſecond time ſo calleth.

Verſ. 14. IAcob ſet up a pillar, &c. verſ. 15. he called the name of the place Bethel, &c. Toſtatus is deceiued that thinketh this Bethel to be Jeruſalem, another from that Bethel which Iacob ſo called before, when he went into Meſopotamia, becauſe (ſaith he) hee went from Bethel to Bethlem, which diſtant but foure miles from Jeruſalem: but the other Bethel is remote from Jeruſalem twentie miles: cannot be ſhewed that ever Jeruſalem was called by the name of Bethel: and though Bethel were farre off from Bethlem, that is no argument for this opinion: for the text ſheweth not in what time came from Bethel to Bethlem, but onely that Iacob departed from Bethel, verſ. 16. 2. Neither is this herſall of that which Iacob had done before in Bethel, as Calvin. but he erecteth a pillar againe, as a nument of this ſecond apparition: the other pillar which hee ſet before being either prophaned, or in ſpace of thirtie yeares defaced, Iun. 3. Iacob both buildeth an altar in this place to offer ſacrifice unto verſ. 7. and erected a pillar as a memoriall of this heavenly viſion unto men, Mercer. 4. He confirmeth ſame name Bethel which he had given it before: like as Iſaack reneweth the name of Beerſheba, which his father had impoſed upon that place. 5. He both calleth the place where the altar was, Bethel, 7. as alſo the whole circuit of ground about it, where he reared the pillar, verſ. 15. ſic Mercer. Cajetan.

QUEST. XIII. How farre Iacob was from Bethlem, when Rachel traveled.

Verſ. 16. WHen he was a fields breadth from Ephrata, &c. 1. Neither is the Hebrew word here vſed, a proper name of a place, as the Septuag. reade: for they tranſlate it otherwiſe themſelves, Gen. 48. 7. hippodromum, an horſe race. 2. Neither can it be derived of cabir, which ſignifieth much, as R. Menahem, and Oleaſter, as though a great part of their iourney were behinde: and ven. tranſlate halfe a dayes journey: for Rambam that had ſeene thoſe places, ſaith, Rachels monument not one mile from Bethlem: Borcardus not above the flight of an arrow. 3. Neither is it like to bee from the word cebarah, which ſignifieth a five, as Bereſ. Rab. to betoken the ſpring time, when the is plowed, and as it were ſifted: or as Hieronme deriveth it from barah, to choſe, and maketh caph radical, but a ſervile letter, becauſe it was now the ſpring, the choyce time of the yeare: for the kibrath, muſt needs be taken for a ſpace of ground, 2. King. 5. 15. where Gehezi followeth after Naaman. 4. But this word betokeneth a ſmall ſpace of ground: Pegnine readeth a mile: the Chalde ſtadium, and the Septuagint, hippodromum, a horſerunne or race: Onkelos as much ground as may be plowed in a and ſo it may either be derived from kebarah, as Rabbi Leui, to ſignifie the plowed, tilled, or ſifted which are not farre from the citie: or making the letter caph to be none of the radicals, it may be from Barah, which is to eate, as Kimhi: and may be taken for ſo much ground, as one may well goe his firſt eating, that is, his break-faſt, a morning walke.

QUEST. XIIII. Why Iacob calleth his ſonne Benjamin

Verſ. 18. SHee called his name Benoni: but his father Benjamin. Iacob changeth the name of his ſon whom Rachel named the ſonne of her ſorrow, leſt it might have brought ſtill to his remembrance the loſſe of his deare wife: he calleth him Benjamin, the ſonne of his right hand: 1. Not for that onely was borne in Canaan in the ſouth part, which is at the right hand, if one turne his face to the riſing, as Raſi. Mercer. 2. Nor yet becauſe he was borne in Bethlem, within the tribe of Iudah, as Ramb. 3. Nor becauſe he bare this heavie croſſe ſtrongly, as Lyranus. 4. Or to ſhew that he had ſtrength to beget child in his old age, as Oleaſter. 5. But rather, to ſignifie how deare he ſhould be unto him for his mothers ſake, to be alwaies at his right hand, Muſcul. Iun. as alſo Iacob alludeth to the name that Rachel had given: declining as little as might be both from the ſound and ſenſe: for Benoni ſignifieth the ſon of labour or ſtrength: & ſo conſequently doth Benjamin, the ſon of the right hand, where the ſtrength lieth, Mercer.

QUEST. XV. The cauſes of Rachels hard travel which procured her death.

Verſ. 19. THus died Rachel, &c. Rachel died in trauaile: 1. it is impertinent here and vnneceſſarie to the cauſe of perilous & difficult trauaile: which may be cauſed, 1. Either by ſome defect in wombe: 2. Or by the greatnes of the infant, or the indiſpoſition thereof in the wombe, or ſome other in that behalfe. 3. Or when the mother laboureth of ſome other diſeaſe. 4. Or the woman beeing long trauaile. 5. Or be given to reſt, and ſo not breathed: for Ariſtotle ſaith, that exercitatio facit ut retinere poſſint, in qua re facilitas partus conciliatur: exerciſe cauſeth that they hold their breath, which the birth eaſie. Peter. ex Ariſtot. wherupon Plinie writeth, ſciſitationem in mulieribus lethalem, that

…uaile to women is mortall. 2. The Hebrewes thinke that Rachel being wearied in herjourney came be-…ore her time: but it is not like, that Iacob would have haſtened his journey, if his deareſt wife had beene …o neare her time. 3. Neither hath it any ground, that God puniſhed Iacob with the death of Deborah …nd Rachel, for the ſlaughter of the Sichemites, Mercer. 4. Rupertus, in that Deborahs death and Rachels is …xpreſſed, Rebeckaes and Leahs death concealed, thereby reſembleth the Synagogue of the Iewes, which …e would have prefigured by Deborah and Rachel: for ſo their Synagogue did die and fall away, the …hurch of the Gentiles revived and increaſed. But ſuch allegories doe not much perſwade, having no war-…ant or ground in Scripture.

QUEST. XVI. Of the names Ephratha and Bethlem, why and by whom they tooke beginning.

Verſ. 19. EPhrath which is Bethlem. 1. Some thinke that this place was called Ephratha, of Calebs wife Ephrata, 1. Chron. 2. 9. which Caleb was ſonne of Hezron, and went downe with Iacob into Egypt: and afterwards it was called Bethlem, that is, the houſe of bread, after the famine in Elimelech, and Ruths time, of the aboundance of corne, R. Salomon. Lyran. 2. Toſtatus miſliketh this o-…inion, becauſe this Caleb that went downe into Egypt, muſt be 215. yeare old and more, if he ſurvived …o returne with the Iſraelites into the Land of Canaan: at which time it is like Ephrata tooke the name: …nd beſide, if the name Bethlem were given in Elimelechs time; how commeth it to be uſed by Moſes ſo …ong before? But theſe reaſons may be eaſily anſwered: for the name Ephrata might be given by the ſe-…ond Caleb after his grandfathers name: and divers names are inſerted into this hiſtory, not knowne in …oſes time, as the name Dan, Gen. 14. 14. which were added by way of explanation, by thoſe Prophets …irected by the ſpirit of God, which diſpoſed the Scripture into order, Perer. 3. But it is more likely, …hat this place had both theſe names of the fruitfulneſſe of the ground: for ſo Ephrath is derived of Pha-…, which ſignifieth to fructifie, and it was afterward called Bethlem, the houſe of bread, Mercer. but …y whom theſe names and when they were impoſed, is uncertaine.

QUEST. XVII. Of the tower of Ader where Iacob pitched his tents.

Verſ. 21. Iſrael, &c. pitched his tent beyond the tower of Ader, or of the flocks. 1. The Hebrewes, in this place, doe hold, that the temple was afterward built: becauſe the Prophet calleth Sion the …ower of the flock, Micah. 4. 7. but that cannot be: for this tower where Iacob pitched, was not far from …ethlem, about a mile, Munſcul. but Ieruſalem was further off, Mercer. yet this name was given to Sion, …ecauſe the people aſſembled thither in flocks, or becauſe of the flocks of ſheepe thither brought to be …acrificed, Perer. 2. This tower was made for the ſafegard of the ſhepherds in that country, that uſed to …atch their flocks by night: and Hierome well obſerveth this to be a type and propheſie of thoſe ſhep-…erds, which in this very place watched their flocks at the birth of Chriſt: where afterward Helena, for …emoriall of the apparition of the Angels unto them, builded a temple, Perer. Luther.

QUEST. XVIII. Of the inceſt of Ruben with Bilha.

Verſ. 22. RVben went and lay with Bilha his fathers concubine, &c. 1. The Hebrewes to excuſe the ſinnes of their fathers, here imagine that Ruben did not commit inceſt with Bilha, but only …ſt out her bed out of Rachels tabernacle, where Iacob had placed it after Rachels death: whereas the …xt is evident, that he ſlept with Bilha. In like manner they would excuſe the offence of Elie his ſons; …at they did not lie with the women at the gates of the temple, but onely deferred their buſineſſe, and …kept them longer from their husbands: contrary to the evidence of the hiſtory, 1. Sam. 2. 22. 2. Iacob …ough he might have uſed the ſword in this caſe, yet leaveth the puniſhment to God: but for this ſinne …f defiling his fathers bed, Ruben loſt his birthright, which was given to Ioſeph in reſpect of his double …ortion, the principality to Iudah, 1. Chron. 5. 1. 3. This was a very great ſinne to commit uncleanneſſe …ith his fathers concubine, which was as his wife: ſuch fornication as was not once named among the …entiles, as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1 Cor. 5. 1. for Antiochus the ſonne of Seleucus, being in love with Strato-…e his mother in law, yet for ſhame concealed it, and fell into a moſt grievous diſeaſe. Hippolitus is fa-…ous in the tragedie, for reſiſting the unlawfull luſt of Phædra his mother in law. 4. Some thinke that after …is time Iacob did refraine the company of his wives, but that is uncertaine, Mercer. It is moſt like, that he …er this accompanied not with Bilha; as David ſerved his concubines which Abſolom went in unto; …Sam. 20. 3.

QUEST. XIX. Of the genealogie of the Patriarkes wherefore it is here ſet downe.

Verſ. 26. THeſe are the ſonnes of Iacob, which were borne him in Meſopotamia, &c. 1. Moſes ſetteth here downe together the number of Iacobs ſonnes. 1. Becauſe after this he had no more ſonnes …me. 2. As alſo Ruben is counted among them, to ſhew that although he had fallen into this grievous ſin, …t the Lord vouchſafed to count him among the Patriarkes. 3. As alſo to diſtinguiſh betweene Iacob …d Eſaus progenie, which Moſes proſecuteth in the next chapter, Mercer. Perer. 2. Dinah is not rehearſed …ong them, becauſe ſhe made no tribe, Mercer. Neither uſeth the Scripture to ſet downe the genealogie …women, Perer. 3. The word is put in the ſingular number, which was borne, for the plurall, not for any …ch myſtery as the Hebrewes note, to ſhew that they were all begotten by one man, or to ſhadow the …th of the Meſſiah: but it is a property of the Hebrew ſpeech, to uſe the ſingular for the plurall. 4. All …eſe are ſaid to be born in Meſopotamia, whereas Benjamin was born in Canaan, as Chryſoſtome thinketh, …t Benjamin was borne ten yeares after Iacob departed from Meſopotamia: but here by a ſynechdoche, ac-…rding to the uſe of the Scripture, that is affirmed of all which agreed to the moſt, Mercer. Perer. So Iohn

How Benjamin is numbred among thoſe that were borne in Meſopotamia.

20. 24. Thomas is called one of the twelve, there being but eleven, Iudas having hanged himselfe: and so S. Marke calleth them the eleven, Marke 16. 14.

QUEST. XX. At what time Iacob came to Isaack his father.

Vers. 27. Then Iacob came to Isaack his father. 1. Although now at the length, ten yeares after Iacobs returne into Canaan, hee came first to Isaack with his whole family, yet it is not unlike, but that Iacob went often over to see his father, they dwelling not farre asunder, Mercer. 2. Mention is not made of Rebecca, who is supposed at this time to have beene dead; which is thought also to be the cause of Isaacks being in Hebron, whom Iacob at his departure left in Beersheba: that Isaack remoued thither to burie his wife there, Muscul. 3. Iacob neither came to Isaack so soone, as some Hebrewes thinke, that he ministred 22. yeares to his father after his returne out of Mesopotamia: neither staied he away from him so long, as some gather, that is twenty yeares in Mesopotamia, and 23. yeares in Canaan, in all 43. yeares, Muscul. for Iacob could spend no fewer then 9. or. 10. yeares in Canaan, before he came to Isaack: seeing Dinah not above six or seven yeares old at Iacobs departure out of Mesopotamia, was defloured at 15. or 16. yeares of her age, then being marriageable, before Iacob came at Isaacks: and when Ioseph was 17. yeare old, he was then come to that land, where his father was a stranger, Gen. 37. 1, 2. that is, to Hebron, where Abraham and Isaack were strangers, Gen. 35. 27. and this was twelve or thirteene yeares before Isaack died, as shall appeare in the next question following.

QUEST. XXI. Ioseph sold into Egypt twelve yeares before Isaack died: yet it is set downe after.

Vers. 21. The daies of Isaack were 180. This is set downe by way of anticipation: for Ioseph was sold into Egypt, before Isaack died: as it is shewed thus. 1. Iacob when Isaack was 180. must be 120. yeare old, for he was borne in Isaacks 60. yeare. 2. Then at such time as Ioseph was 39. (for he was 30. when he stood before Pharao, and seven yeares of plenty, and two of famine were past, before his father came into Egypt) then was Iacob 130. and at seventeene yeare old, was Ioseph sold into Egypt. 3. If at Iosephs 39. Iacob was 130. then at Iosephs seventeene, Iacob must be an hundred and eight: then was Isaack but 168. wherefore it must needs follow, that Ioseph was sold into Egypt, twelve yeare before his grandfather Isaack died: and that so long Iacob dwelt with Isaack: for it is not like, but that Isaack saw all Iacobs children before he died, and blessed them, and that Ioseph had seene Isaack before he was sold into bondage.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the distinction of the persons in the Trinitie.

Vers. 1. Then God said arise, &c. and make an altar unto God, &c. Although it be the use of the Hebrew speach, to bring in one speaking of himselfe in the third person, as Ierem. 2. 19, Know that it is an evill thing, that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God, and that my feare is not in thee: yet notwithstanding, we may observe in this manner of speech a further mystery, as Hillary and Augustine, out of the place, where God said, build an altar unto God, doe prove a distinction of persons in the Trinitie. Deus honorem deo postulat, God willeth honour to be given to God, Hillar. God the father, to God the sonne.

2. Doct. Two parts of sanctification, the internall and externall.

Vers. 2. Cleanse your selves, and change your garments. Here are two parts of their sanctification expressed: the internall as the principall in the clensing of their minds, the externall in the change of their garments: which served in those daies, to stir up their inward devotion. So the Lord said to Moses, when he was to appeare in Mount Sinai, Sanctifie them, &c. and let them wash their cloathes, Exod. 19. 10. But the inward sanctification was that, which the Lord had respect unto, Ioel. 2. 13. Rend your hearts and not your cloathes, and turne to the Lord.

3. Doct. Gods promises most certaine.

Vers. 12. I will give thee this land which I gave to Abraham. This land was onely promised to Abraham, and yet it is said to be given: Gods promises then are so certaine, as if they were already fulfilled, Muscul. so the Prophet saith, The Lord of hosts hath sworne, surely as I have purposed, so shall it come to passe, &c. Isay. 14. 24.

4. Doct. The carefull buriall of the dead an argument of the resurrection.

Vers. 20. Iacob set a pillar upon her grave. The Gentiles did bestow superfluous cost upon the tombes of the dead, some thereby thinking to finde solace and comfort in their griefe, some taking occasion thereby to commit idolatry. But Iacob maketh a memoriall of Rachels sepulture, not onely to testifie his love, and to continue a remembrance of this vertuous matron, one of the mothers of Israel unto posterity, but chiefly to expresse and professe his hope of the resurrection: for if there were no more hope of the bodies of the Saints, than of beasts, to what end should so much care be taken in committing them in an honest and decent manner to Christian sepulture? Calvin. Pererius. Thus Martha confesseth her faith concerning her brother Lazarus, that was laid in his grave: I know he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day. Ioh. 11, 24.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against the popish reliques and monuments of idolatry.

Vers. 4. IN that they gave to Iacob their earings as consecrate to idolatry, and Iacob buried them under an oake: it teacheth us, that all the monuments of idolatry ought to be abolished: and that not onely the Idols themselves are abhominable, but all the ornaments which belong thereunto: such as are many in the Romane Synagogue, who garnish their idols, with ringes, rablets, pretious stones and iewels, Calvin. all which things ought to be abhorred, as the idols themselves: as the prophet saith: Yee shall pollute the coverings of the images of silver, and the rich ornaments of the images of gold, and cast them away as a menstruous cloth, Isay. 30. 22.

2. Confut. The Iewes called Gojim, that is, Gentiles.

Vers. 11. MVltitude of nations, shall spring of thee. For the twelve tribes, were as so many nations: the word is Gojim: which the Iewes approbriously call the Gentiles by: whereas in this place, they are called, Gojim, Gentiles, unlesse they will deny themselves to have sprung out of Iacob, Iosue Mustul.

3. Confut. Against the superstitious choosing of places for burialls.

Vers. 19. RAchel died, and was buried in the way to Ephrath. In that Iacob carried not Rachels body to be buried in Mamre, where Abraham and Sarah were buried: but interred her in the very way: wee see that it skilleth not in respect of the dead, where their bodies are laid, Mustul. That superstitious use then of the papists is reprooved, in transporting of bodies from place to place, and in covering to be buried in one place more than another, of a superstitious minde, as neare the altar, rather then further of, and in the Church of such an order of Friers, rather then in any other. Whersoever the body is laid, we know that God shall find it in the resurrection: even the Sea shall give up her dead, Reuelat. 20. 13.

4. Confut. Gods election certaine and infallible.

Vers. 23. RVben, Iacobs eldest sonne. Though Ruben had fallen into the most grievous sinne of incest, yet the Lord doth not utterly cast him off, but reserveth unto him a place and calling among the 12. Patriarkes. By this we learne, that Gods election changeth not, but whatsoever he hath decreed concerning any mans salvation shall stand, Calvin. For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance, Rom. 11. 29. Yet must not this doctrine make us secure, to sinne presumptuously, trusting to Gods election: but as the Apostle saith, We must worke out our salvation with feare and trembling, lest we be circumvented of Sathan, and prevented of that which we vainly hoped for.

Confut. Against the errour of the Novatians.

THis example of Ruben, notwithstanding his fall, restored to his patriarchal dignity, doth further confute that error of the Novatians, who denied pardon to those which were fallen, and refused to receive them into their society and congregation, Calvin. We see that our Saviour Christ, when Peter had thrice denied him, yet vouchsafed to receive him to mercy, and to confirme him in his Apostleship.

6. Places of morall observation.

1. Observ. Amendment of life delivereth from dangers.

Vers. 2. THen said Iacob, put away the strange Gods, &c. Iacob being in great danger, doth purge and cleanse his household, so the next way to finde deliverance, and to obtaine protection from God, is to amend our life, and to renew our hearts, and to turne every man from his evill wayes, Perer. Hereupon Balaam gave that wicked counsell to put a stumbling blocke before the Israelites, to cause them to sinne, that they might run into Gods displeasure, and be out of his protection.

2. Observ. The people must shew themselves willing to be reformed.

Vers. 4. THey gave unto Iacob all the strange gods. Herein appeareth the singular and prompt obedience of Iacobs household, who are contented to put away their idols, iewels and earerings, wherein they had so much before delighted, Mercer. which teacheth, that the people should shew themselves ready and willing to be reclaimed from their superstitions and corruptions of life: as we read, that the souldiers and people came unto Iohn and asked him, Master, what shall we doe? Luk. 3.

3. Observ. God striketh feare into mens hearts.

Vers. 5. THe feare of God was upon the cities. Thus God is able to command the affections of men, and to smite them with feare, where otherwise there is no apparent cause of feare, as here the strong and populous cities of Canaan are afraid of Iacob: So Rahab confessed to the spies, the feare of you is fallen upon us, Iosu. 2. 9. Thus God is able to deliver his Church, whereas no other meanes are at hand, by terrifying the hearts of the enemies thereof.

Observ.

4. Obſerv. It is lawfull and commendable to mourne moderately for the dead.

Verſ. 8. IAcob and his company made ſuch lamentation for the departure of that godly matron Debo-rah, that he called the place the oake of lamentation. It is not then unlawfull to mourne for the dead, nay it is an uncomly thing to ſhew drie cheekes in the funeralls of parents, wives, and children, as ſome doe. S Paul forbideth not to mourne for the dead, but not as they that have no hope, 1. Theſſal. 4. Muſcul.

5. Obſerv. Our joyes in this life are mixed with ſorrow.

Verſ. 19. THus died Rachel. Iacob doth not ſo much rejoyce for the birth of Benjamin, as he hath occaſion of griefe offered for the loſſe and death of deare Rachel; thus the Lord ſeeth it to be good to temper our joy with ſorrow; and therein we ſee the mutable and changeable condition of this life, which affordeth no perpetuall and conſtant joy, Perer. And therefore amidſt our joyes, it is good to arme our ſelves againſt ſorrowe; as Iob in the midſt of his proſperous eſtate, did looke for adverſity, ſaying, The thing which I feared is now come upon me, Iob. 3. 25.

6. Obſerv. One affliction followeth after another.

WE ſee further, that Iacobs life was a continuall warfare: ſtill one temptation followed in the necke of another. 1. Dinah was raviſhed. 2. Simeon and Levi put the city to the ſword. 3. Deborah dieth. 4. Then Rachel his beloved wife. 5. Then Ruben commiteth inceſt. 6. Ioſeph is ſold into Egypt. 7. Iſaack dieth. 8. Benjamin is alſo taken from him to goe into Egypt. Thus many are the temptations and tribulations, wherewith the Lord trieth his children, Calvin. We learne, that while we live here, we ſhould prepare our ſelves for croſſes and afflictions: and when we are eſcaped one, to looke preſently for another. This was Iobs caſe, when one meſſenger followed at the heeles of another, bringing him evill tidings, Iob. 1.

7. Obſerv. Godly women may die in childbirth.

Verſ. 18. AS ſhee was about to yeeld up the ghoſt, &c. The Hebrewes note three women in Scripture that died in travaile; Rachel the wife of Phinehes the ſonne of Eli, and Michol Davids wife, becauſe it is ſaid, ſhe had no children till the day of her death: but this is a ſimple conjecture; the meaning is, that ſhe had no children at all, Mercer. But we ſee by this example, that even godly women may have Rachels lot to die in travaile: and therefore ſuch are not to bee diſcomforted, if it pleaſe God that they ſo end their daies.

8. Obſerv. Great blemiſhes ſometime fall out in the church of God.

Verſ. 21. RVben lay with his fathers concubine, &c. It need not then ſeeme ſtrange, if ſuch blemiſhes fall out ſometime in the Church of God, and families of Saints; as Ruben Here commits inceſt in Iacobs houſe, and it ſeemeth Bilha the mother of two tribes in Iſrael, was conſenting thereunto; ſo among the Corinthians, a young man had his fathers wife, 1. Cor. 5, 1. Mercer.

3. The Explanation of doubtfull queſtions.

QUEST. I. The order of time of the things ſet downe in the chapter.

Verſ. 1. NOw theſe are the generations of Eſau. 1. Theſe things which are declared in the chapters following, from 35. to 41. are ſet downe out of their place, as all going before the death of Iſaack who ſaw his ſonne Eſau married, and greatly encreaſed: he knew of the inceſt of Iudah with Thamar, and of Ioſephs ſelling into Egypt, Luther. 2. For Eſau was 120. yeares old, when Iſaack died at 180. therefore the hiſtory of this chapter was before Iſaacks death, Perer. 3. The ſelling of Ioſeph into Egypt was 12. yeares before Iſaacks death, as is proved, Queſt. 21. of the former chapter: who is thought to be delivered out of priſon the ſame yeare that Iſaack died, thirteene yeare after he was ſold by his brethren, Mercer.

QUEST. II. Of Adah Eſaus wife.

Verſ. 2. ADah the daughter of Elon. 1. This Adah is not the ſame, before called Iudith the daughter of Beeri, Gen. 26. 34. as ſome Hebrewes: which they would have firſt ſo called becauſe ſhe profeſſed God, but afterward being given too much to the decking of her ſelfe, ſhe was called Adah of adah a iewel or ornament. But this Adah is the other called Baſemath, which is there ſaid to be the daughter of Elon the Hittite: for it is no rare thing in Scripture for men and women to be called by diuers names: as Maacah the daughter of Abſalom the mother of Abiah, 1. King. 15. 2. is called Micajah of Vriel, 2. Chron. 13. 2.

2. Concerning Aholibamah the ſecond wife of Eſau: 1. theſe are neither other wives beſide thoſe which Eſau maried before, as Ramban thinketh, who maketh Eſau to have had 5. wives in all: for the Scripture maketh mention but of three wives that Eſau had: and here it is therefore ſaid, not that hee tooke wives, but his wives, as having relation to thoſe which were his wives before: ſo that this Aholibamah, is the ſame which is called Iudith before. 2. Shee is ſaid to be the daughter of Anah, not the ſonne, (as the Greeke and Latin readeth) but daughter of Sibeon: for the word is bath, not ben: neither is it meant that Anah was the daughter of Sibeon, as ſome reade: for Anah was Sibeons ſon, verſ. 14. a man not a women: nor yet as the Hebrewes fable, this Aholibamah is ſaid to bee the daughter of Anah and of Sibeon, two brothers, as begotten in inceſt, or of Sibeon the father of Anah: But this is added by way of diſtinction, becauſe there were two called Anah: one brother to Sibeon, verſ. 20. another ſonne of Sibeon, verſ. 24. this Aholibamah was daughter to Anah ſonne of Sibeon, and ſo alſo is ſaid to bee the daughter, that is, neice of Sibeon, Iun. Mercer. 3. And whereas her father is before called an Hittite, but here an Hivite: that is, becauſe the Hivites were the greater nation, and comprehended alſo the Hittites, Iun. or the one may be underſtood of the father, the other of the grandfather, Mercer.

Aholibamah whether the ſame with Iudith.

Of Sibeon and Anah.

3. Baſemath, that is, the ſame before called Mahalah, Gen. 28. 9. firſt ſo named, becauſe ſhe was ſickly, of chalah, to be ſicke, afterward Baſemath, of apleaſant ſmel, Ramban. others will have her ſo named, for offring incenſe to idols, Raſi. but the derivations of names are uncertaine: it appeareth, that the daughter of Iſmael whom Eſau married was called by two names, Iun.

Baſemath Iſmaels daughter.

QUEST. III. Whether this Eliphaz were one of Iobs friends.

Verſ. 4. ADa bare unto Eſau Eliphaz. This is not like to be that Eliphaz, which was Iobs friend, though he might be of his poſterity, for theſe reaſons: 1. that Eliphaz is called a Temanite: but Teman was one of the ſonnes of this Eliphaz, who is not like to have taken denomination of his ſonne, Mer. 2. this Eliphaz could not be much leſſe than 70. or 80. yeare old, when Iſaack died at 180. for Eſau 60. yeares younger than Iſaack, married at 40. yeares: then Eliphaz his firſt borne was not much more then 20. yeares younger than Iſaack. And by this it would follow, that Iob, that lived with Eliphaz, ſhould have beene many yeares before the departure of Iſrael out of Egypt, which is uncertaine, Muſcul.

QUEST. IV. Why Aholibamah the ſecond wife is laſt named.

Verſ. 5. AHolibamah bare Leuah, &c. Aholibamah is ſet after the other two wives, whereas Eſau married her before he took Iſmaels daughter. 1. Some thinke, becauſe ſhe was the laſt of the three that bare him children: but that is not like, that ſhe began to beare, after 36. or 37. yeares, having many many children. 2. It is more like, that Aholibamah had children before, which died, and therefore they are not rehearsed. 3. But the most like conjecture is, that the other two are named first, because they bore but each of them a sonne: Aholibamah is named last, because she had divers sonnes, and therefore Moses was to insist longer in her generation: or else, seeing the Scripture doth often invert and change the order of time in history, we need not much stand upon this point, who are first or last named, Mercer.

QUEST. V. Corah how he is said to be the sonne of Esau by Aholibamah, and the sonne of Eliphaz.

Vers. 5. WHereas Corah is named among the sonnes of Aholibamah, vers. 5. and yet is numbred also among the sonnes of Eliphaz of Adah, vers. 16. 1. neither for solution of this doubt need wee with the Hebrewes, to imagine that Corah was the sonne of Eliphaz, by Aholibamah Esaus wife, who committed Incest with her: for then the Scripture would not before have set him downe as the sonne of Esau. 2. R. Levi thinketh, that when Aholibamah was dead, Eliphaz brought up Corah the youngest sonne of Aholibamah, among his owne children, and so he is reckoned with the rest of Eliphaz sonnes: but in this case, the Scripture would not have altered, sometime making Corah the sonne of Esau, sometime of Eliphaz. 3. Therefore we thinke rather, that there were two of this name, one brother to Eliphaz by Aholibamah, the other Eliphaz sonne, or nephew: as in this chapter, there are two Anah mentioned, the one brother, the other sonne of Sibeon, vers. 20. 24. Mercer. And further, whereas Corah is not reckoned in the first place among Eliphaz sonnes, vers. 11. 12. yet afterward he hath his place among the Dukes of Eliphaz, vers. 16. it is like he was the nephew rather than the sonne of Eliphaz, who was famous among the rest, and therefore is named among the honourable dukes of Eliphaz, Iun.

QUEST. VI. When Esau departed from Iacob into mount Seir.

Vers. 6. WEnt into a country away from the face of Iacob, &c. 1. This can neither be understood of Esaus first departure, after Iacob was gone into Mesopotamia: for Esau could not be said to goe away from Iacobs face, he being absent: and to say, that Isaack reserved a double part for Iacob, as the first-borne, and sent Esau away, it would have exasperated him so much the more. 2. Neither yet was this the first time of Esaus going to dwell in Seir, after Iacobs returne: for Iacob sent messengers before to Esau into the country of Seir, from whence he came with 400. men, Gen. 32. 3. And that supposition is somewhat rackt, to interpret for [from the face of Iacob] before his comming, Iun. for in the next verse the reason of Esaus departure is yeelded, for that they (not Isaack and Esau, as Iun.) but Esau and Iacob, whereof immediate mention before was made, could not dwell together by reason of their substance. 4. therefore the right solution is, that Esau first dwelled in the country of Seir, while Iacob was in Mesopotamia, removing from his father, either upon displeasure, for the losse of his birthright, or because of the unquietnesse of his wives, that were an offence to his parents: or for that he was tied by marriage to the Hivites that dwelt in Seir: for Aholibamah was the daughter of Anah, of Sibeon the Hivite, Gen. 36. 2. 24. Muscul. But as yet Esau had not removed all his goods and substance to mount Seir, which he had not full and peaceable possession of, before the Hivites were thence expelled, Rambam. And afterwards Esau returned from thence to visit his father, and having performed his last duty, in the buriall of Isaack, he then finally departed altogether, sic August. Mercer.

QUEST. VII. The cause of Esaus departure from Iacob.

Vers. 7. THeir riches were great, and they could not dwell together. These then were the causes of Esaus departure from Iacob. 1. As it is here expressed, their substance was so great, that they could not inhabit together: not as though the land of Canaan were not sufficient for both: but that corner in Hebron, where they inhabited as strangers, was too scant for their great flocks of cattell, Mercer. 2. Beside Esau had a minde to mount Seir, as fitter for his study and trade of life, who was given to hunting, Perer. and for that his wives were of that country, and he had dwelt sometime there already. 3. Almost of all Gods providence herein appeared, to separate these brethren, both for the commodious and quiet dwelling of Iacob, who would continually have incurred the offence of his brother: as also here the Lord provided for Esaus posterity, that they should not dwell in Canaan, lest with the rest of the Canaanites they might have beene destroyed by the Israelites, to whom that land was promised, Pererius.

QUEST. VIII. How the generations of Esau are said to be borne in mount Seir.

Vers. 9. THese are the generations of Esau, father of Edom in mount Seir, &c. 1. Edom is the name also of Esau, but here it is taken for the Idumeans, the posterity of Esau, Calvin. 2. Whereas before these sonnes here rehearsed were said to be borne in Canaan, vers. 5. we must either understand, not that these generations were borne, but dwelt in Seir, Muscul. or it must be referred not to the sons of Esau, which are againe rehearsed, but to his nephewes, his sonnes children, which might be borne in Mount Seir, Mercer.

QUEST. IX. Of Thimna the mother of Amalek.

Vers. 12. THimna was concubine to Eliphaz. 1. Neither was this Thimna Eliphaz daughter which he had by the wife of Seir, as the Hebrewes imagine, which afterward was his concubine. 2. Neither had Eliphaz a sonne called Thimna by this Thimna, beside Amalech: because, 1 Chron. 1. 36. Thimna and Amalek are numbred among Eliphaz sons: for there, Thimna the mother is set before Amalek her sonne, because he was borne to Eliphaz, of his concubine, and therefore Iunius inserteth well by way of explanation, the sonne of Thimna, Amalek. 3. Yet Thimna and Aholibamah mentioned 40.41. are the names of men, who were so called by the names of the first mothers of that nation, Iun. This Thimna then was the daughter of Seir the Sister of Lotan, verse 22. which being a little one, might be brought up with Eliphaz his sonnes, and afterward become his concubine, Mercer. 5. Amalek is here shewed to come of Eliphaz by his concubine Thimna, to shew a difference betweene the right sonnes of Eliphaz, and his bastard sonne Amalek, of whom came the Amalekites whom God commanded to be destroyed, whereas the Idumeans God would have to be preserved, Mercer. 6. Whereas vers. 16. Amalek is counted among the sonnes of Eliphaz by Adah, whereas his mother was Thimna, it is like that Adah made him her adopted sonne, and so he is numbred with the rest, Luther.

Amalek how counted among the sons Adah.

Quest. X. Of Seir the Horite, of whom the mount Seir was so called.

Verse 20. These are the sonnes of Seir the Horite, &c. 1. For the name Seir, which signifieth hairie, both Esau was so called, Gen. 25. 25. and this Seir, who first gave the name to mount Seir, before Esau came thither: some of the Hebrewes thinke, the place was so called Seir, of the apparitions of devils, who shewed themselves as hairy men, such as the Faunes were imagined to be. But it is more like that the place tooke denomination of this Seir, which there inhabited before Esau, Mercer. 2. Horite is not here an appellative, but a proper name, it signifieth, free, noble, and they were the same with the Hivites: as Sibeon the sonne of this Seir the Horite, is called an Hivite, Gen. 36. 2. Iun. These were the ancient inhabitants of Mount Seir, surprised sometime by the foure kings of the East, Gen. 14. 6.

Of the Horites, what people they were.

Quest. XI. Whether Anah first found out the generation of mules in the wildernesse.

Vers. 24. This is that Anah that found mules, &c. 1. The Septuagint make it a proper name, reading Iemim, not knowing as it should seeme, what to make of it. 2. The Chalde, interpreting it Giants, that Anah found, that is, overcame gyants in the wildernesse: in which sense the word is laid in the psalme to finde out his enemies: but then it should be eemim, with aleph, not ieemim. Other doth reade, he found out maria, sea or salt waters in the wildernesse: but then the word should be Iamim. Hierome translateth hot waters: for so saith he the word signifieth in the Punicke language: but we must not fetch the originall of an Hebrew word from another tongue. 3. Wherefore the best reading is to find mules: that is, first coupled divers kinds together, the he asse and the mare, of whom came mules: thus the word is best interpreted, though it be only found in this place, both because the circumstance of the place giveth it: for hee kept his fathers asses: as also the thing may bee noted for the singularitie of it, being a mixture of divers kinds against nature: and therefore the mules togender not: which is forbidden also by Moses law, Levit. 19. 19. Thou shalt not suffer thy cattell to gender with other kinds, Iun. Mercer. Iun. Rupert. Lyran. &c. But Pererius misliketh this opinion though with no great reason.

Quest. XII. Of Dishon and Aholibamah.

Vers. 25. The children of Anah were these, Dishon and Aholibamah, &c. 1. This Anah is not the same which in the verse before is said to have found out the mules, but he is the fourth sonne of Seir named before, vers. 20. for the generation of Seirs seven sonnes is set downe in order. It seemeth also, as there were two called Anah, one the brother of Sibeon, vers. 20. the other the son of Sibeon, vers. 24. so there were two women of the same name Aholibamah: one the daughter of Anah, Sibeons brother here mentioned: the other the daughter of Anah, Sibeons son, the wife of Esau, vers. 2. so that this Aholibamah is not the same with the other, as Iunius with some other Hebrews thinke. 2. So Dishon here is the sonne of Anah, the fourth sonne of Seir: there is another Dishon also brother to Anah the fift sonne of Seir, whose generation is expressed, verse 27. there is a third Dishon or Dishan, brother to this last Dishon, the 7 sonne of Seir, who is called Dishan, vers. 21. with this difference: the first Dishon is written Dishon, with vau, without jod: the second the seventh sonne of Seir, Dishan, with jod without vau: the third the sonne of Anah, without either jod or vau: although this difference bee not alwayes kept: vers. 26. 28. they are both called Dishan with the same letters.

Dishon, three of that name.

Quest. XIII. Of the number and time of the kings of Edom.

Vers. 31. These are the kings that reigned in the land of Edom, &c. 1. The Hebrews are somewhat curious, who against these eight Kings of the Edomites, set as many kings of Iudah, Saul, Ishbosheth, David, Salomon, Rehoboam, Abia, Asa, Iehoshaphat, during whose time there was no king in Edom: but in the reigne of Ioram, Iehoshaphats sonne the Edomites rebelled, and made themselves a king, 2 King. 8. 20. that king of Edom in the time of Iehoshaphat, was no absolute king, but a Vicetroy, deputed by the Iewes, 1 King. 22. 47. Beside they note, that Edom had 8. kings, because Iacob 8. times calleth him Adonai, Lord, Mercer. 2. He meaneth not those kings of Israel, which succeeded after Saul, as Mercer. for there were many more kings in Edom, before Saul was elected their king: though I deny not but Moses by the spirit of prophecie, did foresee, that there should be kings in Israel: as he describeth the duety of a king, Deut. 17. 3. Moses then meaneth, before there was any certaine forme of government, or supreme magistrate in Israel, that is, till his time, who is said to be as a king, Deut. 33. 5. sic Aben Ezra, though learned Mercerus mislike this opinion.

Quest. XIV. Bela the sonne of Beor, neither Balaam nor Balac.

Vers. 32. Bela the sonne of Beor. 1. This neither could be Balaam, that troubled Israel, as some thinke, who neither was a king, nor yet an Idumean, but a Syrian. 2. Nor yet Balac, as the Septuagint reade, who was the sonne of Zippor, not of Beor, and king of the Moabites, not of the Edomites, Mercer. and this Bela being the first king of the Edomites, was long before the time of Moses.

Quest.

QUEST. XIV. Of what country and kindred Iob was.

Vers. 33. IObab the sonne of Zerah of Bozrah. 1. This neither was Iob that famous man for his patience whose book is canonicall, as thinketh Tostatus: and it is affirmed by the Septuagint in the end of Iob, that he was this Iobab the sonne of Zerah, the sixt from Abraham: for there is great difference of the names, Iob is written with aleph, in the beginning: but Iobab, without aleph, Mercer. Against dwelt in the land of Huz: but this Iobab was of Bozrah, in the confines of Moab and Idumea: it be gathered that Iob was a king, though hee were a man in authority for his wisdome and 2. Some affirme Iob to be a Canaanite, and apply that place, Numb. 24. 7. where it is said of the C nites, their shield is gone from them, unto Iob, who while he lived, by his righteousnesse delivered Cana Salomon. 3. Cajetan thinketh that Iob was an Arabian of Arabia-Petræa. But it is not like that Iob tuous a man came of cursed Cham the father of the Canaanites and Arabians: and all the rest of Iobs were either of Abraham, Nachor, or Esau, whom hee calleth his brethren. 4. Neither was Iob posterity of Nachor Abrahams brother, which is the opinion of Hierome, Lyranus, with some other for though Huz were one of Nachors sonnes, yet it is more like that the first Huz the sonne of Sem, Genes. 10. 22. gave denomination to Iobs country: and as Elihu one of Iobs friends was a Buzite of Nachor, Iob. 32. 2. so Bildad was a Shuite of Abraham by Keturah, Eliphaz a Temanite of Esau, t fore that concludeth not that he descended of Nachor. 5. Nor yet doe I thinke, that Iob was of the rity of Esau, which is the common opinion of Chrysost. Augustine, Theodoret, and of the new Mercer, Perer, with others. 1. For though the daughter of Edom be said to dwell in the land of Huz 4. 21. because Edom had so farre extended their habitation: yet they were two divers and distinct tries in themselves, as may appeare, Ierem. 25. 20, 21. where Huz and Edom are named a sunder. what though Eliphaz one of Iobs friends be a Temanite of Esau, so was Elihu a Buzite of Nachor: ther is it like that Huz the sonne of Dishan the Horite, that dwelt in the land of Seir, before the mites, Genes. 36. 28. gave that name unto Iobs country, which is Tostatus opinion: but of the first of Aram, as is before said, was that country so called, Iun. 4. I thinke it therefore more that Iob came of Abraham by Keturah; as Bildad the Shuite was of Shuah Abrahams sonne by rah, whom with the rest Iob calleth his brethren: And these sonnes of Keturah, are said to be sent the East country, Genes. 25. 6. and Iob is said to be the greatest of all the men in the East, Iob. 1. 3. ham also had a greater care to instruct his sons, and to command them after him to keepe the way Lord, for which care the Lord himselfe commendeth him, Gen. 18. 19. than either Nachor, or Esau and therefore it is not unlike but that Iobs great knowledge was the fruits of Abrahams instruction pagated to his posterity.

QUEST. XV. In what time Iob lived.

COncerning the time wherein Iob lived. 1. He was neither so ancient as Iacob, which seemeth the opinion of Philo who thinketh that Dinah Iacobs daughter was Iobs wife: for Eliphaz the manite, of Teman, of Eliphaz, of Esau, the third from Esau, one of Iobs friends, will make him a Iobs time. 2. Neither was Iob in the time of Moses, which must be the opinion of Hierome, who Balaam to be Balaam. 3. Much lesse lived he in the time of the judges, as Gregorie thinketh: for it as Iob lived, who is commended for offering sacrifice, the sacrificing priesthood was not instituted Wherefore it is probable, that Iob lived in the time of the Israelites being in Egypt, after the of Ioseph, before the birth of Moses, when Satan compassed the earth, and it was a rare thing to righteous man: for Moses is held to be the writer of the booke of Iob: and as Eliphaz of Teman, phaz, of Esau, of Isaack, of Abraham, was the sixt from Abraham, so might Iob be in another line.

QUEST. XVI. Of Baal-hanan the seventh king of Edom.

Vers. 38. BAal-hanan the sonne of Achbor, &c. In that the city or country of this Baal-hanan is expressed, as of the rest. 1. Some thinke it is omitted, because he was of the same city the which was the king next before named. 2. Some, because he had many adversaries, and therefore no certaine place. 3. Some, as Kamban, that Hanan was his citie, and so he is called, Baal-hanan, that Lord of Hanan. 4. But it may be, that he was not so famous as the rest, and therefore his citie is not ted, Mercer.

QUEST. XVII. Of Mehetabel the wife of Hadad.

Vers. 39. MEhetabel the daughter of Matred, the daughter of Mezahab, &c. 1. Some thinke that Matred was her father, Mezahab her mother. 2. Some, as R. Levi, will have her the mother daughter of Matred, and the adopted daughter of Mezahab. 3. Some thinke that Mezahab was name of the place, otherwise called Medeba, or with Ptolome, Medava, Iun. but this seemeth to be what coact and strained: that she should be called the daughter of such a citie or towne. 4. Therefore is said to be the daughter of Matred her father, not mother; and daughter, that is, niece of her grandther, as Abelshamah before is said to be the daughter of Anah, and daughter, that is, niece of Sibeon &c. 5. Mezahab signifieth golden waters: it might be that he was inriched by such waters, where gathered; Matred also is interpreted one that is diligent or conversant in his worke: of the word from whence some thinke the name Mithridates to be derived, Mehetabel, that is, doing well to God, of the same signification with the name Theodosia, Mercer.

Qui

QUEST. XVIII. Of the Dukes of Edom.

Verſ. 41. DVke Timna, &c. Duke Aholibamah. 1. As the principality of Edom began with Dukes, and roſe to Kings: ſo it returneth to Dukes againe, who did not one ſucceed another, as the Kings, but they were all rulers together, in divers places of Edom, after the death of Hadad, in Moſes time, Chron. 1.51. 2. Theſe are not here the names of women, as thinketh Aben Ezra, that firſt the Dukes are named that came of Timna, then thoſe which came of Aholibamah; neither are they the names of men, but rather of the places, called by the names of their firſt mothers, where theſe Dukes had their ſeat, Mercer. Muſcul.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. The proſperity of the wicked of ſhort continuance.

Verſ. 32. THeſe are the Kings that reigned, &c. The wicked are ſoone raiſed to honour, and are quickly caſt downe againe: as Eſaus poſterity was ſpeedily advanced to a Kingdome, but it continued not long; Iacobs ſeed, though a long time kept under in affliction, yet at the laſt obtained a firme and permanent Kingdome: ſuch is the condition of the elect; though of a long time their happineſſe appeareth not, yet when it breaketh forth, it hath a durable continuance; but the proſperity of the wicked ſoone fadeth away; therefore they are ſaid to be ſet in ſlippery places, and they are as a dreame when one awaketh, Pſal. 73.18. 20. Mercer.

2. Doct. Alteration of ſtates in the hand of God.

Vnder, whereas firſt the Horites dwelt in mount Seir, and had divers Dukedomes and Principalities there: and after them the Edomites were firſt Dukes, then Kings, then Dukes againe; wee ſee that the alteration of ſtates, tranſplanting and changing of Kingdomes, is in the Lords hand; it is God that maketh low, and maketh high, Pſal. 75.7. Muſcul.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Outward proſperity, no ſure note of the Church.

Verſ. 32. THeſe are the Kings that reigned in Edom, &c. There were divers Kings in Edom, before any reigned in Iſrael; yet was not Edom the Church of God, but Iſrael; proſperity then and outward glory is no ſure note of the true Church, as the Papiſts make it, Luther. For then Moſes would not have choſen to ſuffer affliction with the people of God, and have refuſed the glory, pompe and pleaſure of Pharaohs Court, Heb. 11.25.

2. Confut. Againſt the Iewes, that Magdiel is not Rome.

Verſ. 43. DVke Magdiel: the Hebrewes take this for Rome, becauſe they thinke that the Romans came of the Idumeans; but they have no reaſon for it; ſpiritually indeed the Romaniſts, and all other enemies to the Church of God may be counted Idumeans; But otherwiſe there was no affinity betweene Rome and Idumea, being ſo farre diſtant; Magdiel was a place in Edom, as Timna and Teman and the reſt were; It ſignifieth, annuntians Deum, praiſing or confeſſing God; in which ſenſe it were happy for Rome, now ſpirituall Babylon, if ſhe could truly be called Magdiel.

6. Places of morall obſervation.

1. Obſerv. God bleſſeth the ſeed of the righteous, for their fathers ſakes.

Verſ. 15. THeſe were the Dukes of the ſonnes of Eſau, &c. As Iſmael was temporally bleſſed for Abrahams ſake, ſo was Eſau for Iſaacks ſake: his poſterity was renowned and honourable. Thus the Lord often vouchſafeth temporall and outward favours even to the degenerate ſeed, for their righteous forefathers ſake: as the Lord would not take away the whole Kingdome from Rehoboam, that David might have a light in Jeruſalem, 1 King. 11.36.

2. Obſerv. The wicked void of naturall affection.

Verſ. 20. THeſe are the ſonnes of Seir the Horite, &c. Eſau was by marriage allied to this Seir, for hee married Aholibamah, neece to Sibeon the third ſonne of Seir, Gen. 36.2.20. yet the children of Eſau chaſed away the Horims, and deſtroyed them, and dwelt in their ſtead in mount Seir, Deut. 2.12. By it is evident that the wicked are void of naturall affection, and that affinity is not much regarded of them, when they are bent upon their owne preferment and commodity: as Laban purſued after Iacob his daughters, purpoſing to have done him ſome harme, but that the Lord ſtaid him, Gen. 31.29.

THE SECOND BOOKE OF THE SECOND TOME OR PART OF GENESIS:

Containing the notable History of the life, acts and vertues of honorable IOSEPH

LONDON,
Printed by the Assignes of THOMAS MAN, PAVL MAN, and IOHAN MAN, 1613.

TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE The L. Cecill, Vicount Cranborne, Earle of Salisburie, principall Secretarie to his excellent Majestie, and Chancellour of the Vniversitie of Cambridge, and of his Majesties most honourable privie Councell: Grace, mercy, and peace, from the Lord Iesus.

RIght Honourable, I present to your Honour, this last part of these my collections and Commentarie upon Genesis: wherein is set forth unto us the worthy history of honourable Ioseph, his humiliation first, and then his exaltation, together with his patience, chastity, clemency, equity, with the rest of his Princely vertues: A fit president for all noble persons to follow, and a perfect patterne for men of honour and authority to looke upon.

Ioseph was famous and renowned for many noble vertues, but most especially for these foure: his chastity in himselfe, piety toward God; fidelity to his Prince; clemency toward his brethren.

First Ioseph is a rare example of chastity, who in his youthfull yeares, being a poore stranger and a servant, enticed often and allured by promises, and that by no meane women, but by his Lady the Mistresse of the house, and not ignorant of the danger, which might befall him for his refusall, yet chose rather with his innocency to lie in chaines of iron, than yeelding to intemperancy to weare chaines of gold: this was his godly resolution, when hee was tempted, how can I doe this great wickednesse and so sinne against God? for he did very well know, that he which violateth wedlocke, doth sinne against God the author thereof: wherefore the Apostle saith, that the Lord will judge such himselfe: And Ambrose excellently concludeth this point concerning Ioseph, Magnus vir Ioseph, qui adamatus, non adamavit; rogatus, non acquievit; comprehensus, aufugit: Ioseph was a worthy man, who being loved, loved not againe: being intreated, consented not: being laid hold on, stayed not.

Gen. 39. 9.

Hebr. 13. 4. Ambr. lib. de Ioseph. c. 5.

Secondly, Iosephs chastity is much more graced and commended by his piety: all his actions savour of godlinesse, and the feare of God as a sweet perfume doth give a pleasant smell to all his enterprises: before, when he was enticed, he had God in his mouth: when the two prisoners wanted an interpreter, he said unto them, are not interpretations of God? Gen. 40. 8. when he stood before Pharaoh to interpret his dreame, he gave the glory to God, without me shall God make answer for the wealth of Pharaoh, Gen. 41. 16.

when his children, Manasseh and Ephraim were borne, he remembred God: at the birth of the first he said, God hath made me to forget all my labour: and hee called the second Ephraim, and said, God hath made me fruitfull in the land of mine affliction, Genes. 41. 50, 51. Afterward when Ioseph communed with his brethren, but unknowne, he could not conceale his religion; This doe and live (saith he) for I feare God, Genes. 42. 18. when he discovered himselfe to his brethren, he turneth himselfe unto God, saying, God did send me before for your preservation, Genes. 45. 5. Thus noble Ioseph did shew himselfe twice noble indeed, by his unfained piety, and godly sincerity: Much like herein was devout Daniel, who being one of the three chiefe Governours of the great Monarchy of the Persians, did thrice every day upon his knees pray and praise his God, Dan. 6. 10. Thus should all prudent Governours doe, to honour him, by whom they are honoured, and to crave wisdome of the Author and Fountaine of wisdome. Hieron. giveth this counsell to a noble Matron: Cum claritate generis morum suavitate contendas, cum nobilitate corporis animi virtute nobilior proficias, magisque in nobilitate glorieris, quæ filios Dei, & cohæredes Christi facit, &c. non est quod si quis de nobilitate generis blandiatur, si ex meliore parte famulus sit: Hieron. ad Demetriad. With the greatnesse of thy stocke, strive by goodnesse of manners together with nobleneſse of bloud, increase in the true nobility of mind: count the best nobility, which maketh us the sonnes of God, and fellow heires with Christ: it availeth not to boast of highnesse of stocke, if thou be abased in the bettter part.

Thirdly, Ioseph is famous for his faithfull service toward his Prince, who when he had gathered up all the money, which was found in the land of Ægypt and Canaan, for corne which they bought, did not store it up for himselfe, but laid it up in Pharaohs treasury, Gen. 47. 14. wherein Iosua well imitated him, who in the division of the land promise to the Tribes, reserved no part for himselfe: but when they had made an end dividing, then the children of Israel with one consent cast him out a lot amongst Iosua 19. 49. Ioseph then thought not to inrich himselfe by his office, as many officers now adayes, but he travelled more for the wealth of Pharaoh, than his owne gaine: whom was not wanting that property which Moses father in law requireth in a Governour, to be a man hating covetousnesse, Exod. 18. 21. which point is touched well by Ambrose: Ne præeminentem virum thesauri possideant sui, & pecuniis [illegible] viat, qui præest liberis: That a great person should possesse, rather than be possessed of his treasure, neither be commanded of money, who is a commander of men. Neither was Ioseph so devoted to his Princes profit, that he neglected the poore commons, but was a father also unto them: that whereas he had bought themselves and their land for Pharaoh, hee both releaseth them of their bondage, and taketh only the fift part of the increase of their land, whereas the whole belonged to Pharaoh: and by these means, as Ambrose saith, they lost nothing of their profit, that gained a perpetuity for it was better to part with some of the fruits, than to forgoe the whole. Such prudent moderation well beseemeth wise Governours, to be such honourable mediators betweene Prince and people (wherein this kingdome, God bee thanked, wanteth not examples) as that the royall dignity of the one may be preserved, the others poore estate pitied, that the people may say unto them, as the Egyptians did to Ioseph, Thou hast saved our lives: for as Amb. well saith, they thought it no sale of their right, but a safety of their estate.

Lastly, Ioseph most wisely did temper severitie and clemencie, justice and mercy together gether: first he dealt roughly with his brethren, charged them to be spies, imprisoned them, caused Simeon to be bound, laid theft to their charge: but afterward he lovingly embraced them, wept over them, and was a foster father unto them: O tormenta misericordiæ! cruciat, & amat: O the torments of pittie! hee vexeth, and yet loveth them: So mercie and judgement tempered together, make a sweet harmony, as David saith, I will sing mercie and judgement: such a song did Ioseph sing; His wrath was waged, which appeared, and was not: his mercie prevailed, which was, and appeared not. So Magistrates doe well sometime with Ioseph to use threats, and speake roughly, where is cause: but I well hope, that Iosephs irefull words, and pretended threatnings, will end toward his brethren, with mercifull deeds, and extended embracings. We praise God for your Honours mercifull government: let them first taste of your mercie, that teach you to shew mercie. The Egyptian priests under Pharaoh, by the hand of Ioseph, were maintained in the time of dearth: I doubt not but your Honour under our peerelesse Pharaoh, will doe your best, that the Ministers of the Gospell be stored with maintenance, where they have it not, much more bee suffred to enjoy that they have: Ioseph remitted his brethrens trespasse, that had taken away his parti-coloured coat: and although some of our brethren would have certaine ceremonies, which may seeme as the coat of this Church) removed, yet Iosephs brotherly connivence may seale up that breach. Toleration and forbearance toward friends and brethren in such matters, may well beseeme Ioseph: But your Honours constant resolution (therein concurring with his excellent Majestie) against all toleration of contrary religion, or giving countenance to such, is most honourable, and joyous to all faithfull hearts: If they differed from us only in some externall rites, and were beside peaceable and profitable men, they might have some reason to desire and expect to be tolerated and borne with; according to that conclusion of the Toletane Councel: In una fide nihil officit Ecclesiæ sanctæ consuetudo diversa, &c. In the Church the unity of faith is not hindred by the diversitie of rites. But seeing they dissent from us in substantial and fundament all points of faith, and so are enemies to the Church, and depend upon a forreine prelate for their direction, and so are dangerous to the state, your Honours resolution is most Christian, to shew no connivence in this case, much lesse to give protection, but to rise against such all providence and circumspection: for Christ and Belial, Dagon and the Arke, light and darknesse cannot dwell together. God give your Honour courage, strength, and zeale, notwithstanding the malice and envie of idolatrous Romanists, to hold on this happie course, that with Ioseph, though archers shoot at you, your bow may abide strong, and the hands of your armes be strengthened by the hand of the mightie God of Iacob.

Now lastly, I wish unto your Honour Iosephs portion, that according to his name, first Iosephs vertues, then Iosephs honours, may be added unto you in this life, and his everlasting inheritance afterwards in the heavenly Canaan, through the great mercies of a gratious God, and infinite merits of our blessed Saviour Christ Iesu, to whom bee glorie for ever.

CHAP. XXXVII.

1. The Method.

FIrſt, in this Chapter are ſet forth the cauſes of the envy and hatred of Iacobs ſonnes againſt Ioſeph. 1. His complaining of them to his father, verſ. 2. 2. Iacobs extraordinary love and affection toward Ioſeph, verſ. 4. 3. His two dreames, of the ſheaves, verſ. 7, 8. of the ſtarres, verſ. 9, 10. whereby was prefigured his preheminence over his brethren.

Secondly, the fruits and effects of their envy are declared, their hard dealing toward Ioſeph, with the occaſion thereof, and the ſequele. 1. The occaſion was miniſtred by occaſion of Ioſephs ſending to his brethren by Iacob, verſ. 13. to 19. 2. Their hard dealing appeareth, firſt in conſulting to kill Ioſeph, but that Ruben otherwiſe turned them, verſ. 20, 21. ſecondly, in caſting of him into a pit, while they themſelves did eat and drinke, not regarding the affliction of Ioſeph, verſ. 23. to 26. 3. In ſelling of him to the Madianites, at Iudah his motion, who ſold him afterward to Potiphar.

Thirdly, the ſequell and iſſue is this: firſt, they diſſemble with their father, making him beleeve, that Ioſeph was torne of the wild beaſts: then they are cauſes of Iacobs great ſorrow and griefe that mourned for his ſonne, verſ. 34, 35.

2. The divers readings.

2. when Ioſeph was ſixteene yeere old. H. ſeventeene. cæter. — H. cor.

2. bee accuſed his brethren of a bad crime. H. Ioſeph brought their accuſation. C. evill ſaying or report. B.G. evill fame. T. dibbah, ſignifieth infamy, ſlander, reproach. — diverſ. ſig.

3. who hated him ſo much the more: all have but the Septuag. — S. det.

13. Iſrael ſaid to him. H. Iſrael ſaid to Ioſeph. cæt. — H. det.

14. and Iſrael ſaid to him. S. and he ſaid. cæter. — S. ad.

20. into an old pit. H. into one of theſe pits. cæter. — H. c.

21. endevoured to deliver him. H. delivered him out of their hands. cæter. — H. alt.

22. this he ſaid to deliver him. H. that he might deliver. cæt. — H. ad.

28. for twenty peeces of gold. S. twenty peeces of ſilver. cæt. — S. c.

36. to Potiphar, Pharaohs Eunuch. H. S. B. G. one of Pharaohs courtiers. T. Princes. C. P. ſaras, a Prince, an Eunuch: it is like he was not an Eunuch being married. — T. c. r.

3. The explanation of doubtfull queſtions.

QUEST. I. What generations Moſes here meaneth.

verſ. 2. THeſe are the generations, &c. 1. Some by generations expound the events, and things that happened to Iacob and his poſterity: ſic Vatab: but the word toldoth will not fitly beare that ſenſe. 2. Some referre theſe generations to Ioſeph, as the principall among Iacobs ſonnes, in whom the image of Iacobs inward vertues and outward countenance did more appeare, than in any of the reſt, Rupert. but then he would have ſaid, generation, not generations, in the plurall. 3. Others, as Ramban, Cajetan, ſend us to the 46. chapter following, wherein Iacobs poſterity is rehearſed and numbred: and underſtand thoſe generations here to bee ſpoken of: but that genealogy following ten chapters after, cannot conveniently have dependance of this place. 4. Therefore, I thinke rather, that we are to looke to the 35. chapter, where in the end Iacobs twelve ſonnes are rehearſed: and then (a briefe catalogue of Eſaus of-ſpring comming between) the ſtory returneth to Iacob and his generations: Iun. Among the which Moſes inſiſteth upon Ioſeph as the moſt worthy.

QUEST.

QUEST. II. Ioseph sold into Egypt while Isaack was alive.

Vers. 2. WHen Ioseph was 17. yeare old, &c. 1. Whereas the death of Isaack is mentioned before, c. 35. when hee was 180. yeare old, and Iacob 120. who was but 60. yeare younger then Isaack: this storie of Iosephs selling into Egypt when he was but 17. yeare old, must needes goe before Isaacks death, 12. or 13. yeare: for if Iacob, when Ioseph was 39. that is, 30. yeare old when he stood before Pharao, and nine yeare more, that is counting 7. yeares of plentie, and two of famine, if Iacob were then 130. Gen. 47. 9. then at Iosephs seventeene, Iacob exceeded not 108. yeares: But hee was 120. when Isaack died, and then was Ioseph 31. yeare old or there about. 2. Now where it is added, beeing yet a childe: 1. Neither need we with Rambam to transpose the word, and ioyne it with his yeares, and reade thus, when Ioseph was a childe of 17. yeares: for the order of the text will not beare it to be so transposed. 2. Neither is that the best reading to say, and the child was with the sonnes of Bilha, &c. as R. doe reade: but with a parenthesis thus (being yet a child.) 3. which is added, not to signifie his age expressed before: nor yet that he was as a servant and minister to his father and brethren, as the word naar somtime signifieth: as Iosua is called puer Mosis, Moses boy, Iun. but to declare the simplicitie of his mind, that he did not of malice accuse his brethren, Mercer. and the puritie of his affection, that at those yeares could not abide sinne, Rupert. and crueltie of his brethren, that dealt so hardly with him being a child, Chrysost. And beside, his age is mentioned, to shew how long a time Ioseph continued in miserable captivitie: full 14. yeares, from 17. till he was 30. for so old he was when he stood before Pharao, Per.

Why Ioseph is said to be a child, his yeares being exprest before.

QUEST. III. Why Ioseph keepeth with the sons of the handmaides.

Vers. 2. WIth the sonnes of Zilphah and of Bilhah. Ioseph keepeth sheepe with the sonnes of Leahs concubines, rather than the other. 1. Not because as Rasi thinketh, the sonnes of Leah despised the sonnes of the handmaides, and therefore Ioseph ioyneth himselfe unto them, not scorning them: for then these sonnes of the handmaides would haue beene the readiest to haue delivered Ioseph: whereas Ruben and Iudah the sonnes of Leah were his best friends. 2. Therefore Iacob committeth Ioseph to their custodie, because the other brethren of Leah could not well brooke the sonnes of Rachel, whom Iacob loved better then their mother, Rambam. and beside Rachel beeing dead, Ioseph was as Bilhas sonne, and her children were as Rachels, and so brethren to Ioseph, as both by father and mothers side, Muscul. he kept companie also with Zilphas sonnes, because it seemeth the sonnes of the handmaides sorted together.

QUEST. IIII. What sin it was whereof Ioseph accused his brethren to his father.

AND Ioseph brought to their father their evil saying. 1. The other brethren accused not Ioseph to their father, as the Septuagint in some translations reade: but Ioseph accused them, whereupon they hated him. 2. Neither did Ioseph only complaine of the handmaids sonnes, as Cajetan. though it may be thought that their servile nature was most prone to evil, but of the rest also, for they all hated him, Iun. 3. That which he complained of was not, 1. Either any wrong done to himselfe, as Vatablus. 2. Nor of any particular sinne, as the Latin translator readeth: as either of the sinne of Sodomitrie, as Rupert. 3. Or of the inceste of Ruben, as gloss. interlinear. for Ruben afterward was Iosephs best friend. 4. Or of that horrible sinne of bestiall copulation, as Tostat. Thom. it is not like that Iacobs sonnes, though licentious enough, were so filthilie geven. 5. Or that they did eate raw flesh, contrarie to the precept of Noah, as the Hebrewes. 6. But I rather thinke, that he brought to Iacob their evil fame, or report, as the word signifieth: that is, complained generally of their evil life, for the which they were infamous: as either their contention among themselves, or defiling themselves with the daughters of the heathen, or such like, Mercer. Perer.

QUEST. V. Whether Ioseph did well in accusing his brethren to their father.

NOw, lest Ioseph might be thought to have dealt uncharitablie with his brethren, in accusing them to his father: for this is one of the titles giuen unto Sathan, who is called an accuser of the brethren, Apocal. 12. 1. It is to be considered, that Ioseph might first privately admonish them, before he told his father, although it be not in the scripture directly expressed, Tostat. 2. Or it may seeme, that admonitio non fuit necessaria, cum crimen esset publicum: admonition was not necessarie, where the crime was publike, Thom. 3. Or Ioseph did perceive that his admonition would not prevaile, but that they would have hated him the more: as the wise man saith, Reproove a scorner, and hee will hate thee, Prov. 9. and in this case one may forbeare private admonition, as Augustine well noteth: Si vel opportunius tempus quærit, vel metuit ne deteriores efficiantur, if either hee watch a fitter time, or bee afraid they should grow worse, in such cases to refraine, and not for feare of displeasure, or any temporall losse, it is, cum charitatis, a charitable consideration. 4. It may be observed, that Ioseph did not publish or divulge abroad to every one his brethrens sinnes, but only informed his father: for otherwise, as Augustine, coram omnibus vis arguere, non eris corrector, sed proditor, &c. If thou wilt reproove before all what thou knowest by thy brother, thou shalt not bee a reproover, but a betrayer, ser. 16. de verb. domin. 5. Ioseph did not accuse his brethren of a malitious minde, being yet in a manner but a childe, but of a desire to have them amended: for, as Augustine saith, Debemus amando corripere, non nocendi aviditate, sed studio corrigendi, We must reproove in love, not in a desire to hurt, but a studie to correct.

In what cases private admonition is not necessary before publike accusation.

QUE

Quest. VI. Whether Iacob loved Ioſeph chiefly becauſe he was borne in his old age.

Verſ. 3. Iſrael loved Ioſeph, becauſe he was the ſonne of his old age. 1. We need not with Rupertus, to underſtand this myſtically, by Iſraels old age, his perfection of vertue, and that therefore he loved Ioſeph beſt, becauſe he did imitate his fathers vertue. 2. Nor yet with Onkelos, and Paul. Burgenſ. doe we referre it to Ioſeph, that he was the childe of old age, that is a wiſe, ſober, and grave childe, for this is coact and ſtrained. 3. But indeed Iacob loved him, becauſe he had him in his old age, being then 91. yeare old, when Ioſeph was borne: Benjamin was younger than Ioſeph, but then not above foure or five yeares old, and therefore not ſo capable of his fathers love, as Ioſeph, who began now to ſhew his vertue and good diſpoſition: the reſt alſo of Iacobs ſonnes were borne in his old age, all within the compaſſe of ſeven yeares, and he was 84. yeare old when he began to have children: yet Ioſeph was the youngeſt of them, and the firſtborne of his beloved Rachel; much deſired and longed for on both ſides before he was borne, and therefore beſt beloved when he came. 4. Now the reaſons why children borne in old age are beſt beloved of their parents, are theſe. 1. Becauſe they are the laſt borne, and the aged parents looke for none after-reſembling his mother Rachel. Ioſephus: his heroicall and princely mind, which appeared in his dreames, a preſaging, Phil. 2. And are moſt likely to be the longeſt livers, and ſo to continue their fathers name, Cajetan. 3. Or for that the aged parents are delighted with the prattling and ſport of young children, Oleaſter. 4. Or becauſe they are alwayes at hand, and in their fathers eye, Rambam. 5. Or the parents doe it in wiſdome, to make moſt of the youngeſt, becauſe they are leaſt able to ſhift for themſelves. Other cauſes there might bee of Iacobs affection to Ioſeph: as the comelineſſe of his body reſembling his mother Rachel, Ioſephus: his heroicall and princely minde, which appeared in his dreames, a prophecie of his honourable eſtate afterward; Philo. His vertuous and godly diſpoſition: but theſe cauſes are concealed, leſt they might have increaſed the envy of his brethren, Chryſoſt.

Why parents love their youngeſt children beſt.

Quest. VII. Of Ioſephs particoloured coat.

Verſ. 3. He made him a coat of divers colours: the word is, paſſim, peeces: 1. Some doe read, a ſide gowne or coat, as Aquila, and Gregory doth thereby underſtand his conſtancy and perſeverance. 2. Some reade, tunicam manicatam, a ſleeved coat, Symmach: but the word will beare neither of theſe interpretations. 3. Neither yet was it made of divers kinds of threads, for that was forbidden by the law, Levit. 19. 19. whereas in Davids time, Thamar did weare ſuch a garment, of the ſame name, paſſim. 4. Neither yet was it a white ſilke garment repreſenting the Prieſthood, as ſome thinke. 5. Nor yet of divers peeces put together, for that had beene no ſuch precious garment. 6. But it was a coat of divers colours, as the Septuag. tranſlate, poikilon, which ſeemed as though it had beene of divers parts and peeces, Mercer. Iun.

Quest. VIII. The difference betweene envy and hatred.

Verſ. 4. They hated him. 1. There is great difference betweene hatred and envy: 1. Men are hated for evill: they are envied for ſome good thing, as proſperity, riches, wiſdome: 2. Hatred is of ſome particular matter, envy hath a generall object, for any thing that happeneth well to a man. 3. Hatred may ſometime be juſt, as to hate the wicked; envy is never juſt. 4. Hatred may be conceived againſt brute beaſts, as a man hateth a ſerpent or a tode, but envy is only againſt men. 5. Envy ceaſeth when men from a proſperous ſtate fall into miſery, but even men in miſery may bee hated. 6. Hatred is, where wee have received hurt, but they are often envied of ſome, whom they never hurt. 7. Whom men hate, they will harme, if they can: but ſometime a mans gifts are envied, againſt whom no hurt is intended. 2. Beſide theſe differences betweene envy and hatred, envy hath theſe peculiar properties. 1. Envy rejoyceth in another mans fall. 2. He that is envied many times fareth the better, as Ioſeph did. 3. An envious man hurteth himſelfe moſt, and him nothing that is envied. 4. An envious man diſſembleth in his outward behaviour, making outwardly a ſhew of friendſhip, bearing malice in his heart: ſuch was Ioab toward Abner, while he embraced him with the one hand, he killed him with the other. 5. An envious man, as Gregory noteth, ſheweth himſelfe to be of a baſe mind: for in that he envieth another, he bewrayeth his owne wants, not having that which hee envieth in another. 3. The remedy againſt this devouring ſinne of envy, Baſil preſcribeth, Si nihil rerum humanarum magnum, aut vehementer expetendum putemus: to thinke no humane thing to be of any great reckoning, or much to be deſired; and then ſhall wee neither envy the rich for his riches, nor the honourable perſon for his honour, nor any other for any worldly gift. Againe, the wiſe man ſaith, Ne comedas cum homine invido, eat not with an envious man, or a man that hath an evill eye, Prov. 23. 6. leſt that by converſing with ſuch, we learne of their qualities, Perer.

The remedies againſt envy.

Quest. IX. Of Ioſephs dreame, why doubled.

Verſ. 6. Hear the dreame which I have dreamed, &c. 1. Ioſeph hath two dreames ſhewed him, both tending to the ſame end, to declare the certainty of his exaltation above his brethren: as Ioſeph afterward ſaith to Pharao, that had two dreames likewiſe, foreſhewing the ſame thing, Gen. 41. 32. The dreame was doubled the ſecond time to Pharao, becauſe the thing is eſtabliſhed with God. 2. Ioſephus is deceived in that ſaith, Ioſephs brethren found no fault at the telling of the firſt dreame, whereas the text is otherwiſe: they ſaid nothing at the rehearſing of the ſecond, referring it to the judgement of their father, to whom Ioſeph told it againe, whom his father rebuked in the preſence of their brethren, and therefore they ſuſpended their reprehenſion, or Moſes thought good to omit it, Mercer. 3. Some doe apply thoſe parables to Christ, making him the sheafe of corne, to whom all the Patriarks and Prophets do stoope, Rupert. some also further make Ioseph a type of Christ: 1. In that hee uttered dreames, as the other parables. 2. Christ spake of his exaltation, as Ioseph of his. 3. Christ was hated for his parables, as Ioseph for his dreames, Perer.

Ioseph, wherein a type of Christ.

Quest. X. Of the divers kinds of dreames.

FUrther it is to be considered, that dreames are divers waies caused. 1. Some dreames arise of the fulnesse of the bellie and excesse of drinke, such are the dreames of Epicures and drunken persons. 2. Some come of emptinesse and want: as when an hungrie or thirstie man dreameth of meat or drinke, Isay 29. 3. Some are wrought by the illusion of Sathan. 4. Some partly by the illusion of Sathan, partly by mans owne imagination, Eccles. 5. 3. A dreame commeth by the multitude of businesse. 5. Some dreames are sent by divine revelation: such were those of Ioseph. 6. Some proceed partly of our owne serious cogitation, partly of divine revelation: such were Nebuchadnezars dreames: as Daniel saith to him: O king, when thou wast in thy bed, thoughts came upon thee, &c. Dan. 2. 29. Perer. ex Gregor.

Quest. XI. Ioseph not worthy of rebuke.

Vers. 10. HIs father rebuked him, &c. 1. Ioseph did herein nothing worthy of reprehension: he neither told these dreames of any vanitie of minde, nor of childish simplicitie, but as the dreames were revealed of God, so he moved Ioseph to declare them. 2. Iacob did not herein dissemble in seeming to rebuke Ioseph for the contentment of his brethren. Ium. Calvin. but he did indeed rebuke Ioseph, as not yet perceiving the mysterie of these dreames, yet presently came to himselfe, and considered more deeply of them, as it followeth, vers. 11. His father noted that saying, Mercer.

How Iacob rebuked Ioseph.

Quest. XII. How Iosephs mother being dead, is said to fall downe unto him.

Vers. 10. SHall I, and thy mother, and thy brethren, come indeed and fall on the ground? &c. 1. Neither is it like, that Rachel Iosephs mother was alive at this time, as thinketh Oleaster, Cajetan: for Rachel was dead before Iacob came to Hebron, and as yet while Rachel lived Benjamin was not borne, of whom shee died in travaile: so that then there could not be an eleven brethren beside Ioseph, which are signified by the eleven starres. 2. Neither was this fulfilled in Iosua, who was of the tribe of Ephraim of Ioseph, to whom indeed the Sunne obeyed by standing still, as some Hebrewes: for Iacob understandeth not the Sunne literally, but figuratively of himselfe: and so Ioseph also aplieth the dreames to himselfe and his brethren, Genes. 42. 9. 3. Neither yet is it so fit to understand Bilha Rachels maid, who was Iosephs reputed mother. Ramban thinketh it improper, that a concubine should be resembled to the moone. 4. And it is more unfit with Rupertus, to drive this storie to an allegorie, that by the Sunne we should understand the Saints in heaven, and by the Moone the militarie Church in earth, that all bow unto Christ prefigured in Ioseph. 5. Neither doth Iacob speake ironically, hereby shewing the vanitie of Iosephs dreame, as though his mother should be fetched out of her grave, to doe him homage, as Lyran. Perer. for Iacob himselfe noted these things, and held the dreames not as vaine, but as serious matters. 6. Wherefore the name of mother, is to be understood of her which was then mother of the family, whether Leah or any of the other then living, Mercer.

Quest. XIII. How Iacob and Iosephs mother did obeysance to Ioseph in Egypt.

BUt a further question here ariseth, how this was fulfilled, that Iosephs father and mother reverenced Ioseph. 1. For Iacob, the case is plaine: not that he personally worshipped Ioseph, as some doe expound that place, Genes. 47. 31. He worshipped toward the beds head: for Iacob there did not worship Ioseph, but praised God: nor yet did Iacob then onely reverence Ioseph, when he sent presents unto him as unknown by his sons into Egypt, Per. but Iacob did reverence Ioseph not in bowing or humbling himselfe unto him, but in acknowledging and reverencing in him that high place, to the which the Lord had called him. 2. Iosephs mother is said to reverence him, not only because he was of her posteritie in Benjamin honoured, or in respect of the possibilitie or likelihood, that even his mother, if she had been in Egypt, as his brethren were, before Ioseph had discried himselfe, might have fallen downe before him: it is not unlike, but that either Leah or some other, that was the mother of the family, went downe into Egypt with Iacob, though it be not expressed, because the women in that account are not numbred, and so together with them might doe obeysance to Ioseph.

Quest. XIV. Of Sechem, where Iacobs sonnes kept their sheepe.

Vers. 12. THey went to keepe their fathers sheepe in Shechem. 1. This was not another Shechem beside that Citie which Simeon and Levi put to the sword, as some Hebrewes think: for though it be a good space distant from Hebron, they might raunge thither, to finde out pasture for their Cattell, as Laban and Iacob kept their flockes three dayes journey asunder: neither need they to be afraid of the inhabitants, beeause of the blood shed in that place, seeing that Shechem was now become Iacobs possession, and the feare of him fell upon the cities round about. 2. This Shechem was a notorious place, for divers accidents there done: in this place Simeon and Levi committed that bloodie exploit: there Ioseph was sold, there Ieroboam divided the kingdome, 1 King. 13. 25. in Dothan, not farre from thence, the Prophet Elizeus was, when the king of Aram sent a great hoast to take him, 2 King. 6. 13. 3. It is evident by this place, that Salem is not a proper name of a place, and the same with Shechem, as some reade, Gen. 33. 18. for here Iacob ſendeth Ioſeph to Sechem, to ſee if they were ſhelem, in ſafety, or in peace.

QUEST. XV. What man it was that did meet Ioſeph being out of his way.

Verſ. 17. THe man ſaid, they are departed hence, &c. 1. This was a man, and not the Angel Gabriel, as the Hebrewes imagine: for it appeareth he was one, that knew his brethren, and was preſent, when he heard them ſay, they would goe to Dothan. 2. Neither need we curiouſly with the Hebrewes, to refer this their departure to the inward diſpoſition of their minde, that they were departed from all brotherly affection toward Ioſeph: the words are plaine enough, that he meaneth their changing of place, Mercer.

QUEST. XVI. Why they call Ioſeph dreamer.

Verſ. 19. BEhold this dreamer commeth. The Word is Lord or maſter of dreames. 1. They either ſo call him, becauſe dreames were uſuall with Ioſeph, Mercer. 2. Or for that, as the property of envious men is, they doe aggravate the matter beyond the truth, and make it more than it is, Thom. Anglic. 3. Or they ſo called him, as the author and inventor of dreames, Vatab. 4. As alſo in reſpect of the matter, or object of the dreames, which made Ioſeph Lord over his brethren, Iun.

QUEST. XVII. Of the conſultation of Ioſephs brethren to kill him.

Verſ. 20. COme let us kill him, &c. 1. The Hebrewes imagine, that they had purpoſed to deſtroy him, while he was a far off, by ſetting dogs upon him to worry him: but it ſeemeth that this was their firſt conſultation, to kill him, and to caſt him into a pit, Mercer. 2. Their excuſe was ready to lay ſome evill beaſt had devoured him, for that country abounded with wilde beaſts, as Lions, 1. King 13. the man of Iudah was ſlaine by a lion; and bears, 2 King. 2. 42. children that railed upon the Prophet were rent aſunder of them. 3. Herein, as Proſper well noteth, the Patriarkes conſpiring Ioſephs death, were a figure of the Iewes, that took counſell to put our bleſſed Saviour to death. 4. But although they herein ſuſtained the perſon of the Iewes in figure, they are not excuſed from ſinne, as Ambroſe ſeemeth to inſinuate; Subierunt perſonam peccatoris populi, ut gratiam acciperent Redemptoris; certe culpam delevit gratia, &c. They did beare the perſon of the ſinfull people, to receive the grace of the Redeemer; certainly grace hath blotted out the fault: their fault was no doubt remitted, but firſt we muſt yeeld the ſame to have beene committed.

QUEST. XVIII. Of Rubens counſell for the delivering of Ioſeph.

Verſ. 21. BVt Ruben, when he heard it, &c. 1. Ruben is ſaid to have delivered Ioſeph, becauſe by his counſell he hindered the purpoſe of his brethren that would have killed him, Iun. 2. Ioſephus ſetteth downe divers reaſons, which Ruben ſhould uſe to diſſwade his brethren from this bloudy enterpriſe: 1. In reſpect of God, from whom nothing could be hid. 2. In regard of their father, whoſe great griefe and ſorrow by this meanes ſhould be procured. 3. And concerning Ioſeph, that they ſhould conſider he was but a child, and therefore to be pitied: he was their brother, and therefore to be ſpared. And for themſelves, to remember what a great ſin they ſhould commit in ſhedding innocent bloud: and that onely envy toward their brother, was the beginning of this miſchiefe intended, ex Perer. 3. It is like that Ruben might uſe other perſwaſions: but Moſes only expreſſeth that principall reaſon, that they ſhould not ſhed bloud: whereof the Lord gave an expreſſe law to Noah, after the floud, Mercer. 4. Here appeareth the hypocriſie of the reſt, that thought they were free from bloud, if they did not ſhed it with their owne hand, though they otherwiſe cauſed Ioſephs death, as by ſtarving or pining him in a pit, which was far worſe than if they had preſently killed him: and hereupon Ramban untruly noteth, that he ſinneth not ſo grievouſly, which procureth anothers death, as hee which with his owne hands ſhedderh his bloud. 5. Ruben in giving this advice, to let downe Ioſeph into a pit, had no purpoſe that there he ſhould die, but as the text is, to deliver him to his father: by this meanes he might thinke to be reconciled to his father, whom he had before offended by his inceſt, Calvin. The Hebrewes thinke, that for this compaſſion of Ruben he deſerved afterward to have a Prophet of his tribe, namely Hoſea: and to have one of the cities of refuge in his lot and diviſion, Mercer.

QUEST. XIX. Of Ioſephs party-coloured coat which his brethren ſpoyled him of.

Verſ. 23. THey ſtript Ioſeph out of his coat, &c. 1. They neither left him naked, as Aben Ezra thinketh. 2. Neither did they take away from him two coats, as Lyranus. 3. Neither is it certaine, whether our Saviour Chriſts coat were like unto Ioſephs. 4. They tooke from him this party-coloured coat, which was his upper garment, not ſo much for deſire they had to the garment: but becauſe it was a token of his fathers love, Mercer. As alſo with an intent to ſhew it to their father, thereby to colour and conceale their fact, verſ. 32. Iun.

QUEST. XX. Of Ioſephs letting downe into the pit.

Verſ. 24. THey caſt him into a pit, &c. 1. It ſeemeth it was an old broken pit: for there was no water in it: ſuch as Ieremie ſpeaketh of, alluding to the faſhion of that country: they have digged them broken pits that can hold no water, Ier. 2. 13. 2. It is not like, as R. Salomon conjectureth, that this pit was full of ſerpents and ſcorpions: for then, as Ramban noteth, they muſt needs haue acknowledged a miracle in the perſervation of Ioſeph among ſerpents: as of Daniel among the lions. 3. It may be, though no ſerpents were in the pit, yet it was full of mire, ſuch as Ieremie was let downe into, Ierem. 38. Perer.

QUEST. XXI. Of the ſpices and balme which the Iſmaelites carried.

Verſ. 25. LAden with ſpicery, balme, and mirrhe. 1. The word nechoth, is the ſame which the Arabians call Nuketa, that is, ſpices, ſweet druggs: yet elſewhere it is taken generally for precious things: as 2 King. 20. 13. Hezekiah ſhewed to the king of Babilons ſervants, his houſe Nechothe, of precious things, Oleaſter, Iun. though Mercerus interpret it, Domum aromatum; House of ſpices. 2. The word tſeri is not wax or roſin, as Oleaſter although the Latine word cera, and reſina, and the Greeke word rheténe, (the letters ſomewhat tranſpoſed) come ſomewhat neare the ſound of the Hebrew word: but it is better interpreted balme, as Iun. whereof there is great ſtore in Gilead, Ierem. 8. 22. roſin was neither ſo rich a merchandiſe to be tranſported ſo farre, nor ſo precious for curing of diſeaſes; as the Prophet there noteth. 3. The laſt kinde of merchandiſe is called Lot, which cannot ſignifie the Cheſtnut, but is derived from the root Lut, which ſignifieth to wrap in, or cover, as Oleaſter; for this had beene no precious merchandiſe to carry ſo farre: and Exod. 30. it is reckoned among the ſweet ſpices whereof the perfume there preſcribed was made: but it is better tranſlated ladanum, Iun. which commeth ſomewhat neare the Hebrew word: the Chalde and Septuagint reade ſtacte, which is the ſame that ladanum, a gumme of the myrrhe or Cypres tree.

QUEST. XXII. Why the Iſmaelites are alſo called Midianites.

Verſ. 28. Sold Ioſeph to the Iſmaelites: Which are alſo called Midianites, verſ. 28. and Medanites, verſ. which were three divers people, the firſt of Iſmael Abrahams ſonne by Agar, the ſecond Midian by Keturah, the third of Medan Abrahams ſonne by Keturah alſo: theſe three are indifferently taken for the ſame people in this place. 1. Not for that they were diſtinct Nations, but grew to be one people, as Auguſtine. 2. Or becauſe they all came of Abraham, and had the ſame father, Them. 3. Or becauſe Agar and Keturah are ſuppoſed to be the ſame, Hiſter. Scholaſt. which is an untrue ſurmiſe. 4. Neither are we to imagine with ſome, that Ioſeph was thrice ſold, firſt to the Iſmaelites, then to the Midianites, and laſtly to Potiphar, as Raſi: for verſ. 28. at the ſame inſtant Ioſeph was ſold both to the Iſmaelites and Madianites. 5. Wherefore theſe merchants are named as well Midianites as Iſmaelites, becauſe they did traffike together, and the company conſiſted of both ſorts, Mercer. as alſo becauſe Iſmaelites and Midianites dwelt in one Countrey of Arabia together: and therefore Onkelos reades verſ. 25. for Iſmaelites, Arabians: and for this cauſe the Kings of Midian are called Iſmaelites, Iudg. 8. 24, 26. becauſe of their cohabitation together, Iun.

QUEST. XXIII. Of the price which Ioſeph was ſold for.

For twenty peeces of ſilver, &c. Theſe were twenty ſicles of ſilver, which are in value 23. s. 4. d. ſtarling: for every common ſicle weigheth two drachmaes, that is 1 4. d. ſtarling: the fourth part of an ounce: ſo that foure ſicles make a doller, Iun. 1. Wherefore it was neither ſo ſmall a ſumme, as Babai gheſſeth, who would have theſe to be twenty denarii, which make but five ſicles: 2. Nor ſo much as Ioſephus reckoneth, who would have Ioſeph ſold for 20. minæ, pounds: every mina or pound weighing 100. drachmaes, that is, 58. s. 4. d. ſtarling. 3. The Septuagint alſo are deceived, that for peeces of ſilver reade peeces of gold: 4. Neither was Ioſeph ſold for 30. ſilverlings, as ſome tranſlations did reade in Auguſtine, becauſe they would make the type & body, the ſelling of Ioſeph and of Chriſt to agree in the ſumme, who was ſold for 30. pence: but it is not neceſſary that the type ſhould be anſwerable in every particular circumſtance. 5. The Hebrewes thinke that the ordinary price of ſervants was 30. ſicles, but that they abated ten becauſe they ſold Ioſeph in ſecret: but it appeareth otherwiſe in the law: where the price of redemption of the male from five yeares to twenty, is twenty ſhekels, Levit. 27. 5. But in this place they had no reſpect to any cuſtome or law, but according to their number they ſet the price of 20. ſhekels upon every one of them, which were ten in all, two ſhekels: for Benjamin was very young, not above foure or five yeare old, and could not give conſent: and Ruben afterward gave conſent unto them, Mercer.

QUEST. XXIV. Of the counſell of Iudah to ſell Ioſeph into captivity.

Verſ. 26. Iudah ſaid, what availeth it if we ſlay, though we keepe his blond ſecret, &c. 1. They were reſtrained already not to lay violent hands themſelves upon Ioſeph, but to ſuffer him to periſh in the pit, and yet Iudah ſo accounteth of it as if they ſhould ſlay him themſelves. 2. Iudah was moved by the ſpirit of God to deliver Ioſeph from this ſecond death: yet he ſheweth his hatred, in that he gives counſell to make a bond-ſlave of him, which was as bad as death. 3. Iudah by this meanes thinketh to avoid three inconveniences, firſt the ſhedding of his bloud; ſecondly, to take him from his father who was ſo affected toward him; thirdly, to prevent the honour which Ioſeph dreamed of. 4. The Hebrewes thinke, that for this compaſſion in Iudah, afterward Daniel of that tribe, was delivered from the Lyons: but it is certain, that upon this occaſion of ſelling Ioſeph into captivitie, the Iſraelites afterwards went downe into Egypt, and were afflicted with a long and hard bondage. 5. In the meane time while they were making their bargaine, Ioſeph did intreat his brethren with many prayers and teares, Gen. 42. 21. but they would not heare him, Mercerus.

QUEST. Where Ruben was when Ioſeph was ſold.

Verſ. 29. Ruben returned to the pit. 1. Ruben was abſent when Ioſeph was ſold: ſome thinke, to miniſter to his father according to his courſe: ſome, to mourne alone by himſelfe for the ſin committed with his fathers concubine: But it is moſt like that he went about ſome other way to the pit to have taken Ioſeph thence ſecretly, and therefore Ioſephus thinketh that Ruben came thither in the night. Mercer. 2. Philo thinketh that after Ruben underſtood that his brethren had ſold Ioſeph, he utterly mocked it, making them worſe than theeves; for they prey upon ſtrangers, but theſe upon their owne brother. lib. de Ioſeph. but it is more like that Ruben did reſt ſatisfied after he underſtood that they had not killed him; and conſented unto them, Mercer. 3. Before he knew what was done he cryed out, Whither ſhall I goe? both becauſe he was the firſt-borne, and therefore ſhould bee moſt blamed for the loſſe of Ioſeph, Muſcul. as alſo for that he had ſo lately offended his father before for his inceſtuous act, Iun.

QUEST. XXVI. Of the ſprinkling of Ioſephs coat with bloud, and the deceiving of Iacob.

Verſ. 31. THey tooke Ioſephs coat, and killed a kid, &c. 1. Ioſephus thinketh that they brought Ioſephs coat themſelves, but the text is otherwiſe, verſ. 32. they ſent it: but Ioſephus gheſſeth right, that they ſent the coat rent and torne, as though indeed ſome wilde beaſt had devoured Ioſeph: and they dipped it in a kids bloud, which (they ſay) is moſt like unto mans bloud. 2. Ioſephus alſo is deceived in that he thinketh that Iacob had ſome knowledge before of Ioſeph's captivity, but now changeth his minde, thinking ſurely that Ioſeph was devoured: for from whence could Iacob have any knowledge what was befallen Ioſeph, but by his brethren, who were ſure to keepe it ſecret from their father, ex Perer. 3. Rupertus hath alſo a ſtrange opinion, that Iacob was not ſo ſimple when he ſaw the bloudy coat, to thinke that a beaſt had devoured every part of Ioſeph, nothing to remaine but his coat: but that he did ſurmiſe that his brethren had killed him: but durſt not tell his ſonnes of it, becauſe he ſaw them ſo maliciouſly bent: for Iacob ſheweth the contrary by his owne words, that he gave credit to their report, that an evill beaſt indeed had ſpoiled Ioſeph, verſ. 33. and if Iacob had ſo thought, hee would not have ſpared by his fatherly authority to rebuke his ſonnes to bring them to repentance. 4. It is like that afterward when it was knowne to Iacob that Ioſeph lived, that his brethren confeſſed the truth to their father, and acknowledged their fault, but that Iacob ſeeing how God had turned Ioſephs captivity to the good of them all, therein conſidering Gods providence, ſpared to rebuke them: as Ioſeph upon the ſame reaſon did forbeare his brethren, Gen. 45. 7. 5. Simeon and Levi, as they were moſt cruelly given, as it appeareth by the deſtruction of the Sichemites, are thought to have bin the principall actors againſt Ioſeph: which may be the cauſe that afterward Simeon was bound by Ioſephs commandement. alſo the Hebrewes thinke that Iudas that betrayed Chriſt was of the tribe of Simeon, as the Prieſts and Scribes were of Levi that put him to death. And as Iudah here might have counſell to deceive Iacob with the bloud of a kid, ſo hee himſelfe was deceived of Thamar about a kid, Mercer.

Ioſephus in errour.

The judgement of Simeon and Levi.

QUEST. XXVII. The greatneſſe of Iacobs ſorrow for Ioſeph.

Verſ. 34. HE ſorrowed for his ſonne a long ſeaſon, &c. Many things increaſed the ſorrow of Iacob for his ſonne Ioſeph. 1. Becauſe he imagined that Ioſeph was devoured of ſome beaſt: Ne fruſtum quidem ſupereſt, quod ſepulchro inferatur; There was no part of him left to be committed to buriall. 2. The very ſight of the torne and bloudy garment did augment his grieſe: as the very ſight of Cæſars garment wherein he was killed, moved the people to be revenged upon thoſe that murdered him: and Iulia the wife of Pompey when ſhe ſaw his garment ſprinkled with bloud, at the ſight thereof ſwouned away and died, Perer. ex Dion. 3. Iacob continued twenty two or twenty three years mourning and lamenting for Ioſeph: for now he was ſeventeene yeare old, but when Iacob heard tell that he was living in Egypt he was 39. yeare old: for he was 30. yeares of age when he ſtood before Pharaoh, and after that ſeven yeares of plenty were paſt, and two yeares of famine. 4. This extremity of grieſe cauſed Iacob outwardly to teſtifie the ſame: firſt, by the renting of his cloaths, which afterward did grow into uſe and cuſtome, to ſhew great ſorrow and indignation of minde: as Caleb and Ioſua rent their clothes, Numb. 14. 6. when they heard the murmuring of the people: and Paul and Barnabas when the people would have offered ſacrifice unto them, Perer. Secondly, Iacob putteth on ſackcloth, which was a ceremonie uſed in the Eaſt Countryes to teſtifie their humility, as Benhadads ſervants preſented themſelves before the King of Iſrael with ſackcloth about their loines, and ropes about their necks, ſuing for pardon, 1 King. 20. Perer.

QUEST. XXVIII. Who were thoſe ſonnes and daughters that comforted Iacob.

Verſ. 35. THen all his ſonnes and daughters roſe up, &c. 1. Theſe were not properly Iacobs daughters, as the Hebrewes imagine, that with every ſonne Iacob had a daughter borne, which they afterward married: for ſuch marriages, the world being now multiplied, were not in uſe among the faithfull, Perer. 2. Neither could Iacobs ſonnes, (the eldeſt not exceeding twenty foure or twenty five yeares, not above ſeven yeares elder than Ioſeph) have daughters of that age able to comfort their father, as Muſculus thinketh: they were therefore Iacobs ſonnes wives that were his daughters in law. 3. Neither did Iacob deſire to bee comforted, becauſe as the Hebrewes thinke, where wee know certainly of the death of our friend, we ceaſe mourning, but not where it is uncertaine whether they be dead or no: for Iacob did perſwade himſelfe here that ſome wilde beaſt had devoured Ioſeph: but the greatneſſe of his grieſe would admit no conſolation, Mercer. 4. We ſee the hard and cruell hearts of Iacobs ſonnes, that willingly did ſuffer their father to continue in this grieſe; and that with fained words they ſeemed to comfort him, concealing the truth, Luther. 5. So it is added, his father wept for him; not Iſaack, who indeed was yet living, as ſome thinke, Aben Ezra, Iun. But Iacob mourned for Ioſeph, his brethren mourned not, but the father mourneth for his ſonne, Muſcul.

QUEST. XXIX. Potiphar how he is ſaid to be an Eunuch.

Verſ. 36. TO Potiphar an Eunuch of Pharaohs. 1. This Potiphar was not indeed an Eunuch or gelded man, as the Septuag. reade, ὁ εὐνοῦχος, for he had a wife, and a daughter married afterward to Ioſeph. 2. Neither for the ſame cauſe can that conceit of R. David have any likelihood, that Potiphar was impotent in part, as retaining ſtill the nerve or ſinew, though not the other inſtruments of generation. Neither is there any ground of that tradition of the Hebrewes, that God cauſed Potiphars privie parts to wither and drie up, becauſe he thought to abuſe faire Ioſeph to his filthy luſt. 4. But whereas Eunuches were the firſt uſed by Kings and Princes to wait upon their Queenes, Eſther 2. 14. and ſo were as Chamberlaines, and neare unto their perſons, as Harbonah was to King Aſſuerus, Eſther 7. 9. Hence the name of Eunuch was taken generally to ſignifie a Courtier, Prince, or great man toward the King: as the word is uſed, 2 King. 8. 6. The King commanded an Eunuch, or one of his Princes, to reſtore unto the Shunamite her lands: and in this ſenſe is Potiphar called an Eunuch, that is, one of Pharaos princes or courtiers, as the word Saras ſignifieth, ſic Chal. Mercer. Iun. with others.

QUEST. XXX. What officer Potiphar was to Pharao.

Pharaos chiefe Steward or maſter of the guard. 1. For we neither reade with the Septuag. Pharaos cooke, although the word tabach be ſometime uſed in that ſenſe, 1 Sam. 9. 23. which reading Philo, and Ambroſe follow. 2. Neither yet was he Pharaos chiefe ſteward as ſome reade, B. G. 3. Nor chiefe captaine of his ſouldiers, as both the Chalde and Hierome tranſlate. 4. But ſeeing the word ſignifieth to kill, and ſo the word is indifferently applyed both to Cookes and Butchers that are ſlaughter men of beaſts, and to ſouldiers that kill men in battell, and executioners that put men to death that are condemned by the law: It appeareth that this Potiphar had the chiefe charge of thoſe that were adjudged to impriſonment or death, as Pharaos two officers, his chiefe Baker and Butler were committed to his charge, Gen. 40. 3. and ſo may be well thought to be the chiefe Marſhall or Captaine of the Guard unto Pharaoh, Iunius, Mercerus.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. The father is as the Sunne, and chiefe in the houſe.

Verſ. 9. THe Sunne, Moone, and Stars did reverence unto me, &c. Ioſeph by the Sunne and Moone underſtandeth his father and mother. The father then of the houſe is by Gods ordinance as the Sunne, from whom the wife as the Moone, the children as Stars muſt receive their light and direction in every family, Muſcul. for the Apoſtle ſaith concerning wives, If they will learne any thing, let them aske their husbands at home, 1 Cor. 14. 35. and concerning the reſt the ſame Apoſtle ſaith, Having children in obedience, with all honeſty, 1 Timoth. 3. 4.

2. Doct. The Prophets did not forſee all things but what was revealed unto them.

AGaine he dreamed, &c. Ioſeph, as Bernard well noteth, did by the ſpirit of prophecie foreſee his exaltation: yet his humiliation and captivity was not declared unto him, though this was nearer unto the other, tractat. de gradib. humilitat. Whereby we ſee that the Prophets did not foreſee all things, neither had they a propheticall ſpirit reſiding with them, whereby to foretell what they would, but the onely knew thoſe things which it pleaſed God to reveale unto them: as the Prophet Ieremie at the firſt did not perceive the falſhood of the Prophet Hananie that propheſied of their returne from captivity after two years, but wiſhed that it might fall out even ſo, till the word of God came unto him, Ier. 28. 6.

3. Doct. True obedience followeth not the words, but the minde of the commander.

Verſ. 7. IOſeph went after his brethren, and found them in Dothan, &c. Yet his father ſent him only to ſeeke them in Sechem, verſ. 12. Ioſeph ſheweth his prompt obedience in not ſtrictly tying himſelfe to his fathers words, but fulfilling his minde: Iacob ſpake but of Sechem to Ioſeph, but he knowing that it was his meaning hee ſhould ſeeke out his brethren, followeth after them to Dothan, that he might finde them out, Muſcul. by which example we are taught what kinde of obedience is moſt accepted with God, not to keepe onely the letter of the law as the Scribes did, whoſe corrupt gloſſes our Saviour confuteth, Matth. 5. but to obſerve the true meaning and ſenſe thereof.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. The Latine text corrupt and not juſtifiable.

Verſ. 2. WHen Ioſeph was ſeventeene yeares old. The Latine text readeth moſt corruptly, When Ioſeph was ſixteene yeare old; which reading Perer. would juſtifie by theſe reaſons; 1. The Latine text underſtandeth ſixteene yeares complete, the Hebrewes ſeventeene yeares now but begun. 2. He thinketh that the Latine tranſlator ſet downe divers things whereof no reaſon can bee given, without the ſecret inſtinct of the ſpirit, Pererius diſput. 1. in Gen. cap. 37.

Contra. 1. It is the manner of the Hebrewes when they ſet downe a number of yeares, to make the account by full and complete yeares, as is manifeſt by the phraſe here uſed, He was the ſonne of ſeventeene yeares, now he cannot be the ſonne or birth of ſo many yeares before they are expired; the father being before the ſonne: ſo is this phraſe uſed, Gen. 17. 25. where Iſmael is ſaid to bee the ſonne of thirteene yeares, (that is, ſo many complete) when Abraham was 99. yeare old, for Iſmael was borne when Abraham was 86. yeares old, Gen. 16. 16. And bee it granted that the Latine might agree in ſenſe with the Hebrew, yet it is too great boldneſſe in a tranſlator to change the number, to put downe 16. for 17. 2. Now to ſay that the Latine interpreter did this not without the inſtinct of the ſpirit, is in effect to ſay that the Hebrew writer had not the inſtinct of the ſpirit; or that the inſtinct of the ſpirit is contrary to it ſelfe, if both he that writeth ſixteene, and he that numbreth ſeventeene years in the ſame place, and the ſame perſon, were moved by the ſame ſpirit: But the Latine tranſlator was led by the ſame ſpirit to write here 16. for 17. which moved him, Gen. 8. 4. for the 17. day of the moneth, to write the 27. day which is a manifeſt errour, and ſo is this here. Hence then appeareth the groſſe blindneſſe of the Tridentine Counter, which maketh the Latine tranſlation authenticall without acception.

2. Confut. A concubine not ſimply or properly a wife.

Verſ. 2. WHereas Zilpah and Bilha are here ſaid to be Iacobs wives, Pererius noteth that Iacobs concubines were ſimply his wives, though not his principall wives, as Rachel & Leah. Perer. in Gen. 37. nume. 9. Contr. The Scripture maketh a manifeſt difference between a wife & a concubine for the concubine was ſtill under the government of the wife, as Hagar after ſhe was given to Abraham, is ſtill called Sarahs maid, Gen. 16. and the ſonne of the concubine did not inherit as the ſonne of the wife; yet ſometime ſhe that was properly a concubine, is called improperly a wife, as Zilpah and Bilha here, either becauſe the principall wives being dead, they ſucceeded in their place, or for that their ſonnes were privileged to be co-heires with the ſonnes of Leah and Rachel, which was not uſuall but onely for the ſonnes of the principall wives to inherit. See more of this, quæſt. 8. in Gen. 25.

3. Confut. Againſt free-will.

Verſ. 4. They could not ſpeake peaceably unto him. So our Saviour ſaith to the Phariſes, How can you ſpeake good things, ſeeing you are evill? Matth. 12. 34. Hence is confuted the popiſh doctrine of free-will, that a man of his owne power is apt to chuſe that which is good. Iacobs ſonnes abounding with malice, could not ſpeake peaceably to Ioſeph; nor the Phariſes being a generation of vipers, could ſpeake well of Chriſt: for an evill tree cannot bring forth good fruit, Matth. 7. 18. Muſcul.

4. Confut. Our election unto life not by works.

Verſ. 6. Heare this dreame, &c. Ioſeph obtained this great favour with God, to have the preeminence over his brethren, not by any merit or worthineſſe in himſelfe, but of Gods meere grace and favour toward him: for as yet Ioſeph had not ſhewed his faithfulneſſe and chaſtity in Potiphars houſe. The purpoſe of God then to exalt Ioſeph, revealed in theſe dreames, went before any merit of Ioſephs part, Calvin. So alſo Gods free and gracious election, in ſetting us apart to everlaſting ſalvation, is without all reſpect of works in us, as the Apoſtle teacheth, That the purpoſe of God might remaine according to election, not by works, &c. Rom. 9. 11.

5. Confut. Againſt the Sadduces, of the immortality of the ſoule.

Verſ. 21. Let us not kill him, or verbatim, ſmite his ſoule. Hence the Sadduces did inferre, that the ſoule is not immortall, becauſe it may be ſmitten and killed: But Auguſtine anſwereth this objection, That here by the word ſoule, the life is underſtood, the effect, by the efficient; as in Iob, where Satan is forbidden to touch his ſoule, that is, his life; for otherwiſe concerning the nature and ſubſtance of the ſoule, it cannot be killed, according to the words of our Saviour, Feare not thoſe, which after they have killed the body cannot kill the ſoule, Matth. 12.

6. Confut. Sheol in this place not taken for hell.

Verſ. 35. I will goe downe into the grave mourning, &c. 1. The word ſheol here uſed, is neither to bee tranſlated gehenna, hell, the place of torment after this life, as the Chalde and ſome Hebrewes; for Iacob did not ſuppoſe that Ioſeph was in hell, or that he ſhould goe thither. 2. Neither is it taken here for Limbus patrum, the dungeon of darkneſſe, where the ſoules of the fathers remained till Chriſts comming, as Perer. and other popiſh writers: for that place of reſt and joy where Lazarus was in Abrahams boſome, could be no part or member of hell, where there is no joy to be found. 3. Wherefore it is better tranſlated the grave, and cannot be otherwiſe in this place underſtood, as even now ſhall appeare.

The divers ſenſes of that word ſheol.

But becauſe Pererius here fighteth with his owne ſhadow, and goeth about to prove that ſheol in the Scripture is not alwayes taken for the grave, but ſometime for hell properly, as though the proteſtants had affirmed, that the word was never found uſed for hell: I will firſt ſet downe the divers acceptations of the word ſheol in Scripture. I find therefore that this word is uſed in foure ſeverall ſenſes. 1. It is taken for hell metaphorically, that is, for the deepe plunging in extreme ſorrow, miſery, and danger, as Pſal. 86. 13. Thou haſt delivered my ſoule from the nethermoſt hell. 2. It is taken for the locall place of hell properly, as Proverbs 15. Hell and deſtruction are before the Lord. 3. It ſignifieth the grave, Prov. 30. 16. The grave and the barren wombe are reckoned among thoſe things that are never ſatisfied: where Pererius will have the word taken for hell, not the grave; for the grave, ſaith he, is ſoone filled and ſatisfied: it holdeth not above one body. Contr. 1. This is a very childiſh anſwer, ſeeing the Wiſe man ſpeaketh not of any one particular grave, but of the condition of the grave in generall, which is never ſatisfied with dead bodies, but receiveth more ſtill: as in the ſame place, ſaying, The earth cannot be ſatisfied with water, he meaneth not any ſeverall peece or lumpe of earth, which may be ſoone drenched with water, but of the quality & nature of the earth in generall. 2. So that in this ſenſe the grave is rather ſheol, than hell, becauſe it is more craving: for to hell goe none but the wicked, but the grave receiveth the bodies of all both good and bad. 4. Sheol is taken to ſignifie the lower, deepe, and remote parts of the earth, as without any relation to the place of puniſhment, as Pſal. 139. 8. If I aſcend into heaven thou art there, if I lie downe in hell, thou art there alſo, ſic Mercer.

7. Confut. Againſt Pererius expoſition of that place, Pſal. 16. 10.

Further, whereas Pererius allegeth that place, Pſal. 16. 10. Thou wilt not leave my ſoule in hell, to ſhew that ſheol is taken for hell: it ſhall not be amiſſe by the way to examine the ſenſe of this place, wherein there are three expoſitions.

Firſt, ſome by ſoule, nepheſh, underſtand the dead body, as it is taken, Levit. 21. 1. Let none be defiled by the dead; the word is nepheſh, ſoule. Genebrard a popiſh writer thus confuteth this opinion, denying that nepheſh is in this place taken for the body, but by a metonymie it ſignifieth the exequies and funerall duties performed to the ſoule of the dead.

Nepheſh taken in Leviticus for a dead corpſe.

Contra. Though we alſo approve not the former expoſition of nepheſh in this place; and that reverend father that ſo tranſlated, Act. 2. hath himſelfe in that point altered his tranſlation, in his laſt edition of his annotations upon the new teſtament: yet Genebrard had no reaſon to deny the word to bee ſo taken, Levit. 21. 1. for 1. beſide that the Iſraelites had no ſuch cuſtome to uſe any ſuffrages or exequies for the ſoules of the dead, and therefore nepheſh can ſignifie no ſuch thing. 2. The defiling was by touching touching the dead, *Levit.*22.4. or by going to the dead, Levit. 21.11. but the ſoules of the dead cannot be touched, neither could the ſuffrages for the ſoules, but the preſence of the bodies pollute them. 3. The Levites are forbidden to defile themſelves with the dead, ſaving their fathers and mothers, and other of their neare kindred, *Levit.*22.2. But it is not like that they ſhould have beene forbidden to pray, or offer ſuffrages for any but their owne kindred; yea the high Prieſt is forbidden to defile himſelfe for his father and mother, *verſ.*10. Let them ſay alſo that he was forbidden to pray for the ſoule of his father and mother, if any ſuch thing had beene in uſe then: therefore Genebrards expoſition is vaine, and without any good ground.

Secondly, Pererius and other of that ſort, doe take hell here for that locall place and region of ſoules, where they imagine the fathers to have remained before the comming of Chriſt: and Pererius beſt reaſon is, becauſe the Prophet maketh a manifeſt diſtinction betweene the ſoule and body of Chriſt, and hell, and the grave, ſaying, Thou ſhalt not leave my ſoule in hell, nor ſuffer thy holy one to ſee corruption, Pere. in cap. 13. numer. 100.

Contra. 1. Here is no diſtinction of divers parts, but an explanation of the ſame thing in divers words according to the uſe of Scripture: ſo that what is firſt ſaid ſomewhat darkly, Thou wilt not leave my ſoule in grave, is afterward more plainly declared; that is, Thou wilt not ſuffer thy holy one to ſee corruption. 2. That ſuch locall place of hell cannot be here underſtood, may appeare by theſe reaſons out of the text it ſelfe; 1. That place where Chriſts ſoule was not left, and it was impoſſible he ſhould be holden of it, God looſed the ſorrowes of, *Act.*2.24. but God looſed not for Chriſt the ſorrowes of hell, which he felt not after his paſſion, Ergo, Chriſts ſoule was not left in hell. 2. The not leaving of Chriſts ſoule in hell was the cauſe why his fleſh did reſt in hope, *verſ.*26,27. the not leaving of his ſoule in the locall place of hell cauſed not his fleſh to reſt in hope, but the not leaving of it in the grave, and the not ſeeing of corruption: for their ſoules which are left in hell ſhall alſo returne to their bodies, and bee raiſed together with them, Ergo. 3. That hell where Chriſts ſoule is not left, is the place where corruption is to be ſeene; for ſo one clauſe of the ſentence is expounded by the other: but in hell there is no corruption, Ergo. 4. David when he ſaid, Thou ſhalt not leave my ſoule in hell, ſpake of Chriſts reſurrection, *Act.*2.31. but the not leaving of Chriſts ſoule in the infernall hell, concerneth not the reſurrection of Chriſts body, Ergo, David meaneth not that hell.

The third expoſition therefore is, which I preferre before the reſt, that Chriſts ſoule, that is, his life or perſon ſhould not be left in the grave: and ſo this place of the Pſalme may bee expounded by the like, *Pſal.*89.48. What man liveth and ſhall not ſee death? ſhall hee deliver his ſoule from the hand of hell, or the grave? here the Pſalmiſt himſelfe expoundeth hell to be death, where the ſoule, that is, the life, lieth as it were hid and buried, as *Pſal.*88. 3. My life draweth neare to the grave, ſic Paul. Fag. annotat. in Chaldæ. paraphraſ. in Pentateuch.

8. Confut. Iacob goeth mourning to the grave, not to hell.

BUt whereas Pererius yet further in this place concerning Iacobs deſcending, &c, would have hell to be not the grave underſtood, for all goe not downe to the grave: and Iacob did thinke that Ioſeph was not in the grave, being ſuppoſed to be torne of wilde beaſts: the contrary ſhall now appeare.

1. This is a friuolous objection, for the grave is not onely a pit or a hole made for the dead, but a place where the body falleth to duſt and corruption: as Iob deſcribeth it, *chap.*17. *verſ.*13. *The grave be my houſe, verſ.*14. *I ſhall ſay to corruption thou art my father, verſ.*16. They ſhall lie together in the duſt: thereof even Ioſeph alſo, though he had beene torne of wilde beaſts, and rotted upon the earth, ſhould have had his grave. 2. In ſaying all goe not to the grave, he manifeſtly contradicteth the Scripture, now before alleaged, *What man ſhall deliver his ſoule from the hand of the grave? Pſal.*89.48. 3. Hell in the old Teſtament is not taken otherwiſe than for a place of torment and puniſhment: but neither Iacob nor Ioſeph went to any ſuch place. 4. This hell Iacob went unto with his gray head or haires, *Gen.*42.38. the grave, not hell, is the place for gray haires. 5. Laſtly, that ſheol here ſignifieth the grave, it is the opinion of Ab. Ezra, whom Eugubinus, Cajetanus, Oleaſter, Vatablus follow: and among the Proteſtants Fagius, Mercer, with others.

6. Places of morall obſervation.

1. Obſerv. That parents be not partiall in their loves toward their children.

Verſ.4. IOſephs brethren hated him, becauſe they ſaw that their father loved him. Ambroſe noteth it to have beene an over-ſight in Iacob, for preferring one of the brethren before the reſt: which he in Ioſeph loved and preferred his vertue ſhould rather have concealed his affection: for as bee ſaith, it is no marvell if brethren fall out for houſes and land, when Ioſephs brethren hated him for a coat. *Ambr. lib.*2. de Ioſeph. Wherefore parents may learne how inconvenient a thing it is to bee partiall toward their children, and by immoderate love toward ſome, to exaſperate and provoke the reſt: which the Apoſtle giveth warning of, *Fathers provoke not your children to wrath, Eph.*6.4.

2. Obſerv. A pitifull man will firſt offer himſelfe to them that are in miſery.

Verſ.15. VVHat ſeekeſt thou? Herein appeareth the great courteſie and humanity of this ſtranger, that ſeeing Ioſeph wandring in the field, firſt moveth the queſtion to him, and bringeth him into his way, Muſcul. which teacheth us, that we ſhould offer our helpe to them that are in error or miſery, and not expect till we be by much ſuit and earneſtneſſe importuned: therefore a mercifull man is deſcribed to have a good eye, *Prov.*22.9. whoſe eye firſt pitieth, and preventeth his eare: this condem-their hard hearts, that are so farre off from offering their helpe to their brethren, that they stop their eares against the complaint of the poore.

3. Observ. Gods will even by mens resistance doth take more speedy effect.

Vers. 20. THen will we see what will become of his dreames. Gregory here hath a good note, Indo voluntatem Deiperagimus, cum humanam contendimus; Men often doe most of all fulfill the will of God, when they seeme most to strive against it; as Iosephs brethren, by consulting to kill, and afterwards in selling him, thought to have prevented his dreames: but all this wrought in the end for Iosephs preferment and advancement, Greg. lib. 6. moral. thus the Apostle saith, All things worke together for the best to them that love God, Rom. 8. 28.

4. Observ. Dissention among the wicked profitable.

Vers. 21. BVt when Ruben heard, &c. Ruben onely dissented from his brethren, and so Ioseph was delivered: the dissention then among the evill is often profitable to the servants of God: as the division betweene the Sichemites and Abimeleck was a meanes to bring that tyrant to his end, Iud. 9. and Paul escaped by that contention which arose betweene the Pharisies and Sadducees, Act. 23. Perer.

5. Observ. Against the security of sinners.

Vers. 25. THen they sate them downe to eat bread. Such was the security of Iacobs sonnes, that while Ioseph mourned in the deepe cave without hope of life, they gave themselves to eating and drinking: as the Prophet Amos noteth the security of sinners, alluding to this example; They drinke wine in bowles, but no man is sorry for the affliction of Ioseph, Amos 6. 8. and the Wise man saith, It is a pastime to fooles to doe wickedly, Prov. 13. 23.

6. Observ. Sin in the end bringeth no profit, but shame and confusion.

Vers. 26. THen Iudah said, what availeth it if we slay our brother? &c. Like as Iudah dissuadeth his brethren from this cruell murther, because they should in the end reape no advantage by it: so every man that is tempted to any sinne should so reason with himselfe, that no gaine is like to come unto him by the sinfull act of adultery, theft, lying, extortion, or such like, but shame and confusion in the end, and the displeasure of God, as the Apostle saith, What fruit have you of that whereof you are now ashamed? 16. 21. Muscul.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

1. The Method or Argument.

THis Chapter hath three parts; the first concerneth the marriage of Iudah, with the birth of his three sons, from vers. 1. to 6. The second sheweth the wickednesse of Iudah his two eldest sons, Er and Onan, from vers. 6. to 10. The third declareth the incest of Iudah with Thamar. 1. The occasion thereof, because Iudah kept not promise in giving unto her Selah his youngest sonne, vers. 11. 26. 2. The manner thereof, the disguising of her selfe, and taking a pledge of Iudah, from vers. 14. to 24. 3. The sentence of Iudah against her, with the discovery of his sinne, vers. 24. to 27. 4. The birth of Phares and Zarah, with the manner thereof, vers. 27. to the end of the Chapter.

3. The explanation of doubtfull queſtions.

Quest. I. Why this hiſtory of Iudah his inceſt is inſerted.

Verſ. 1. AT that time Iudah went downe from his brethren, &c. Moſes inſerteth the ſtory of Iudah [illegible] of his line. 1. To ſhew the prerogative of that tribe of whom our Saviour ſhould come [illegible] the fleſh, Marlorat. 2. To ſet forth the great humility of Chriſt, that vouchſafed to take his fleſh even [illegible] ſuch a generation as was at the firſt propagated by inceſtuous birth, Calvin. for in Chriſt there was [illegible] riches of grace, who needed not to be made noble by his ſtocke, nor yet were the infirmities of his [illegible] genitors any diſparagement to him. All precedent ſlips and errours in them were cleanſed and [illegible] in his holy and unſpotted conception. 3. This narration of Iudahs inceſt doth ſerve to abate the pride [illegible] inſolencie of the Jewes, who boaſt ſo much of their petigree; and they are not aſhamed to tell our Saviour to his face, that they were not borne of fornication, Ioh. 8.41. Perer. 4. This ſtory hath ſome coherence and ſimilitude with that which followeth in the next chapter, though the event is not like: [illegible] here Thamar ſoliciteth Iudah, there Potiphars wife Ioſeph; but Iudah ſheweth his incontinencie, Ioſeph his chaſtity, Mercer.

Quest. II. At what time theſe things were done here reported of Iudah

BUt at what time this hiſtorie was done, here recorded, ſome queſtion there is: 1. Neither is this narration wholly ſet downe by way of recapitulation, as Auguſtine thinketh, queſt. 128. in Gen. as though it went before Ioſephs ſelling into Egypt: for Iudah was not above foure or five yeares elder than Ioſeph, for Iudah was the fourth ſonne of Leah, and hee and Ioſeph were borne within the compaſſe of [illegible] yeares, Gen. 31.31. Now Ioſeph being ſeventeene yeare old when he was ſold into Egypt, Iudah that not exceeding 22. yeares, could not have ſonnes marriageable, as Er and Onan were. 2. Neither is Perer opinion to be received, that all this fell out after Ioſeph was ſold: for from that time till Iacob [illegible] downe to Egypt, when Ioſeph was 39. yeare old, are but 22. yeares, in which time Iudah could not [illegible] a grand-father as he was: for his ſonne Phares had two ſonnes, Ezron and Hamul, that went downe [illegible] Iacob into Egypt. And to ſay that either of theſe two ſonnes were borne in Egypt, is to contradict [illegible] Scripture that ſaith, they went downe into Egypt with Iacob, Gen. 46.26. or to ſay that Iacobs [illegible] downe muſt be taken for all the time of his life and abode in Egypt, which was ſeventeene yeares, [illegible] ſpeake improperly, and to pervert the courſe of the ſtory. 3. Wherefore the beſt ſolution is, that [illegible] this chapter was fulfilled before Ioſephs captivity, part followed after; and Iudah muſt be ſuppoſed to [illegible] taken a wife at twelve or thirteene, Mercer. Iunius thinketh at ſeventeene yeares, (I would rather [illegible] fourteene or fifteene yeares betweene both;) and Er muſt be about ten yeares of age when Ioſeph [illegible] ſold, Iun. who alſo tooke a wife at the like age of twelve or thirteene yeares, Mercer. which will [illegible] out about the twenty five or twenty ſix yeare of Iudahs age: then Er and Onan might die in one [illegible] Selah might be expected ſome three yeares, Perer. then the yeare following might Thamar have [illegible] two twins, about the thirty yeare of Iudah; Pharez keeping the ſame time of marriage might have [illegible] two ſonnes, but very young, when Iacob went downe to Egypt, in the 44. yeare or thereabout of Iudahs [illegible] age. Iunius thinketh that Iudah begat Pharez at the age of thirty foure, and was fifty yeares old when [illegible] he went downe into Egypt: but that cannot be, for Iudah was not above five years elder than Ioſeph, who [illegible] was then but 39. yeares old: for Iudah was Leahs fourth ſon, who together with Ioſeph were borne in the [illegible] ſecond ſeven yeare of Iacobs ſervice with Laban. 4. And leſt it might ſeeme ſtrange that Iudah and his [illegible] ſonnes were married and had children ſo young; this is not affirmed without the like preſident in Scripture: for wee finde that Ahaz father to Hezekiah, was but eleven yeares old when hee was borne, for Ahaz was but thirty ſix yeares old when hee died, 2 King. 16.2. and Hezekiah immediately ſucceeding in the kingdome, was 25. yeare old, 2 King. 18.2. It cannot be ſaid that there was an interregnum betweene them, that the kingdome lay void a certaine ſpace: for in the twelfth yeare of Ahaz over [illegible] dah, began Hoſhea to reigne in Samaria nine years, 2 King. 17.1. and Ahaz reigned ſixteene years, 2 King. 16.2. Now in the third yeare of Hoſhea began Hezekiah to reigne, 2 King. 18.1. If then in thoſe dayes when mans age was much ſhortned, his nature decayed, and ſtrength abated, they had iſſue ſo ſoone, it is not improbable but that ſuch untimely mariages might be in uſe in Iudahs time, when their life was longer and their ſtrength greater. 5. But where it is ſaid, About that time Iudah went downe: it muſt not be referred exactly to that particular ſeaſon which went immediately before, but indefinitely underſtood of the whole courſe of that hiſtory of Iacobs children after their returne out of Meſopotamia, while Iacob dwelt in Sechem, where he remained eight yeares: which I rather thinke with Mercer. than that was done after Iacob was come to Iſaack. Aben Ezra ſheweth the like, Deut. 10.7. where it is ſaid, that at the ſame time when the children of Iſrael departed from Gudgodah, The Lord ſeparated the tribe of Levi: whereas Levi was ſeparated the ſecond yeare after they came out of Egypt, but they departed from Gudgodah in the 40. yeare: wherefore theſe words the ſame time, muſt be referred to the whole time of their peregrination in the wilderneſſe, not to that particular time of departing from Gudgodah. And ſo like wiſe in this place, ex Mercer. Or further, theſe words about that time, may be underſtood by a ſynecdoche, the part being taken for the whole: becauſe ſome of theſe things here recorded (though not all) might fall out in that inſtant, or not long after, as the ſtrange death of Er and Onan, and the inceſt of Tamar, which might happen about the 24. yeare of Ioſeph, ex Mercer.

Iudah and his children married very young.

Quest. III. Why Iudah went downe, and whither.

Verſ. 1. IVdah went downe, &c. 1. That is, he deſcended into ſome lower Countrey, it may bee out of Sechem: not as ſome Hebrewes, that he was fallen from his greatneſſe, becauſe he gave counſell to have Ioſeph ſold, and was the cauſe of his fathers long griefe, Mercer. 2. What was the cauſe of his going from his brethren is not expreſſed, whether for deteſtation of the horrible murther committed by Simeon and Levi upon the Sichemites, or for the abundance of cattell which he had. But it is like that he often came and went to his brethren, as appeareth by the ſtory of Ioſephs ſelling into Egypt, whereunto Iudah adviſed: he alſo went downe with his brethren into Egypt for corne. 3. This Adullam was a towne in the tribe of Iudah, whither afterward David did flie, 1 Sam. 22.1. Hieroms ſaith, that in his time there was a village of that name ſome ten miles from Eleutheropolis, Muſcul.

Adullam the name of a village in the tribe of Iudah.

Quest. IV. Of Iudahs overſight in marrying a woman of the Canaanites.

Verſ. 2. IVdah ſaw the daughter of a man called Suah. 1. This was not the name of Iudahs wife as the Septuagint reade, verſ. 12. but of his wives father. 2. Neither was this Suah a merchant as the Chalde paraphraſt readeth, and the Hebrewes follow the ſame, to cover the infirmities of their fathers: although the word Covagnan ſometime be uſed appellatively for a merchant, Prov. 31.24. But he was a Canaanite: we reade the like of Simeon, that he had his ſonne Saul by a Canaanitiſh woman, Gen. 46.10. Mercer. No marvell then if Iudah matching into the curſed ſtocke of Canaan, whoſe land was promiſed to Abraham and his ſeed, which Iudah could not be ignorant of, had no good ſucceſſe in his children the fruits of his mariage, who alſo were accurſed of God, Calvin. 4. Iudah ſaw this woman, he tooke her and went to her; all was done in haſte: ſo that his affection carried him headlong, his judgement did not guide him, Muſcul.

Quest. V. Er and Onan whence and upon what occaſion ſo called.

Verſ. 6. IVdah tooke a wife to Er his firſt-borne. 1. Though Iudah tooke him a wife without the conſent of his father, yet he will not have his ſonne ſo to doe, Muſcul. 2. Whence he is called Er it is uncertaine: ſome will have it to ſignifie watchfull. Auguſtine doth interpret it pelliceus, to have his name of skinne or leather, ſuch as Adam was cloathed with, in token of his tranſgreſſion, lib. 22. cont. Fauſt. cap. 84. Iſaack Carus will have all theſe three ſonnes to be named from Ioſephs calamity: Er, becauſe Iacob was in a manner deſolate, or deſtroyed, of gnariri: Onan, of the griefe of their father: Shelah, of the ſhame which Iudah committed in ſelling of Ioſeph. Ramban thinketh Onan to be ſo called of the paine of the mother in travell, as Rachel called Benjamin Ben-oni; and Shelah of his mothers errour, in ceaſing to beare afterward. But if it bee lawfull to uſe conjectures, I thinke upon what occaſion ſoever they had theſe names given at the firſt, that the event anſwered their names; for Er was ſolitary without children; Onan had a lamentable end; and about Shelah Iudah committed a great errour with Thamar. 3. Iudah gave Er his name, the mother named the other two: not that as the Hebrewes note, the father did alwayes name the firſt-borne, the mother the reſt: for as we ſaw before in Iacobs ſonnes, ſometime the father, ſometime the mother indifferently gave the name, but not without the conſent of the father, Mercer. 4. Concerning Thamar, ſome Hebrewes would have her the daughter of Sem, the high Prieſt Melchiſedeck, becauſe Iudah judgeth her to be burned, according to the law of the Prieſts daughter committing fornication, Levit. 21.8. but ſeeing Sem died ten yeare before Iacob, (he lived not to the 50. yeare of Iacobs, Mercerus) it cannot be that Thamar a childe-bearing woman ſhould bee his daughter, Iacob being at leaſt an hundred yeare old. It is like ſhe was a Canaanitiſh woman, Luther. and a vertuous woman, that did leave and forſake the idolatry of her Countrey to worſhip the true God, Pertr. ex Philone.

Thamar whether the daughter of Sem.

Quest. VI. Of the ſinne of Er what it was.

Verſ. 7. NOw Er was wicked in the ſight of the Lord. 1. The wickedneſſe of Er was not as Auguſtine ſuppoſeth, in being given to oppreſſion or cruelty, lib. 22. cont. Fauſt. cap. 34. but it is like to the ſame ſinne of unnaturall luſt which Onan committed, as may be gathered both by the likeneſſe of puniſhment, as by the phraſe, that he was wicked in the ſight of God, as it is ſaid of the Sodomites, Gen. 13.13. his ſinne was not ſecret, as Toſtatus, but it was a ſinne very hainous and grievous againſt the law of nature, and inſtitution of God: for he abuſed himſelfe, and ſpoiled his ſeed, not becauſe he would have any iſſue by a Canaanitiſh woman, as Mercer. for then he needed not to have maried her; but rather the Hebrewes conjecture, that hee might long enjoy the beauty and favour of Thamar, which would be impaired by bearing of children, or ſome ſuch like cauſe. 2. So then this ſinne was againſt nature, which is diverſly commited: either alone, when men doe vitiouſly procure and provoke their ſeed; or with others, either of a divers kinde, as with bruit beaſts, or with the ſame kinde but not the right ſex, as with the male, or with the right ſex that is the female, but not in due manner, which was the ſinne of Onan. 3. This ſinne of Er was againſt the order of nature, uſing the act of generation for pleaſure onely, Unnaturall luſt how many wayes committed.

onely, and not for generation: it was against God, whose institution he brake; against his wife, whom he defrauded of the fruit of her wombe; against himselfe, in preventing his issue; against mankinde, who should have beene increased and propagated, Perer. 4. Yet Onans sinne was not lesse than Ers, as Augustine thinketh, who maketh Er of that sort of wicked men that doe evill to others; Onan of the kinde that doe no good to others: but herein Onan exceedeth the wickednesse of Er, both because he was not warned by his brothers example; as Daniel reproveth Belthasar because his heart was not humbled by the fall of Nebuchadnezer his father, *Dan.*5.22. As also for that Onan committed this sinne of envie against his brother, to whom hee should have raised seed, whereas Er did it not of envie, but of an immoderate desire of pleasure, Perer.

Er or Onan, whether the greater sinner.

QUEST. VII. Whether in any case it were lawfull by Moses law for one to marry his brothers wife.

Vers. 8. IVdah said, &c. goe in to thy brothers wife. Here a question is moved, whether it were lawfull by Moses law for the brother to marry his brothers widow, to raise up seed to his brother. 1. Pi-lo thinketh that it was not onely lawfull among the Israelites, but that it was the custome so to doe among the Canaanites, and that the Judges of the Country did give Thamar to Onan, after the death of his brother Er, but the contrary is evident out of the text; for Iudah and not the Judges of the Country gave Thamar to Onan: And I thinke rather that it was a custome received among the fathers, and after confirmed by Moses law, than any usage learned of the Canaanites, whose fashions they were not to imitate. 2. Neither doe I thinke with the Hebrewes, that Iudah was the first that brought in this kinde of marriage, though hee be first mentioned, but that he had received that custome from other of the fathers. 3. Wherefore it seemeth that Moses gave liberty to the next brother to take the wife of his brother departed without issue, and not to the next removed kinsman onely that was without the compasse of Leviticall degrees: and so some expound that law, *Deut.*25.5. sic Genevens. upon that place: D. Feb. 6. Mark. annot. 2. But the other sense approved by Mercerus, Calvin, Iunius, which understand the naturall brother, seemeth more probable for these reasons: 1. Because the first president of such marriages is taken from this place, where one naturall brother succeedeth another in taking his wife. 2. The word used in the law, *Deut.*25.5. jabam, signifieth not to doe the office of a kinsman, but of a brother, for the word is used first in this place where it so signifieth; from hence then the originall sense of the word must be taken. 3. The words of the law are, If brethren dwell together; now naturall brethren such as are properly so called, are more like to dwell together than kinsmen removed, who in a large sense are so called brethren. 4. This law is so interpreted in the Gospell, where it appeareth by the Saduces question of seven brethren that successively tooke the one the others wife, *Matth.*22. that it was so practised. 5. It is the opinion of Philo and the Hebrewes, as we heard before, who are best acquainted with their owne lawes, that naturall brethren used so to doe.

Moses Law, *Deut.*24.5. whether to be understood of the naturall brother.

4. Now the objections on the contrary part are easily answered. 1. It is objected that *Levit.*18. the brother is forbidden to marry his brothers wife. Answ. This is a particular exception from that generall law, that unlesse in this case onely to raise seed to the brother, it was utterly unlawfull to take the brothers widow; which was not to uncover her shame, but rather to take away her shame in that shee remained childlesse by his brother, and it was honourable to the dead in reviving his memory. So wee see in other cases that the Lord made some particular exception from his generall lawes: As the making of the Cherubims over the Arke was an instance against the second commandement; the Israelites robbing the Egyptians against the eighth commandement; Phinehes killing of the adulterer and adulteresse against the sixth commandement.

2. Ob. The practice of this law, as appeareth, Ruth 4. where Boaz not a brother but a kinsman taketh the wife of the dead, sheweth the meaning thereof. Answ. We deny not but where there was a brother nearer, there the next kinsman further off did the duty of the brother; and so was it practised upon Ruth.

3. Ob. Iohn Baptist simply reproveth Herod because he tooke his brothers wife, It is not lawfull for thee (saith Iohn) to have thy brothers wife, *Mark.*6.18. Answ. It is certaine that Herods brother had issue by his wife Herodias, whose daughter danced before Herod; and therefore in this case it was not lawfull: so that Herod tooke not Herodias for any such purpose to raise seed to his brother, but of an immoderate lust.

4. Ob. Why then should it not be lawfull still in this case to marry the brothers wife dying without issue? Answ. This law of Moses was partly ceremoniall and typicall, in preserving the right of the first borne, whereby was prefigured the spirituall birth-right in the Messiah, which never should have ceased: partly politicall, in maintaining the distinction of families in their tribes: whereof the ceremonie is now abolished, which onely concerned that people, *Iun. in Deut.*25. *vers.*5.

QUEST. VIII. Whether Thamar or Iudahs sinne was greater.

COncerning this act of incontinencie which Iudah committed with Thamar, 1. We refuse the opinion of Rab. Simeon, who altogether exempteth Thamar from any fault, because she onely desired issue for the hope of the Messiah to be borne of Iudah: for this mystery was not as yet revealed, Pi-lo. 2. It is certaine that Iudahs sinne was greater than Thamars, both in that he brake promise with her concerning Selah, as also in that he companied with her not for any issue but carnall lust: though he were a ward preferred before his brethren, this no more excuseth his fault than if Davids adultery joyned with murther should bee defended, because hee was preferred before his brethren, of whose seed the Messiah should come. 3. Thamars sinne was lesse than Iudahs, yet a sinne, as Augustine noteth; Non justificatam, sed magis quam se justificatam dicens; Iudah saith, She was not righteous, but more righ-

…ber, lib. 22. cont. Fauſt. cap. 62. Yet her fault is extenuated by theſe circumſtances, as Ambroſe noteth: …ſuum prærupit thorum; She did not uſurpe upon anothers bed: ſhe ſtayed till Iudah was a widower: …did it not of an inordinate luſt, Sed ſucceſſionis gratia concupivit; She onely deſired to have iſſue: Et ex …familia quam delegerat; And by that family which ſhe had choſen: and further, after ſhe knew her ſelfe to …conceived with childe, ſhe put on her widowes garments againe, and ſo continued. 4. Yet Thamars ſin …ſome reſpect was greater than Iudahs; becauſe ſhe wittingly committed inceſt with her father in law, …Iudah ignorantly, Luther. Notwithſtanding all circumſtances conſidered, Iudahs fault was the grea… …and ſo he doth juſtifie her in reſpect of himſelfe. 5. But whereas Ambroſe further noteth, that ſhee …yet till Selah, to whom ſhe was eſpouſed, was dead, therein is an errour: for verſ. 14. it is given as a …reaſon why Thamar attempted this thing, becauſe Selah was now growne, and of age, and ſhe yet not given …him: he was then at this time alive. Beſide, Selah is numbred among thoſe ſons of Iudah that went …downe with Iacob into Egypt: and onely Er and Onan of Iacobs ſonnes are ſaid to have died in the land …of Canaan, Gen. 46. 12. ex Perer.

QUEST. IX. How it came to paſſe that Iudah diſcerned not Thamar by her voice.

…verſ. 15. HE judged her to be an whore, for ſhe had covered her face, &c. 1. Not as ſome reade, ſhe had coloured or painted her face, whom Aben Ezra doth not without cauſe reprove. 2. Nei… …is this a reaſon why Iudah did thinke ſhe was an harlot, becauſe ſhe was vailed, as Iunius, Calvin. …harlots uſe not to be ſo modeſt, but it is given as a reaſon why Iudah did not know her, Mercer. …And whereas it may ſeeme ſtrange that Iudah did not know her by her voice, the reaſon is, that being …wholly given over to luſt, and intending no other thing, he greatly regarded not the ſight of his eyes, or …hearing of his eares, Luther: As alſo it was a juſt judgement of God upon him, to ſtrike him with ſuch …blindneſſe, as not to diſcerne her, Mercer. Geneven.

QUEST. X. Whether Iudah were a Iudge.

…verſ. 24. BRING her forth and let her be burnt, &c. 1. Iudah giveth not ſentence againſt Thamar, either …as being appointed a Prince and Judge among the Canaanites, as Toſtatus, Cajetanus: for it …is not like they would ſuffer a ſtranger to be a Judge and ruler among them, as the Sodomites anſwer Lot, …Gen. 19. neither as chiefe in the familie had he power of life and death over thoſe of his charge, as ſome …dreame: for neither doe we reade that any father of families did execute any ſuch juſtice in their families: …Iacob was the chiefe father of theſe families; and therefore it is moſt like that Iudah giveth advice that …ſhe ſhould be brought forth to the place of juſtice, and proceeded againſt according to the cuſtome …and law of that Country, Mercer. Iun. 2. But whereas ſhe is adjudged to the fire: this was not becauſe ſhe …was Melchiſedecks daughter, the Lords high Prieſt, as the Hebrewes imagine, for he died ten yeares before …ſhe was borne, who was now above 100. yeare old: and therefore Melchiſedeck could not have a daugh… …too young to beare children: neither was this puniſhment arbitrary in Iudah, and inflicted without law …according to his pleaſure, Burgenſ. for Iudah had no ſuch authority there: nor yet as Lyranus and Toſta… …tus ſhe worthy of the fire, becauſe ſhe had committed not ſimple fornication, but adultery, becauſe ſhe …by law obliged to the third brother, and ſo in a manner eſpouſed: for it was not adultery for the wi… …of the brother to marrie with ſome other than the ſurviving brother: elſe Naomi would never have …perſwaded her daughters in law to get them other husbands in their owne Countrey, Ruth. 1. 9. But I rather …hold that Thamars adultery was in this, that ſhe had played the whore, whereas Iudah had betrothed …and eſpouſed her to Selah: and that Iudah, who never was minded to give Selah to Thamar, fearing leſt …Selah might die alſo, as is evident, verſ. 11. was very forward to take this occaſion to be rid of Thamar, that …he might not marrie her. 3. But herein appeareth Iudahs too much rigour and injuſtice, that before the …matter was examined gave ſentence: and was partiall (the truth being knowne) in his owne cauſe: and …Mercer, it was a ſavage part to put to death a woman great with childe, which is contrary both to divine …and humane lawes: for it is written, Deut. 24. 16. The fathers ſhall not bee put to death for the children, nor …the children for the fathers: but if Thamar had now died the infant had died with her. The Romans had …a law, that the execution of a woman with childe ſhould be deferred till ſhe had brought forth: the ſame …was practiſed among the Athenians, Ælian. lib. 5. And therefore Claudius the Emperour is noted for …cruelty, that ſpared not to put to death women with childe, Perer. ex Dion. lib. 57.

Why Thamar is adjudged to be burned.

Iudahs his rigorous overſight in adjudging a woman great with childe to the fire.

QUEST. XI. Wherefore the Midwife uſeth a red threed, and what colour it was of.

…verſ. 28. THE midwife bound a red threed, &c. 1. It is ſo rather to be read than with Oleaſter, a twine or double threed: the word ſani here uſed commeth indeed of ſanah, that ſignifieth to don… …which is rather to be referred to the double die and colour, than the double matter, Iun. Toſtatus alſo …is deceived here, that taketh it not for a red, but a blacke colour twice died, ex Perer. 3. The …reaſon why ſhe tied this red threed as a marke of the firſt-borne, becauſe he firſt put forth his hand: and the pur… …was very well agreeth to the birth-right or eldership, Muſcul.

QUEST. XII. Whence Pharez was ſo called, and whereof he is a type.

…verſ. 29. HOW haſt thou broken thy breach upon thee? 1. Hierome is deceived, that of this word pharatz, that ſignifieth to breake or divide, thinketh the Phariſes to have taken denomination: …they had their name rather of Pharas, which ſignifieth to diſperſe or ſeparate: becauſe they were …from other in profeſſion of life, and their apparell, Mercer. 2. This ſtory hath bin diverſly allegori… …the fathers: ſome by Pharez underſtand the beleeving Gentiles, by Zarah, the Iſraelites: and by …red, their bloudy circumciſion & ſacrifices, ſic Iren. Cyril. Some contrariwiſe will have Phares to …be Jewes, Zarah, the beleeving Gentiles, Chryſoſt. 3. But this Phares is more fitly a type and figure figure of Christ, who hath broken downe the partition wall, and hath broken the power of hell and death, Mercer. And by this strange and extraordinary birth, the Lord would have Iudah and Thamar admonished of the sin which they had committed, and to be humbled thereby, though he in his mercie had forgiven it, Calvin.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. The difference betweene the apparelling of widowes and wives.

Vers. 14. She put her widowes garment off, &c. It seemeth that it was the use in those dayes for widowes to be knowne from wives by their mourning and grave apparell: in which case more is permitted to women that are married, whom the Apostle alloweth to adorne themselves with comely and sober apparell, without pride or excesse, 1 Timoth. 2. 9. to please and content their husbands: but widowes having no husbands to whose liking they should apparell themselves, ought not to decke themselves to please other mens eyes, Luther.

2. Doct. Friendship ought alwayes to be joyned with pietie.

Vers. 20. Iudah sent a kid by the hand of his friend. This Hirah Iudahs friend did performe an evill office, in being as it were a broker for Iudah; who should neither have requested any dishonest or uncomely thing of his friend, nor the other yeelded unto it: love, truth, and piety, ought not to be separated, as Saint Iohn saith, Whom I love in the truth, Epist. 3. 1. Muscul.

3. Doct. Adultery in former times punished by death.

Vers. 24. Let her bee burnt. We see that even among the Canaanites adultery was judged worthy of death: for Iudah inventeth no new kinde of punishment, but speaketh according to the law and custome of that Countrey: So the Lord himselfe said to Abimelech that had taken Sarai unto him, Behold thou art but a dead man for this, &c. Gen. 20. 3. Now although this law as peculiar to that Countrey, bindeth not now neither in respect of the kinde of death (for by Moses law onely the Priests daughter if she played the whore was burned, Levit. 21. 9. the rest were stoned:) nor yet in the inequality of the law: for the women offending were burned, the men escaped, as appeareth in Iudah, Calvin. yet both adulterers and adulteresses are alike guilty: and though then there was greater cause of keeping their seed uncorrupt for preserving of their lives, and the distinction of families, in which respect may be thought somewhat of the former rigour and severity may be abated: yet this example condemneth the security and connivence of magistrates in these dayes in the punishing of this sinne, which faults of lesse nature are more severely censured than adultery. And whereas the president of our Saviour is urged by some for the mitigation of the punishment of adultery, because he would not condemne the woman taken in adulterie, it doth not serve their turne: for this mercie Christ shewed, not to dismisse or exempt the adulteresse, leaving her to the magistrate, but partly to shew that he came not to be a judge in such causes, as neither in other like businesses, as dividing of the inheritance, Luk. 12. 14. partly by this example he would teach what is to be required in the person of an accuser, not to bee guilty of that whereof he accuseth others.

Why Christ condemned not the adulteresse, Ioh. 8.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. That it is not lawfull upon any occasion to marrie the brothers wife.

Vers. 8. Goe into thy brothers wife. Because in this place, as also Deut. 25. 5. it is permitted to all brethren to marry the wives of their brother deceased; Bellarmine inferreth that the Law, Levit. 18. 16. that a man should not marry his brothers wife, was but a judiciall law, not grounded upon the law of nature, and abrogated by Christ: and that it is not simply evill so to doe, for that it could not be made lawfull by circumstance, Bellar. de matri. cap. 27.

Contra. 1. For a man of a luxtfull and uncleane minde to take his brothers wife is against the law of nature, and was never lawfull: but in this case onely, to marry her in obedience to the law, and to raise memory of the dead, was not against the law of nature. 2. If it had, God who is above nature, and giveth law unto nature, might in this case grant an indulgence and dispensation for those times. As then to kill was simply evill and forbidden in the commandement, yet in the zeale of God to kill the wicked, as Phinehes did the adulterer and adulteresse, and Samuel the king of Amelech, was full and commendable: so notwithstanding that law in Levitieus which forbiddeth the discovering of the shame of the brothers wife, Levit. 18. 16. that is, of a filthy and uncleane desire to marrie her; it might be lawfull to doe it onely in this case, to shew obedience to the law, and love to the dead in raising seed unto him, which was not to discover their shame, but rather to cover it, in that the brother dying had by this meanes an heire to keepe his memory, the woman had issue which was childlesse. 4. That this law which forbiddeth to marry the brothers wife, was not abrogated by Christ, appeareth by Iohns reprehension of Herod, that it was not lawfull for him to have his brothers wife, Mark.

2. Confut. Against the Anabaptists, of the lawfull power of magistrates.

Vers. 24. Let her be burnt. This maketh against the opinion of the Anabaptists, who deny that a Magistrate among Christians hath power to put any to death. And lest it might be thought that it was onely lawfull in the Old Testament and not in the new, the Apostle confirmeth the same, saying, The power beareth not the sword for nought, and that he is the minister of God to shew revenge upon him that doe evill, Rom. 13. 4. Now whereas the Anabaptists object that place, Matth. 5. 38. Ye have that it hath beene said, an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth: but I say unto you, resist not evill, &c. Where Christ (they say) restraineth this power of revenging evill, given by Moses to the Magistrate: the answer here is readie, that although this rule was first given to the Magistrate, yet the Scribes and Pharises corruptly applied it to private revenge: so that our Saviour in this place disanulleth not the law of Moses, but speaketh against their corrupt gloses upon it.

6. Places of Exhortation.

1. Observ. How life is to bee counted a blessing.

Vers. 6. ER was wicked, &c. and therefore the Lord slew him: Length of daies then simply and in it selfe is a blessing of God, and the extraordinarie shortning and cutting off the daies, is a curse: the bloudie and deceitfull man shall not live out halfe his daies, Psal. 55. 24. yet this is to be understood with certaine conditions and limitations: 1. In respect of the times, for long life more apparantly was accounted a blessing under the old testament, when the people were fed and nourished with temporall promises: but under the Gospel we must looke to spirituall: 2. Generally upon all the blessing of long, and judgement of short life is not shewed. It sufficeth, that for the demonstration of Gods mercie in the one, and of his justice in the other, some are exemplified: 3. Short life is a blessing, when men are taken away from troubles to come, as Abiah was of Ieroboams house, 1 King. 14. 13. And long life is a curse, when it bringeth shame and dishonour with it, as is seene in Com. Calvin.

2. Observ. Not to post over the fault to others.

Vers. 11. HE thought thus, lest he die as well as his brethren: Iudah layeth all the fault upon Thamar, as though her marriage had beene unluckie, whereas it was wholly in his sonnes. Thus Adam posted over his fault to Eve, but wee are taught hereby to examine our selves, and to finde out our owne sinne, Muscul.

3. Observ. The proneneſſe of our nature to sinne.

Vers. 16. HE turned to the way towards her. Wee see in Iudah, what mans nature is, without the direction of grace: how prone and readie hee was to commit this sinne, and so carried headlong into it, that hee spared not to give her his best ornaments for a pledge, his Ring, Kercheffe, and Staffe, Calvin. Therefore that exhortation of Saint Paul is necessarie: Flie from the lusts of youth, and follow righteousnesse, faith, love, 1 Tim. 2. 22.

4. Observ. To feare God more than men.

Vers. 23. LET her take it to her, lest we be ashamed: Ioseph feareth more the shame of the world in this case, than the displeasure of God, as many doe, which are given to the filthie sinne of uncleannesse, Calvin. But wee should remember what our Saviour saith, Feare not them which kill the body, and are not able to kill the soule, &c. Matth. 10. 28.

5. Observ. After repentance, wee must not fall into the same sinne againe.

Vers. 26. SO he lay with her no more. In this Iudah is to bee commended, that having committed a sinne of ignorance, hee would not fall into the same willingly againe, Muscul. so true repentance worketh a detestation of the sinne repented of: and godly sorrow bringeth a great care with it, Cor. 7. 11.

CHAP. XXXIX.

1. The Method or Argument.

THis chapter setteth forth partly the prosperous estate of Ioseph, in his master Potiphars house; partly his affliction and humiliation, in being cast into prison.

In the first, 1. Wee are to consider the cause of Iosephs prosperitie, the blessing of God, Vers. 1, 2, 3. 2. The effect thereof, the favour of his Master, who committed all to his hand, to Vers. 7. 3. Iosephs faithfulnesse againe to his Master, in refusing to be entised to folly by his Mistresse, whereto two reasons induced him, the favour and goodnesse of his Matter, the feare of God, Vers. 8, 9.

In the second, 1. Is set forth the cause of Iosephs imprisonment, the false accusation of his mistresse, with probable shew thereof, in detaining first, and then producing his vesture, Vers. 10. to 19. 2. Then is set forth the affliction of Ioseph, in being shut up in prison with the other malefactors, Vers. 19, 20. 3. The qualifying of his affliction, in that the Lord so worketh with Ioseph, that hee found favour also with the keeper of the prison, Vers. 21, 22, 23.

3. The Explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. The meaning of their words, saving of the bread which he did eat.

Vers. 6. HE tooke account of nothing, saving only of the bread, &c. 1. This is neither to bee understood of Ioseph, that hee had no other reward for all his service at his Masters hand, but the bread which he did eat, for it is not like that his Master would deale so hardly with him, having committed all to his charge. 2. Neither by this phrase is expressed Iosephs parsimonie and sparing diet, that hee would not eat of Potiphars delicates, yet was faire and well-favoured: as the like wee read of Daniel, Da. 1. For this clause is to be referred to Potiphar, not to Ioseph, saving only of the bread which hee did eat. 3. And yet wee refuse the conceit of R. Salomon, who by bread here understandeth Potiphars wife: for that is a forced and improper sense. 4. Neither with Aben Ezra, doe wee so expound it, as though Ioseph was excluded from medling with his masters meat and drink, because it was an abomination to the Egyptians to eat with the Hebrewes: for it is said before, vers. 4. that Ioseph found favour in his Masters sight and served him, that is, waited and attended upon his person. 5. Wherefore the meaning is no more but this, that Potiphar freely committed the whole charge to Ioseph, taking no account of him: but was secure and cared for nothing, hee did only eat and drinke, and take such things as were provided for him without any more care, Mercer. Iun.

QUEST. II. How long Ioseph served in Potiphars house.

Vers. 7. AFter these things, &c. 1. The Latine translation readeth, after many yeares: which although it be true, yet it is not agreeable to the words of the text. 2. Ioseph spent many yeares in Potiphars house: for first he was as a common servant in his Masters house, vers. 2. Then his master having a great liking of him, made him one of his owne ministers or servants to attend his owne person, vers. 4. Lastly, hee made him ruler of his house, Iunius. 3. It should seeme then, that Ioseph served 10. or 11. yeares in Potiphars house, before hee was cast into prison, from the 17. yeare of his age, till hee was 27. he might be three yeare in prison, for two yeares after that the chiefe Butler was set at liberty Pharaoh dreamed, Gen. 4. 2. And Ioseph for expounding his dreame, was advanced, being then 30. yeares old, Gen. 41. 46. Mercer. Perer.

QUEST. III. What stayed Ioseph from committing this great sinne.

Vers. 9. HOw can I doe this great wickednesse, and sinne against God? 1. Like as the wicked, accustomed to doe evill, cannot doe that which is good: as is said of Iosephs brethren, that they could not speake peaceably unto him, Genes. 37. 4. So the righteous established by the grace of God, cannot doe evill, not in respect of their free-will, which by nature is prone enough to evill, but because God's grace stayeth them: so that they cannot doe it, because they know they ought not, Perer. 2. These things stay Ioseph from committing this sinne; the feare of God, the love of his Master and his liberalitie toward him, and the dutie of the wife toward her husband, Mercer. 3. Three things in respect of God ought to keepe us from sinning. 1. The reverence of his Majestie, which seeth and beholdeth all things. 2. The consideration of his mercie and benefits received. 3. The feare of his judgements, Pe.

QUEST. IIII. Of Iosephs invincible chastitie.

Vers. 12. HE left his garment in her hand and fled, &c. 1. Forraine histories make honorable mention of divers, famous for their chastitie: as Ælianus of Amabæus the harper, that having a most beautifull wife, yet abstained from her; and of Diogenes the Tragicall writer, that did the like. Valerius Maximus writeth of one Spurina a faire young man, who of purpose disfigured and mangled his face, because he would not be desired of women: and of Hippon a woman of Greece, that cast her selfe into the sea to save her chastitie: But chaste and constant Ioseph farre exceedeth them all. 2. being in his youthfull yeeres, when lust most rageth, of the age of 27. and often sollicited, and of no meane womwoman, but of the ladie of the houſe, he could neither be intiſed by her promiſes, nor overcome by her threats, as it is like ſhee did threaten to accuſe him falſely to her husband, and ſo ſeeke his death: neither the opportunitie or ſecrecie of the place could move him: for Potiphar and all his ſervants were abſent, in ſolemnizing ſome feſtivall day, and his wife ſtaied at home, fayning her ſelfe ſicke, as Ioſephus conjecturech: neither the impudencie of the woman, that laied violent hands upon him, and ſtrugled a good while with him, till the ſervants were returned, could conquer his chaſtitie. 3. Hee was not therefore ſo faire without, as he was faire and comely within: pulchrior in luce cordis, quam facie corporis, fairer in the light of his ſoule, than in the face of his bodie, Auguſtine. 4. In whom appeare foure principall vertues: his temperance, in not being inticed, no not by his Miſtreſſe: his juſtice, in not yeelding to doe this wrong and diſhonour to his Maſter: his fortitude, in not ſuffering himſelfe by many attempts and aſſaults to be overcome: his prudence, in chooſing rather at once to reject her, and leave his garment, than to keepe her in ſuſpence, Rupertus.

QUEST. V. How it came to paſſe that Ioſeph was impriſoned, not put to death.

Verſ. 20. AFter this manner did thy ſervant unto me; and Ioſephs Maſter tooke him, and put him in priſon.

1. That is an obſcure colection of Raſi, that Potiphars wife being in bed with her husband, ſhewed how Ioſeph would have done unto her: it is not like that ſhee ſtayed ſo long to make her complaint: but as Ioſephus thinketh, ſhe ſitting weeping and mourning, told her tale as ſoone as her Lord came in: 2. In that Potiphar caſteth Ioſeph into priſon, and killeh him not; I neither thinke with Peter, that it proceeded of his Maſters love toward him; nor with Muſculus, that hee was committed to cuſtodie there to be kept, till he received the ſentence of death. But I rather with Chryſoſtome aſcribe it to Gods providence, who ſo wrought in Pharaohs heart, that hee had no ſuch purpoſe to put Ioſeph to death, as alſo Ioſephs innocencie might appeare, for the which cauſe the chiefe keeper under Potiphar ſhewed him favour. 3. It ſeemeth that Ioſeph was put into a dungeon, chap. 40. 15. The word Sohar ſignifieth a round vaulted houſe, ſuch was this where the Kings priſoners lay bound, and whither Ioſeph was ſent, not of favour as ſome thinke, but for more ſure keeping: and there hee lay bound with fetters, as it is in the Pſal. 105. 18. They held his feet in the ſtockes, and hee was laid in irons.

Ioſephs manner of impriſonment.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. The proſperitie of the righteous muſt bee aſcribed to Gods providence.

Verſ. 2. THe Lord was with Ioſeph and he proſpered: Ioſephs proſperitie is aſcribed to Gods providence: the world uſeth to impute ſuch things to chance and fortune: but wee muſt looke toward God the author of our proſperous ſtate, and moderator of our afflictions, Calvin. That wee may ſay with David, Whom have I in heaven, but thee, and I have deſired none in the earth with thee? Pſal. 73. 25.

2. Doct. Why adulterie is called a great ſinne, and againſt God.

Verſ. 9. HOw can I doe this great wickednеſſe, and ſinne againſt God? Adulterie is called a great ſinne; as Abimeleck ſaith to Abraham, What have I offended thee, that thou haſt brought upon mee and my kingdome this great ſinne? Gene. 20. 9. It is a great ſinne; becauſe there is diſhonor done to the husband, whoſe bed is defiled: the children are wronged, who are illegitimate being gotten in adulterie: the woman alſo breaketh her faith and vow made to her husband: and this ſinne is ſpecially ſaid to be againſt God, who is the author of holy wedlocke: whoſe inſtitution is by this meanes violated and broken: as David therefore ſaith, Pſal. 51. 4. Againſt thee, againſt thee onely have I ſinned, Muſcul.

3. Doct. Feare of evill report muſt not make us leave our dutie.

Verſ. 12. HE left his garment and fled. Ioſeph did chooſe rather to keepe his innocencie, though it were with infamie and falſe report: for as according to S. Pauls rule, wee muſt not doe evill, that good may come of it, Rom. 3. 8. So wee muſt not leave off to doe good, though evill doe inſue upon it. Wee ought to uſe all meanes to have good report, but rather than wee ſhould hazard our faith and innocencie, wee muſt arme our ſelves with Ioſeph, to paſſe by honour and diſhonour, by evill report and good report, 2 Cor. 6. 8.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Againſt Merits.

Verſ. 21. THe Lord was with Ioſeph, and ſhewed him mercie, &c. Although Ioſeph feared God, and was a vertuous man; yet this favour which he found is aſcribed to Gods mercie, not to any merit or worthineſſe in him: for although the Lord rewardeth his innocencie and integritie by this means, yet it is in mercie, Calvin. So Iacob before acknowledged all to be of Gods mercie, Gen. 32. 10. I am not worthie of the leaſt of all thy mercies: and Gene. 33. 10. God hath had mercie on me, and therefore I have things.

2. Confut. Againſt the deſcenſion of Chriſt into Limbus patrum.

Verſ. 22. AND the keeper committed all the priſoners to Ioſephs hand, &c. Pererius here maketh Ioſeph a type and figure of Chriſt, that as the priſoners were committed to his charge, whom he was to comfort unto, and propheſied unto ſome of their deliverance, ſo Chriſt, deſcending to hell, deliver from thence thoſe which were there bound in priſon. Contra. Beſide that ſuch deviſed allegorie but ſimple grounds of matters of faith, ſuch as the Papiſts make the deſcenſion of Chriſt to Limbus patrum to be: this compariſon betweene Ioſeph and Chriſt hath ſmall agreement in this point. 1. Ioſeph was put into the dungeon, as a priſoner himſelfe: I hope they will not ſay, that Chriſt was as a priſoner in hell.

hell. 2. Ioseph delivered none, but foreshewed the deliverance of some: but Christ must be a deliverer. 3. Some of these prisoners were not delivered, but condemned: but Christ (they say) harrowed that hell to the which hee descended, and delivered all.

6. Places of Morall observation.

1. Observ. Families and kingdomes blessed for the righteous sake.

Vers. 5. The blessing of the Lord was upon all that hee had in the house, and in the field. Thus wee see that God blessed Potiphars house for Iosephs sake: as Laban prospered because of Iacob: thus houses, families, cities, and kingdomes are blessed, because of the people of God: the world therefore hath reason to make much of them, as Potiphar did of Ioseph, not to hate, and deride them, as the fashion of this untoward age is.

2. Observ. Beautie a deceitfull gift.

Vers. 6. Ioseph was a faire person. Ioseph by occasion of his beautie and favour, was in great danger, to have beene supplanted and inticed to evill: which teacheth us, that although favour and beautie bee a precious gift from God, and as the Poet could say, gratior est pulchro veniens è corpore virtus: vertue hath a better grace, that shineth from a beautifull face: Yet there are better gifts to bee desired, which bring not such inconvenience: as the Apostle saith, desire you the best gifts, 1 Cor. 12. 31, Muscul, Calvin.

3. Observ. The three engines and weapons of harlots.

Vers. 7. His Masters wife cast her eyes upon Ioseph. Wanton women have three principall weapons that they fight with: prima adultera oculorum tela sunt, an harlots first engines are her eies, as here Iosephs Mistresse first casteth her eies upon him: secunda verborum: The second, are her inticing words, as here shee impudently saith, come lie with mee, Ambrose: The third, is their impudent behaviour, and continuall solliciting: as here this unshamefast woman did day by day, move and provoke Ioseph [illegible] 10: ex Perer.

4. Observ. The occasion of evill to bee avoyded.

Vers. 10. Hee hearkened not unto her, to lie with her, or bee in her companie. Ioseph would avoid all occasions, that might draw him into the least suspition of evill, Muscul. So the Apostle saith, Abstaine from all appearance of evill, 1 Thess. 1. 22. He that will not be inticed to adulterie, drunkennesse, and such like, must shunne and avoid the companie of such.

5. Observ. The unstable affections of the wicked.

Vers. 14. Shee called to the men of the house. This wicked womans love, was turned into hatred: such was Ammons filthie love, or lust rather, toward Thamar, whom he hated as much after his uncleane act, as hee doated upon her before, 2 Sam. 13. 15. Such are the affections of the wicked, variable, inconstant, inhumane, unstedfast.

6. Observ. God visiteth his children even in prison.

Vers. 21. The Lord was with Ioseph, and shewed him mercie, &c. Though Ioseph was closed up in the darke dungeon, yet God was his light and comfort: as it is in the Psalme, Unto the righteous ariseth light in darkenesse, Psal. 102. 4. Visitat deus & in carcere suos, God doth visit his, even in prison: as Christ saith in the person of his members, I was in prison, and ye did not visit mee, Matth. Thus God visited Paul and Silas being fast in the stocks in the inner prison, when at midnight they sung a Psalme unto God, Act. 16. 25.

CHAP. XL.

1. The Method or Argument.

THis chapter sheweth first, what favour Ioseph found for the time present at the hand of the keeper, and how he was set over the other prisoners, vers. 1. to vers. 5. Secondly, how by the interpretation of certaine dreames he made away for his deliverance and preferment following: where first the dreames are rehearsed unto him; the dreame of Pharaohs chiefe Butler apart, as also the dreame of the chiefe Baker: then Ioseph expoundeth the dreames: the interpretation of the one was good, of the other [illegible] pie: lastly is shewed, the divers successe of these dreames, according to Iosephs interpretation, vers. 19. to the end.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. What the offence was of Pharaohs chiefe Butler and Baker,

Verſ.1. THe Butler offended, &c. 1. This Butler and Baker that offended, were not the under officers, and therefore they which were set over them were punished, as R. Ephraim Carus thinketh: for it had not beene justice to punish one for an others fault: but the same parties, which offended were examined. 2. Neither was this their offence, because Pharaoh found a flye in the cup, and a little stone in the bread, as some Hebrewes imagine; it is not like that so wise a Prince would punish so small offences with death: some thinke they had attempted the chastitie of Pharaohs daughtrs, but it is most like, that it was some conspiracie or treason against the life of Pharaoh, as we reade in the booke of Esther, that two Eunuchs conspired against Assuerus, Mercer.

QUEST. 2. How the chiefe Butlers head is said to be lift up.

Verſ.13. WIthin three daies shall Pharaoh lift up, or leavie thy head, &c. 1. Iunius exposition here is too curjous; that referreth this to that use and custome of tables made with rowes and holes of holes, with pegges, against the which were written the names of the officers, with their ministerie and services: and that this peg is called the head, and the boord or table, the base, or seat, to the which the peg should be removed: which signified the restoring of him to this place againe. 2. I had rather with Mercerus, understand by lifting up or leavying the head, the numbering of him among the rest: as the phrase is used, Exod. 30. 12. When thou liftest the head of the children of Israel, that is, takest the summe of them. 3. But we neede not search further, than with Musculus, to take the plaine and ordinarie sense; who by lifting up or leavying the head, understandeth his advancement, and restoring to his former condition: as the head of Ioachim King of Iudah is said to be lift up, when he was delivered out of prison, 2. King. 25.27.

QUEST. III. Whether Ioseph offended in making request to the Butler to remember him.

Verſ.14. HAve me in remembrance? &c. 1. The Hebrewes doe reprehend Ioseph, for trusting to this meanes of his deliverance, & say that for this cause he was chastised with two yeares longer imprisonment: to the same purpose writeth Augustin. serm. 82. de temp. But although Ioseph was content to use the meanes which was offered, yet there is no doubt he relied upon Gods providence still, & therefore Ioseph is here reprehended without cause. 2. Neither doth he make sale of his spirituall and prophecicall gift, requiring this as a rewrad and recompence for this good tidings. But by this he sheweth the certaintie of the Butlers good successe and favour with the King, that if he made but mention of him to Pharaoh, he might be delivered: neither doth he aske this as a reward, but taketh this occasion to do his owne good: for it is lawfull for a man to use all honest meanes for his libertie, as the Apostle saith, Art thou called being a servant, care not for it, yet if thou canst be free use it rather, 1 Cor. 7.21. Calvin. 3. It may be that Ioseph was somewhat too confident upon this meanes, as though this were the way that God had appointed for his deliverance; and therefore God would exercise Josephs patience still; so that Ioseph sinned not in diffidence and distrust, in betaking himselfe to the meanes: but rather herein, that he limited Gods providence, both for the meanes, and the time, that even now, and by this meanes, he hasteth to be delivered, Calvin. Mercer.

QUEST. IIII. How Ioseph is said to be stollen away.

Verſ.15. I Was stolen away by theft out of the land of the Hebrewes. 1. This theft was not committed by the Ismaelites, who bought Ioseph for their money but by his owne bretheren: who committed a theft two waies, both because they sold a freeman, not taken in battel, nor brought into bondage, which by Moses Law was punished with death, Exod. 21. 16. and in that they did robbe the father of his child, Perer. 2. Hebron is not here meant by the land of the Hebrews, as Ramban, who saith that was the principall place of abode, for Abraham, Isaack, and Iacob: but the land of Canaan is thus

Canaan why called the land of the Hebrewes thus called, where the Hebrewes dwelt: which Ioseph so calleth, rather than Canaan, because he abhorred to be counted of that nation, Mercer.

QUEST. V. How the chiefe Baker his head is said to be lifted up, or leavied.

Vers. 19. Within three daies Pharaoh shall take thine head from thee, or leavie thine head off from thee &c. 1. Iunius readeth thus, Pharaoh numbering thee, shall cause thee no more to be numbered, and hee referreth it as before, to the removing or taking away of his pegge (which he taketh for his head) out of his hole or place in the table: but this seemeth to be too curious. 2. Neither with some other doe I thinke, that the chiefe Baker was beheaded, for the text saith, he was hanged upon a tree, which needed not, if he were first beheaded. 3. Some make the meaning of the phrase to be this, that Pharaoh would take away his life from him: and the Latines say, capite plecti, to lose the head, that is, to be put to death: hence they are called capitall crimes, that are punished by the losse of the head, or life. Mercer. 4. The most reade, shall take thine head from thee: but he was hanged, not beheaded. 5. Some thinke he was first beheaded, and then hanged, as the manner is yet in some countries, Osiand. But it is like that the Butlers head was lift up as well as the Bakers, vers. 20. this phrase doth not shew his punishment, for then the effect, vers. 20. should not answer to the prophecie. 6. Some understand it of his hanging, that his head was lift up upon him: as our Saviour calleth his hanging upon the crosse, his exaltation or lifting up, Ioh. 3.14. Pellican. But this cannot be the meaning, because the same phrase is used both of the Butler, and Baker. 7. This therefore is the sense, that Pharaoh should lift up his head aloft out of prison, and cause his name to be rehearsed, and so his head to be leavied among the rest of his servants, to take cognizance of both their causes, but the one he should hang, and restore the other: So Ioseph doth foretell unto them three things: whereof the first, the leavying of the head, and examining their cause is common to them both: the other two things are peculiar to either: the Butler shall be restored to his office, and minister the cup to the King, vers. 13. the Baker shall be put from his office, and no more reckoned or leavied among the officers, and be hanged: this then is the true reading of the words, Pharaoh shall leavie thine head from upon thee: that is, that no more leavying or reckoning be made of thee: which words may be supplied by the contrarie, vers. 13. and the exposition of the præposition mi used there, to thine office, and (meghal) from off expressed here, doe insinuate as much: so also the word meghaleca, from off thee, is used in the end of this verse: and Deut. 8.4. Thy garments did not waxe old (from off thee): that is, to be no more upon thee, and so to be used by thee.

QUEST. VI. Whether Ioseph used any preamble to his interpretation.

Vers. 19. The birds shall eat thy flesh. 1. It is like that Ioseph being to deliver so hard an interpretation of the Bakers dreame, did use some preface to excuse himselfe, as Philo bringeth him in speaking, Utinam tale somnium non vidisses, &c. I would thou hadst either not seene this dreame, or declared it to me: and it is not unlike, but that Ioseph used some such preparation as Daniel did when he was to expound Nebuchadnezzars dreame, The dreame be to them that hate thee, and the interpretation thereof to thine enemies, Dan. 4.16. 2. This hanging of malefactors upon a tree, seemeth to have been an ancient punishment, and it was counted a most ignominious death: and therefore Saint Paul setting forth the great humilitie of Christ, that humbled himselfe even to the death of the crosse, Philip. 2. the Latine translator readeth, he shall hang thee on the crosse: which kinde of death was used also among the Romanes: as Tully saith, Facinus est vincire civem Romanum, scelus verberare, quid dicam in crucem tollere; It is a great offence to binde a Citizen of Rome, a greater to beat him, the greatest to set him on the Crosse, Cicer. Verrem. 7. 3. Such as were hanged to death among the Israelites, by the law were to be taken downe and buried the same day, Deut. 21.23. But it seemeth, that this use was not observed among the Gentiles, but their bodies did hang to be meat to the fowles of the ayre, Perer. which may be taken as a great judgement of God, when the Lord suffereth his owne image in man to be so defaced, and his flesh to be given for meat to the fowles and beasts, whose flesh is appointed to be mans food: so the Lord threatned against Ieroboam and his house, that they which died in the Citie should be eaten of dogs, and they which died in the fields should be devoured of the fowles of heaven, 1 King. 14.11. Muscul.

The hanging upon the crosse an ancient punishment.

QUEST. VII. Whether lawfull to keepe the memorie of the birth-day.

Vers. 20. Pharaohs birth-day. 1. This was a very ancient custome to celebrate the birth-daies of Kings and Princes; both among the Medes and Persians, as witnesseth Xenophon, lib. 1. and such was the use among the Romans, as Gellius maketh mention of an Epistle written by Augustus Caius: Celebrasse me sexagesimum & quartum natalem meum; That he had celebrated the 64. yeare of his nativitie. 2. Yet doe wee not reade of any of the righteous in the Scripture, that kept their birth-day, but rather cursed it as the beginning of sinne and sorrow, as Iob did, cap. 3. and Ierem. cap. 20. only we reade of this Pharaoh, and Herod the tyrant, that kept a memorie of their birth-daies, Perer. yet it is not unlawfull to celebrate the memoriall of the nativitie daies of Kings, and other worthy men and women, so that we take heed of superstition, in giving the honour of such daies unto men, as the Church of God doth: and that we abuse not such daies, to prophanesse and wantonnesse, as the Heathen did: but rather thereby take occasion to give God thankes for such worthy instruments, which he in mercie raiseth up to the Church or Common-wealth. Calvin. Mercer.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. The interpretation of dreames, and the revelation of secrets belongeth only to God.

Vers. 8. Are not interpretations of God? That is, you are deceived to thinke that your wise men, sorcerers, and Astrologers of Egypt, can interpret your dreames: the revealing of secrets, and foreshewing of things to come, belongeth to God; and the Lord will raise you up one to interpret your dreame. Nebuchadnezzar confessed thus much, saying to Daniel, Thou art able to shew me the interpretation, for the spirit of the holy Gods is in thee, Dan. 4. 18. The wise man also saith in the Proverbs, It is the glory of God to conceale a thing secret.

2. Doct. Prophets knew no more than was revealed unto them.

Vers. 12. Within three daies shall Pharaoh lift up thine head. God revealed to Ioseph the very time wherein the chiefe Butler should be set at libertie, within three daies: which Ioseph conceived, not as some thinke, because of the three branches: for that might signifie three moneths, or yeares, as well as three daies: neither because Pharaohs birth-day was within three daies: But it was God only that revealed this interpretation to Ioseph: yet did not Ioseph know the time of his owne deliverance: So we see, that the Prophets knew no more than was revealed unto them: they sometime could foretell what should befall others, and yet foresaw not what was appointed for themselves: as the man of Iudah, that prophesied against Ieroboams altar, was ignorant of his owne calamitie, 1 King. 13.

3. Doct. Ministers that sow spirituall things, may reape temporall.

Vers. 14. Have me in remembrance. Ioseph was worthy to have this kindnesse shewed him, that had beene an interpreter and messenger of so good tidings: according to the same rule, it is meete for the Ministers of God, the interpreters of the word, that sow spirituall things to the people, to reape temporall, Muscul.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. The interpretation of Scripture must be taken from the spirit of God, speaking in Scripture.

Vers. 8. Are not interpretations of God? As God by the spirit of God did interpret the secret of this dreame: so the interpretations of the secrets of Gods word proceed from the spirit of God: our Saviour interpreted the Scriptures to the two disciples, and opened their mindes to understand them, Luk. 24. 45. wherefore we are not to depend upon the tradition of the Church, opinion of fathers, decrees of Pope and Cardinals, for the understanding of the word, but wee must seeke to the spirit of God speaking in the Scriptures, Muscul.

2. Confut. Against the superstitious festivall of the virgin Marie.

Vers. 20. Pharaohs birth-day. Perer. taketh occasion hereby to justifie the practice of the Church in celebrating the birth-daies of three, of our Saviour, the virgin Marie, and Iohn Baptist, in Luk. 40. numer. 11.

Contra. 1. The Nativitie of our Saviour is worthily celebrated: because in himselfe he was the rarest birth that ever came into the world, being without sinne; and in respect of us, the most beneficiall, by whom our redemption and everlasting salvation was purchased. 2. The nativitie of Iohn Baptist is solemnized as a matter indifferent, by the Church, not to the honour of Iohn, but to the praise of Christ, whose forerunner he was: and we finde mention made in Scripture, of his strange and extraordinarie birth. 3. But the Nativitie of the virgin Marie is a superstitious solemnitie, because they consecrate it to the honour of the virgin: it is blasphemous, in that they hold her to have beene without sinne, which prerogative is onely peculiar to our blessed Saviour: it is also vaine, false, and frivolous, because there is no mention made of it in Scripture.
